For the past two decades, the 47-year-old artist, who studied as a teen with Texas fiddle champion Benny Thomasson and then apprenticed under fabled Gypsy jazz violinist Stephane Grappelli, has concentrated on writing and performing music that bridges disparate genres. His aim? To blend classical with American folk and popular music more fully than he believes occurred even in the celebrated works of Aaron Copland, George Gershwin, Duke Ellington and Leonard Bernstein.

"I think there's a real possibility that a nationalistic American classical music could really start to take hold," O'Connor said during a recent interview at a coffeehouse near UCLA's Herb Alpert School of Music, the new cross-disciplinary institution that tapped him this year as its first artist-in-residence.

"This school is founded on the idea that there is a universe of music, and within that universe there are different galaxies of classical music, world music, jazz and folk," said Alpert director Tim Rice. "We're sending out these shuttles that move from one galaxy to the other. Mark is the very embodiment of that idea."

O'Connor's "Americana Symphony," subtitled "Variations on Appalachia Waltz," is as tonal, accessibly melodic and sonically spacious as a great Elmer Bernstein film score. As in most of his work, themes develop, mutate and transform with complex passage work that often incorporates bent notes or pulsing rhythms drawn from

See O'CONNOR on page 6

Change brings music together

By Yvonne Villarreal
Los Angeles Times

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Inside a dimly lighted studio in Santa Monica, engineer-producer Mark Johnson and his team were recently putting the final touches on a soulful rendition of Sam Cooke's "A Change Is Gonna Come." Red lights flashed and dials moved on the giant soundboard as the crew got to work. The cry of a harmonica was raised, the pitch of an electric guitar lowered. Each adjustment worked to reinforce the emotional charge of the vocals by Grandpa Elliott, a musician from the French Quarter of New Orleans, and singer-songwriter Clarence Bekker. The track combines the talents of six performers – none of whom have met.

"The idea was to find a way to inspire the world to come together," Johnson said. "To stop the hate. To see the commonality we share. I think that source of inspiration can be found in music."

"A Change Is Gonna Come" is one of 10 tracks to be featured on "Playing for Change: Songs Around the World," a DVD/CD package available April 28 at Starbucks and retail stores. But "Change" isn't limited to shrink-wrapped CDs with your morning latte; under its banner, a five-stop tour with some of the project's many artists gets under way Thursday at the South by Southwest Music Festival in Austin, Texas. Co-founder Johnson calls "Change" a "multimedia movement" meant to "inspire, connect and bring peace throughout the world with music."

The album's first track is a cover of Ben E. King's "Stand by Me" performed by 37 musicians from the Netherlands, Brazil, Spain and Russia, among other countries. The video for the song already has been viewed nearly 8 million times on YouTube since November. The artists also take on a couple Bob Marley classics. A version of "War/No More Trouble" features U2's Bono, and American blues singer Keb' Mo' and Spain's Manu Chao perform on "One Love."

"I was just happy to be part of something so special," said Keb' Mo', whose Grammy-winning 2004 album "Keep It Simple" Johnson engineered. "What he's doing is amazing."

The CD package and tour are just the latest venture under the Playing for Change umbrella; Johnson and his team produced the documentaries "Playing for Change: A Cinematic Discovery of Street Music" and "Playing for Change: Peace Through Music," which both appeared at the Tribeca Film Festival.

The team has generated music videos that feature collaborative and individual songs from musicians around the globe. Yet most of the performers have never met. Many of their names are not well known. But through music, commonality emerges.

"Music is a universal enjoyment," said Johnson, 35, who founded the organization along with producer Whitney Burditt. "We wanted to highlight all that it does and can do."

The idea for Playing for Change came to Johnson one day a decade ago as he was waiting for a subway train in New York. On this particular day, there were two monks performing as crowds of morning commuters huddled around.

"Here were people who normally would rush by one another," Johnson said. "But they were suddenly standing side by side. And it was the music that did that. It

See CHANGE on page 6

New Orleans musician Grandpa Elliot does the vocals on the track "A Change is Gonna Come" in the new DVD/CD package by Mark Johnson.

Mark O'Connor developed a new style of teaching the violin that is rooted in American music, opposed to the common European style.

Aritsts styles contrasting

JOHNS from page 5

the point of view of Toad of Super Mario Brothers fame.

"Satanic Messiah" was a digital and limited vinyl release featuring the suddenly commonplace pay-what-you-want business model. Buyers are offered the option of free downloads or to make donations. A tongue-in-cheek payment of $6.66 is pre-set for those in favor of quirky spending habits.

Vanderslice comes to Northampton not having released an album since 2007's critically acclaimed "Emerald City."

Vanderslice is set to release his seventh album, "Romanian Names," this May on Dead Oceans Records. In contrast to his acoustic-only tour the album includes an array of instrumentation ranging from clarinets and marimbas to Swedish nyckelharpas.

Both Vanderslice and Darnielle are adept storytellers who ply their trade in different ways. Tonight will offer a glimpse of how two contrasting styles can come together – even in a primitive setting – to create a variety of cohesive storylines.

The Mountain Goats and John Vanderslice perform tonight at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton. Tickets are $17.50 in advance and $20 at the door. Doors open at 8:30 p.m. The Pearl Street Night Club is located at 10 Pearl St.

Brian Wood can be reached at bwood@dailycollegian.com

John Vanderslice will play at Pearl Street tonight. He has not released an album since 2007, but his seventh album is due out in May.

U.S. music propels Afrobeats

AFRICA from page 5

solidified in the 1980s. Paul Simon's "Graceland" album introduced the sounds of the continent through the South African vocal group Ladysmith Black Mambazo.

At the same time, major tours by Nigerian bandleaders King Sunny Ade and Fela Kuti dazzled audiences with spectacular stage shows.

Embraced by pop stars, African music also served as the soundtrack to liberation movements, especially the South African struggle against apartheid.

"There's this old-school audience for African pop, this aging, liberal, NPR listener demo," said Banning Eyre, an American authority on African music and a senior editor at Afropop.org. "In general, you see the major African stars and you see the same old crowd. But now, I've identified three or four fronts of new audiences for African music."

Those new fans, Eyre said, often discover African music through American transliterators. Matthews, who was born in South Africa, and the North Carolina band Toubab Krewe promote the music among jam rockers, who also have welcomed Mahlasela and K'Naan.

Afrobeat inheritors Antibalas and the Budos Band pay homage to Kuti on the New York club scene. Vampire Weekend, an indie pop-rock band with Afro-pop influences, is leading indie rockers back to Congolese and Senegalese styles. And in hip-hop, Akon's success and M.I.A.'s hipster adventures have primed ears for K'Naan.

"I hear Akon and I'm, like, 'I love you,'" said K'Naan when asked about the Senegalese pop star. "He's using all these melodies, all this tone of Senegal in pop music. I don't think he could have done it as a traditional African, because Akon is very African-looking, very dark. So he did it with sound – with his nuance, with his melodies. And then he dressed up in a suit and told you about the club."

K'Naan's style allows him to reach across musical genres. Some tracks on "Troubadour" reflect the influence of rappers Chubb Rock and Q-Tip. Others highlight K'Naan's connection to reggae; he recorded the album at Bob Marley's Tuff Gong studio. The late Jamaican legend's sons, Damian and Stephen, are his good friends.

"In K'Naan, we saw a hybrid of musical styles," said James Diener, chief executive and president of Octone Records. "There's an African hip-hop component, but what distinguished him were the elements of reggae and world music and, most interestingly, his sense of melody and his pop aesthetic. This album has incredibly commercial appeal."

Amadou & Mariam exhibit a similar ability to erase musical boundaries. The pair met as students at Mali's Institute for the Young Blind and made several traditional albums before pairing with Basque-Galician producer Manu Chao for "Dimanche a Bamako."

Amadou & Mariam's U.S. label, Nonesuch, is a leading force in world music. Cuba's Buena Vista Social Club, Brazil's Caetano Veloso and Senegal's Youssou N'Dour and Mali's Oumou Sangare are a few of the many artists who license or release work through the label.

In the 1980s Paul Simon used the vocal group Ladysmith Black Mambazo in his "Graceland" album. The release solidified ideas of African music.

But "Dimanche a Bamako" represented a breakthrough, said David Bither, a senior vice president for the label.

"Of all the African records we've released, I've never given a record to more people who came back and said, 'This is incredible,'" he said. "It was crossing stylistic boundaries, international boundaries, all kinds. It was so fresh."

Bagayoko, of Amadou & Mariam, who was influenced by Jimi Hendrix and Led Zeppelin, said that several decades of the world embracing African artists has made this new sound realizable.

"From the time we started, things have changed, for sure," he said. "There's more access to the tools we need to make music, which makes the scene more international. It's universal; we need to be universal. It's not that recording studios are better (in Africa); they didn't exist before."

"Welcome to Mali" was not recorded in Bamako, Mali, but in Paris and London – centers of African immigration – and in Dakar, the capital of Senegal.

K'Naan guests on one cut. Toumani Diabate, a Malian kora master, appears on another. (A kora is an Instrument made from a calabash cut in half and covered with skin.) Its sound is boisterous – the fans who discover Amadou & Mariam opening for Coldplaythis summer will dance their sneakers off.

"We don't want people to see Africa as only one picture," said Mariam Doumhia, of Amadou & Mariam. "We don't want them to see Africa as a place under war at all times. There are plenty of good things in Africa, the human relationships, the solidarity, the tradition, the stories."

Classics built on vernacular

O'CONNOR from page 5

jazz, country, folk and blues sources.

"I want to use jazz and blues and other vernacular music as the language on which classical compositions are built," O'Connor said. "It's the same thing [Astor] Piazzolla did in his native Argentina, what Bartok did in Hungary and what Tan Dun is doing in China. It's not a new concept. It's just new in American classical circles. It's so funny – it reveals some people's idea that our cultural musical heritage is somehow not important enough."

O'Connor's passion for history, including this country's cultural past and his own family's journey, surfaces regularly in conversation. His mother's ancestors came from Holland to New York in the early 17th century – "before Jamestown," he said – migrated south in the 19th century and then settled in the Pacific Northwest. He essentially has followed that path in reverse, now residing in Manhattan.

Mark O'Connor uses various types of vernacular music to build his classical compositions, but his style is not new to the musical world.

As a boy in Seattle, O'Connor studied classical guitar, at the same time being captivated by the sounds of country music. After seeing Doug Kershaw play Cajun-style fiddle on Cash's late-'60s TV show, he asked his parents to buy him one. He considers himself blessed to have connected with Thomasson, who had relocated to Seattle in the '70s after dominating fiddling competitions in the Lone Star State for nearly two decades.

O'Connor began making records as a teen and moved to Nashville, Tenn., not long after graduating from high school. That was during the "Urban Cowboy" pop-crossover craze of the early-'80s, a time when a Nashville music executive famously circulated a memo stipulating "no steel guitars" on any of the label's recordings. It was the same story for the old-time fiddle.

"Buddy Spicher, one of the great session players of the '60s and '70s, told me, 'Kid, you came to town at the wrong time – all the work has dried up.' But I had an idea that I could prove that a fiddle could play alongside a DX7 (synthesizer), a rock guitar or a Fender Rhodes (electric piano). I've been cross-pollinating for my entire career."

The following decades were a lucrative time for O'Connor. He easily could have stayed in Nashville playing work-for-hire sessions as one of Music City's most in-demand players – the Country Music Association named him its musician of the year for six years running, 1991 to '96. But he opted for larger ercative pursuits.

"I wrote the first caprice 22 years ago, between recording sessions. I'd had the beginnings of a new fiddle concerto and decided it was time to quit the session work and go on a solo carecr based on this principle of combining jazz and folk and classical music. A lot of people thought I was nuts for putting a career behind me in favor of one that could maybe pay half my rent. But other things I might have done weren't terribly meaningful."

During the UCLA master class, where different groups of students played sections from three of his works, O'Connor could see evidence of the evolution of music education that he's been pushing for.

"I was impressed at how students were able to access what I wanted off the page," he said. "When Yo-Yo Ma first expressed interest in my music, he said, 'I can't see your music in the notes; I have to hear you playing it.' And I thought, 'Boy, this is going to be a problem if this won't exist outside of me playing it.'"

But that's changing, with so many other things, in the iPod age – in that fans can explore different styles of music more readily than ever now, making them less likely to limit themselves to any single genre. O'Connor spreads the gospel of a borderless music world in the summer camps for string players he's led in Nashville for 15 years and, starting in July, in Los Angeles and New York City. The camp at UCLA replaces the ones he used to offer farther south when he lived in San Diego.

He's moving his mission another step ahead with the publication this month of the Mark O'Connor Violin Method, an approach to learning to play the instrument rooted in American music, as opposed to the European and Japanese methods that currently dominate violin instruction. His answer to the Suzuki method's use of Mozart's "Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star" for foundational music training is "Boil Them Cabbage Down," an old folk tune that Thomas Jefferson once played.

Inspiring world to join together

CHANGE from page 5

brought them all together."

A few months later, Johnson was in Santa Monica when he heard the lyrics of "Stand by Me" drifting toward him from a few blocks away. A street musician, Roger Ridley, was performing King's 1961 hit, and Johnson hurried over to listen. When Ridley agreed to be recorded and filmed, Johnson's globe-trotting ways soon followed.

For years, Johnson and his team traveled with recording equipment and cameras in search of little-known musicians for what would become Playing for Change – the name evoking coins tossed to street musicians as well as the transformation music inspires, he said.

The musicians were recorded in different pockets of the world – New Orleans, South Africa, Jerusalem – under streetlights and in doorways. The performances were then edited together, allowing the strangers to collaborate despite thousands of miles between them.

The collaborations can reach more ears now that they've been compiled into the DVD/CD package. The project will be released on Hear Music, the joint venture between Concord Music Group and Starbucks, and will feature musician interviews and videos.

Interactions with the various musicians also inspired the establishment of the Playing for Change Foundation, which seeks to provide facilities, technology and musical instruments to artists and their communities. The foundation has worked with South African poet Lesego Rampolokeng to build the upcoming Mehlo Arts Center, a creative-writing school, in Johannesburg.

"Mark strikes me as a messenger," said TV producer and Concord Records owner Norman Lear, who became aware of Johnson's efforts through a friend. "He wants to change the world, and we want to help him."

Robert Bradley is featured on the DVD/CD package, "Playing for Change: Songs Around the World," which debuts April 28.

Domino's Pizza
2X Tuesday
Buy any large pizza, get second one FREE
413-256-8911

SPHS School of Public Health and Health Sciences
RESEARCH DAY • Thursday - March 26, 2009
UMass Campus Center Auditorium • 9:30AM-5:30PM

PROGRAM
9:30-11AM
Considering Graduate School in Public Health and Health Sciences?
Come join us for a presentation on educational opportunities in public health and health sciences at UMASS.
- What public health and health sciences is all about
- Why UMASS Amherst is a great place to study public health and health sciences
- The admissions requirements and application processes

12:30-3:30PM
Poster Viewing and Judging

2:00PM
Light Refreshments

4-5:00PM
Featured Speaker -
David P. Ropeik B.S.J., M.S.J.
The Risk Response, Why Our Fears Don't Match the Facts
Mr. Ropeik is an Instructor at Harvard University and an international consultant, teacher, and speaker on risk communication to government, business, consumer groups, and educational institutions. He is a former Instructor of risk communication at the Harvard School of Public Health, and was co-director of the school's professional education course 'The Risk Communication Challenge'.

5:00PM
Research Day Award Recipients Announced

ALL events are FREE and open to the campus community

For further information:
Contact the Deans' office at 413-545-2526
or phollister@schoolph.umass.edu.

Co-sponsored by
The School of Public Health and Health Sciences
The Rho Chapter, Delta Omega Honorary Public Health Society

No Cinderella this season

North Carolina players Wayne Ellington, left, Ty Lawson, center, and Danny Green celebrate after making the Sweet Sixteen. No team seeded higher than fourth has been eliminated.

No. 13 seed Cleveland State was the best hope for fans of a Cinderella story after a dominant 84–69 win over fourth seed Wake Forest in the first round of the NCAA Tournament, but a 71–57 loss to Arizona squashed their hopes.

Few surprises this year, high seeds roll into Sweet Sixteen

By Greg Cote
McClatchy Newspapers

MIAMI — Cinderella has left the bracket.

The Sweet 16 went on without her Sunday, March Madness a bit diminished for it, the NCAA Tournament left with big dogs and top dogs but no underdogs.

Cleveland State was the last hope in the heartwarming category, but the Vikings were the Little Team That Couldn't Quite, falling to Arizona 71-57 at Miami's downtown bayside arena in the Tournament's second round.

(Giving a slice of March Madness to the college-hoops-hinterland of Miami is sort of like relocating Mardi Gras to Dubuque, and yet 10,204 appeared Sunday as South Florida made a game attempt at pretending to be a college basketball town).

Upstart Cleveland State drew within four points with less than seven minutes to play but could get no closer despite my violating every tenet of journalistic neutrality by openly hoping for yet another upset win by the aberrations from Cleveland, who had stunned Wake Forest earlier in the Tournament.

(I did refrain from donning a horned Viking helmet, at least).

Cleveland State died from 3-point range with 3-for-23 shooting, the long shot ultimately failing by the long shot.

It was too bad (sorry, Arizonans) because no other men's college basketball team fighting this weekend to stay alive could match Cleveland State in terms of the kind of shock-the-world possibility that is the Tournament's charm and stock in trade.

Cleveland, a 13th seed, would have been the lowest-rated entrant in the Sweet 16, in only its second NCAA Tournament appearance and first since 1986 – before any of these players was born.

"Us against the world," as guard Cedric Jackson put it. "Who else believed we'd be here?"

Arizona probably can stake an underdog claim itself now, as a 12th seed advancing, but the Wildcats are a fake Cinderella despite that seeding. Not even close. This is a team playing in its 25th consecutive March Madness, an astounding streak that included the 1997 national championship and three other Final Four shots.

True Cinderella status requires not just a double-digit seeding but a program hereft of national status, a team whose players require Hello My Name Is tags and whose appearance in the Tournament elicits a collective "Who!?" from the nation at large.

That was Cleveland State.

It had the ragtag quality of a local repertory theater plopped down on Broadway. The school's goofy pep band would chant, "Block that kick!" when Arizona attempted free throws. Its cheerleaders failed to execute the simplest pyramids and handsprings.

How can you not root for a program like this one?

When the school made the tournament in '86 it proved closer to a curse than a blessing. Calamity followed.

The coach then, Kevin Mackey, would soon be fired in disgrace after being caught exiting a crack house with a prostitute on his arm.

It was Mackey who had famously said of the program he'd taken over: "Some teams have McDonald's All-Americans. Cleveland State has players who eat at McDonalds."

Probation for recruiting violations followed that first Tournament bow, and then a long lapse back into irrelevance. Cleveland State was 10-21 just two seasons ago, a sixth consecutive losing year.

Arizona center Jordan Hill admitted being "in shock" that it was the little Vikings pounding on the Sweet 16 door Sunday. Wildcats guard Nic Wise, accurately more than insultingly, called Cleveland State "a small-name school."

What is the recruiting pitch if you're trying to sell players on coming to Cleveland State? "Pack Your Longjohns?"

Yet this was the team that won the lightly-regarded Horizon Conference to win a ticket to the Big Dance, then shoved Wake Forest off the floor to kindle hope that – in an unpredictable, wide-open season – maybe the Vikings weren't done.

Alas, they were, with no underdog to take their place.

The Sweet 16 teams in place now have together made 433 NCAA Tournament appearances and won a combined 18 national championships. That includes Miami's other qualifier, Syracuse, in its 32nd Tournament and the 2003 national champ. Other than Arizona, no surviving team is lower than a fifth seed. The remaining team with the shortest tournament résumé, Gonzaga, is in its 11th consecutive March.

Quality has advanced, for sure. It is a big Sweet 16. It is an impressive-looking one. It might even prove to be a great one.

Something is missing, though.

Among all the giants, there is no little guy left to root for.

That's beeause Cleveland State packed its bags not for the dream Sunday, but for home.

Wildcats beat Vikings

By Rick Hummel
McClatchy Newspapers

MIAMI — If Cleveland State was the Cinderella team here – and that might be a stretch the way the 26-win Vikings embarrassed a touted Wake Forest club in the first round of the NCAA Tournament – the Arizona Wildcats were the Ugly Ducklings.

While Cleveland State, the tournament champion of the Horizon League, was the 13th seed in the Midwest Regional because of the relatively weak rating of the league, Arizona was in the field as the 12th seed and many couldn't figure out why the Pacific 10 also-ran Wildcats should have a 25th consecutive tournament bid.

The Wildcats, operating under their third coach in three seasons, lost five of their last six games and were only 19-13 overall. But, apparently wanting to show the NCAA Tournament committee that it hadn't made a mistake, Arizona dismantled fifth-seeded Utah, 84-71, in Friday's first round and rolled past poor-shooting (37.3 percent) Cleveland State, 71-57, on Sunday to advance to a meeting in Indianapolis next week against top-seeded Louisville (if Louisville wins).

"We knew we could be there all along," said Arizona guard Nic Wise, who made 10 of 10 free throws among his 21 points and had eight assists. "We're proving it now and we're peaking at the right time."

This season's coach is Russ Pennell, who is still tagged as "interim" after replacing legendary Lute Olson, who stepped down because of illness last fall. The season before, when Olson was taking a year off, assistant coach Kevin O'Neill coached the Wildcats into the NCAA, but they were knocked out in the first round by West Virginia.

A few weeks back, when his team was faltering, Pennell said a familiar voice (to him) spoke up in a coaches' meeting and said better times were ahead. It was Pennell's father, Dewey, a longtime high school coach at Wheaton, Mo., and then at Pittsburg, Kan., who sits next to his son on the bench in the capacity ol director of basketball operations.

"He said, 'I think this team is good enough to get to the Sweet 16. I think that's going to happen,'" recalled Russ Pennell. "I looked at him and thought, 'Man, are you going crazy or what?'"

But Russ Pennell said, "It wasn't a flippant deal. He's been around basketball a long, long time and he just saw the potential an I what this team is capable of."

The elder Pennell, an opponent in the day of Charlie Spoonhour when the latter coached at Rocky Comfort, Mo., said, "When we were going through some rough waters there, I just told all the coaches we've got the team that can go to the Sweet 16.' And they thought, 'Ah .. get out of the way.' But I really felt like we could do that.

"We got a decent draw. And the players started believing that they could do it."

Besides Wise, who took only seven shots in making his 21 points, Chase Budinger, a star at one of the last December high-school shootouts in St. Louis, had 15 points, as did Jamelle Horne, and Jordan Hill had 16.

The bigger Wildcats forced Cleveland State to try 23 3-pointers against the Arizona zone and the Vikings, who had blistered Wake Forest's man-to-man defense, converted just three of them.

"That's been our nemesis all year – the zone," said Cleveland State coach Gary Waters. "It's hard to beat a team going three tor 23 from the 3-point line."

Cleveland State, which starts four seniors, got 17 points from Norris Cole, who missed six of seven 3-pointers, and 15 from flashy guard Cedric Jackson, who was scratched in the eye near the end of the first half and was affected thereafter.

"I couldn't see, but I tried to fight through it," Jackson said. "I did the best I could."

The demise of Cleveland State leaves only Gonzaga and Xavier as non-BCS league teams still alive in the tournament.

Need money towards fall tuition?
Now's your chance to win up to $2,000!
Visit UMassAlumni.com/students and enter the Tuition Raffle today!
Tickets are $7 each or 5 for $25
Drawing will be held Sunday, April 26, 2009.
Winner will be notified via phone.
SEE WEBSITE FOR RULES AND ELIGIBILITY
Alumni Association
Student Alumni Association

ESB Online

Anytime Banking
NOW OPEN ACCOUNTS and do all your banking at ESB Online 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.
Have immediate access to the account information and bill paying capability you need with just the click of a mouse.
bankesb.com
Easthampton Savings Bank | 413.527.4111
Member FDIC
Member DIF

Atlantic 10 champ Xavier stifles Badgers

Musketeers' late-game defense seals victory over Wisconsin

By Mark Stewart
McClatchy Newspapers

BOISE, Idaho — It is really amazing how quickly the wheels fell off.

The University of Wisconsin had scored on eight of 10 possessions and was riding a huge wave of momentum after Trevon Hughes drove the lane, spun and got the roll on a layup to give the Badgers a seven-point lead with 17 minutes left. The Badgers Express was rolling.

Then it blew a tire.

Wisconsin has been prone to offensive dry spells this season and its 7 1/2-minute drought Sunday afternoon laid the foundation for a 60-49 loss to fourth-seeded Xavier at Taco Bell Arena that knocked the 12th-seeded Badgers out of the NCAA basketball tournament.

The Musketeers improved to 27-7 and will face top-seeded Pittsburgh in an East Regional semifinal Thursday in Boston.

Two days after rallying from 12 points down against Florida State to score one of its greatest comeback victories, Wisconsin saw its season come to a close.

"We can always wish that we were still playing, but that's not the case right now," said senior Marcus Landry, who finished with 18 points and 10 rebounds. "We can always look back and say we could have done this better or we could have done that better, but we're pretty happy just to get in (the tournament).

"We had it in our hearts to just go out there and fight," he said.

The Badgers (20-13) could leave the court with their heads held high. They held Atlantic 10 champion Xavier to 39.1 percent shooting and limited the Musketeers to seven offensive rebounds, five below their average, and just five second-chance points.

What the Badgers couldn't do against the 16th-ranked Musketeers was put the ball in the basket.

UW's 25 percent shooting in the second half equaled its worst effort for a half this season. Take away the first three minutes of the second half and they missed 15 of their final 20 shots.

It wasn't pretty.

Trevon Hughes was 2 for 9 in the second half and 3 for 16 overall, although he finished with 17 points thanks to his ability to penetrate and get to the line. Jason Bohannon was 1 for 8 in the second half and 2 for 12 overall.

Those two, who make up UW's starting backcourt, combined to go 1 for 14 from 3-point range.

"It's a whole different story if guys knock down just a few shots," UW coach Bo Ryan said. "If we just shoot 35 percent we hold them under 40, and in those kinds of games you're supposed to be able to get it done."

After scoring 16 points in those 10 possessions, Wisconsin then totaled zero points in the next 10.

During that dry spell, the Badgers had two turnovers, including a shot-clock violation, and failed to finish on five decent looks in the paint. They also missed three 3-point attempts.

Xavier, which provided more defensive help on Hughes and Landry in the second half, outscored Wisconsin, 10-0, during that stretch. It took its first lead of the second half, 35-33, on a 3-pointer by sophomore Dante Jackson with 12:14 to play.

The only late-game magic for UW this time was a 3-pointer by sophomore Tim Jarmusz with 2:29 left after he retrieved a ball that Landry had lost. The basket made it 49-44 game, but from there the Badgers scored just one more basket and Xavier salted away the victory by hitting nine of 10 from the line in the final 2 minutes.

B.J. Raymond and the Musketeers are the only team from the Atlantic 10 left in the tournament and one of two non-BCS schools remaining.

Xavier's Kenny Friese, right, buries a jump hook in the fourth-seeded Musketeers 60–49 win over 12th-seed Wisconsin. Xavier advanced to the Sweet Sixteen and will face No. 1 Pittsburgh on Thursday.

Title still up for grabs

By Kate Hairopoulos
McClatchy Newspapers

The Sweet 16 survivors wear jerseys with names long a part of the NCAA Tournament mystique, and the seeds played out mostly to form a sub-par development if you like to cheer for the little guys.

But the teams still dancing survived a four-day set of first- and second-round games chock full of compelling and competitive thrillers. At times, CBS couldn't cut-in fast enough to games from Boise to Dayton to Minneapolis simultaneously reaching nerve-wracking conclusions.

The winners set up powerhouse showdowns for the regional semifinals and finals. No. 5 Purdue and No. 12 Arizona are the only seeds below No. 4 still playing.

Arizona is an unexpected storyline after it very nearly missed the tournament. But playing in its 25th straight tournament, a Cinderella it's not.

The Big East has lived up to its reputation, qualifying five teams to the regional semifinals, including No. 1 seeds Louisville, Pittsburgh and Connecticut.

The Big 12 brought three teams along in Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri.

No. 2 Memphis and No. 4s Xavier and Gonzaga are the only non-BCS conference representatives, but hardly surprises.

Here's a look at the remaining teams, along with picks of who will emerge from each region to make it to Detroit for the Final Four:

MIDWEST

1. Louisville

Terrence Williams helped the tournament's No. 1 overall seed survive a serious challenge from 9-seed Siena in the second round. Williams took over at times, totaling 24 points, 15 rebounds and four assists.

2. Michigan State

Finally healthy, the Spartans are hoping to get to the almost-at-home Final Four in Detroit. Getting this far is already a habit under coach Tom Izzo, with MSU making its eighth appearance in the Sweet 16 in 12 years. MSU knows its upcoming opponent already — having defeated Kansas, 75-62, in January in East Lansing. Guard Kalin Lucas scored 22 points in that meeting.

3. Kansas

The season opened with modest expectations for the new-look defending champions, but it would've been a disappointment for Jayhawks everywhere to miss their third consecutive Sweet 16 after facing North Dakota State and Dayton in the opening rounds. Cole Aldrich recorded a rare triple-double (13 points, 20 rebounds, 10 blocks) Sunday against the Flyers.

12. Arizona

The Wildcats' advancement doesn't change their pre-tournament résumé – questioned by many to be worthy of an NCAA bid. But Arizona couldn't care less now. Behind interim coach Russ Pennell and guard Nic Wise, a Houston-area product, the Cats knocked off Utah and surprised 13-seed Cleveland State.

And the winner is ...

Louisville

The Cardinals and Rick Pitino are experienced, tough, tournament-tested, and the best-equipped to win in Indy.

EAST

1. Pittsburgh

This is the Panthers' fifth trip to the Sweet 16 in eight years, but they haven't advanced. This time, Pitt, a No. 1 seed for the first time, might finally break the curse. Nailbiters against East Tennessee State and Oklahoma State in the first two rounds proved it won't be easy. Wing Sam Young, who had 32 points and forward DeJuan Blair (10 points, 12 rebounds) pushed Pitt through against OSU.

2. Duke

The Blue Devils' weaknesses, such as their lack of a true inside game and their unusual two-year absence from the Round of 16 were easy to highlight. But Coach K's guys are finding their way, hitched to the offense of wing Gerald Henderson and reliant on the composure that held off Texas in the second round and helped Duke win the ACC tournament.

3. Villanova

The Wildcats weren't always mentioned with the most elite Big East teams. Maybe they should have been. The Wildcats beat Pitt during the regular season and could face it again in the region final. Led by Dante Cunningham's 18 points in a blowout win over UCLA on Saturday, Villanova is making its fourth trip to the Sweet 16 in five years

4. Xavier

The X-men may be overmatched in the East. But, then again, the Musketeers have proven people wrong plenty of times before. The Atlantic 10 regular-season champs are in their second-straight Sweet 16 after shutting down Wisconsin and Portland State.

And the winner is ...

Pittsburgh

Nothing about the Panthers is pretty. But grit is aplenty, and it makes the difference in March.

WEST

1. Connecticut

The Huskies, behind guard A.J. Price, forward Jeff Adrien and 7-3 Hasheem Thabeet, could be chugging toward an epic regional final matchup with No. 2 seed Memphis. UConn hasn't yet been tested in all-encompassing victories over Chattanooga and Texas A&M.

2. Memphis

Sure, the Tigers lost Derrick Rose and Chris Douglas-Roberts from last season's national runner-up squad. But here they are anyway, powered by defense, balance, freshman guard Tyreke Evans and coach John Calipari's aplomb. The Tigers are in their fourth-straight Sweet 16.

3. Missouri

Mike Anderson and Mizzou became the third Big 12 team to advance to the Sweet 16 after fighting their way through a thriller Sunday against Marquette. Freshman Kim English is the Super Sub of the tourney so far. The Tigers, the Big 12 tournament champions, have restored a program ravaged by NCAA violations and off-the-court issues. Anderson coached against Memphis coach John Calipari when he led UAB in Conference USA.

5. Purdue

Purdue, the Big Ten tournament champion, is back in the Sweet 16 for the first time since 2000. JaJuan Johnson is making a name for himself when it matters most, scoring 22 points and blocking two big shots at the end of the Boilermakers' 76-74 win over No. 4-seed Washington.

And the winner is ...

Memphis

Memphis has the goods to get back to its second-straight Final Four.

SOUTH

1. North Carolina

The incessant focus on point guard Ty Lawson's big right toe won't lessen this week. Sure, speedy Lawson scored 23 points in Saturday's win over LSU, but the toe was already swelling and causing the junior discomfort in postgame interviews. Carolina is clearly better when he's running the show.

2. Oklahoma

You can body slam him and bloody him up, but Blake Griffin, most everybody's player of the year, seems to only get better. He powered his way to 61 points and 30 rebounds in the first two rounds. With Griffin's potency and guards Willie Warren and Austin Johnson's return to form, OU looks like it's solved the issues that caused a late-season slide.

3. Syracuse

Syracuse showed it had plenty left after seven overtime periods in the Big East tournament. Guard Jonny Flynn is an ironman, and guard Eric Devendorf has scored 20 or more points in four of his last five games. You might remember the last OU-Syracuse meeting, in a 2003 regional final, when Carmelo Anthony guided Syracuse past OU on the way to the national title. Now it's OU with the player of the year.

4. Gonzaga

Life is good for the Bulldogs after freshman guard Demetri Goodson drove the length of the court and hit the game-winning bank shot with 0.9 seconds left against Western Kentucky. Gonzaga, winner of 11 straight, has its tournament mojo back, reaching the Sweet 16 for the first time since 2006. But the Zags haven't advanced in their last three appearances.

And the winner is ...

North Carolina

As long as Ty Lawson's toe holds up, Carolina's experience pushes it to its 18th Final Four.

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
2, 3 & 4 BEDROOM APARTMENTS IN AMHERST
FREE Wii!
FREE TV!
FREE MONEY!
For details, come to the Housing Fair
Thursday, March 26
Campus Center Concourse 10-3
www.MillValleyApts.com
CALL 253-7377
OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE
420 RIVERGLADE DRIVE

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

INTERESTED IN GETTING BUSINESS EXPERIENCE?
THE COLLEGIAN IS ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF BUSINESS MANAGER.
COME TO 113 CAMPUS CENTER TO PICK UP AN APPLICATION.

Tuber Tuesday.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | 2 | | 3 | 6 | 7 | |
| | | 4 | 1 | 6 | | | | |
| | | | | | | 4 | 9 | |
| | | | | | 5 | 8 | | 4 |
| 3 | 6 | | | | | | 2 | 7 |
| 8 | | 5 | 6 | | | | | |
| | 2 | 8 | | | | | | |
| | | | | 2 | 1 | 7 | | |
| | 5 | 6 | 9 | | 7 | | | |

ACROSS
1 Top
4 Crooner
8 ___ porridge hot
13 Theater section
14 Concept
15 Inserted
16 Elvis' middle name
17 Appear
18 Cosmetic item
19 One who gives stunt flying exhibitions
22 Chaney or Chaney Jr.
23 Cain, for one
24 End prematurely
26 Money
29 Rest
32 Russian workers' group
36 Conceited
38 Spoken
39 Precious
40 Tie the knot
41 Pianist Peter
42 Actress Swenson
43 Intestinal parts
44 Head topper
45 Braid
47 Giants guard
49 Embankment
51 Sweat
56 "Arise" spin-off
58 Enemies
61 Like school paper
63 Correct
64 30 over 12 = two half-___
65 Ms. Dickinson
66 Mediterranean feeder
67 Squint
68 Had one's picture taken
69 Prophet
70 Turkmen, once: abbr.

DOWN
1 Sea
2 Socrates' forum
3 Small amount
4 Nightclub
5 Prefix for logical
6 At no time, to a poet
7 Fraternity letter
8 Imitator
9 Nigerian people
10 Unfaithful one
11 Dieter's lunch
12 First home
13 Chemistry classes, often
20 Trade for cash
21 Heavy wood
25 River in France
27 Skating rink
28 Biblical weeds
30 Scarce ___ machine
31 Miner's passage
33 France's City ___
34 Kid brothers, often
35 Wipe out
37 Tabriz's location
40 Stuck in mud
44 Second letter
46 Sidestepped
48 4/1/2009
50 Makes level
52 Catches
53 German articles
54 Traditional religious meal
55 Ruler of old
56 Word with jack or doodle
57 Floor covering
Bird
59 Ms. Falco
60 Anger
62 "___ had a farm, ..."

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Comics Mail Bag

Dear Comics Guy:
I would just like to say that I have been very disappointed with the comics page over the last week or two. There was one Sudoku that was unsolveable, as well as a repeat of the comic Brewster Rocket: Space Guy. Your comics page is very important to me. Without it I am forced to pay attention in class. Please, for the sake of all of us, give us new material.
— Chris

Dear Chris:
I'm glad you have been enjoying the comics page lately. I appreciate the passion which you bring to the court at game time. But no sitting around sippin' Gatorade. Please send me some comics of your own to put on the page. Its not what your comics page can do for you; its what can you do for your comics page.
— The Comics Ed.

Email your comics and things to comics@dailycollegian.com

Quote of the Day

"I don't care what is written about me so long as it isn't true."

— Dorothy Parker

Wondermark by David Malki

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! by Tim Rickard

Cheap City By Michael Capozzola

Bliss By Harry Bliss

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You will return home today humiliated and soaked, left to wonder why your impromtu wet T-shirt contest was a total failure.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You'll be disturbed to find an Easter basket waiting for you under your sofa today; the Zodiac Bunny Murderer is trailing you.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
A bottle of wine and some freshly picked flowers will lead to an evening that is even hotter than your Amish electric fireplace.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You are an optimistic cynic, and a realistic idealist. More than anything else, you are inconsistantly unwavering in your beliefs.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Harvesting your body hair is a great way to generate some extra cash when times are tight.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your experience with a dental dam this week will ultimately remind you of a trip to the Hoover Dam you took as a child.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Your failed attempts at romance can all be traced back to your inability to fit a square peg into a round hole.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
On Friday you will realize the answer to the important question "Why did I get up today?" about three days too late.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Organize a student protest of the new UMass plan to cover the Campus Center in vinyl siding.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You'll really need a hug today, because the Karma Train pulling into the station, and the conductor is going to kick your ass.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Calmly evacuate, no matter how difficult that may seem due to the walls of flames in between you and the exit.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Your patent application for a new type of rain boots with "drainage holes" is destined to fail, like all stupid ideas.

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

Classifieds

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

ANNOUNCEMENT

You're not alone! Stressed? Panicking? Grieving? Wondering what comes after college? Mental Health Services support groups can help. Call (413) 545-2337

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblowout.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900

FOR RENT

Amherst: FREE Wii and entry to win a FREE flat-screen TV! $500 off security! (When you apply before April 15th for lease starting June 1st- Sept. 1st) 2,3,4 BR apts with 2 full baths, AC, dishwasher and FREE HEAT! Bus to UMass. Going Fast! call 253-7377 or go to www.MillValleyApts.com

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations. Veterinarian examination. Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 24, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hockey East earns 4 bids

Boston University grabs top seed in NCAA Tournament

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Entering Saturday's Hockey East Championship, the conference was guaranteed at least four bids to the NCAA Division I Men's Ice Hockey Tournament.

Boston University, Northeastern, Vermont and New Hampshire secured their places in the field with strong regular season. Even after going down in the quarterfinals of the Hockey East Tournament, UNH and UVM sat in position to play for a national championship. Had another team won the conference, five teams would have been named to the 16-team field.

Boston University, the No. 1 seed in the Hockey East tournament, defeated Massachusetts-Lowell, 1-0, in the championship game to secure the automatic bid awarded to the league champion. Defeating the Terriers was UMass-Lowell's only chance of earning a bid.

The NCAA announced the field Sunday morning. As expected, Boston University earned the No. 1 overall seed in the tournament. With that, the committee placed the Terriers in the regional closest to home, BU is the No. 1 seed in the Manchester, N.H., Regional.

In the opening round, BU will face the region's No. 4 seed and 15th-overall seed Ohio State of the Central Collegiate Hockey Association. The Buckeyes earned the final at-large bid, edging out Wisconsin and Minnesota of the Western Collegiate Hockey Association. Under most circumstances, the tournament's top seed takes on the tournament's lowest overall seed. That, however, created a conflict with the committee's rule of avoiding intra-conference matchups in the opening round of the tournament as Ohio State would have played CCHA Champion and No. 2 overall seed Notre Dame. Swapping Ohio State with College Hockey America Champion and No. 16 seed Bemidji (Minn.) State was the only way to avoid the issue.

"You know what the rules are going in and it's an absolute rule," BU coach Jack Parker told USCHO. "It's supposed to be a national tournament. The last thing you want to do is play somebody you just played last week [in a conference tournament]. I think it's a good rule. I had [predicted] the exact same bracket myself. That's how I would've picked it."

As the host institution of the regional, New Hampshire coach Dick Umile knew his team would play in its home state. The Wildcats drew North Dakota of the WCHA. Since reaching the NCAA Championship game in 2003, UNH has struggled to advance deep within the NCAA tournament.

"Well obviously [North Dakota coach Dave Hakstol's] done a pretty good job; he's been to the Frozen Four I think every year that he's been there," UNH coach Dick Umile told USCHO. "He's done a great job with his program and has a rich history. Obviously UNH, we've been to the NCAA tournament, we haven't been as successful as we would have liked the past couple of years and we're looking forward to changing that this year."

The Wildcats and Fighting Sioux open the region's action on Saturday at 2 p.m., while BU and Ohio State are set to play at 5:30 p.m.

Hockey East No. 2 seed Northeastern drew Cornell of the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Hockey League in the Grand Rapids, Mich., Regional. The Huskies lost to UMass-Lowell in the semifinals of the Hockey East tournament. Of the eight first-round matchups across the country, none of the teams involved met at any point during the regular season or in conference tournaments.

"I don't know much about Cornell, I don't know much about a lot of the teams and I won't know anything about them until tomorrow," NU captain Joe Vitale told USCHO. "I know I have a tremendous amount of respect for them, in the past years they have been great, they are going to be a big, big challenge and we're looking forward to it."

The winner of the Northeastern-Cornell matchup will play the winner of the Notre Dame-Bemidji State matchup in the quarterfinals.

Vermont drew a favorable place in the tournament, landing as the No. 3 seed in the Bridgeport, Conn., regional.

"Obviously we're thrilled first and foremost to be involved in the national tournament," UVM coach Kevin Sneddon told USCHO. "And we're thrilled to be in the East. It's a great opportunity for our great fans to watch their Catamounts."

UVM will take on host institution Yale in the opening round. Like Northeastern, UMass-Lowell upset the Catamounts in the Hockey East tournament. The River Hawks swept both games from UVM in the quarterfinals of the conference tournament in Burlington, Vt.

Michigan and Air Force round out the Bridgeport Regional; Air Force had one of its most successful season's in program history and won the Atlantic Hockey Association tournament. Michigan is the region's top seed and is coming off a loss to Notre Dame in the CCHA Championship on Saturday.

The Wolverines led the Fighting Irish, 2-1, entering the final period before surrendering four third-period goals, in a 5-2 loss. The Wolverines are making their 19th consecutive NCAA tournament appearance. Last year, Michigan lost to Notre Dame in the national semifinals.

"We're glad we're in the tournament again," Michigan coach Red Berenson told USCHO. "When I look back to the fall there were a lot of questions about whether this team would even be in the tournament.

"Air Force is a good team. They beat Colorado [College] this year and they've played teams like Yale."

The fourth regional is in Minneapolis and features WCHA runner-up Denver and WCHA Champion Minnesota-Duluth. UMD was the No. 5 seed in the WCHA tournament, but defeated Minnesota, North Dakota and Denver on their way to an unlikely conference championship.

The winner of each regional advances to the Frozen Four in Washington, D.C.; the national semifinal games are on April 9 at 5 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. with the national championship game coming on April 11 at 7 p.m.

Material from personal interviews, other beat writers and league and team sources was used in this report.

Joe Meloni can be reached at managingeditor@dailycollegian.com

New Hampshire captain Joe Charlebois, right, and the Wildcats are hosting the Northeast Regional in Manchester, N.H., this weekend.

Boston University captain Matt Gilroy, right, leads the No. 1 Terriers into the NCAA tournament this weekend.

Quirk, seniors' contributions not tarnished

Joe Meloni

Cory Quirk stood in front of a flock of reporters 15 minutes after his college career ended in a 3-2 loss to Northeastern in the third game of a Hockey East quarterfinal series nine days ago.

The captain of the Massachusetts hockey team fought back tears as he delivered responses. His career was over; his final season deemed a failure by UMass' first-round exit from the Hockey East tournament.

The careers of six other Minutemen ended on that day. While Quirk answered questions, his careful, deliberate responses revealed more than he cared to say. There was no need to ask of the disappointment associated with the defeat.

Difficult as it may seem for the Minutemen and their fans to draw a positive from a sub-.500 season and first-round exit from the Hockey East tournament, the progress made in the years since the class of 2009 arrived in Amherst is undeniable.

Quirk's class boasts two of the best wingers in the modern era of the program in Alex Berry and Chris Davis; a forward; Jordan Virtue, who assisted on the most important goal in program history; two blue liners who provided steady, smart defense, John Wessbecker and Topher Bevis; and Scott Crowder, a winger who made life difficult for opposition first-line wingers his whole career.

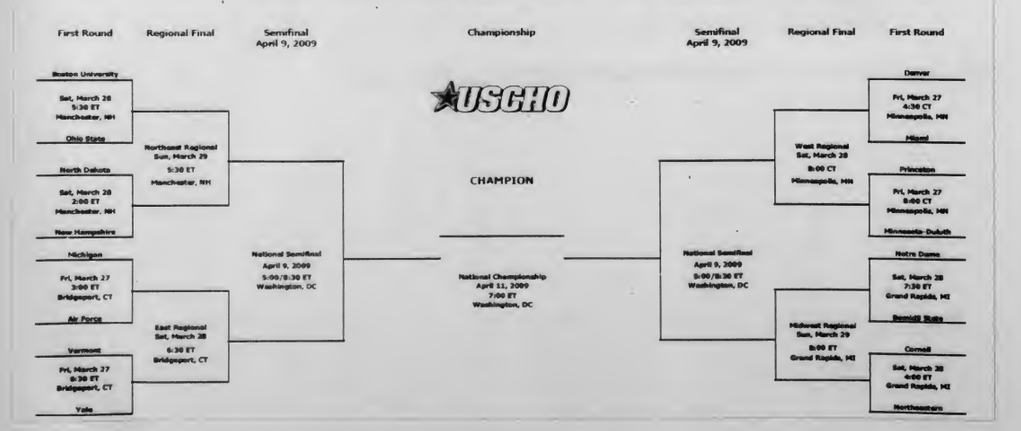
No, UMass' hockey program isn't on par with cross-state rivals Boston College or Boston University, but the Minutemen matter now.

Hockey once took a backseat to basketball and lacrosse in Amherst, now the Mullins Center rocks on Friday and Saturday nights because this group built on the progress of previous classes. One can only imagine what would have become of this program if Jon Quick stuck around to graduate with his classmates. Paul Dainton and Dan Meyers are hardly sieves, but Quick was an all-American – one of only two in the 16 years since the administration brought hockey back to UMass. Players like that don't come around for any program, let alone a program only recently emerging from its infancy.

Weekend after weekend, fans packed the Mullins Center and shook it to Marcus Camby levels celebrating goals set up by a nifty pass from Quirk or a board-shaking check from Berry. Once UMass joined Hockey East, competition against the nation's top-ranked teams was commonplace; students turn out now because the Minutemen can compete with anyone in the nation, not just for the opportunity to witness an upset. And this group is largely responsible for that.

Since the loss to Northeastern, Quirk and Berry have moved on, signing contracts with professional teams. Still, for the remaining five – most of whom will sign pro deals at some point – last Sunday's loss isn't an easy one to get over. It wasn't some midseason loss they could forget about because another equally important game awaits you a few days later; it was the type of loss that costs you sleep and makes you think about every shift, every possession that didn't result in a goal.

At the end of the press conference, Quirk sought out the reporters he knew and thanked them for their coverage of the Minutemen. If nothing else, his display demonstrated the professionalism with which UMass coach Don Cahoon runs UMass hockey, and it echoes throughout the program. Beyond that, Cahoon's loyalty to his players resonates from Quirk to the five or six healthy scratches on a nightly basis. It was visible with Quirk as he cited the effort of his teammates to pull of what some deemed impossible. Even during a particularly poor stretch in November where the Minutemen lost consecutive one-goal games at home first to Vermont and then Saint Lawrence – Quirk didn't deflect any blame for his team's struggles.



It's meaningless and unfair to suggest that UMass' failure to defeat Northeastern is somehow a step back for the program. Facing one of the best teams in the nation in their home rink – don't forget the specter of Hockey East Player of the year Brad Thiessen in Northeastern's net – is hardly an ideal setup for an upset.

As far as Cahoon and the remaining Minutemen are concerned, 2008-09 was a disappointment – a season that began with expectation and ended in heartbreak. For those seven seniors, the year may have been difficult; but the program is in a better place now than when they found it.

If that's not success, then I don't what is.

Joe Meloni is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at managingeditor@dailycollegian.com

2009 NCAA Men's Division I Tournament

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

SUNNY HIGH: 55 LOW: 28 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, MARCH 25, 2009

Fee increase to be rebated

Gov. Patrick allocates $162M in stimulus funds to higher ed.

By Timothy Wallace and Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

Federal stimulus money given to the state and allocated by Gov. Patrick will allow the University of Massachusetts system to rebate a $1,500 student fee increase approved by the Board of Trustees last month.

Patrick announced Tuesday that $82 million will be given to the UMass system – around half of the $162 million given to all state colleges and universities.

Instead of a $1,500 increase, the funds will allow the University to employ the standard annual increase to cover the cost of inflation, according to a statement from the governor. That cost of inflation increase projected by several news sources to be around $400.

University spokesman Ed Blaguszewski stated that he was aware of the reported $400 figure, but said the exact calculations have yet to be determined.

As part of the governor's Massachusetts Recovery Plan, the money is aimed at restoring funding to campus budgets, averting layoffs and program cuts and mitigating student fee hikes, the statement said.

However, in a campus-wide e-mail about the announcement, Chancellor Robert C. Holub was cautious in detailing exactly how the money could affect UMass.

"While this action by the Governor is not final, and the ultimate budget for the Commonwealth will not be determined until later this summer, we applaud his leadership."

"It is our sincere hope that the stimulus funding to UMass Amherst will mitigate the possibility of layoffs resulting from our projected $46 million budget deficit," he said. "We also want to do all we can to lessen the impact of the fee increase passed recently by the Board of Trustees, and hope to rebate as much of this increase as we can based on the stimulus money we receive.

In a campus-wide e-mail, Chancellor Robert C. Holub was cautious in detailing exactly how the allocated stimulus money may affect UMass.

Gov. Patrick announces his plan to allocate $162 million to state higher education, $82 million of which will be given to the UMass system.

This announcement was an important step for our institution, and I personally thanked the Governor for his support."

"With enrollment at an all time high, it is critical that tomorrow's leaders have access to the opportunities they need today," said Patrick. "Federal recovery funds will help our public colleges and universities prepare our students for success after graduation, giving the Commonwealth a highly-skilled workforce to compete in a 21st century global economy."

If the higher education recommendations in the Governor's fiscal year 2010 budget are approved by the legislature, Governor Patrick will use $162 million in federal education recovery funds to restore budgets to FY2009 levels at UMass to $81.6 million, community colleges to $40.3 million, state colleges to $36.7 million and other forms of support including training grants to $2.8 million.

Education Secretary Paul Reville pointed to additional federal recovery money dedicated to higher education, including increases in Pell Grant and work study funding. Pell Grant funding will see an increase in the maximum grant for students from $4,731 to $5,350, and will help an additional 85,000 low-income students pay for college.

Additionally, federal recovery funds include $9 million for work study programs at the 29 campuses, adding to the $45 million Massachusetts already receives annually.

"Governor Patrick is to be commended for taking this critical step toward restoring funding for public higher education in Massachusetts," said UMass President Jack Wilson. "The Governor's action represents an investment in the 63,000 students who attend the University of Massachusetts and an investment in our state's economic future."

Governor Patrick unveiled two other key parts of his Massachusetts Recovery Plan last week. First, he announced he will commit $168 million in federal recovery funds to 166 school districts to help them reach so-called foundation spending levels and avoid program cuts and teacher layoffs next school year. Second, he pledged $280 million for every school district in the state to support special education services, plus an additional $10 million for special education services for pre-school students.

To date, Governor Patrick has committed a total of $620 million in American Recovery and Reinvestment Act funds for K-12 education, special education and higher education programs and services.

Over the next two years, Massachusetts will receive an estimated $1.88 billion to support early education, K-12 education and higher education.

Timothy Wallace can be reached at timothyw@student.umass.edu.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@dailycollegian.com

Man in Vassell case acquitted

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

John C. Bowes, one of the two men allegedly involved in an altercation last February outside of MacKimmie Hall, the dorm of former University of Massachusetts student Jason Vassell, was acquitted March 13 of civil rights violations stemming from that incident.

Bowes, now 21, of Hancock, N.H., was convicted of disorderly conduct and sentenced to one year of probation and a $200 fine at Eastern Hampshire District Court in Belchertown, Mass.

Bowes will also be required to complete a substance abuse training program within the next three months, as Judge John Payne cited his documented pattern of alcohol abuse as grounds for including that provision of his sentence.

Judge Payne denied Assistant District Attorney Neil Desroches' request for Bowes to be sentenced to attend a diversity sensitivity program. In addition, Bowes will be able to travel to Baja California later this year while still on probation to take a scuba diving instruction course.

Bowes, a white man, was accused of using racial slurs during the incident against Vassell, who is black, in February 2008.

During the trial, Vassell's former dorm neighbor Barbara Rutman was called by the prosecution, recounting various racial slurs she heard from male voices outside Vassell's window.

Vassell is still awaiting trial on charges of aggravated assault for allegedly stabbing Bowes and his friend, Jonathan Bosse, 20, of Milton, Mass.

Vassell has argued he acted in self defense, and his supporters contend that the case is an example of institutionalized racism, citing the severity of the charges he faces contrasted with the charges against Bowes and the fact that Bosse has not been charged with a crime.

Media Coordinator for the Committee for Justice for Jason, Joe Mirkin, quoted Massachusetts general law in attempting to illustrate how the Vassell case meets the criterion needed to be considered a hate crime.

"Gathering evidence from eyewitness reports, as well as interviews with Jason's attackers – John Bowes and Jonathan Bosse – there is ample reason to believe that both of these men should have been charged with hate crimes," he said after relating that Massachusetts law chapter 265, section 39A states that a hate crime is one in which a person is assaulted because of "race, color, religion, natural origin, sexual orientation or disability."

Mirkin furthered that both men have been accused of similar behavior in the past.

"Police reports from the Milton Police Department show that each man has been implicated in such hate-based crimes no fewer than four times," he said.

Mirkin said he feels the charges against Bowes were not enough.

"To drop the assault and battery charge against Bowes is to completely ignore the fact that after violently intimidating and threatening Jason because of his race, Bowes went on to break his nose," he said.

Alfred Chamberland, Mr. Bowes' Easthampton, Mass.-based attorney, said the jury made the right decision in the case by ignoring the racial allegations.

"I thought the jury came to the correct decision," he said, "They were able to see that my client had a legitimate reason to be there, that he had been invited to spend the night at MacKimmie and that there was no racial motivation to this altercation."

Chamberland said he believes the issue of race in this case was given too much attention.

"They saw past all these racial allegations that have been overhyped, that my client met Mr Vassell at the window and he became aggressive and there was nothing racially motivated here," he said.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sjb09@hampshire.edu

Study: boys failing schools, under enrolling in college

By Sean McDonough
Collegian Staff

The song "This is a Man's World" by James Brown reflects the long-held belief in our society that men outperform women, but studies are showing otherwise when it comes to academia.

The National Center for Educational Statistics found that boys were 30 percent more likely than girls to flunk or drop out of high school, five times more likely to be diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD), get worse grades than girls in elementary, middle, high school, college and graduate school, are less likely to attend college and have 12 percent less bachelor degrees than women and 10 percent less graduate degrees.

The U.S. Department of Education found that two-thirds of students in special education were boys.

Additionally, Christina Hoff Sommers wrote in her book, "The War Against Boys," that "More boys than girls are involved in crime, alcohol and drugs. Girls attempt suicide more often than boys, but it is boys who more often succeed."

In the book "Suicide and Attempted Suicide" by Geo Stone, a table showed during 1990 for every 100,000 people in the United States, an average of 20.4 men committed suicide while only 4.8 women did.

In schools, boys also received the majority of disciplinary actions: detentions, suspensions and expulsions.

Psychologist Michael Thompson, co-author of "Raising Cain," wrote how for many boys, school is not so good a fit as it is for girls. He said that boys tend to have a higher activity level than girls, and this makes them more likely to get in trouble. Michael Thompson also said that since boys mature more slowly than girls, too much is expected of boys during their early developmental years and that they already feel failure and frustration in school at a very young age.

In the PBS documentary based on "Raising Cain," Dr. Thompson says that American boys are the most violent of those from any developed country.

Alvaro De Vinicente, the headmaster of a private all-boys school called The Heights School in Washington said in a Voice of America article, "I think that in many cases boys are falling behind because there has been a process over the last 20 years, a process of education becoming more feminine. And I mean that in sort of a realistic factual sense. Because if you look at the statistics, there is a majority of women teachers and a majority of girls in the school that everything gets tailored to the girls and the young women."

De Vinicente noted that boys actually hear differently than girls and that sometimes people speaking to them need to be louder than they need to be for girls.

And later in the article he said that it is important for people to realize that "the way boys behave is not a character flaw."

So now that the problem has been identified, people like Dr. Thompson are trying to come up with solutions.

Dr Thompson said in "Raising Cain" that boys learn better through activities that include building and making things. He also said that boys have a higher activity level than girls and need more time to move around and be physical in school.

Sean McDonough can be reached at smcdonou@student.umass.edu.

UM to face No. 1 Wildcats

The Minutewomen will square off against No. 1 Northwestern, the four time defending national champions, tonight at 7 p.m. in their first ever home game under the lights at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

BEER AND LOATHING IN PANAMA CITY

ARTS & LIVING
NOTHING HELD BACK

Author Keith Strausbaugh's new book holds nothing back while on vacation as he takes up where writers like Tucker Max started and expands upon their work.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
SENIOR LEADERSHIP

The 2009 Massachusetts baseball team may have been ranked 10th in the preseason coaches poll, but with their senior leadership it hopes to prove them wrong.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORAL & OPINION
JOHN GLASER

Collegian columnist John Glaser explains why he thinks the economy is even worse than it already appears.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

As UMass' winter sports come to an end, Collegian beat writers and columnists share their thoughts on the teams.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 36

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3649 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkas
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
COPIES EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Leigh Greaney
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenzweig
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR P.J. Stanley
WEB EDITOR Victor Jasek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Koetwars
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey B. Larnard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO Ryan Fung
ASSISTANT PHOTO Matthew Harrison
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Weiser

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN HEADQUARTERED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413.545.3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION TEAM
Nick Guarino

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

GEO-LOCATE YOUR NEWS

FOLLOW NEWS GEOGRAPHICALLY WITH DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM'S "NEWSGARDEN" APPLICATION ON THE HOMEPAGE.

NEWS

BLOGS | ALL WEEK
KEEP UP WITH THE LATEST SCIENTIFIC DEVELOPMENTS GOING ON IN YOUR OWN BACKYARD WITH RESEARCH THIS WEEK.

FIND OUT THE NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS AT EDITOR'S NOTE, RUN BY NEWS EDITOR WILL MCGUINNESS.

PODCAST |
COLLEGIAN EDITORS HAVE A ROUNDTABLE DISCUSSION OF THE ISRAEL / PALESTINE CONFLICT WITH A LOCAL TAKE.

ARTS & LIVING

VIDEO | WEDNESDAY
AN INTERVIEW WITH LOCAL AUTHOR TRACY KIDDER ON HIS ACCLAIMED BOOK, "MOUNTAINS BEYOND MOUNTAINS," AND HIS NEXT PROJECT, DUE OUT IN AUGUST.

DailyCollegian.com is looking for multimedia storytellers.

Get your feet wet in new media.

Parolee kills four cops

BY DENIS C. THERIAULT AND SANDRA GONZALES
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

OAKLAND, Calif. — Family members of Lovelle Mixon, the parolee who killed four Oakland police officers said Sunday they knew he was struggling with the weight of freedom after an adult life mostly spent behind bars.

He couldn't find a job, they said. He was depressed. Finally, last month, Mixon, who was previously convicted in a 2002 San Francisco carjacking and once was a "person of interest" in a 2007 killing, had skipped a meeting with his parole officer, all but ensuring that once again he'd be heading back to prison.

But when the law finally caught up with Mixon, as two motorcycle officers pulled over the 26 year old's Buick on Saturday at 74th Avenue and MacArthur Boulevard, he wasn't ready to go. He shot at the officers, killing one, and then barricaded himself in his sister's apartment around the corner, killing two more officers as they tried to arrest him.

"He didn't know really where to start," said Mixon's wife, Amara Langston, 25. "He was trying to make himself a better person and trying to realize his mistakes and what he was doing was wrong."

And now Sunday, a city all too familiar with tragic spasms of violence was again left grasping for answers in the wake of one more – this time, the deadliest police shooting in its history.

As a tight-knit law enforcement community mourned their fallen brethren - slain in a routine traffic stop that turned deadly, then escalating into a chaotic standoff – neighbors in hard-scrabble East Oakland shook their heads at the senseless violence and pondered their own historically tense ties with police.

Still, from all corners of the city, there was an outpouring of support from residents and business people, with flowers and candles appearing at the shooting scenes, and offers of food and money extended to the victims' stricken families.

"I feel sick and sad," said Sharon Chipman, walking in the city's Montclair district. "This is such a complex, painful reality that people have to come together and heal. There is so much anger, frustration and tension, I'm just praying the community gets stronger. We need to reach out to each other."

Forty-one-year-old Officer John Hege was initially pronounced brain dead and was on life support so his organs could be harvested. He has since died.

Also killed in Saturday's violence were Sgt. Mark Dunakin, 40, who was shot along with Hege during the traffic stop; and Sgt. Ervin Romans, 43, and Sgt. Daniel Sakai, 35, both killed at the apartment where the gunman was holed up. A fifth officer was grazed by a bullet and released after receiving treatment.

One woman, hosing down her driveway two doors down from the apartment where Mixon was killed, said some of those lives could have been saved, including Mixon's.

She said neighbors knew immediately where Mixon had run, but they didn't tell police – who quickly scattered scores of officers across the neighborhood – until nearly an hour later. In East Oakland, lamented the woman, Elsaine, who didn't give her last name, that kind of cooperation with police doesn't happen.

Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger ordered flags at the state capitol flown at half-staff Sunday in honor of the slain officers.

Schwarzenegger arrived in Oakland Sunday afternoon to meet with Dellums and members of the police department.

Family and friends gathered at the officers' homes on Sunday, while patrol officers stood guard outside, sharing some private grief in the midst of a tragedy whose horror made international headlines.

Police officers hide behind cars after hearing gunfire during a second shooting in the midst of a manhunt for a suspect who shot two more police officers Saturday. A parolee shot and killed four policemen.

CIA questions computerized voting systems

BY GREG GORDON
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

WASHINGTON — The CIA, which has been monitoring foreign countries' use of electronic voting systems, has reported apparent vote-rigging schemes in Venezuela, Macedonia and Ukraine and a raft of concerns about the machines' vulnerability to tampering.

Appearing last month before a U.S. Election Assistance Commission field hearing in Orlando, Fla., a CIA cybersecurity expert suggested that Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez and his allies fixed a 2004 election recount, an assertion that could further roil U.S. relations with the Latin leader.

In a presentation that could provide disturbing lessons for the United States, where electronic voting is becoming universal, Steve Stigall summarized what he described as attempts to use computers to undermine democratic elections in developing nations. His remarks have received no news media attention until now.

Stigall told the Election Assistance Commission, a tiny agency that Congress created in 2002 to modernize U.S. voting, that computerized electoral systems can be manipulated at five stages, from altering voter registration lists to posting results.

"You heard the old adage 'follow the money,'" Stigall said, according to a transcript of his hour-long presentation that McClatchy Newspapers obtained. "I follow the vote. And wherever the vote becomes an electron and touches a computer, that's an opportunity for a malicious actor potentially to -... make bad things happen."

Stigall said that voting equipment connected to the Internet could be hacked, and machines that weren't connected could be compromised wirelessly. Eleven U.S. states have banned or limited wireless capability in voting equipment, but Stigall said that election officials didn't always know it when wireless cards were embedded in their machines.

While Stigall said he wasn't speaking for the CIA and wouldn't address U.S. voting systems, his presentation appeared to undercut calls by some U.S. politicians to shift to Internet balloting, at least for military personnel and other American citizens living overseas. Stigall said that most web-based ballot systems had proved to be insecure.

The commission has been criticized for giving states more than $1 billion to buy electronic equipment without first setting performance standards. Numerous computer-security experts have concluded that U.S. systems can be hacked, and allegations of tampering in Ohio, Florida and other swing states have triggered a campaign to require all voting machines to produce paper audit trails.

The CIA got interested in electronic systems a few years ago, Stigall said, after concluding that foreigners might try to hack U.S. election systems. He said he couldn't elaborate "in an open, unclassified forum," but that any concerns would be relayed to U.S. election officials.

Stigall, who's studied electronic systems in about three dozen countries, said that most countries' machines produced paper receipts that voters then dropped into boxes. However, even that doesn't prevent corruption, he said.

Turning to Venezuela, he said that Chavez controlled all of the country's voting equipment before he won a 2004 nationwide recall vote that had threatened to end his rule.

When Chavez won, Venezuelan mathematicians challenged results that showed him to be consistently strong in parts of the country where he had weak support. The mathematicians found "a very subtle algorithm" that appeared to adjust the vote in Chavez's favor, Stigall said.

Calls for a recount left Chavez facing a dilemma, because the voting machines produced paper ballots, Stigall said.

"How do you defeat the paper ballots the machines spit out?" Stigall asked. "Those numbers must agree, must they not, with the electronic voting-machine count? ... In this case, he simply took a gamble."

Stigall said that Chavez agreed to allow 100 of 19,000 voting machines to be audited.

Alaska volcano still active after eruption

BY GEORGE BRYON
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Since an erupting Mount Redoubt sent an ash cloud shooting nearly 12 miles high early Monday morning with its fifth and strongest explosion, the Cook Inlet volcano has remained highly active, the Alaska Volcano Observatory reports.

Six to seven smaller, subsequent explosions lasting about two minutes apiece have sent additional ash and gas into the atmosphere since the big blast at 4:30 a.m., AVO staff scientist Chris Waythomas said.

Ash has now been detected at 60,000 feet above sea level, the National Weather Service reported.

Midlevel winds are still carrying the ash plume north over the Susitna Valley, and minor ash fall has been reported in Skwentna, Willow, Trapper Creek and Talkeetna, according to the Weather Service, the Matanuska-Susitna Borough and eyewitness reports. Traces of ash also have now been reported in Denali National Park and at the village of Nikolai to the west.

High-elevation winds above 40,000 feet are beginning to veer toward Anchorage, but no ash is expected to fall on Alaska's largest city at this time, Bob Hopkins, the meteorologist-in-charge of the National Weather Service office in Anchorage, said.

"Eight miles up – that's going to stay there," Hopkins said. "But that will affect aircraft at that altitude."

It's the lower-elevation winds between 10,000 and 20,000 feet, currently blowing north by northeast, that are most likely to carry ash to the ground, Hopkins said.

In the Su Valley, the ash fall is being described as fine gray dust around Skwentna, Trapper Creek and Talkeetna.

The eruption has apparently destroyed the "RSO" seismometer on the south flank of the volcano, as well as the AVO webcam inside a hut six miles from the summit, Waythomas said.

Two additional seismometers on Redoubt's north and east slopes were nonoperational for a while Monday morning, but that was due to a power outage on the Kenai Peninsula, he said.

By midmorning, residents in Kenai began reporting a sulfur smell in the air, but no ash had yet fallen there and schools are open, officials said.

Redoubt began erupting Sunday night, with the first explosion coming at 10:38 p.m., followed by another at 11:02 p.m., a third at 12:14 a.m. and a fourth at 1:39 a.m., the AVO reported.

Ted Stevens Anchorage International Airport remains open, although some airlines have canceled or diverted flights. Alaska Airlines reported canceling 19 flights in and out of Anchorage because of the ash but other flights are operating.

Elmendorf Air Force Base reported that 60 planes, including fighter jets, cargo aircraft and a Boeing 747 commercial plane, are being sheltered. The base initially ordered only essential personnel to report for duty; that was later changed to all personnel reporting at 8 a.m.

Mount Redoubt, a 10,197-foot stratovolcano 100 miles southwest of Anchorage, last erupted during a fourth-month period in 1989-90. Its recent period of volcanic unrest began Jan. 25.

An official with the Federal Aviation Administration at the Anchorage airport early Monday said there were no immediate plans to close the airport.

The Weather Service advised people in areas of ash fall to seal windows and doors, protect electronics and cover air intakes and open water supplies as well as minimize driving.

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781-396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Mill Valley ESTATES
2, 3 & 4 BEDROOM APARTMENTS IN AMHERST
FREE Wii!
FREE TV!
FREE MONEY!
For details, come to the Housing Fair
Thursday, March 26
Campus Center Concourse 10-3
www.MillValleyApts.com
CALL 253-7222
OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE!
420 RAVENDALE DRIVE

Welcome Back
to Your Award Winning Dining Services!
MARCH - APRIL - MAY Upcoming Events

- It's Spring – Sweet
- Tyson Week
- Cooking/Baking 101
- American Produce Week
- Visiting College Chef Series: Texas A&M University
- UMass Idol Preliminary
- Visiting College Chef Series: Princeton University
- Student Iron Chef Competition
- Taste of UMass
- Visiting College Chef Series: Davidson College
- Taste of Home
- Spring BBQ
- Midnight Buffet

www.umassdining.com
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards

UMass Idol
Mark your calendar!
Sign Up and Enter Today!
Are you the next UMass Idol?

Enter today to win your chance to sing at the Taste of UMass 2009
TO QUALIFY: April 9, 6—9 pm · Berkshire DC
To register send an e-mail to:
mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu or visit www.umassdining.com & click on UMass Idol banner
- All entries must be received by April 6
- Each contestant receives an I ♥ the DCs tee shirt & $10 Gift Card
- Limited to 30 participants

Sponsored by:
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Taste of UMass 2009
www.umassdining.com
Must be a UMass student to enter. Judges decisions are final.

VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES
Best of the Best RECIPES
THURSDAY, MARCH 26
FROM 5-9 PM · BERKSHIRE DC
Savor the best dishes of the Visiting College Chef Series

| | |
|---|---|
| University of New Hampshire | Corn Chowder |
| Harvard University | Beet Walnut and Stilton Salad |
| Berkeley | Grilled Wild Pacific Halibut with Fennel |
| Yale University | Roast Turkey (local) |
| Northwestern University | Layered Athenian Beef & Eggplant Bake |
| Western Ontario | Middlesex County Apple Crisp |

RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
www.umassdining.com

Best Film, Best Director, Best Cinematographer
2008 Newport Beach Film Festival

Fugitive Pieces is an emotionally-charged drama about a boy who is orphaned in Nazi-occupied Poland, the Greek archeologist who rescued him, and the woman whose love restored him to life. It is a film about love, loss and redemption.

Thursday, March 26 at 7:30pm
School of Management 137

FREE with UMass or Five-College ID; $8 general admission
More info at www.umass.edu/jewish

UMASS AMHERST
Presented by the Office of Jewish Affairs in conjunction with the Pioneer Valley Jewish Film Festival; cosponsored by the Department of Judaic & Near Eastern Studies and the Center for Student Development. Student Affairs & Campus Life.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 25, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Divestment one-sided

On March 4, 2009, the Student Government Association (SGA) was presented with a bill that proposed divesting from companies that profit from the suffering of innocent Palestinian civilians. Yet, based on the Anti War Network's (AWN) presentation, it was clear that they meant divestment from the state of Israel. Such a proposal is irrational, unjust and serves only to stoke the flames of an already controversial issue.

As a student with high hopes for peace in the Middle East, I seek to voice my objections to the bill and explain why I found the AWN's proposal both offensive and misleading.

While addressing the members of the SGA, the AWN depicted Israel as the sole source of suffering for innocent Palestinian civilians, while wholly and dishonestly failing to recognize Hamas' role in the conflict and in its own people's suffering. Make no mistake; it is Hamas – an organization recognized as a terrorist group by the United States, United Kingdom and the European Union – that inflicts the most harm on innocent Palestinian civilians.

Through its perpetuation of violence, its refusal to recognize the state of Israel and act as partner for peace and, more heinously, its widely documented use of Palestinian civilians as human shields, Hamas has become the Palestinian people's own worst nightmare. At the SGA meeting, the AWN essentially absolved Hamas of any responsibility for Palestinian suffering.

If the Anti-War Network is as anti-war as they claim to be, they should stop decrying Israel's defensive actions and protest those of the aggressors, the recognized terrorist organization, Hamas.

Contrary to the incessant accusatory cries of "occupation," Israel withdrew all of its troops and civilians from Gaza in the summer of 2005. The area has since become a safe haven for Hamas to launch rockets into Israel, as seen by the over 4,000 Hamas rockets that have been launched into Israel since the withdrawal and that continue to land in Israeli towns to this day.

If ... the AWN is motivated to action when innocent civilians are targeted by unjust military action, where were they when these 4,000-plus rockets were fired at innocent Israeli civilians?

Hamas' actions during the conflict in Gaza were both deplorable and inhumane. Hamas not only used innocent civilians as human shields and then blamed Israel for recklessly targeting civilians, but they also stole up to 200 tons of humanitarian aid. In fact, the United Nations Relief and Work Agency canceled some 800 tons of humanitarian aid out of fear that Hamas would take it for themselves.

Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator John Holmes stated unequivocally that "the reckless and cynical use of civilian installations by Hamas and indiscriminate firing of rockets against civilian populations are clear violations of international humanitarian law."

While Palestinians unfortunately suffered as a result of the conflict in Gaza, such was never the Israeli government's intent in its defensive operation. In fact, Israel not only allowed for 120 daily truckloads of aid into Gaza as of January, but it also attempted to conduct strategic military operations that strove to avoid civilian casualties. Take note of the frequently exercised provision that allows Israeli air force pilots to abort their mission if they feel that it will result in catastrophic damage to innocent civilians. Compare it with Hamas' actions and ask yourself – which side is more concerned with the death of civilians and the dignity of human life?

Hamas outright targets innocent Israeli civilians with their rockets. If the AWN is motivated to action when innocent civilians are targeted by unjust military action, where were they when these 4,000-plus rockets were fired at innocent Israeli civilians? Where were they when children in Sderot were growing up in bomb shelters with posttraumatic stress disorder?

If the bill is implemented, it will only spark further controversy. Let the AWN's concern with the Palestinian people's situation motivate both sides of the issue to engage in dialogue and debate, and as a result empower the student body to become more informed on this important issue. Let the SGA not come out with a one-tracked bill with political ramifications. Rather, let them moderate these debates and forms of dialogue. It is time that we start putting aside our differences so that we can sit down at one table and start discussing our similarities, which I hope will ultimately turn the tide towards peace.

I want to make something unequivocally clear. Neither I, nor anyone with whom I have a connection, desires war, especially if innocent civilians get involved. This includes all of my Israeli friends and family. I witnessed this with my own eyes when I spent my winter break in Israel during the conflict in Gaza.

As the conflict progressed, the Israeli culture became extremely morbid as everyone was glued to their television sets waiting for updates. I returned to my relative's house right after they had finished watching a news report, only to find them in an extremely somber mood. Why? The answer is simple, because innocent Palestinians had been tragically killed.

A human life is a human life, whether Palestinian, Israeli or any other nationality. But divestment from Israel will not solve the conflict. It will only further exacerbate it. Peace will come only through the recognition of this common ground between us all, and I hope and pray that we finally start to positively utilize it.

Barry Dolin is a UMass student. He can be reached at bdalin@student.umass.edu.

Economy is worse than thought

John Glaser

Are you ready? You'll probably hate this column. As a matter of fact, stop reading if you're prone to bouts of depression or mental lapses of hopelessness and despair. What follows only explains how bad America's economic circumstances really are.

People think it is only as bad, or at least as simple, as American International Group (AIG) swiping billions of dollars from the American taxpayer, as has been much the focus in recent weeks. Talk of how impressively non-stimulative the stimulus plan will likely be has quieted to a low murmur so to allow room for the white noise and chatter to envelop AIG executive pay bonuses.

Yes, Wall Street using government funds to lavishly capitalize on their own recklessness and failure is an absurdity and all praise to those having conniptions over it. Funny though, that many of those pitching fits were also praising Obama for "swift action" when he pushed for bailing out these corporations to begin with.

What the tantrum children don't understand is that all this political grandstanding, all these Chris Dodds, Barnie Franks and Tim Geithners throwing their arms in the air and feigning outrage is a pathetic load of bull. They all – Republicans and Democrats – signed on to this bailout, which explicitly included contractual executive bonuses. So hush.

But I digress. Let us get to the real juice of how twisted things are and how bad Washington and Wall Street together are screwing us. This goes much deeper than headlined condemnation of CEOs.

As if companies like AIG and Goldman Sachs didn't already have enough influence in Washington with their laudable ways of mesmerizing politicians (with the crisp sound of "ching-ching"), we needed former Goldman CEO Hank Paulson to head what might have been the least transparent big government endeavor of all time: the bailout plan.

Then we needed him to prop up all the insolvent institutions his golfing buddies headed and anoint the rest of his former coworkers as heads of other failed institutions on the bailout list.

All is fair in love, war and undeserved billion-dollar giveaways.

Meanwhile, every sucker politician in the House Financial Services Committee is hoping they're not exposed as being in bed with Wall Street. Someone should tell them the jig is up; we know you're all corrupt and incompetent.

All this political grandstanding, all these Chris Dodds, Barnie Franks and Tim Geithners throwing their arms in the air and feigning outrage is a pathetic load of bull.

This malicious tag team of government and business, cooperating to doubly screw us in reckless ineptitude, isn't over yet. It gets worse.

If you ever hear some quibbling Ron Paul-ite ranting about the Federal Reserve's monetary policy (it might be me), you should listen closer to that quibbler. Every time it "prints money" by buying up securities, it's giving banks and financial institutions (like, ahem, all the ones being bailed out) more money to lend. One might think this policy has subsided, given how obviously it led to our current crisis.

And one would be wrong. Around August 2007, they pumped in about $33 billion. By November they injected $48 billion. By late December, they printed up to $58 billion. In May of 2008, it was $115 billion. Up and up and up.

The Federal Reserve, that dark and mysterious obscurity that most Americans don't even know exists, keeps pumping in more newly-created money into the banking and financial markets in a way that's too blatantly fascist (or would it be socialist?) to include in Obama's legislation to "save" the economy.

This all culminated in the Fed's announcement last week that it would inject another $1.2 trillion into the economy, buying up government bonds and securities of Fannie and Freddie's. Do remember this new money goes directly to the Wall Street giants that destabilized our entire economy, in addition to their bailout bootie.

How much more blurry does the line between public and private need to get before partisans who still believe in our two parties begin to realize what is really up? How much further do politicians need to pummel us into bankruptcy before people direct their crosshairs away from the proverbial free markets we don't have and onto the government, who very plainly isn't here to save us?

The tax money lost on Barack Obama's spending spree and the Federal Reserve's monetary policy will create so much inflation and artificial bubbling that America is really in for a wallop of a reality check. Politicians in bed with big business is bad enough, but these things will undermine our entire economy, eating it away from the inside like a cancer.

The higher up in government you go, the less accountability those master planners possess. The government is very sick and will not be here to help us when things get rough. And the market is fused with government and may not reliably rebound like the capitalists hope. There is no one looking out for us.

And that's about how bad it is.

John Glaser is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jglaser@student.umass.edu.

Police presence a necessary nuisance

Matt Kushi

Police officers. We see them every day.

We here on this UMass campus may even get sick of seeing them so often. However, what would this campus look like without them? What would this world look like without men and women brave enough to put their lives on the line for the betterment of the common person?

This weekend, the city of Oakland, Calif., mourns the loss of four of its finest sons. Officer John Hege, Sgt. Daniel Sakai, Sgt. Ervin Romans and Sgt. Mark Dunakin were all killed in the line of duty over the weekend on what seemed to be a normal traffic stop.

The two officers that made the initial stop were Officer Hege and Sgt. Dunakin. The suspect was 26-year-old Lovelle Mixon. Instead of complying with the two officers' orders, Mixon went on the attack and shot both Hege and Dunakin. Sgt. Dunakin was killed on the spot while Officer Hege was mortally wounded and succumbed to his wounds on Sunday.

At this time, fellow police officers and SWAT worked to subdue the armed gunman. Before Mixon was finally taken down, he managed to gun down two more police officers. These officers were Sgt. Sakai and Sgt. Romans.

On a campus where complaints about the intrusiveness of police are as common as a traffic stop, what would be your reaction if something like this had happened to the UMass police force or the police force of a neighboring town?

So often we criticize our police force that we tend to forget the true purpose that they serve, which is to protect the common person.

Yes, we shake our heads whenever we see a person that has seemingly been randomly pulled over. Yes, underclassmen loathe the vulture-like manner that the police have on alcohol runs. Yes, we despise how we are under suspicion of some form of wrong doing due to our age.

However, having police present is necessary. When you witness a friend in trouble or feel threatened by an individual, you dial 911. You aren't dialing your Uncle Joe in this type of situation. You are calling the police because you need them.

You need them. Need is the main word to focus on in that sentence. We may not always want the police around but we need them to be around. I will be honest and say that I wouldn't chance driving around the roads of UMass if I knew that there were no police to regulate those that feel the idiotic need to get behind the wheel after slamming a few too many back.

What it comes down to is that the police have our back. We just don't always get that point. If a person were to come onto this campus and decide to start acting violently towards others, the police would be the first ones there.

Police officers have devoted their lives to helping and defending others. There is a reason why they have gadgets and guns. They don't carry around these tools for fun.

What we have to remember is that police officers have devoted their lives to helping and defending others. There is a reason why they have gadgets and guns. They don't carry around these tools for fun.

Officers go into each day knowing that they have a gun on their hip and that they may have to use it if the situation calls for it. Officers go into each day knowing that they may have to lay all of their cards on the table and put their lives on the line so that others can live.

Many of us forget just how hard an officer's life is when the going gets tough. We think, "Yeah, I could do that. Just whip out the pistol and subdue the target." It is much easier said than done.

Many people have shot guns but they are usually at stationary targets or animals. Police have to sometimes deal with individuals who know how to operate a gun as well as they do. As an old saying goes, "It's like shooting at squirrels, except these squirrels have guns."

We are fortunate to have officers that care about us. Yes, they do seem a little overzealous at times but they are ultimately trying to protect the community and watch out for people.

What we need to take away from this weekend's tragic events is that a police officer is a person just like you and me. They are individuals who, much like members of the military, have made a vow to put their life on the line so that you may live.

We need to appreciate our police force more, as frustrated as we get at them. In doing so, we not only honor the task that they have devoted their life to, we also honor the four brave officers that gave their lives in the line of duty in Oakland over the weekend.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

Happiness is more than self-interest

Ben Moriarty

What is the purpose of life? Only a true egomaniac would try to tackle this timeless question in 850 words. Even more so when he uses many of those words to make jokes and talk about himself.

One's purpose, one's destiny and what one should do are all questions that we here at the University of Massachusetts must contemplate and answer. And it is a very important one, for it helps guide us into which specific area of study we should divulge into.

As Jean-Paul Sartre said, "Everything has been figured out – except how to live."

If you ask someone how to live, they'll usually give you that beautiful bumper sticker answer, "to be happy."

I will note that not every person will give you such a clichéd answer.

By holding this very original sentiment, choosing your major and your study is easy. If you find something that makes you happy, do it.

It's easy to recognize that one should choose as an employment a job which makes them happy, for it encourages them to work and not be lazy. But also, well, it doesn't make them want to kill themselves. And that is a very important thing to have in life. Not having that reminds me a little too much of high school.

But that is not the only thing that falls under the umbrella of what one should do in life. The meaning and purpose of life is how and why one should live, not just what to do as a career.

Saying "to be happy" as the meaning of your life is really saying one thing: "to make sure I am happy." And that says one thing: "The sole purpose of my life is to make sure I am happy and nothing else."

This sentiment might change once you have a family to "make sure they are happy as well as me." But it's not hard to see how self-centered of a purpose the former is.

Saying that the main purpose of life for yourself is to be happy is undoubtedly putting yourself above everyone else, saying your happiness is relatively more important than theirs and is basically just the epitome of a hedonistic philosophy for life.

Obviously there will be some arguments on whether or not life should just be about seeking the greatest amount of pleasure since "life is all you have." But no one likes those people except the people themselves anyway. So if that's what you think, then there's nothing to change.

Wherever you are, it seems obvious that while your own happiness is important, there are things greater which trump it.

But for most people, they don't want such a self-obsessed life. Einstein said that "only a life lived for others is a life worthwhile." Marian Edelman, the founder of the Children's Defense Fund, said, "service is what life is all about."

Here is the opposite side of the spectrum, where the purpose of live is serving others, holding little, if any, regard for your own well-being and happiness. This seems almost just as crazy because if you live purely for others, suffering all the time for their sake, eventually, you might just go mad.

The question for most people, regarding the purpose of life and what one should do, is trying to figure out where the optimal spot is between those two polarities. As Gandhi said, "the purpose of live is to live rightly, think rightly and act rightly."

What is right?

If we look at the exemplary lives of those who have lived before us, I think we can see what kind of life we should live. Gandhi (the guy obsessed with living rightly), the saints, Jesus, the Dalai Lamas (college kids just love these guys), aid workers. We see one thing in common: monumental service.

The people who are remembered for their worthwhile lives, as Einstein says, are those who lived for others. And it is seemingly very obvious. The people respected most among history are not the great scientists and thinkers and politicians – although they surely are remembered and appreciated for their great importance – but those who have lived for others, serving them, giving them justice, giving them freedom, and all that great and super stuff.

This doesn't mean that every single person should go to Africa and starve. Every single person is called to a different life with different ways and degrees to living it. Living for others can be as simple as being a parent, as impacting as being a teacher, or as generous as being a friend to someone who is lonely.

"A purpose of human life, no matter who is controlling it, is to love whoever is around to be loved," the great Kurt Vonnegut said.

Wherever you are, it seems obvious that while your own happiness is important, there are things greater which trump it. The way certain types of people are revered shows that deep down, we all know what kind of life we should live, it's just a matter of whether you want to accept it or not.

The way to a worthwhile and purposeful life is not fulfilling your own cravings, but giving yourself up to the service of others.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 25, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Local Burgers and Fries' a good bite in Northampton

COURTESY LOCAL BURGER AND FRIES CO.

Picking up where the Fatzo's of Amherst left off, Local Burger and Fries offers its customers local food at a reasonable price.

BARBARA BOORAS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

With many great restaurants lining Main Street in Northampton, choosing a place to get a bite can be, shall we say, a little overwhelming.

Within walking distance, a hungry consumer can pass restaurants offering cuisine from across the globe. The selection is even a bit daunting.

After giving up on the long wait for dinner at Fitzwilly's, my friend and I decided to venture across the street to scope out its neighboring restaurant.

Local Burger and Fries is a new burger joint that opened its doors just a few months ago.

With only seldom bad dining experiences in Northampton, my expectations were sky high.

If someone is opening a place serving only burgers and some traditional American sides, it is important they set themselves apart from the slew of competitors.

As I peered in the window, it was packed. Customers walk to the back of the restaurant to place an order. You can either eat in or take your order to go.

The menu is written on large chalkboards behind the counter. There are about eight specialty burgers on the menu. The burgers are reasonably priced from $4.99 for a plain hamburger up to $8.99 for the luscious-looking 'Juicy Lucy,' a 12-ounce patty stuffed with American cheese and served molten hot. The option of customizing your own personal burger is available for the more picky eaters.

Burgers are not paired with fries, so customers will pay $1.99 for a small serving of hand-cut french fries cooked in cholesterol-free peanut oil; $3.49 for a large serving. Other homemade accompaniments were hand-cut sweet potato fries, beer battered onion rings, fried pickles and wings.

For drinks, customers can choose from a soda fountain drink or a bottled drink. For those who crave the ultimate combination of burgers and beer, Local Burger does offer an option for customers to B.Y.O.B. So, feel free to bring in your favorite bottle of merlot or ice cold P.B.R.

We placed our order with Chris, the friendly cashier who turned out to be one of the co-owners.

Not knowing what to expect, my hungry friend and I ordered two burgers, fries, beer battered rings and fried pickles.

I tried Local Burger's Farmhouse Turkey Burger. Yes, I had the audacity to order a turkey at a burger joint, but I had no qualms about my choice. This beauty was topped with perfectly melted cheese, crisp bacon and a creamy honey-dijon maple mayo. Sandwiched by a soft, warm, sesame seed bun, my turkey burger was full of flavor with every bite.

My fellow diner and friend ordered the Westhampton Burger, a six-ounce patty lathered in sweet and tangy BBQ sauce, ranch dressing, bacon and the welcomed addition of cheddar cheese.

While eating out of the checkered paper-lined baskets, I couldn't help but be reminded of the recently departed, much-loved burger joint, Fatzo's.

With my first bite of the Westhampton Burger, I was flooded with memories of Fatzo's Cowboy (RIP). With all due respect, Local Burger has a product that rivals and possibly surpasses its predecessor.

Having sampled fried pickles across the great state of Massachusetts, I've seen many different variations. Local Burger's version, in my opinion, may reign king. This crisp, crinkle-cut delicacy is breaded with a secret breading, fried, then served hot with a cool ranch sauce for dipping. The crisp taste of cornmeal in the breading was fairly apparent and added an extra crunch.

In contrast to the stellar fried pickles, the beer-battered onion rings fell short of my expectations. The enticing hand-cut and battered rings were greasy and tasted slightly soggy.

True to its name, Local Burger uses local produce, products and services. You can feel good about eating at this establishment because you're helping your community and a fantastic, new, family-run burger joint.

So be a "local hero" and be sure drop by Local Burger and Fries at 16 Main Street, Northampton to experience the mouthwatering new addition in town.

HOURS OF OPERATION:
Sunday through Wednesday: 11:30 a.m. – 10:00 p.m.
Thursday through Saturday: 11:30 a.m. – 3:00 a.m.

Barbara Booras can be reached at bbooras@student.umass.edu.

Author recreates spring break

Strausberg's new book holds nothing back while on vacation

BY NORA CROCKER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

"Beer and Loathing in Panama City: A Bloodthirsty Spring Break Exodus" is a quick, rambling account of author Keith Strausbaugh's college spring break. It takes a minute to adjust to his style, but once you are able to adapt to it, his comic honesty hits spot-on.

Within the first page, Strausbaugh and his college buddies are already off and running, stocking up on some Natty Ice and beginning their 12-hour journey to Panama City, where their drunken debauchery ensues. Between boozing on the beach and partying in the bars, the boys encounter a multiplicity of characters and situations.

And Strausbaugh has a knack for putting everything on the page with wittiness and candor.

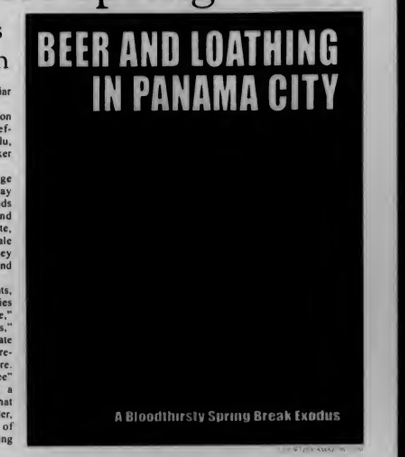
When describing the punk spring breakers he writes, "They deserved no attention, yet saw themselves as rebellious social engineers or anti-status quo heroines." He adds, "Obviously sporting special occasion shaves for labia majora attention: 'Ashley, look a mohawk! He probably owns a hell-raising James Dean jacket and his mother's maiden name is something dark and dangerous. I'm wet like a seal with a gland-problem!'"

His style gets tricky with its wordiness and in the various cultural references readers may or may not be all that familiar with.

In the continuing description of the mohawk, he makes references to Kool-Aid, Xanadu, Crest Whitestrips, Ford, Tucker Max, Staind and Vin Diesel.

The disrespectful language Strausbaugh uses to portray the women him and his friends encounter, though blunt and perhaps unfortunately accurate, could be off-putting to a female audience, as if by reading they are intruding on some club and shouldn't be there.

Throughout his short accounts, he refers to girls and their bodies as a "nine, six and a wolverine," "Tits McGee," "prized carcass," "pregnant walrus," "unfortunate breed" and of course the less creative stock terms, slut and whore. The description of "Tits McGee" and her breasts lasts about a page with the conclusion that even though she is a little older, her breasts are "still worthy of salivating over like dogs eyeing dinner meat."



On the flip side, a female audience may enjoy being a fly on the wall, appreciating the inside look at how a guy may think or speak about them when it's not around to hear.

When it seems like "Beer and Loathing in Panama City: A Bloodthirsty Spring Break Exodus" is going to conclude as little more than an entertaining and frank spring break tale, Strausbaugh makes some insightful statements about life and the importance of taking a spring break vacation. He reminds us, perhaps pessimistically but more realistically, that true love doesn't exist and that people settle, following societal norms.

Spring break is freeing, an escape from the pressure to settle down and let life pass you by. In Strausbaugh's words, "It was a drunk dream reminding us how fun life can be."

Keith Strausbaugh is a 23-year-old graduate student and teaches freshmen composition at Old Dominion University in Norfolk, Va.

Nora Crocker can be reached at nerocker@student.umass.edu.

Old Dominion University graduate student Keith Strausbaugh has taken up where writers like Tucker Max started and expanded upon their work.

Musicians have found new timely topic

Music moves with economic struggle

BY J. FREEDOM DU LAC
THE WASHINGTON POST

For Neil Young's next release, "Fork in the Road," the venerated, if occasionally vexing, rocker has created a concept album about electric cars. But Young takes a detour on at least two tracks to work with a suddenly popular songwriting topic: the cratering economy.

The title track's chorus: "There's a bailout coming, but it's not for you / It's for all those creeps hiding what they do."

The rapidly expanding recession-music playlist is a mix spilling over with all manner of musicians, from rock legends and country singers to folkies and rappers. Contributions from rappers are especially notable, with more forgoing, or at least decreasing, lyrics about excessive materialism in favor of ones about the common man's economic grind, as heard on recent songs by Jadakiss ("Hard Times"), Cam'ron ("I Hate My Job"), Joell Ortiz ("Bout My Money") and Willie Isz ("In the Red").

The Willie Isz duo have called that potent song a cross between John Lennon's "Imagine" and the epochal Great Depression song "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?" But it sounds more like a Southern-rap update of the Carter Family's enduring 1930s anthem "No Depression in Heaven," with Jneiro Jarel rapping: "If everything was free, the world would be a better place / For you and me / Don't you agree? / No more poverty / ... There would be no bank robberies / The crime life would stop / America would be at peace."

Young Jeezy's chart-topping 2008 album "The Recession" marked a departure for the Atlanta star who became famous – and, yes, rich – spinning tales of dope boys living large.

Although Jeezy didn't actually strip his lyrics of references to his Lamborghini, he was suddenly questioning his free-spending ways, rapping: "Looking at my watch like it's a bad investment." In an interview with XXL magazine, he explained: "When money was plentiful, I was the first one to tell you to stack it. Live your life with it. Now that money's slowed up, I'ma be the first one to tell you to save it like they ain't gon' make it no more."

And yes, a wealthy rap star can still relate to the plight of the common man, Jeezy insisted. "I got family members, aunts, uncles and cousins and friends that still live their life," he said. "It definitely affects me when I get the phone calls and somebody's about to get put out of their house ... and there ain't really a lot of opportunity out there for you."

In January, Nashville star John Rich dashed off "Shuttin' Detroit Down," a rant about the government's hesitation to save the American automotive industry. "In the real world, they're shuttin' Detroit down," Rich seethes. "While the boss man takes his bonus pay and jets on out of town ... And D.C.'s bailing out them bankers as the farmers auction ground."

On the title track of "Prayer of a Common Man," country singer-songwriter Phil Vassar sings, almost pleadingly: "This house of cards I built is mortgaged to the hilt / And it's sinking in the sand / Lord, hear the prayer of a common man."

Meanwhile, old folkie Tom Paxton satirized federal bailouts, updating his topical 1979 song "I'm Changing My Name to Chrysler." Now Paxton sings: "I am changing my name to Fannie Mae / I am going down to Washington, D.C. / I'll be glad they got my back / Cause what they did for Freddie Mac / Will be perfectly acceptable to me."

There is a long and rich history of tunes about hard times. During the Great Depression, musicians summed up the prevailing sentiments, whether it was Woody Guthrie singing his Dust Bowl ballads ("Do Re Mi," "Tom Joad," "I Ain't Got

See MUSIC on page 6

New television show a mystery the ratings

BY GREG BRAXTON
LOS ANGELES TIMES

HOLLYWOOD — Simon Baker is having a rough time. He's battling a stubborn cold, and the pressures of a long shooting day on the Warner Bros. lot are taking their toll. But Baker, the star of CBS's "The Mentalist," still has a smile and twinkle in his eyes. That's how it is when you're the face of the season's only breakout hit at a time when few people believed it possible for a major network to deliver a sizable weekly audience for a new scripted program.

"Everything is good right now, really good," said Baker, apologizing for his cough and the rasp in his voice. "Every TV show is a crapshoot, really. But every once in a while, a show gets anointed as 'the show.' And at the moment, we are it."

Even up against Fox's formidable "American Idol," which has earned the nickname "Death Star" for obliterating the competition, "The Mentalist" has emerged as the most popular – and most unlikely – hit of the network TV season.

An aggressively unhip show with no built-in "water cooler" factor, "The Mentalist" might try the patience of the most seasoned psychic as to why it has triumphed over edgier, star-driven fare. The success of the drama, which follows in the tradition of "The Rockford Files," "Magnum P.I." and "Columbo," where the quirky main character solves crimes with ingenuity and more than a little humor, might come down to the adage that everything old is new again.

Not only has it outdistanced its higher profile newcomer competition such as Fox's "Fringe," the CW's "90210" and NBC's "My Own Worst Enemy," but the Tuesday night show has accomplished the rarest of feats: being a breakout scripted hit on network TV that started strong out of the gate. Only "Desperate Housewives," "Lost" and the fading "Heroes" have displayed similar momentum in the last several years.

The show, in which the native Australian plays a onetime psychic turned crime investigator, regularly lands in the top 10 of the week's most-watched shows. Its first-run episodes average almost 19 million viewers per week, while even repeats bring in more than 14 million, according to Nielsen.

"This show has clearly landed above the fray of other new entries," said Jason Mittell, an associate professor of film and media culture at Middlebury College in Vermont. "It has succeeded mostly on the backs of other CBS procedurals that are popular with older viewers. It's less about innovation than the repetition of the formula – with a difference."

Baker has his own theory. "It's a procedural, but it's not defined by its procedural nature. It has a sly wit about it. There are earnest moments, but it doesn't take itself too seriously."

While other major networks have seen viewership decline this season, CBS alone can boast an audience increase in no small part due to "The Mentalist." Buoyed by the show's strong ratings, CBS is the clear No. 1 network for total viewers. NBC and ABC have no new hits, and almost all of the midseason scripted entries have failed.

Like many of the network's top programs, the show is essentially a crime drama, but one that deviates in tone from its rather grim and gruesome science-heavy cousins like "CSI: Crime Scene Investigation" and "Criminal Minds." "The Mentalist" is built upon the quick wit and sharp intellect of its hero, who wields his uncanny powers of observation like a scalpel.

"It's in the ballpark of our other shows, but it's slightly offbeat," said Nina Tassler, president of CBS Entertainment. "The humor played well. We certainly knew we were on the right track. We looked at all the elements, then spread a bit of pixie dust on it."

Peter Roth, head of Warner Bros. Television, which produces the show, said series creator Bruno Heller pitched the show this way: "What if Sherlock Holmes and Angelina Jolie had a baby and he grew up?"

Like other CBS procedurals, "The Mentalist" has a heavy female following – almost 60 percent of its audience is female and 18 or older, says Nielsen.

On its face, the show's widespread appeal might even be a mystery to Baker's character, Patrick Jane. The show lacks the staples of many other crime dramas – among them, a cool soundtrack, edgy fashions and fresh young stars.

But if Jane looked in the mirror, he might be able to solve much of the puzzle. Tassler, Roth and other forces behind the series say Baker's GQ-ready looks and easy-going charm are crucial. Critics have given the series largely favorable notices, and many single out Baker's performance. For an actor who

See MENTALIST on page 6

With stiff competition like "American Idol" on Tuesday night, no one believed "The Mentalist" would be such a hit.

Leaving out all the glamour

MUSIC from page 5

No Home"), Blind Alfred Reed wondering "How Can a Poor Man Stand Such Times and Live?" or Yip Harburg writing about the disintegration of the American dream in "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?"

Although record sales weren't exactly thriving during the period, Harburg's song became a hit for both Rudy Vallee and Bing Crosby. The work resonated because it served as a musical mirror, reflecting people's experiences and sentiments.

"People definitely identified with songs like that and 'One Meatball,' which are like sonic pictures of that period," says Smithsonian Folklife Collections archivist Jeff Place, who two years ago produced the album "If You Ain't Got the Do-Re-Mi: Songs of Rags and Riches" for Smithsonian Folkways Recordings.

"They're songs about a bleak time," Place says. "A lot of people could identify with them because they were about what was going on."

There have since been plenty of songs about financial struggle, from growing up poor (Dolly Parton's "Coat of Many Colors"), being surrounded by poverty (Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five's "The Message") and working hard to stave off poverty (Merle Haggard's "Workin' Man's Blu,s") to the plight of the homeless ("Another Day in Paradise" by Phil Collins), class warfare ("Kill the Poor" by the Dead Kennedys) and the devastating effects of shutting steel mills and factories (Billy Joel's "Allentown," Bruce Springsteen's "Johnny 99," James McMurtry's "We Can't Make It Here Anymore").

Of course, not every artist is making somber music. "I'm Broke and Proud," by New York rapper Rugged N Raw and New Jersey's Hasan Salaam, adds much-needed levity to the recessionary playlist. Over a galloping reggaeton beat, Rugged N Raw raps playfully about eating mayonnaise sandwiches, washing clothes in the sink, drinking off-brand beverages and taking a vacation cruise on the Staten Island Ferry.

Then comes the kicker, in the "I'm Broke and Proud" video: Salaam and Rugged N Raw "make it rain," co-opting an ostentatious move that became de rigueur in high-gloss rap videos when times were good. But instead of throwing stacks of cash in the air, they throw coupons.

Neil Young is just one of many musicians who has written songs about the tough economic times presently affecting the country and the world presently.

Write for the Collegian !

Come on down to the Collegian Office Located in the basement of the Campus Center.

WANTED:

WRITERS for NEWS, ARTS & LIVING,and SPORTS

Viewers continue to flock to police drama

Legal and police dramas are a hit among female viewers, and "The Mentalist" is no different with 60 percent of its viewers fitting into the demographic.

MENTALIST from page 5

has had plenty of ups and downs, the role fits Baker like one of his vests – easy and relaxed.

The happily married father of three had one successful series (CBS's "The Guardian") and one flop (he costarred in the short-lived "Smith" with Ray Liotta). His movie track record has also been spotty — he was the scamp who seduced Anne Hathaway in "The Devil Wears Prada," and he was the unfailingly sweet, patient male lead in the 2006 interracial romantic comedy "Something New." But some of his recent films ("Sex and Death 101," "The Lodger") had brief theatrical runs or went straight to video.

The show features little on-screen violence and only a hint of romantic tension between Baker and his costar Robin Tunney, who plays a skeptical agent with the California Bureau of Investigation. It also isn't big on firepower – amazingly, Baker's character doesn't even carry a gun.

The setup is clear and simple, but not something audiences haven't heard echoed in shows like "The Fugitive" and "The X-Files." In the show, it's the main character's celebrity as a con man psychic that makes him the target of a psychopath who murders his family. Devastated and adrift, the man seeks redemption as a law enforcement consultant, but is taunted still by the elusive villain.

"What's behind this is the continuing popularity of the police procedural on television," said Tim Brooks, a former network executive and television historian. "Plus the character is very relatable. He does something that everybody wishes they could do."

On a recent set visit, the only hint of the show's elevated status was the favorite New TV Drama statuette from CBS's "The People's Choice Awards" planted on top of a television monitor. Otherwise, the mood was businesslike except for an excited group of crew members who gathered around a small TV during lunch time to watch some real drama – a live police pursuit.

While shooting a scene with another actor in an interrogation room, Baker was mostly quiet as cameramen set up angles. But he can be energetic and talkative, chatting up actors with only small parts between scenes and showing genuine interest in their careers.

Perched nearby on a director's chair, Heller contemplated the success of "The Mentalist" with a mix of self-depreceation and surprise, seeming caught a little off guard by the hoopla surrounding the series. He created the show, he explained, mostly as a personal reaction to his involvement in HBO's "Rome," a critically acclaimed series with heavy doses of sex and violence. (He co-created the racy series about the intrigue of ancient Rome and wrote many of the episodes.)

"After going through that incredibly intense experience, I wanted to do something that was positive, that had joy in it and would make people happy and reassure them that redemption is possible," he said. "I needed to challenge myself – it's easier to do something that is edgier and complex. I wanted to do a network show that could air at 9 p.m."

Heller pitched nearly half a dozen shows for a series, but it was "The Mentalist" that grabbed the network's attention. The show itself was inspired by merely driving around the city.

"On every block, you can see a house or someplace where a psychic is plying his or her trade," he said. "I presume most of these people are making a decent living – they must be performing some sort of service. Even though they can't talk to the dead, they must be doing something that's therapeutic. They're lying to people but helping them at the same time. It's that moral ambivalence that interested me."

He still seems surprised by the show's hold over such a large audience. "When you start a TV series, the degree of success it may have is the least of your priorities," he said. "There are shows that are just great that don't succeed. You can never predict."

Despite conventional pressure to remain in familiar narrative territory on a network, the show is trying to avoid predictable story lines, said Heller. For instance, fans hoping for a love connection between the show's stars may be disappointed. It's unlikely neither actor wants to explore that well-worn territory for now.

"I feel like Simon is my brother," said Tunney. "I don't know what would happen if we took the show down that road. I don't feel we have to."

Although the series appears to have momentum, Baker said the show still faces challenges. He said he, Heller and the cast need "to find out where the show lives, and to hit that mark as often as we can. We do 23 of these a year and it's hard to get every one right. But if we can get about 18 or 19 in the zone, then I would be happy."

MaroonCentral has been launched!

MAROON CENTRAL

As a UMass Amherst student you NOW have access to an incredible FREE resource at UMassAlumni.com.

Career Connections
- post your resume
- search jobs
- do company and industry research
- request an alumni mentor
- get professional career coaching

Online Directory
search and reach out to alumni by...
- geographic location
- field of work
- company affiliation

Online Community
- complete your profile
- set-up a direct feed from FaceBook

Your personal network of more than 215,000 alumni worldwide.
- find the Alumni Club nearest your hometown!

Great things are happening - check them out at MaroonCentral today!

UMassAlumni.com is your gateway to a world of opportunity.

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION Questions? Call 800.456.UMASS

CALLING ALL FASHION WRITERS THE DAILY COLLEGIAN ARTS & LIVING SECTION IS JUST THE PLACE FOR YOU ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Glass transferring after second season

A-10 TOURNEY from page 10

The other change will be when the games are played. Instead of the quarterfinals, semifinals and finals being played Wednesday through Saturday, each round will be pushed back a day to provide more fans an opportunity to see the games. The championship game will be televised on CBS on Sunday, March 14, 2010 at 1 p.m.

The tournament dates in 2011 will be from March 8-13 and from March 6-11 in 2012.

"It's a testament to the Boardwalk Hall facilities, our hotels and destination amenities that the Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball Championship will be calling Atlantic City home for another three years," said Jeffrey Vasser, president of the Atlantic City Convention and Visitors Authority. "We are, of course, thrilled to be working with the A-10 staff in order to make the next three years as successful as the past years have been."

Since 1977, the first year of the Atlantic 10 Tournament, 10 different cities have hosted the event. U.S. Bank Arena (Cincinnati, Ohio) held the tournament for two years prior to Atlantic City.

GLASS TRANSFERRING

The Atlantic 10 Tournament is staying in Atlantic City, but the same can't be said about sophomore Matt Glass in Amherst.

The 6-foot-7 guard/forward has reportedly decided to transfer (destination unknown), leaving the Massachusetts men's basketball team after his second season.

Glass, more of 3-point shooting 2-guard, saw minutes sporadically this season. He was often forced to play more of a forward role with UMass' lack of size in the frontcourt.

Glass started nine games this season but was rarely used in many games when coming off the bench. He finished the 2008-09 season with a 3.4 scoring average in just over 13 minutes per game. He ranked fourth on the team with 28 3-pointers.

The Underhill Center, Vt., native played in 33 games as a freshman in 2007-08, starting twice and scoring 1.8 points in 6.8 minutes per game. He finished his career with 63 games played (11 starts), 46 3-pointers and a 2.6 scoring average in 9.8 minutes per game.

Glass was almost exclusively a 3-point shooter. In 129 career field-goal attempts, 111 of them (86 percent) were from long-range. He almost never dribbled the basketball, often standing in the corner behind the 3-point line. In two seasons and over 600 minutes, he only attempted eight free throws.

Glass is expected to transfer to an Ivy League or Patriot League school.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Sophomore Matt Glass is transferring out of UMass after he averaged 2.6 points and 9.8 minutes per game in two season coming of the bench.

49ers head to No. 5 Tar Heels

Four-way tie atop Atlantic 10, Rams take two weekly honors

BY MIKE MASTONE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Charlotte baseball team looks to rebound from a disappointing series against division foe Fordham as the 49ers travel to North Carolina to take on No. 5 North Carolina.

Both Charlotte (12-6, 1-2 Atlantic 10) and North Carolina (17-4) will be heavily motivated heading into tonight's match up.

The 49ers dropped two-of-three to Fordham (6-12, 2-1), including a 13-1 demolition in the series opener while the Tarheels are coming off their first weekend series loss in nearly two years. However, the odds are undoubtedly stacked against Charlotte. The 49ers are 5-28-1 all-time against UNC and have not beaten the Tarheels in their 10 years under coach Mike Fox.

A-10 Baseball

The 49ers could pose a challenge for North Carolina if Tarheel pitchers are unable to slow down outfielder Justin Wilson. Wilson is hitting .509 on the season and set a school record by recording a hit in 10 consecutive at-bats. Charlotte infielder Rob Lyerly could also pose a problem for the Tarheels. The Second Team Preseason All-America Selection has only played in eight games this season but is batting .357 with two homeruns and six RBI.

In a preseason poll, A-10 coaches picked Charlotte to win its third consecutive conference crown. The 49ers have accumulated an impressive 92-28 record over the past two seasons and are the first team in the A-10 since Virginia Tech (1999-2000) to capture consecutive conference titles.

XAVIER COLLIDES WITH URI

This weekend, Xavier will play host to a red-hot Rhode Island squad in a possible conference tournament preview.

Xavier currently sits atop the A-10 as part of a four-way tie with Dayton (11-9, 3-0), Saint Joseph's (7-10, 3-0) and Temple (7-10, 3-0). However, the Musketeers have the best overall record out of the quartet. They have already tallied seven non-conference wins on the year, surpassing their total from last season.

The Musketeers (10-6, 3-0) feature a balanced offensive attack led by Bobby Freking, Billy O'Connor and Adam Pasono. Freking is batting .333 and leads the team with 20 hits on the season. O'Connor is batting .310 and is tied for second on the team with 10 RBI. He is also 5-for-5 in steal attempts. Pasono adds power to a seemingly small ball-oriented lineup. He leads the team with two homeruns, six doubles, 12 RBI and 14 runs scored. He is hitting .281 and has four stolen bases.

Xavier's pitching staff has been anchored by junior Danny Rosenbaum. The south paw hurler is 2-1 in five starts and has an anemic 1.26 ERA. He has allowed four earned runs in 28 1 innings and struck out 25 batters.

Tonight the Rams (12-6, 2-1) will travel to Smithfield, R.I., to take on Bryant University (13-7). Rhode Island has won five of its last six and is riding high after a series win over George Washington.

Senior shortstop Dan Rhault and junior outfielder Rob Deveney have paced the Rams thus far. They combined for eight of the team's 18 homeruns and 34 of its 99 RBI. Rhault is hitting .435 on the season, while Deveney is batting .304 and is second on the team with 38 total bases.

RAMS EARN A-10 HONORS

Rhault of URI and junior second baseman Sean Rockey of George Washington (10-13, 1-2) were named the A-10 Baseball Players of the Week.

Rhault led the Rams to a 4-1 record over the past week as the team climbed into a tie with Charlotte for the second best overall record in the conference. He finished the week 7-for-15 (.467) with three home runs, six RBI, and five runs scored. His best performance came yesterday against George Washington, as he helped Rhode Island edge the Colonials 4-3 with two homeruns and three RBI.

Rockey's performance almost mirrored Rhault's. The second baseman finished with the same number of hits (in one fewer at-bat), homeruns and runs scored. He also drove in four runs and had two hits in each game of the Patriots' series against Rhode Island. He currently leads George Washington with a .411 batting average.

Senior Luke Demko also played a crucial role in the Ram's successful week. The reliever was named A-10 Pitcher of the Week after earning saves in three of the Rams' four victories. He notched six strikeouts and allowed only one hit in 4 1/3 scoreless innings.

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu.

Lyons leading the pack on offense

FLORENCE from page 10

it's paid off as Florence has improved throughout the season.

Florence had a rocky start to the season, allowing at least 11 goals in each of her first three starts, all losses, which included a 16-4 loss to then-No. 4 Maryland. Since then, the freshman has come into form, helping the team win three of its last five.

Showing signs of brilliance in an 18-save effort against Harvard, a 17-save performance against No. 13 New Hampshire and a strong showing in a 7-4 loss to Yale, Florence has grown up fast, quickly establishing herself as UMass' featured net minder.

After posting a 14.0 goals against average in her first three starts, Florence has improved to an 11.62 goals against average and a .462 save percentage, which is good for third in the Atlantic 10. Florence also leads the conference with 80 saves in eight games.

LYONS GIVES OFFENSE ROAR

Having already surpassed her point total from a year ago, sophomore midfielder Jackie Lyons has gone from a promising freshman to UMass' most prolific offensive threat.

Lyons, who scored six goals in a win against Harvard, leads the team in both goals (17) and assists (5) for a team-high 22 points and is currently ranked ninth in the A-10 in goals per game (2.12). It was Lyons' ninth goal of the season with 2 minutes, 43 seconds left against Harvard that was the game-winner, one of her three on the season, for UMass in a 13-12 against the Crimson.

Nine goals and four assists helped Lyons earn A-10 All-Rookie Team honors as a freshman.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore Jackie Lyons passes to an open teammate last year against Maryland. The midfielder leads UMass in goals (17) and assists (5) in 2009.

Write for the Collegian !

Come on down to the Collegian Office Located in the basement of the Campus Center.

WANTED:

WRITERS for NEWS, ARTS & LIVING,and SPORTS

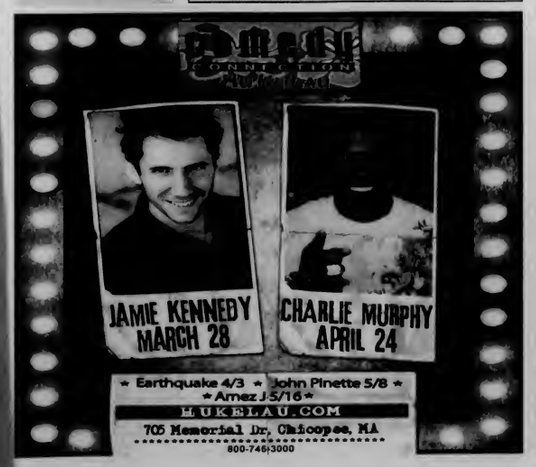
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION Entrepreneurship: Challenges and Rewards

STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Campus to Career - Alumni Panel

Tuesday, March 31 • 5:30 p.m.

Memorial Hall (between Herter Hall and the Old Chapel)



Have a dream and a passion to start your own company? Hear what alumni have to say to better prepare and position yourself to be a successful entrepreneur.

PANELISTS INCLUDE:
Dr. Shawn Kinney '99PhD .....Hyaluron, Inc.
Ms. Erica Walch '96, '06G .....Speak Easy Accent Modification
Mr. Boris Revsin '08 .....CampusLIVE.com

FREE REFRESHMENTS
Thanks to the support of Cape Cod Chips and Kraft/Nabisco

Drawings!
Movie passes • $25 UStore gift card
Seniors can enter to win a $1,000 cash prize from Liberty Mutual!
Drawing to be held at Commencement Ball on May 21, 2009

Seating is limited. RSVP today at UMassAlumni.com/students.

Getting ready to rent an apartment off campus?

Don't miss the OFF-CAMPUS HOUSING • INFORMATION DAYS • MARCH 26 + 28 2009

Apartment Complex Rental Fair

THURSDAY, MARCH 26

Campus Center Concourse

10:00am - 3:00pm

- Most apartment complexes in the area will be represented!
- Sign up for a March 28 bus tour of the apartment complexes you are interested in!

www.umoch.org

UMassAmherst

Sponsored by Off Campus Housing and the Housing Assignment Office in collaboration with the Student Legal Services Office

Venechanos faces former team

W. LACROSSE from page 10

coming to UMass. Venechanos won titles in 2005 and 2006 while Walker won three with them from 2005-07.

"Our girls are going into the game knowing that we're looking to upset. We know we're coming in with a lot of things not in our favor, but we also have a lot of things in our favor," Venechanos said. "It's going to be a challenge, but we are expecting a battle."

One thing that is in UMass' favor will be a home crowd and the first home night game that the Minutewomen have ever played. Drown feels the atmosphere will give them a definite boost.

"We've been practicing under the lights a couple days this week, and the lights give us so much energy. It's just a different kind of energy," Drown said. "That will give us an advantage."

One player who will need the extra energy will be freshman goalkeeper Katie "Flo" Florence. Northwestern averages 37.3 shots per game so Florence will have to be ready to handle a barrage of shots.

The team has placed a lot of faith in Florence who they believe can rise to the occasion.

"Flo is amazing, I think we play better as defenders having Flo back there. We play very confidently because we know she can stop anything," Drown said. "She kills us at practice everyday when we shoot on her, its so frustrating, but she's awesome."

The defense has had some difficulties recently especially in the second half. After jumping out to an 8-3 lead in the first half against No. 13 New Hampshire last Saturday, the team surrendered 10 second-half goals in a 13-10 loss.

Against Northwestern, the team plans to try some unorthodox defense in hopes of showing them some looks that the Wildcats haven't seen before.

UMass is 1-3 against ranked teams this season, with their only victory coming against then No. 13 Dartmouth in a 13-10 win back on March 3.

The schedule has been difficult all year for the Minutewomen. Venechanos did this intentionally to give her players as much experience as possible against all types of styles. She hopes this experience will come in handy when they attempt to pull off what would be the biggest upset of the year.

"We've seen it all, I keep telling the girls we've seen everything already," Venechanos said. "This [game] is a combination of all the things we've seen all in one game, so it doesn't get any better this."

Scott Feldman can be reach at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos will face the team she won two national championships with as an assistant coach tonight at McGuirk Stadium.

UMass to face slumping HU

BASEBALL from page 10

five-game losing streak and is giving up no fewer than seven runs per game during the stretch.

The Hawks have a team earned-run average of 8.71, nearly four runs more than the Minutemen.

Catcher Mike Amendola leads the team with 17 hits, six doubles and six runs scored. However, three Minutemen top Amendola's stats.

Junior outfielder Bryan Baudinet is the only UMass player other than Mike Donato to start all 14 games for the Minutemen, and he has been one of the most consistent players for UMass.

Baudinet is third in the conference with a team-leading .393 batting average, as well as 24 hits and two triples.

One attribute that the Hawks possess is speed. Hartford has 13 steals in 16 tries this season.

Three Hawks are perfect so far this season with multiple steals, including infielder Brady Stouffer, who leads the team with three steals.

Stone believes that the key to beating a team with good baserunning skills is to have quick, smart pitchers.

"The most important thing to shut down a team with a good running game is to have pitchers who have good awareness and [they need to] not only field their position but hold runners," Stone said. "Also, they need a catcher who can catch and throw [out runners], and we practice this every day."

Another thing that will help UMass as the seasdn goes on is the production from the bottom half of its lineup.

Right fielder Mike Donato had a strong game against Richmond, going 5-for-7 with four RBI and four runs scored. Along with Baudinet, Donato is another UMass outfielder with a potent bat. He has 21 hits so far this season, six of them for extra bases. Donato has been especially productive with men on base; he has a team-leading six sacrifice flies and 11 RBI.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Minutemen to rely on strong pitching

FUNDAMENTALS from page 10

focus at the plate. "You can have a lot of fun in this game if you have the right mindset and can balance things mentally pretty well. You go through adversity a lot in baseball, and you just have to be strong enough mentally to deal with that."

The key to eliminating chances for that to happen is patience and consistency at the plate, something this year's team has.

With just 12 sacrifice-flies last season, UMass rarely wasted a run-producing opportunity.

This season, the Minutemen don't face any ranked opponents, but that doesn't mean that their schedule is any less difficult. In 2008, the Minutemen lost seven series, with six of them coming against ranked opponents.

The rest of the conference is nothing to scoff at. Xavier boasts a relief pitcher in Jordan Conley that is on the pre-season watch list for the NCBWA Stopper of the Year, the top relief pitcher in Division I Baseball. Conley's 10 saves last season was a Musketeer record.

If that isn't threatening enough, Conley also had 256 plate appearances, garnering a .305 batting average, 27 runs scored and 34 runs batted in.

Xavier came into Amherst last season and took two of three games from UMass. Xavier was placed 2nd in the conference in the Coaches' Poll while the Minutemen were placed 10th. The No. 1 team in the poll was Charlotte. The 49ers took two of three last year in Amherst, outscoring the Minutemen 50-21 in the three-game set.

With UMass losing 10 games last year by three runs or less, many games this year for the Minutemen will have to be won on defense. However, UMass is still an offensive team, and run production will help backup a defense that has already made 27 errors this season.

At this point in the season, Stone hasn't decided the entire UMass rotation, but it has two important pieces in Jared Freni and Mitchell Klegg who are strong pitchers in their own right. Freni's 3.96 earned run average leads a pitching staff that has given up at least eight runs in six games this season.

Klegg's 25 strikeouts place him in a three-way tie for seventh in the conference. Opponents are also batting .245 against him.

So far this season, four of the Minutemen's nine losses came in one-run games, but they couldn't blow a lead that they didn't have. In those four games, UMass trailed going into the ninth inning, a situation that's given them five losses and no wins.

Yet when the Minutemen lead going into the ninth, they are undefeated with five wins.

UMass needs to focus on the fundamentals in order to establish consistency, and Stone believes that his older players can impart a strong commitment to excellence on their younger teammates.

"I think it's a big factor," Stone said of the importance of leadership from his older players. "It just typifies how important preparation and commitment is from the leaders on this team and it fosters the kind of commitment that we need from everybody to be a good team. You can't take your dedication and commitment casually."

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Senior Adam Tempesta watches a ball sail through the air in a game last season. The middle infielder is second on the 2009 team with a .377 batting average and is tied for the lead in home runs with two.

Bryan Leigh has held batters to a .264 batting average while compiling an 0-3 record and a 4.42 ERA in 18.1 innings pitched.

Like Sports?
Write for the Daily Collegian
Contact Eli Rosenswaike at
Sports@DailyCollegian.com

SPHS School of Public Health and Health Sciences
RESEARCH DAY • Thursday - March 26, 2009
UMass Campus Center Auditorium • 9:30AM-5:30PM

PROGRAM
9:30-11AM
Considering Graduate School in Public Health and Health Sciences?
Come join us for a presentation on educational opportunities in public health and health sciences at UMASS.
- What public health and health sciences is all about
- Why UMASS Amherst is a great place to study public health and health sciences
- The admissions requirements and application processes

12:30-3:30PM
Poster Viewing and Judging

2:00PM
Light Refreshments

4-5:00PM
Featured Speaker -
David P. Ropeik B.S.J., M.S.J.
The Risk Response, Why Our Fears Don't Match the Facts
Mr. Ropeik is an Instructor at Harvard University and an international consultant, teacher, and speaker on risk communication to government, business, consumer groups, and educational institutions. He is a former Instructor of risk communication at the Harvard School of Public Health, and was co-director of the school's professional education course 'The Risk Communication Challenge'.

5:00PM
Research Day Award Recipients Announced

ALL events are FREE and open to the campus community

For further information:
Contact the Deans' office at 413-545-2526
or phollister@schoolph.umass.edu.

Co-sponsored by
The School of Public Health and Health Sciences
The Rho Chapter, Delta Omega Honorary Public Health Society

THE COLLEGIAN IS ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF BUSINESS MANAGER.
COME TO 113 CAMPUS CENTER TO PICK UP AN APPLICATION.

Digit duty.

| | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | 2 | | 3 | 6 | 7 |
| | 4 | 1 | 6 | | | |
| | | | | | 4 | 9 |
| | | | | 5 | 8 | | 4 |
| 3 | 6 | | | | | 2 | 7 |
| 8 | | 5 | 6 | | | |
| | 2 | 8 | | | | |
| | | | | 2 | 1 | 7 | |
| | 5 | 6 | 9 | | 7 | | |

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 "The ___": TV series for Mr. T
6 Schnozz
10 Margins
14 Crown
15 Make smooth
16 Solo number
17 Goose's reply?
18 Ship's ramp
20 After expenses
21 Virginia
23 Indie label Meerse
24 Suds
25 Uno y dos
27 Word with penny or video
30 Melt
31 Deciduous tree
34 Writer Bellow
35 Desist
36 Louis XV or Louis XVI
37 Begin the entertainment
41 Sea denizen
42 TV's Green ___ (1965-71)
43 Floundering
44 Give it a go
45 A followers
46 Tends the lawn
48 Hostile ones
49 Long-running Broadway play
50 Bitter
53 Isn't incorrectly
54 Diminish
57 Showing
DOWN
1 Org. of Duval and O'Meara
2 Rower's need
3 Make a mistake
4 Having a triple character
5 Pluck
6 Make free (of)
7 Noshed
8 Sack material
9 Fancy dolt
10 Inventor Howe
11 Woolgathering
12 Concept
13 Spot in a crowd
18 Most extensive
22 Sound of a well-tuned engine
23 Warrior's movement
24 Dodger
25 Formal events
26 Burnsian hillside
27 Western spreads
31 Jaipur attire
33 Wasp wounds
34 Obliterate
37 Recluse
38 Fabled king
39 Part of Ms. Muffet's lunch
39 BBQ favorites
39 "___ Homo" religious image
40 Wooden sticks
46 Sickly looking
47 Take an oath
48 Unless
49 Cuban export
50 Play opener
51 First lady's 1st
52 Ms. Bombeck
53 Francs, for one
54 Author Ferber
55 Enrique Vegas
56 Unruly kid
58 Engine additive
59 Clock numeral
61 Thaiheh native

Continuing & Professional Education
UMass/Amherst Outreach
THINK AHEAD
Two 6-week summer sessions
Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net
Registration begins March 9
SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

QUOTE OF THE DAY

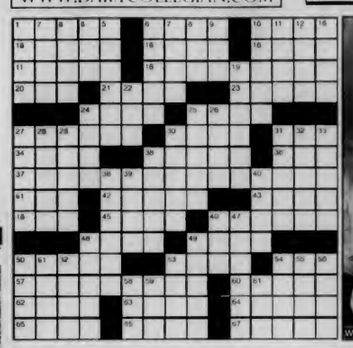
"For a list of all the ways technology has failed to improve the quality of life, please press three."

— Alice Khan



www.dailycollegian.com/comics

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
The adult diapers will begin as a party gag, but you will soon grow dependant on them once discovering how comfortable they are.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
It's about time you started acting more mature. See the next page over for more serious stuff.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Your Third Eye Blind tribute band is destined for great things.
Have faith.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You understand that there's more to life than just making a lot of money; owning a lot of cool possessions is important too.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Since you've started reusing your bodily fluids, you've been much better hydrated. Good work.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Your newfound popularity on campus can be traced directly back to all the $20 bills you have been giving out to strangers.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Stop hiding your gold chain behind your shirt. Pop open the buttons, and let that baby shine in the midst of your neck hair.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Your campaign to lower hearing aid prices will sadly fall on deaf ears.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
It took a trip to the doctor, but you have now confirmed that the rash is a regional STD known as Clam Chowder.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Your job producing porn has given you a new sense of purpose in life as well as a killer hard-on.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Your children will be born with webbed feet, which will surprisingly come in handy for them thanks to global warming.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You'll never order from Domino's again, when you finally realize that their pizzas are made with 35% recycled cardboard.

DON'T MESS WITH LEXUS
LEXUS TEXAS
$7,000

COMICS @ DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

ANNOUNCEMENT

You're not alone! Stressed? Panicking? Grieving? Wondering what comes after college? Mental Health Services support groups can help. Call (413) 545-2337

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblowout.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900

FOR RENT

Amherst: FREE Wii and entry to win a FREE flat-screen TV! $500 off security! (When you apply before April 15th for lease starting June 1st- Sept. 1st) 2,3,4 BR apts with 2 full baths, AC, dishwasher and FREE HEAT! Bus to UMass. Going Fast! call 253-7377 or go to www.MillValleyApts.com

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 25, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass eyes an upset

Plays first night game at McGuirk Stadium

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

It's never easy to knock off a defending national champion; it's even harder to defeat a team with four-straight national championships.

But the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team believes that with a few experienced seniors, some freshman for a youthful mix on their side and a coaching staff that has insiders' knowledge, it just might be able to pull off the upset of the year.

The Minutewomen will face their toughest opponent of the year when they square off against No. 1 and four-time defending national champions Northwestern (9-0) in their first ever home night game at McGuirk Stadium at 7 p.m.

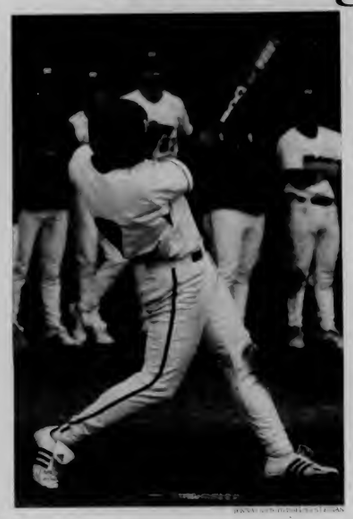
UMass (3-5) is well aware that the odds of pulling off the upset are slim, but they are psyched up about having the opportunity.

"It's the No. 1 team in the country and everyone is gunning for them and we are gunning for them as much as everyone else. It's a very special game for us," senior captain midfielder Holly Drown said.

The Wildcats have become a dynasty in women's lacrosse over the past few years. They have won four consecutive national titles and compiled an impressive 90-3 record dating back to 2004. They are coming off a dominating 19-8 win over No. 4 Syracuse, which shows just how much better they are than their competition.

Northwestern has averaged 19.67 goals per game this season while holding opponents to under six goals per game. They have two of the best players in the nation in Hannah Nielsen (64 points) and Hilary Bowen (48) and are unquestionably the best opponent UMass has faced and will face this season.

UMass head coach Alexis Venechanos and assistant coach Acacia Walker know more than anyone just how good the Wildcats are. Venechanos and Walker were assistants to Northwestern's coach Kelly Amonte Hiller before



See W. LACROSSE on page 8

The Minutewomen have faced four ranked opponents so far this season, going 1-3 in those four games. UMass will face its fifth ranked foe of the season tonight at McGuirk Stadium vs. No. 1 Northwestern.

Stressing the fundamentals

Minutemen look to veterans to lead squad in 2009 season

Jim Cassidy swings at a pitch in a game last season. The senior has struggled early this season hitting .114 in nine games.

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

Speed and veteran leadership will be the consistent factors in how the Massachusetts baseball team wins games.

In terms of playing style, baseball teams use many different philosophies to go with what's best for their team. This year's crop of Minutemen looks to be one that relies on defense, base hits and fundamental execution.

As far as how the Minutemen (5-9, 1-2 Atlantic 10) match up against conference opponents, UMass coach Mike Stone believes that everything starts with pitching.

"All the good teams always have good pitching and pretty talented and athletic people on defense," Stone said. "That's what we do as well. Speed is becoming more and more of a factor. If you get timely hits and manufacture runs, I mean that's [successful] baseball."

With 10 returning pitchers, Stone is really looking to go at hitters aggressively and let that set things up for the defense. If that's done effectively, players, like captains Adam Tempesta, Jim MacDonald and outfielder Brian Baudinet, can focus purely on manufacturing runs at the turn of the inning.

Last year, UMass was last in the Atlantic 10 conference in almost every major offensive statistic, but the Minutemen were among the league leaders in fewest strikeouts. That kind of patience is what leads to better recognition of opportunities to put the ball in play, and with only 95 strikeouts as a team, the Minutemen are seeing the ball well this season.

Smart hitting is something that UMass is improving on this season. The Minutemen have grounded into just one double play this season, a conference best. UMass is also playing smart baseball in terms of advancing runners. The Minutemen lead the conference with 18 sacrifice bunts.

Given that the team is balanced in terms of years of experience, players of every sport tend to get into their own heads and torture themselves over little mistakes. A strikeout could affect a normally productive player for the rest of the game.

"Hopefully that won't happen," Stone said of his players having a consistent lack of

See FUNDAMENTALS on page 8

Junior Jared Freni throws to home plate in a game last season. The starting pitcher leads all starters with a 3.96 ERA in 2009.

UM hits road to face Hartford

Senior Mitchell Clegg is 1-0 on the season in four starts. The lefty has a 6.08 ERA in 23.2 innings pitched.

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

After a 2-6 record in last week's games, the Massachusetts baseball team looks to bounce back against Hartford today in Hartford, Conn., at 3 p.m.

The Minutemen (5-9, 1-2 Atlantic 10) are coming off of a 24-9 thumping of Richmond (11-5, 2-1 A-10), that put an end to a spring break in which UMass played eight games in nine days.

Fortunately for UMass, starting pitchers don't have to pitch every game, so they can rest their arms for a few days. UMass coach Mike Stone currently has no set rotation but has an idea of what he wants to do with at least a few pitchers.

"My philosophy [on a pitching rotation] is: who we're most confident in and who's well rested starts," Stone said. "[Jared] Freni is our number one guy at this point, [Mitchell] Klegg looks to be number two, but we'll go from there. We're fortunate to have guys who've started for us in the past as well."

Sophomore Garrett Butt will get the start today against the Hawks (1-9). This will be Butt's first career start. He enters this game having made just three appearances for a total of six innings. However, the last time a reliever started for the Minutemen, it yielded good results.

Fellow sophomore Nick Serino (1-1) started against Virginia Commonwealth (10-7) and struck out 11 in his first win of the season. Yet to Stone's point, Serino made six starts last season, finishing with a 2-4 record and a 4.73 earned-run average.

Hartford's only win came against Central Florida, and they needed a four-run ninth-inning rally to do it. Hartford is on a

See BASEBALL on page 8

A-10 tournament staying put for now

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

Considering the Atlantic 10 Tournament always seems to be a crapshoot, it only seems fitting that it's staying in Atlantic City.

Atlantic 10 commissioner Bernadette V. McGlade announced Tuesday that the championship will remain at Boardwalk Hall in Atlantic City for the next three years.

"The decision to return to Boardwalk Hall in Atlantic City provides a great opportunity to grow our marquee event and truly brand the Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball Championship," said McGlade in the official A-10 press release.

"The facility is well-suited for this championship – Atlantic City is a historic seashore resort, and the city has welcomed the Atlantic 10 and committed to host three more great years."

Atlantic City, which has hosted the tournament for each of the past three seasons, was selected over Springfield, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Dayton, Ohio, all of which made bids to host the championship.

Although the site of the event won't change, its format will. Over the last three years all the games were played at Boardwalk Hall, but now the opening-round games will be held on the campuses.

See A-10 TOURNEY on page 7

UMass Basketball

| YEAR(S) | CITY | UMass (W-L) |
|---|---|---|
| 2007-2012 | Atlantic City, N.J. | 0-3 |
| 2005-2006 | Cincinnati, Ohio | 0-2 |
| 2003-2004 | Dayton, Ohio | 0-2 |
| 1997-2002 | Philadelphia, Pa. | 8-6 |
| 1996 | Philadelphia, Pa. | 3-0 |
| 1989-1995 | Philadelphia, Pa. | 14-3 |
| 1988 | Morgantown, W. Va | 0-1 |
| 1987 | N/A | 0-1 |
| 1986 | East Rutherford, N.J. | 0-1 |
| 1985 | Piscataway, N.J. | 0-1 |
| 1984 | Morgantown, W. Va | 1-1 |
| 1978-1983 | Pittsburgh, Pa. | 1-6 |
| 1977 | Philadelphia, Pa. | 2-1 |

Minutewomen led by Drown, Florence

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

After facing off against four ranked opponents in its first eight games, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will be competing against the toughest team on their schedule, as well as the toughest in the country, in No. 1 Northwestern, the four-time defending national champions.

The Minutewomen (3-5) are no strangers to strong opponents this season, facing then-No. 6 Maryland, then-No. 10 Boston University, then-No. 13 Dartmouth and No. 13 New Hampshire. UMass has gone 1-3 against ranked opponents this season, defeating Dartmouth 13-10, losing to New Hampshire by the same score and falling to BU and Maryland by 10-goal margins.

The Wildcats (9-0) are led by coach Kelly Amonte Hiller, who UMass head coach Alexis Venechanos helped win a pair of national championships as a coach. Associate coach Acacia Walker was also on Hiller's staff.

UMass Lacrosse

Wednesday's game will be the first time that the Minutewomen will play at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Drowning the competition

Last season, Holly Drown displayed her versatility by switching roles and playing strong defense for the Minutewomen. Her offensive numbers, though, suffered as a result.

As a sophomore in 2007, Drown was the team's second-leading scorer with 35 goals and six assists. During her junior season, Drown's transition to defense limited her to nine points on seven goals and two assists.

Drown has since gotten back into her offensive side, contributing on offense and defense. But the offensive side is where the captain is making the biggest contribution; she has already passed her totals from last year with 13 goals and three assists.

Drown's presence on offense was made immediately when she opened up the season with a two-goal performance against Holy Cross. Since then, Drown has recorded a point in every game, including hat tricks in a win against Dartmouth and a loss against UNH.

The UMass record-holder for single-season draw controls, Drown is currently third on the team in DC's behind Merritt Cosgrove (18) and Haley Smith (18).

Florence a fixture in net

After getting the start in the season opener against Holy Cross, freshman goalkeeper Katie Florence has played every minute for the Minutewomen in goal this season. Venechanos has shown confidence in her rookie goalkeeper and

See FLORENCE on page 7

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

SUNNY HIGH: 55 LOW: 36 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 2009

New look for UMass website's homepage

By Gary Tarantino
Collegian Staff

Over spring break week, the University of Massachusetts officially launched its new and improved website homepage.

The site is the start of a new approach for presenting the University to an external audience by showing the experiences and methods of learning generated daily on campus.

The webpage creation was a team effort led by the new web team in University Relations.

The web team consists of professionals from Student Affairs, University Development and Creative Services. The team worked closely with the University's information technology unit as well.

"About three months ago, we set an ambitious goal for this new team – making the UMass website one of the best in the country," said executive vice chancellor for university relations Tom Milligan.

"The recent redesign was a great first step in that direction; they did a fantastic job on a short turnaround. They've worked really hard, and the result is a great website that looks good and has high-quality content," Milligan added.

A website is an important communication tool for the University. For instance, future students learn about UMass through the website, while alumni use the site to reconnect. Faculty, staff and current students also get important information from the website every day.

The new homepage uses the web to build the right kinds of relationships with these key constituents.

In addition to the new homepage, the web team also introduced two new related initiatives.

The University announced the official opening of University Relations, a campus resource that brings together a team of seasoned professionals to provide expertise in writing and editing, graphic design, media and public relations, photography and event planning.

In collaboration with University Relations and the launching of the new homepage, the UMass Amherst Alumni Association is introducing MaroonCentral, its upgraded online community which has been expanded to include students.

At MaroonCentral, students and alumni have access to a directory, profile pages, a friends listing and class notes to facilitate networking.

Also available through MaroonCentral are career tools which include resume posting, job searches, industry and company research and mentoring opportunities.

These resources are exclusive to UMass Amherst alumni and students, in addition to being accessible through UMassAlumni.com.

"I'm very pleased with where we are, and even more ambitious for where we can go from here. I'd like to see us do even more with online video, to connect to social media sites (like Facebook, etc.), to use targeted websites to reach alumni, parents and others more regularly," said Milligan.

"I'd also like to see us continue to improve the content to make sure we have more great stories and photos about what makes UMass Amherst special, prominently displayed throughout the entire website. This is a great first step, but I'm even more excited about what's ahead," he said.

Gary Tarantino can be reached at gtarantino@student.umass.edu

An alleged assault

By Adam Coulter
Collegian Staff

According to Amherst College and University of Massachusetts police departments, an inebriated man allegedly assaulted a PVTA bus driver at an Amherst College bus stop earlier this month, resulting in a joint effort by authorities to now identify and locate the suspect.

At approximately 2:00 a.m. on March 1, a white male allegedly assaulted the driver of a PVTA bus, causing injury to the victim and prompting a three week search for the man. According to police, the suspect had been drinking and became upset with the driver of the bus he had been riding.

"The assailant was very intoxicated and at a previous stop he had asked the driver to wait for his friends," said Amherst College Deputy Chief Edwin Zaniewski. "The driver waited a brief period then had to continue on. The assailant had issue with him not waiting longer," he added.

The suspect then allegedly shouted profanity at the driver, at which time the victim attempted to diffuse the situation.

Several images of the alleged attacker of the PVTA bus driver were captured on the bus's security tapes, including the one above.

"The driver instructed him to get off the bus when they arrived at the Amherst College bus stop," said Zaniewski.

During the alleged assault at the stop unknown witnesses had to pull the suspect off the driver.

"It is uncertain if any [of those people] were friends of his," said Zaniewski.

After the incident it is also unclear where the man went and who exactly he is, but there is an important lead that police are following up on.

"The most important piece of information is that the suspect's first name apparently is Ryan," said Zaniewski.

Video and pictures of the incident were taken by the bus' security system while the assault occurred, which provides this information.

See PVTA on page 3

Website offers audio 'highs'

By Josh Walovitch
Collegian Staff

There is now another way to attain psychedelic highs, as the website I-Doser.com has recently released to the public binaural beats that synchronize your brainwaves and claim to cause users to attain hallucinogenic highs or experience change in emotions.

The binaural beats are sold as audio tracks and claim to simulate the high people receive from different drugs such as alcohol, marijuana, heroin, LSD, crack, cocaine, coffee, adrenaline, tranquility, nitrous and others. Each one of these tracks has the options of a low, medium or high dosage of which ever track you choose.

According to the website, these beats use proven scientific and safe methods of synchronizing your brainwaves.

"The repetitive nature of the tracks is potentially hypnotic or mesmerizing, which is a changed state of awareness," said University of Massachusetts linguistics professor John Kingston. "If the apparent variation in amplitude is produced by binaural beating, then it's an illusion created in the mind. That would be a changed state of awareness in itself, though not a very interesting one."

"I think there is a market for I-Doser at UMass, it's a way for students to get high without actually having to pay the consequences," said freshman Ethan Ward. "If you smoke in the dorms you could then be thrown out, whereas if you do this [I-Doser] you will not be thrown out."

I-Doser.com claims to simulate the moods and experiences undergone while under the influence of drugs through its binaural audio beats.

Internet blogging speculation has inferred that these audio CDs could potentially also be used as an effective detox treatment.

"I could not recommend this in any way at this time. More research must be conducted," said Dr. Michael Levy, director of clinical treatment services at CAB Health and Recovery Services, in Massachusetts. "Off the top of my head, for certain drugs of abuse, a formal medical detoxification are needed, as without that, withdrawal could be dangerous."

Levy said that the research backing I-Doser was not well "thought out" and that before any professional recommends it, there must be more research that studies whether I-Doser has any effectiveness or impact of any kind.

"It doesn't sound like the best way to overcome an addiction is to simulate it; but if a doctor endorses it, then possibly," said junior John Lincoln.

I-Doser claims that its users have had positive experiences when mixing recreational drugs with audio track dosages supplied by I-Doser, although they do not recommend doing so.

"Binaural beats come about when you 'hear' something that isn't actually there," said UMass psychology professor Rebecca Spencer. "I think it's best to think of them as an auditory illusion. Just like in some visual illusions, I can get you to 'see' something that's not really there, for instance, in the Kanzisa Triangle."

With binaural beats, one ear

See I-DOSER on page 3

Minuteman baseball program in jeopardy

The UMass baseball program, which has been around since 1977, is reportedly in danger of being cut. Athletic director John McCutcheon said this week that at least one program will likely be dropped.

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

On the cover of the soon-to-be-released 2009 media guide for the Massachusetts baseball team, there is an artist's rendering of a new baseball field, dubbed: "The future home of Minuteman baseball."

According to several published reports Tuesday, not only does UMass baseball's future likely not have a new field – it may not even have a team.

The Boston Herald and Daily Hampshire Gazette reported that, because of the budget deficit problems at UMass, the baseball program may be cut as part of the planned decrease in spending.

Nothing has been officially announced yet, but UMass athletic director John McCutcheon says cuts in the athletic department are virtually inevitable.

"The campus is going through a historic reduction in funding. We are a part of that like every other unit on the campus. To comment on what the outcomes may be would be premature at this point," McCutcheon told the Gazette.

"Obviously the chancellor [Robert Holub] in his comments to the state Legislature indicated that program reductions are going to be necessary for us to get to where we need to be."

Rumors are swirling that the baseball program, which dates back to 1877 and is the longest-running team at UMass, will take the brunt of the damage.

Mike Stone, who has been the coach in Amherst since 1988, is both worried and mystified that this may happen.

"I'm obviously concerned. There are a lot of rumors, and each day that I've heard them, there's been more and more," Stone told the Gazette. "It's very disturbing and distracting. We're trying to play a season and we have to deal with this issue. It's not good.

See BASEBALL on page 4

ARTS & LIVING
HORROR STORY

Collegian staff writer Morgan Meagher reviews "The Last House on the Left," a violent horror movie about revenge directed by Dennis Iliadis.

SEE PAGE 8

SPORTS
LEARN FROM LOSS

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team suffered a 22-5 loss to No. 1 and four-time defending national champion Northwestern Wednesday night at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

SEE PAGE 12

EDITORIAL & OPINION
COLUMN | NO CURE-ALL FOR DEFICIT

Nick O'Malley argues that the University's financial concerns are not completely solved despite promised federal stimulus money.

SEE PAGE 6

EDITORIAL & OPINION
POINT-COUNTER-POINT

Columnists S.P. Sullivan and Jon Peterson debate the free speech controversy surrounding Don Feder's recently attempted talk at UMass.

SEE PAGE 7

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 37

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasserzuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
COPY EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Leigh Greaney
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenzweike
PHOTO EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallick
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kretzmer
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillenwater
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Weiser

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CLASSROOM SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, RENAMED THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Michael King

COPY EDITOR
Shayna Murphy

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michelle Abbasciano

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

GEO-LOCATE YOUR NEWS

FOLLOW NEWS GEOGRAPHICALLY WITH DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM'S "NEWSGARDEN" APPLICATION ON THE HOMEPAGE.

NEWS

BLOGS | ALL WEEK
KEEP UP WITH THE LATEST SCIENTIFIC DEVELOPMENTS GOING ON IN YOUR OWN BACKYARD WITH RESEARCH THIS WEEK.

FIND OUT THE NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS AT EDITOR'S NOTE, RUN BY NEWS EDITOR WILL MCGUINNESS.

PODCAST |
COLLEGIAN EDITORS HAVE A ROUNDTABLE DISCUSSION OF THE ISRAEL / PALESTINE CONFLICT WITH A LOCAL TAKE.

ARTS & LIVING

VIDEO | WEDNESDAY
AN INTERVIEW WITH LOCAL AUTHOR TRACY KIDDER ON HIS ACCLAIMED BOOK, "MOUNTAINS BEYOND MOUNTAINS," AND HIS NEXT PROJECT, DUE OUT IN AUGUST.

DailyCollegian.com is looking for multimedia storytellers.

Get your feet wet in new media.

Weakened economy, sabbatical cutbacks

BY ZACHARY FISCHER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Due to the weakening economy, many colleges and universities have been forced to investigate new methods of cutting costs.

Some have turned their shears toward what is sometimes considered the top perk of professor tenure: the sabbatical.

A sabbatical is a paid leave of absence for tenured professors that allows them to conduct research or undergo big projects.

Colleges such as Kent State University, Fitchburg State College, the University of Toledo and the University of Georgia have all adopted much stricter requirements for granting sabbatical leaves, citing savings that could reach up to $50,000.

"At a research university, sabbaticals provide an opportunity for faculty members to concentrate exclusively on research or creative activity – often to start or finish a major project," said University of Massachusetts professor and English department Chairman Joseph Bartolomeo.

"They return to the classroom energized by their scholarly work, and students benefit from having teachers who are not just disseminating knowledge, but actively contributing to it," he said.

The sabbatical is also an important attraction for research professors and often times the research or success they have on leave can lead to grants or prestige that have positive effects on a university.

"They [sabbaticals] are not automatic," said Bartolomeo. "Professors need to apply for them and to propose specific research plans."

Earlier this week, students received a highly anticipated e-mail from Chancellor Robert Holub where he updated the University of Massachusetts community on the governor's education plans.

"$1.6 million [of the stimulus] would be allocated to the UMass system in fiscal 2010, with approximately half that amount coming to our campus," wrote Holub.

The effects of cost restructuring are still unclear.

The newly acquisitioned stimulus money curbs some of the cuts, but UMass is still in a budget deficit.

Whether or not UMass will adopt the same approach to sabbaticals taken by other colleges has yet to be seen.

However, according to Bartolomeo, it is unlikely that UMass will stop giving professors sabbaticals.

"The University has historically been very supportive of a practice that directly advances the research mission of a campus like ours," he said.

A professor's ability to conduct his or her own research is important not only to them and to the reputation of the university, but to many students as well.

"The reason why they become professors is because they love their field and want to teach us," said sophomore Michelle Alter.

"They have a passion for knowledge and [the sabbatical] gives them the opportunity to learn even more in their field. Just because they are a professor doesn't mean their education stops. The more they learn, the more they can teach us," she said.

Zachary Fischer can be reached at zfischer@student.umass.edu

WRITE FOR NEWS
CONTACT WILL MCGUINNESS AT NEWS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
2, 3 & 4 BEDROOM APARTMENTS IN AMHERST
FREE Wii!
FREE TV!
FREE MONEY!
For details, come to the Housing Fair
Thursday, March 26
Campus Center Concourse 10-3
www.MillValleyApts.com
CALL 253-7377
OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE
420 RIVERGLADE DRIVE

SGA debates aligning with Palestinian college

BY MIKE FOX
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last night the Student Government Association senate voted against a motion asking for the University of Massachusetts to affiliate itself with the Palestinian university Birzeit. It also voted in support of a motion asking for the administration to provide more transparency about endowment investments and to ask for the formation of a committee that would try to enforce socially responsible investments by the University.

The three hour meeting started with representatives from both the Campus Anti-war Network (CAN) speaking in support of the motions and the Student Alliance for Israel voicing their opposition to them, especially in regards to affiliating with Birzeit University.

Commuter Area Senator Andy Berg originally proposed the motions on March 4, but they were tabled by the senate to allow further dialogue. Last night he continued to defend them, stating his desire to encourage campus dialogue over the issues.

Senators questioned Berg and CAN member Sofia Albaiti over the motions for the majority of the meeting.

Commuter Area Senator Derek Khanna asked over the wording of the motion, which accused the Israeli government of encroaching on Palestinian human rights. Berg and Albaiti replied by stating that the motion was more devoted to promote and defend education in the Gaza Strip.

Orchard Hill Area Senator Christina Kennedy asked if the SGA had a responsibility to pursue a more neutral stand in affiliating with universities involved in the conflict. Albaiti replied that due to CAN's political affiliation, they were more inclined to support people seen as oppressed.

Senators further questioned what commitments the affiliation, described in the motion as "twinning," would require of UMass.

During the debate over the motion, the issue remained if whether to judge Birzeit for notable alumni involved in terrorism was worth refusing to support the entire institution.

The argument that the SGA had no jurisdiction over the matter was brought up against the motion. The motion failed with seven votes in favor, 10 against and three abstentions.

The next motion, which asked for more transparency with the University's endowment, passed.

This was followed by a recess during which Michael Feder, the president of SAFI, criticized Berg for the lack of dialogue over the past several weeks concerning the issue.

Feder was in turn criticized by Orchard Hill Senator Ben Thompson for his statements, after which Khanna came to Feder's defense. Feder and Thompson reconciled after the confrontation.

The final motion passed asked for the formation of a committee to investigate the University's investments with companies involved in war. The motion passed with 12 in favor, five against and three voting in abstention after language in the bill referring to specific conflicts was removed.

Speaking about the night's events, Berg said, "I'm happy that we're moving ahead on the socially responsible committee that will work to divest from companies who profit from war and occupation."

In regards to the senate rejecting twinning with Birzeit University he added, "Although I wish it had passed, I am very happy it started dialogue on an important issue."

Southwest Senator Josh Davidson, who made his opposition to divestment related motions part of his recent campaign for trustee, said, "I think a lot of the problems seen tonight have their failure in the lack of communication and dialogue between meetings."

Mike Fox can be reached at mfox@student.umass.edu.

Dem. senators retain support

BY DAVID LIGHTMAN
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

WASHINGTON — Senate Democrats on Wednesday gave President Barack Obama a warm welcome on Capitol Hill, even as they prepared to cut as much as $180 billion from his proposed $3.55 trillion fiscal 2010 budget.

Democrats downplayed the adjustments and said that they felt only harmony with the president.

Sen. Ben Nelson, D-Neb., a centrist leader, said "there's nothing unusual about the Senate making some changes," while Senate Budget Committee Chairman Kent Conrad, D-N.D., who led the effort to modify the budget, said he'd "preserved the president's key priorities."

The White House was similarly pleased, and Budget Director Peter Orszag called the congressional budgets "98 percent the same" as Obama's.

Budget committees in the House of Representatives and Senate hope to finish writing their versions of the 2010 budget Thursday, with votes expected next week in both the full Senate and House.

Obama's Capitol visit was his latest public relations effort on behalf of his $3.55 trillion fiscal 2010 budget. It followed last weekend's mobilizing of volunteers to knock on doors urging public support - which failed to generate much pressure on Capitol Hill - and a Tuesday night prime-time news conference.

The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office said the president's budget would create a $1.38 trillion deficit next year and a $749 billion deficit in 2014.

The congressional budget committees worked Wednesday from blueprints prepared by their chairmen. The House approach would reduce the federal deficit, estimated at $1.7 trillion this year, to $1.22 trillion next year - $158 billion less than Obama's deficit - and to $598.4 billion by 2014. The Senate version aims for a 2010 deficit of $1.2 trillion - $180 billion less than Obama's - and forecasts a $508 billion deficit by 2014.

The House and Senate plans eliminate the $250 billion "placeholder" that Obama wanted for future government bailouts of ailing companies.

They also reduce Obama's bid to increase by 10.1 percent nondefense discretionary spending, which includes many of his key domestic initiatives. Conrad proposed a 7 percent increase, while House Democrats want to trim the increase to 9.5 percent.

Congressional Democrats' changes could be seen two ways: as the work of lawmakers gently asserting their independence from the president, or as members of Congress smoothing the legislative path for Obama by making the budget more palatable to moderates and thus easier to pass.

Conrad said the motivation was simple: The CBO's new, bigger deficit projections last week made adjustments to the Obama budget necessary.

"When we got the new forecast, and I had the responsibility of delivering that news to him, he understood immediately the implications," Conrad said. "He understood immediately that I would have to make adjustments."

The committees' outline is intended only to set legally binding general guidelines for spending and revenue for next year. The budget bills leave to other committees future crucial decisions on health care, global warming initiatives, the federal role in education and Obama's "Making Work Pay" tax break – his core priorities.

Though no funds are provided for any of those plans, the budget leaves doors wide open for congressional action.

April 1 Graduate Info Session
WPI
Information Session On GRAD DAY 2009
Register NOW to attend!
grad.wpi.edu • grad@wpi.edu • 508.831.5401

PVTA suspect still not found

PVTA from page 1

"You can hear someone calling his name on the video as he is assaulting the driver and you can also hear someone say 'he is in my chemistry class,'" said Zaniewski.

A witness also came forward to police and confirmed that his first name is indeed Ryan and that she believed he goes to UMass.

"She said that she thought he lived on the third floor of MacKimmie," he said.

No further information was provided by this person, according to Zaniewski. But the UMass link and the relationship between the two police departments has compelled UMPD to enter the investigation.

"I've been working with the UMass Police and the residential life staff at MacKimmie but we have not been able to identify a suspect to date," said Zaniewski.

"Amherst College has been trying to find out who this guy is and hasn't had any luck so they called us up and asked us if we could help out," said UMPD Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald.

Archbald believes the publishing of the man's picture will help solve the case.

"Someone is going to recognize this guy; it's on a PVTA bus so he uses local transportation and is most likely a student in the area," he added.

The victim in this case wasn't seriously injured.

"The driver sustained a cut over his eye which required stitches and he was treated at the UMass health center," said Zaniewski.

The driver's name was not released.

Anyone with information about the suspect in question or the incident should contact Deputy Chief Zaniewski at [413] 542-2772 or emanzaniewski@amherst.edu.

Adam P. Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu.

Audio tracks simulate a 'drug-like' effect

I-DOSER from page 1

receives a sound wave and the other ear receives another sound wave through which, in isolation is heard as a pure tone, but together (or binaurally) sounds different from the waves independently.

Dr. Spencer listened to a track and described it as similar to a white noise machine, a machine that is often used to sooth babies to sleep. She said that for the same reason that white noise machines are used, adults may find that playing these tracks at a reasonable volume combined with the placebo effect of what the website sells it as, might interpret this to be a drug-like state.

The website notes that it is possible for an individual to be unsusceptible or immune to binaural beats, and also recommends that you take a dose while you are lying down in a dim-lit room with no distractions. The audio tracks must be listened to with headphones at a soft level. It is instructed that you listen until the track ends and then take off the headphones.

"People who believe they are being given a treatment tend to respond as if they had been given a treatment," said Lisa D. Sanders, director of the neurocognition and perception lab at UMass. "My guess is that lying down in a dimly-lit room in solitude without any noisy distractions and thinking about the wanted effect would have as large of an impact on how a person feels as doing those things and listening to the I-Doser sounds. Both the thinking and the listening change brainwaves."

Binaural brainwave entrainment was discovered by a German scientist, H.W. Dove in 1839.

Josh Walovitch can be reached at jwalovit@student.umass.edu.

Inauguration policy criticized

BY BARBARA BARRETT
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

WASHINGTON — Members of Congress scolded federal law enforcement officials Wednesday over why thousands of their constituents didn't get to see Barack Obama sworn in as president in January despite holding coveted tickets to the ceremony.

A classified congressional report, part of which was released this week, found that visitors overwhelmed an understaffed cadre of law enforcement officers on Inauguration Day. Crowds knocked down barriers, crowded security zones and forced many ticket-holding spectators away from their coveted viewing areas nearest the Capitol.

"These were constituents from each of our districts, who traveled often at great expense and personal sacrifice to witness this historic day," said Rep. David Price, D-N.C., who led the hearing along with Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz, D-Fla.

Price and Wasserman Schultz are the chiefs of the Homeland Security and Legislative Branch subcommittees, respectively, of the House Appropriations Committee.

Among the problems, according to Wednesday's testimony: Spectators arrived before law enforcement officers. Signage was poor, and visitors without tickets mingled among those carrying tickets, breaking down any hope of orderly queues. Security maps conflicted.

Police tried to funnel 100,000 carriers of silver tickets through a single checkpoint and had turned down offers of help from the District of Columbia Army National Guard.

Also, just more than 300 police officers were dispatched to manage a crowd of 250,000.

Thousands were caught underground for hours in the so-called "Purple Tunnel of Doom" as emergency vehicles whizzed by and police officers did nothing to disperse the crowd.

The congressional report on the inaugural crowds found that the U.S. Secret Service and the U.S. Capitol Police didn't have enough support to handle the crush of people.

"It was just horrible," said Kay Singer of Hillsborough, N.C., whose blue ticket line moved just 25 feet in three hours in subfreezing weather. As the noon swearing-in time grew nearer, she abandoned the line and went to a friend's apartment to watch on television. Next time, she said, she'll just go to the National Mall without a ticket.

The chaos marred an otherwise calm day in which jubilant Obama supporters cheered for the new president and sang in the streets afterward. Police agencies reported no arrests among the estimated crowd of 1.8 million people.

Thousands of people who had traveled from across the country with tickets from their members of Congress couldn't get close enough to see the swearing-in, however.

"What was supposed to be a positive experience for my constituents turned into an embittering one," said Rep. David Obey, D-Wis., the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

"I want to go back to the Purple of Tunnel of Doom," Wasserman Schultz said.

Police officers knew about the crowds in the tunnel, which was supposed to be off-limits to pedestrians, but they did nothing because the group stood peacefully.

Federal law enforcement officials are now being criticized for their lack of organization and control over the crowds on Inauguration Day.

Wasserman Schultz wondered what would prevent such problems in four years.

"Do you know what will happen so we don't have 'Son of Purple Tunnel of Doom' in 2013?" she asked.

Rep. Harold Rogers of Kentucky, the top Republican on the Homeland Security Subcommittee, said that most of the decisions about signs, tickets and other plans were made by the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies. That committee is run by Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California, who wasn't at the hearing.

"I don't know what we're doing here," Rogers said.

Rep. Jose Serrano, D-N.Y., said it was important to understand what happened because the event not only was massive but also was infused with a historic significance that was tarnished for many visitors.

"I had people coming from my district in the Bronx who were over 90 years old," Serrano said. "This was going to be emotional. This was going to be important. And that's why there's so much concern about it."

U.S. Capitol Police Chief Phillip Morse testified that police were overwhelmed by what he called a "cascading" effect of ticketed and nonticketed visitors scrambling to find space after access to the National Mall closed earlier than expected.

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
OPEN LATE NIGHT TILL 4 AM!

Kick up your heels!
ZANNA
downtown Amherst www.zanna.com Become a fan of ZANNA on facebook.

Welcome Back
to Your Award Winning Dining Services!
MARCH - APRIL - MAY Upcoming Events
• It's Spring – Sweet
• Tyson Week
• Cooking/Baking 101
• American Produce Week
• Visiting College Chef Series: Texas A&M Univerisity
• UMass Idol Preliminary
• Visiting College Chef Series: Princeton University
• Student Iron Chef Competition
• Taste of UMass
• Visiting College Chef Series: Davidson College
• Taste of Home
• Spring BBQ
• Midnight Buffet
www.umassdining.com
DINING SERVICES UMass Amherst
RESTAURANTS & MORE FROM ivy

As rumors swirl, baseball program may be dropped

BASEBALL from page 1

"To even think about dropping baseball with the history and tradition that it's had at UMass for over 100 years doesn't make any sense to me."

The UMass Baseball Diamond Club Committee, which recently helped fund the designs of a new UMass baseball complex, is spearheading the movement to try to save the program. Phil LeBlanc and Dick Bresciani, the co-chairman of the committee, sent McCutcheon – as well as Holub, UMass president Jack Wilson and the board of trustees – a memorandum on why the program should not be cut.

"We implore you not to eliminate UMass baseball. Doing so will negatively impact the reputation, character and culture of UMass," reads the memorandum. "The future of UMass Baseball has never been brighter than now due to the successful planning, financial commitments and partnership that the UMass Baseball Diamond Fund has put in place over the last year."

McCutcheon said that one or more programs could be cut. In 2002, seven UMass teams, including men's tennis, men's and women's gymnastics, women's volleyball, men's and women's water polo and men's indoor track and field, were cut. In 2004, men's indoor track and field was reinstated.

"My job is try to assess it and have as competitive a department and as representative a Division I program at the end of the day that we possibly can have. I'm sure whatever recommendation I can make would not be supported by everybody," McCutcheon told the Gazette. "It's an extremely difficult process. Whenever you look at the process of eliminating sports, it's catastrophic to those that are involved in it."

"The opportunity to participate means a lot to the coaches, the student-athletes, to the fans. It's a painful process. But the reality of where we are in the economy and where the state is in support of the university, it's a reality that we unfortunately have to deal with."

Former UMass baseball coach Dick Bergquist, who coached the team from 1967-1987, is joining in the movement to save the program. In a letter sent to McCutcheon dated March 23, Bergquist offered his thoughts on why getting rid of the program would be a mistake.

"New England is baseball country. Baseball is one of the two sports in Massachusetts high schools that is most popular in terms of numbers of teams. Denying participation in baseball at the State University would be tragic," Bergquist wrote.

Jim Macdonald slides back to first base on a pick-off attempt in a game from last season. If the rumored reports are in fact true that the baseball program will be cut, fans won't get to see that anytime soon in Amherst.

Bergquist thinks that a "hasty decision" is the quickest and easiest way out for the athletic department, "but it does not recognize over 100 years of baseball tradition."

He has an alternative idea for McCutcheon.

"If the money problems are really that severe, other programs must assist by sacrifice also. This may be a time to restructure UMass athletics. A ten percent budget reduction by ALL teams would not be out of the question."

The baseball program has made two NCAA Tournament appearances in Stone's tenure (1995, 1996), has five Beanpot Championships (they won in 2008), and has captured eight Atlantic 10 titles. Overall, the program has qualified for 11 NCAA Tournaments – including two appearances in the College World Series (1954, 1969).

However, the team has struggled over the past five years, going a combined 89-141 from 2004-2008.

Bergquist concluded his letter with the following: "Ralph Waldo Emerson once said, 'Do not go where the path leads. Go instead where there is no path and leave a trail.'"

"I urge you, John, to blaze a new trail by not cutting teams. Even though cutting teams is very painful, it is still the easiest way out. Do not make a hasty decision that the entire University may regret in the future. Baseball is worth saving!"

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

A professor's small discovery

By Rachel Starr
Brown Daily Herald

Brown University scientists were recently key members of a team whose work led to the isolation of a single top quark, the smallest fundamental particle of matter.

The research, which involved smashing tiny particles together repeatedly, took place at the Fermi National Accelerator Lab, the location of the Tevatron collider - the world's highest-energy particle collider.

The top quark was "one of the key things that was missing" from the Standard Model of particle physics, said Associate Professor of Physics Meenakshi Narain, who spent years working on the research that ultimately produced the discovery. The isolation of the top quark might be the "last step" on the road to observing the Higgs boson, which is believed to generate mass, she said.

"It was one of those nagging things," Narain said. The research, which was published in Physical Review Letters earlier this month, was written collaboratively by two teams of scientists that had previously competed to produce the discovery - DZero Experiment and Collider Detector at Fermilab.

David Cutts, professor of physics, was one of the original members of the DZero Experiment. Collaboration is very important because the Tevatron "is a very large piece of equipment - it's very complex," Cutts said.

Narain joined the DZero collabora tion as a post-doctoral researcher and was involved in the discovery of the top quark, and the anti-top-quark in 1995.

DZero and the CDF have been studying the top quark's properties and production mode ever since, Narain said, adding that this month's discovery is "like a dream come true" after 14 years of experimentation.

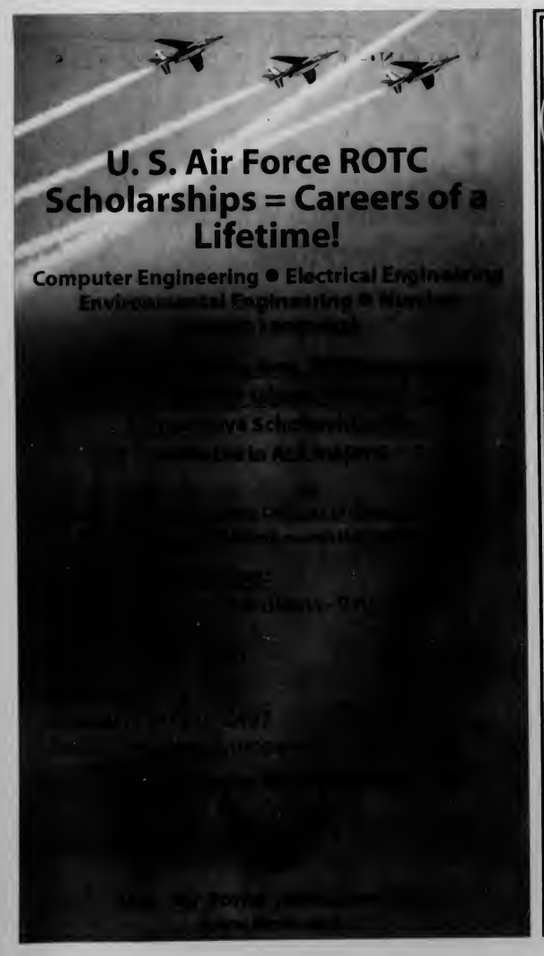
"Particle physics is just a very exciting time right now," said Monica Pangilinan GS, a Brown Ph.D. student who is currently on site at Fermilab conducting research. "We're closing in on this window of where the Higgs should be, if it exists."

Pangilinan, who is writing her thesis on the "observation of this rare production mode" of the single top quark, has been closely involved in both the observation and the analysis taking place at the Tevatron, Narain said.

Pangilinan and the rest of the DZero physicists had to analyze billions of collisions in order to find just hundreds that matched the production modes for which they were looking.

As part of the analysis, Pangilinan "developed this technique to extract a very small signal from a huge background" Narain said.

The Tevatron fires protons and anti-protons at each other every 396 nanoseconds, but "industry can't support" keeping data about each collision as there is not enough computer space, Narain said.



One of Pangilinan's hardest jobs has been helping to determine which collisions are interesting to the researchers and which to ignore, Narain added.

The analysis would have taken about 1.5 million days if it had run on a single computer, Pangilinan said, adding that the weeks leading up to the publication were "very intense."

Still, neither Narain nor Pangilinan have any intention of stopping now. They are hoping to work with the Large Hadron Collider, located on the Switzerald-France border, which is scheduled to resume operations this fall and one of whose primary purposes will be to isolate the elusive Higgs boson.

"I think I'd like to look for the Higgs," Pangilinan said.

"I personally think there's something beyond the Higgs," Narain, said, adding that "something new has to show up" with energies as high as those at the Large Hardron Collider.

APARTMENT COMPLEX BUS TOURS

OFF-CAMPUS HOUSING INFORMATION DAYS
MARCH 26 + 28 2009

Visit and view these apartment complexes, take a bus tour!

| Route/Complex | Time of Arrival | Departure Time |
|---|---|---|
| NORTHERN COMPLEX ROUTE | | |
| Townhouse | 1:00pm | 1:30pm |
| Brandywine | 1:30pm | 2:00pm |
| Cliffside | 2:10pm | 2:50pm |
| Sugarloaf | 2:55pm | 3:25pm |
| SOUTHERN COMPLEX ROUTE | | |
| Alpine Commons | 1:00pm | 1:30pm |
| Aspen Chase | 1:35pm | 2:10pm |
| Mill Valley | 2:25pm | 2:55pm |
| The Boulders | 3:00pm | 3:30pm |
| Southpoint | 3:30pm | 4:00pm |
| KAMINS COMPEX ROUTE | | |
| Colonial Village | 1:00pm | 1:30pm |
| Presidential | 1:45pm | 2:25pm |
| Crestview | 2:30pm | 3:00pm |
| Mill Hollow | 3:05pm | 3:35pm |
| Lantern Court | 3:50pm | 4:10pm |

RESIDENTIAL AREA BUS STOPS

| Location | Pick Up Time |
|---|---|
| FOR NORTHERN COMPLEX ROUTE | |
| Butterfield | 12:30 pm |
| Orchard Hill | 12:32 pm |
| Sylvan | 12:38 pm |
| GRC | 12:40 pm |
| Franklin DC | 12:45 pm |
| SW Horseshoe | 12:50 pm |
| FOR SOUTHERN COMPLEX ROUTE | |
| GRC | 12:10 pm |
| Franklin DC | 12:14 pm |
| SW Horseshoe | 12:20 pm |
| Butterfield | 12:27 pm |
| Orchard Hill | 12:28 pm |
| Sylvan | 12:30 pm |
| FOR KAMINS COMPLEX ROUTE | |
| SW Horseshoe | 12:10 pm |
| Franklin DC | 12:15 pm |
| Arnold House | 12:20 pm |
| Sylvan | 12:22 pm |
| Orchard Hill | 12:28 pm |
| Butterfield | 12:30 pm |

SATURDAY AFTERNOON
MARCH 28
12:00 - 5:00pm
We'll pick you up in your area.
INTERESTED?
Click on the link at UMOCH.org!
UMassAmherst

Geithner looks to Congress for power

United States Secretary of the Treasury Timothy Geithner will address Congress on Thursday in an effort to obtain the power to seize, regulate and shut down financial institutions.

By Kevin G. Hall
McClatchy Newspapers

WASHINGTON — The Treasury Department unveiled proposed legislation Wednesday that would give it broad powers to shut down big financial institutions, the opening act to overhaul regulation of the nation's troubled financial system and a move that could pave the way for nationalizing banks.

Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner will ask Congress on Thursday to give him powers similar to those that allow the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. to seize smaller banks.

The lack of sufficient seizure powers is one reason that taxpayers have been asked to bail out troubled insurer American International Group, whose financial operations were deemed too big to fail last September without endangering the global financial system.

"The legislation would authorize the U.S. government, in appropriately limited circumstances, to intervene at the appropriate time to avert the systemic risks posed by the potential insolvency of a significant financial firm," a Treasury statement Wednesday said of the legislation, which the House Financial Services Committee will consider on an expedited basis.

While Geithner calls this the power to close troubled institutions, some critics call it preemptive bank nationalization and warn that it might do more harm than good.

"The key problem would be finding adequate legal authority to justify the seizure without stretching regulatory discretion so far that it creates panic at other banks or a massive lawsuit," Douglas Elliott, a researcher at the center-left Brookings Institution, said in a paper published Wednesday.

Geithner's push for broader powers is the opening move in what's expected to be a yearlong drive toward revamping federal regulation of the U.S. financial system. Rather than moving a single broad package to overhaul the system, the work will be done in pieces.

Taking questions Wednesday in New York from members of the Council on Foreign Relations, Geithner shot down the idea that an overhaul should wait until the financial crisis has passed.

"We're going to do whatever it takes to get through the crisis, but we want to get started now" on regulatory changes, he said, promising "prudential" changes that will limit how much borrowed money financial firms can invest, a practice called leveraging. He also hinted at new requirements for banks to have more cash on hand to weather storms.

Some changes will be made through the tax code. President Barack Obama already has proposed taking away the preferred tax status enjoyed by private-equity firms and hedge funds, which invest pools of money for the ultra-wealthy. Private equity and hedge fund managers are compensated through earnings that are taxed at the long-term capital gains rate of 15 percent, instead of the 35 percent rate that applies to the highest earners of ordinary income.

Other changes are likely to be slower and broader, and they could eliminate some government agencies through mergers of bank regulators. There also seems to be widespread support for a single agency -perhaps the Federal Reserve Board- to have the authority to act as a "super-regulator," empowered to act against any threat it sees to the U.S. financial system.

The idea of a system-wide risk regulator addresses a central shortcoming. Today's crisis was brought on partly because many agencies had some regulatory authority over parts of the system but financial firms were able to exploit the gaps in regulation. They then took excessive risks that contaminated the entire financial system.

Many of the regulatory changes that are being urged this year were first suggested in a blueprint that former Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson offered last year. His plan was set aside, however, as it came before a Democratic-led Congress in the last year of the Bush presidency and before the worst of the financial crisis hit.

The fight for piecemeal regulatory changes begins Thursday when Geithner pushes his plan for resolution authority, which would broaden the range of companies that can be taken over.

"This would include bank and thrift holding companies and holding companies that control broker-dealers, insurance companies and futures commission merchants," the Treasury statement said, pointing to big financial companies that now escape the full reach of regulators.

Many of the companies that took outsized risks were investment banks such as Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley, which aren't subject to the same scrutiny as commercial banks. These investment banks have since petitioned to become bank holding companies, making them eligible for taxpayer bailout money. Under Geithner's proposal, they could be subject to seizure by the government just as smaller community banks are now.

That authority also would allow regulators, after seizing banks, to cut compensation to executives that mismanaged their firms and to force investors to take losses.

Student's death sparks debate

By Mara Rose Williams
McClatchy Newspapers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Before University of Kansas student Jason Wren died, reportedly after a night of binge drinking, records describing his violations of dormitory alcohol policies were off-limits to his parents.

After the 19-year-old's death, KU turned over the records.

Jay Wren says before his son's death he begged for a description of his behavior in the dormitory, and was told those records were protected by the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act, or FERPA, which shields student grades, health and behavior information.

The federal law and the way universities interpret it often pit students' right to privacy against what some parents deem as their right to know.

How schools interpret the law differs. For example, Kansas State University tells parents about underage drinking. KU does not.

"There is no national evidence that parental notification makes a difference," said Marlesa Roney, vice provost for student success at KU.

Some students say they want to take responsibility for their lives and learn from their mistakes. Others want their parents to know what's going on.

College Parents of America recently began pushing schools to share more about their underage students with parents.

"The law does leave a great deal of interpretation to colleges and universities," said Jim Boyle, the group's president. "I believe they should use their interpretation to better inform parents about their son or daughter, and not use FERPA as an excuse to withhold information."

Wren, who knew that his son drank alcohol even in high school, said he would have pulled Jason out of KU if he'd known about the repeated alcohol and behavior infractions that led to his son being kicked out of Oliver Hall and barred from even visiting it.

He said that according to the records he recently received, his son was caught with alcohol at least twice in Oliver, put on probation and warned that his residence hall contract was in danger of being terminated. His son also was reprimanded for delays in taking an online alcohol education course and going to a one-on-one counseling session _ a mandatory penalty for violating campus alcohol policies.

"They need to let parents know," said Wren, who lives in Littleton, Colo. "If they had let us know all of this, we could have sat down with him. I would have pulled him out to get him back here where we could keep an eye on him. We would have made him live at home."

Jason, a pre-business major, died March 8 in a KU fraternity house nearly two weeks after being kicked out of his dormitory. He was found dead on his bed at the Sigma Alpha Epsilon house off campus after a night of drinking margaritas, beer and whiskey. Lawrence police have not received autopsy results.

Wren said his son told him he was kicked out of the dormitory after a few cans of beer were found in his room. Jason said he was holding the beer for a friend, his father said.

He said he didn't learn the severity of the violations until he visited KU for his son's memorial service. The dormitory violations were a clear sign that his son had an alcohol problem, he said.

Wren said he had talked to a lawyer to help him sort out the events leading up to his son's death. He has pleaded with the fraternity's local leaders to dry out the fraternity house, which is private and not subject to university policy.

Brandon E. Weghorst, national Sigma Alpha Epsilon spokesman, said Wren's plea "is being seriously considered."

National statistics indicate alcohol will kill thousands of underage drinkers this year. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimates that nearly 5,000 underage deaths each year are caused by excessive alcohol use.

And the most severe drinking problems begin during the teenage years. The National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism reports that Americans who begin drinking before the age of 15 are four times more likely to develop alcohol dependence than those who wait until age 21, and that the onset of alcohol dependence peaks by age 18.

FERPA applies to any educational agency or institution that receives funds administered by the U.S. Education Department, including all public K-12 school districts and nearly all higher education institutions, public or private.

The law does allow institutions to disclose student information to parents in emergencies.

A year after a mentally troubled student shot and killed 32 people and himself at Virginia Tech in April 2007, FERPA changed the definition of an emergency situation from an "extreme situation" to a "significant threat to the health or safety of the student or other individuals."

The law gives universities permission to inform parents, but it doesn't require information be disclosed to anyone except the student, Roney said.

KU chooses not to inform parents unless the student asks the school to do so. Students can sign waivers authorizing the university to release information to their parents.

"Jason had not signed this authorization," Roney said.

KU thinks its policy promotes student independence and responsibility.

K-State has taken a different approach.

Last year K-State changed its policy on student privacy to notify parents of students younger than 21 after a second alcohol or controlled-substance violation.

Eric Swink, registrar at the University of Missouri-Kansas City, said it and the three other University of Missouri campuses would contact parents if a school determined students were a danger to themselves or others, or in medical emergencies. What constitutes danger or an emergency is determined by campus officials.

"FERPA allows us to make contact with the parents as we deem appropriate," Swink said.

In the case of underage drinking, UMKC -a dry campus like KU, K-State and Missouri State University- has an on-campus judicial process that is followed with a mandatory online education program and counseling. The cost and length of the program escalates for the student after the first offense.

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS
FEB. 4TH FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40 Dance House and Select Mashup

THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
BRING YOUR COLLEGE ID FOR COVER DISCOUNT!!!
SKYPLEX IS NOW HIRING
Doors open at 9 to party until 2 a.m.!
413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES
Best of the Best RECIPES
THURSDAY, MARCH 26
FROM 5-9 PM · BERKSHIRE DC
Savor the best dishes of the Visiting College Chef Series

| | |
|---|---|
| University of New Hampshire | Corn Chowder |
| Harvard University | Beet Walnut and Stilton Salad |
| Berkeley | Grilled Wild Pacific Halibut with Fennel |
| Yale University | Roast Turkey (local) |
| Northwestern University | Layered Athenian Beef & Eggplant Bake |
| Western Ontario | Middlesex County Apple Crisp |

RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
www.umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 2009

"FREEDOM OF SPEECH IS OF NO USE TO A MAN WHO HAS NOTHING TO SAY ..." - FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Looking for our Huey Long

Nick Milano

Where is our Huey Long? Though the scope of the economic problems has not hit the level of the Great Depression, to correct what is wrong with the economy requires drastic action. President Barack Obama, what with his advisors tied awfully close to the Wall Street leaders who got us into this mess, seems hesitant to demand any significant change.

Even with the House overwhelmingly signaling a more populist message in passing legislation to tax high paid employees' bonus at firms receiving federal bailout money, this is nothing compared to the extensive measures that should be imposed on the very industry that led us to this frightening situation.

In Huey Long's Share Our Wealth program, he advocated that no one person should be able to accumulate a personal wealth at $5 million.

There were severe income controls and plans to guarantee every family a certain yearly income. Other key provisions of the plan included free college education or vocational training, elderly pensions, increased veterans' benefits, shorter work week and more vacations. Huey Long was the prod that kept President Roosevelt honest when proposing extensive changes to American society. Who can really argue against Social Security as a means to eliminate elderly poverty?

While the social programs that were designed during Roosevelt's presidency are well known, just as important were new regulatory measures. The Securities and Exchange Commission was created to oversee the stock markets, while the Glass-Steagall Act prevented commercial banks from also working as investment banks. The repeal of the Glass-Steagall Act, along with the further elimination of or prevention of regulatory measures, pushed the free market that has resulted in an economic disaster.

The precursor to the Great Depression, the so-called Roaring '20s, was marked by an incredible accumulation of wealth, especially by those at the top of the income bracket. It was comparable to the financial inequality pervasive in the country today.

> Why has the president not acted on the fact that incomes are so out of line and proposed a tax increase on the wealthiest of earners?

In 2005, according to Naomi Klein's The Shock Doctrine, CEOs made 411 times as much as the average American worker. If you think that is the way it has always been throughout American history, you are sorely mistaken. Before the start of Reagan's presidency and his strong stance in favor of a laissez-faire model, CEOs made 43 times as much as the average worker.

President Obama, while taking measures to get the country back to functioning economically, is not advocating any kind of the change or new direction one might expect from listening to his campaign claims. The latest plan, as there have been several indeed, is to buy the troubled assets back from banks with the aid of private investors. It is most important and necessary to clear banks of the bad loans they made, but there are other ways to do it. The Obama administration wants private investors to buy the assets with the backing of government funds. But, as Paul Krugman writes, this kind of plan "would offer a one-way bet: if asset values go up, the investors profit, but if they go down, the investors can walk away from their debt."

Further, Krugman explained that the government will be providing "more than 90 percent of the funds" for this system to work. In the end, that means it will be us taxpayers who end upholding the bag if this goes sour. If it works out, it will only make money for the very same banks that got us in the problem in the first place.

There are several things to take away from all this. Obama is not moving smartly or quickly enough to make substantive changes to the way business is done in the United States banking sector. He has yet to propose any new direction or any real change. He needs an attack from the left; and, since it is early, I have plenty of hope that it will come.

But will it be too late? Why has the president not acted on the fact that incomes are so out of line and proposed a tax increase on the wealthiest of earners? Forget $250,000, what about increasing the rate for those who earn far above a few million dollars? Why not act on the banking sector like it is the massive Bell telephone system and require the massive conglomerates like Citibank and Bank of America to break into smaller, community banks, who coincidentally have been far better off than these banking giants?

If the new Obama plan works, we will end up with no changes to the banking system that got us into the problem in the first place. Where is our Huey Long to encourage real change and a truly new direction?

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

No cure-all for deficit

Nick O'Malley

Well that was fun.

After weeks and weeks of hoopla over the $1,500 undergraduate fee increase and the pitchfork and torch response it got from the student body, it was Governor Deval Patrick who swept in with the magical bail-out money, which has the potential to undo the intended fee hike.

It's funny timing, really. The riotous response that the administration had received from the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) and student groups on campus had just died down when Patrick's plan was announced to the public: $81.6 million is going to be allocated to the University of Massachusetts system in fiscal 2010, with about half of that money going to the Amherst campus.

And there was much rejoicing.

Of course, Chancellor Robert Holub's trying to rain on our pre-assumed, overly-optimistic parade. In the e-mail sent to the campus community, Holub explained that the University would not be able to hop onto the government money train and ride off into the sunset.

"This stimulus money is not a panacea, but it will take the edge off of very difficult financial circumstances," Holub said in his e-mail.

While we want to hope that President Barack Obama's stimulus money can get us out of this economic quagmire, it's still not going to be enough to make the $46 million budget deficit vanish. We're going to see the adverse effects of the deficits during the next few years, whether it's through hiring freezes, wage freezes or just plain freezing because the school might cut back on heating.

The only thing that the Board of Trustees can hope to accomplish in the economic crisis is to make financial chicken salad out of the current economic chicken s. The stimulus money does not allow the Board of Trustees to put out all of the fiscal fires that have started in the past couple years. This money allows the administration to play damage control and prevent large scale cuts and layoffs.

> The stimulus life raft could sink before our very eyes, and before long, we'll be in the same spot we were at the beginning of the month.

There will still be a fee hike, a $400 increase due to inflation, but it's the idea that the administration will be retracting a proposal that caused quite an uproar on campus. Despite the UMass Dartmouth picketing, it our administration's administration that bailed us out.

So what did we get out of the student body's valiant resistance to the fee hike that wasn't? Five graduate students got some really good exercise, there was a rat poster inspired by Holub and I had a discussion section cancelled because my teaching assistant went with everyone else to protest in Dartmouth.

If this outcome showed anything, it's that both sides of the argument really went out of their way for nothing to get accomplished. The administration pushed for the fee increase in full knowledge that stimulus money was coming, especially since it was the main argument against the fee hike. The students – undergrad and graduate – took the trip to Dartmouth to protest something that was reversed less than a month later.

Patrick's decision, however, is not set in stone. The stimulus life raft could sink before our very eyes and before long, we'll be in the same spot we were at the beginning of the month. And if the current economy has shown anything, even the sure things are a crap shoot, just ask the banks.

The chancellor has good reason to present this money with caution. The second that students and faculty think that the $46 million problem has vanished, so will their inhibitions about budget limits. Forget the protests against the increase of fees, we could very well be witnessing the return of the protests to lower fees. We might see it next week.

Despite what some people may think about the power of the stimulus plan, UMass is far from the end of the tunnel. The fee hike may be revoked, but there is far more at stake in the campus budget: the baseball team might go the way of the XFL while trays in the dining commons may disappear as well. And if they do, it will not be quietly. And all the while, there are still complaints over cutbacks in terms of what the school is adding.

You're not getting a pool. Stop asking. We don't even have working dryers.

Luckily for students, the UMass campus has done a good job of insulating itself from the outside world. Really, if you didn't watch the news, there are no real indicators of how bad the economy is.

For now though, the students have 1,100 victories over the administration, and they're going to let people know it. Beyond that, though, the deficit still has the administration by the balls and, stimulus or no stimulus, there are still cuts coming.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Fortunately, there are some things that only Conan O'Brien can take over.

-Ed/Op

Keeping taxes up for all Americans

Every time Republicans insisted during the campaign that Barack Obama was going to have to raise taxes in order to pay for his absurd spending proposals, Obama scoffed.

Alex Perry

Obama would go back to his still baffling campaign promise that he was going to cut taxes for, "95 percent of all working families."

Well here we are in March, and Obama is already violating that promise. He is now going to raise $600 billion in higher energy taxes that he is going to impose through a cap-and-trade system on carbon emissions. What this essentially means is that every single person who drives a car or flips a light switch is going to be hit with higher taxes.

A cap-and-trade system on carbon emissions is being implemented in an attempt to reduce the carbon emissions that are allegedly causing harm to the environment and allegedly contributing to global warming. Basically how the system works is, the government sets a limit on the amount of carbon emissions companies are allowed to produce. As companies adjust to operating under the set limit, the limit shrinks periodically. Under Obama's plan, the goal is to have the emission of greenhouse gases reduced by 80 percent by 2050, when ideally, the goal set for reduced emissions will be reached.

The other half of the cap-and-trade system is the trading portion. The trade portion refers to the fact that companies have to buy permits for each ton of carbon they are emitting. The cost of each of these permits has yet to be set but is going to range from between $13 to $20. If companies are unable to remain under the cap for the given time period, they have to buy more of these permits from other companies that are under the cap in order to compensate. That way, the level of carbon emissions permitted by the government will never be exceeded and there is incentive for companies to go under the cap so they can sell their extra permits to other companies that need them.

> Essentially, Obama was flat out lying when he said he was going to cut taxes for "95 percent" of working Americans.

There are, of course, many problems with this system. The biggest problem is what I alluded to already, the fact that the system is going to lead to higher taxes on nearly every single American.

Energy companies that are being hit with these fees for permits are going to pass the costs along to the consumer. It's already been projected – conservatively estimated at $13 per ton of carbon – that the price of gasoline would go up about 12 cents per gallon and the average electricity bill will rise by about seven percent nationally. And that is the conservative estimation.

Essentially Obama was flat out lying when he said he was going to cut taxes for 95 percent of working Americans because with this system alone he is raising taxes, however indirectly, on 100 percent of working Americans.

Another problem with this system is that it will not accomplish anything at all in terms of benefitting the environment, unless countries around the world like China and India also agree to apply and enforce a cap-and-trade system.

As of the summer 2008, China produced 24 percent of the world's carbon dioxide emissions and India was responsible for eight percent. By the way, both countries' emissions are growing rapidly. For example, China's emissions rose by 8 percent in 2007.

What difference will it make to the world's environment if the U.S. and European Union (EU) are the only two places enforcing carbon emission reductions while China and India are rapidly producing more and more? China and India are unwilling to join with the EU and Obama because they know what will happen if they don't. American companies will be put at yet another disadvantage because of the price being put on them due to this outrageous system. This on top of the fact that American companies already face the highest corporate tax rates in the world will undoubtedly lead to outsourcing.

The last thing that needs to be mentioned is a change Obama has made in the cap-and-trade system that proved successful in the early '90s in reducing sulfur dioxide, a component in acid rain. In that system, as I mentioned earlier, companies were allowed to sell the permits they were not using in order to increase profits. As aforementioned, the incentive for a company to be under the cap is the opportunity to sell the permits for profits.

But under Obama's plan, according to his website, the excess permits under his system will, "require all pollution credits to be auctioned, and proceeds will go to investments in a clean energy future, habitat protections, and rebates and other transition relief for families." By doing this, Obama is essentially eliminating the incentive for companies to be under the cap as they aren't the ones who benefit from selling the extra permits – the government is.

This policy will hurt American workers and employers and will do nothing to solve the world's environmental "problems." But hey, at least it's a change from Bush.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu.

Ed/Op

We don't have all of the answers, but we'll try to sound like it.

www.edopblog.blogspot.com

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Who was at fault for the Don Feder fiasco?

A case of planned martyrdom

S.P. Sullivan

The speech looks a little more sober on paper, and that's unfortunate.

Conservative columnist Don Feder, who cancelled his own speech after countless disruptions from protesters of the event, a condemnation of hate crime legislation and the left's alleged assault on free speech, says his first amendment rights were trampled upon.

The speech that never was can be found online, with the preface from Feder that it was shut down by "a mob of socialists, 'peace activists' and homosexuals," is a treatise on American hate crime laws. Feder argues that, because hate crimes are not statistically rampant, there's no point in legislating against them.

"Your chances of being the victim of a serious hate crime are comparable to being struck twice by lighting and run over by a high-speed train while skate-boarding on a national holiday," Feder said, before the event was curtailed by disruption. I'd point out that statistically, we're also more likely to be struck by lightening than fall victim to a terrorist attack, yet I doubt Feder would draw similar conclusions about the Patriot Act.

The piece seemed logically flawed, and Feder is clearly not the kind of guy you'd bring home to your mom(s), but it hardly delivers the kind of controversy both sides of the debacle seemed to promise.

I can't defend the actions of those who shouted down Don Feder, either, effectively making a martyr out of a man who once called homosexuals "a sorry collection of individuals (connected only by their carnal appetites) caught up in a perverted lifestyle," and changing the event from a lecture on free speech into an issue of free speech.

But what's the point of defending or decrying anything that went on at that event, when everyone involved took part in a very stale narrative that everyone saw coming?

Fliers went up around campus, advertising the event, that read "Hate Crimes (It's Not What You Think)," and quickly counter-fliers for the protest of the event, followed by a discussion on hate crimes, were put up adjacent to the original fliers by a loosely-affiliated group of social justice organizations on campus called the Coalition Against Hate. They read "Hate Crimes (It is What You Think).

Everybody was ready for a face-off, it seems, except for Mr. Feder.

Republican Club president Greg Collins told The Massachusetts Daily Collegian that the event was in direct response to the support behind Jason Vassell, the former UMass student involved in a racially-charged incident on campus who is now facing up to 30 years in prison.

"We brought Don Feder, first and foremost, to challenge the assumptions of Justice for Jason supporters and politically correct liberals on campus that hate crimes are legitimate forms of crimes," he said.

Yet Feder declined to speak about Vassell's case to The Collegian, citing, reasonably enough, that the case was still pending. It seems then that the connection drawn between what Feder had to say about the constitutionality and statistic probability of hate crimes and the particulars of Vassell's case had more to do with sparking controversy than it did with starting a conversation.

And I'm cool with controversy. But ask, and you shall receive.

Nobody illustrated that better than the club itself, which wrote in the same e-mail sent exactly five times to its supporters before the event that "when Leftist students' own self-defeating calls for protest result in free publicity for us, as is the case here, nothing makes us happier."

And nothing hurts the discourse more. It seems that Feder was used, unwittingly, by one group on campus to levy a dig against another. It's also clear that everyone involved is only interested in the First Amendment when it's in their corner.

> If ever there's evidence that you lack a valid argument, it's when you start comparing your detractors to Nazis, reductio ad Hitlerum.

Protesters at the event could be seen holding a sign that read, "Free speech ≠ [does not equal] hate speech." Funny thing is, hate speech is protected under the United States Constitution, and any attempt to limit it hasn't made much ground.

Yet Feder declared himself a victim of free-speech-suppression, because he came to the liberal Valley and some protesters booed him until he couldn't take it anymore, calling them "goddamned Nazis." If ever there's evidence that you lack a valid argument, it's when you start comparing your detractors to Nazis, reductio ad Hitlerum.

After the event, I asked local blogger Tom Devine, who attended, what he thought of the protest. He called it censorship, which I agree is a very, very dangerous thing.

"If anyone is censored, then everyone can be," he said. "In the long run, those who shouted down Don Feder last night hurt more than helped their own cause."

And that's true, too, considering all the negative media attention it brought Feder's "mob of socialists, 'peace activists' and homosexuals." But was it planned martyrdom, letting campus liberals play into the plan to put them on the receiving end of condemnations of censorship?

And the issue raises another, more important question, one that nobody bothered asking in the wake of it all: Who walked away from that event with a changed mind, and what exactly was the point of it all?

A sober, depoliticized discussion of race, gender and the law is a long time coming. But where's the fun in that, if we don't get to pick a side and hurl invective from trenches?

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian columnist. Read him online at blog.masslive.com/umass101.

You can't fight hate with hate

Jon Peterson

On Wednesday, March 11, Don Feder, outspoken conservative and former Boston Herald columnist, came to the University of Massachusetts to give a speech on hate crime legislation. His speech came to an abrupt end 10 minutes after it began when protesters – claiming free speech rights – had interrupted him to the point that he was no longer able to continue.

In doing so, they held two important notions: firstly, that denouncing Feder was in the interest of the public good. Secondly, that there was a right for them to interrupt him and bring his speech to a halt.

This sort of attitude can only make sense if a group feels that individual rights could justly be violated to uphold the rights of others. The thought that protesters at this event were entitled to stop his speech through yelling, booing and hissing, they were taking on actions on the same juvenile level that has come to be expected from these types of people.

> All that was shown at this event was a bunch of snotty children handing out buttons whose sole purpose is to show solidarity in hating others.

It was as if you had rented out the Cape Cod lounge for a birthday party, and as your friends and family were singing you a happy birthday, and suddenly a group of people who disagreed with you about state laws burst in to the room, handed out hate buttons, and started squealing like a dying pig. The protesters whining about hate, acting like children and passing out hate buttons in a scornful manner all but incite hatred in anyone that would walk by that they could give them one to.

In claiming the public good of the community, the protesters claimed that they held the ability to strip people of their rights in order to uphold their own comforts. Such a claim can only be made in a community of cannibals, who kill each other when they think they can gain from the death of a person. Rather, amongst children, who squabble over the right to candy as it falls out of a piñata.

There are enough ways for people to protest such an event, most notably by not going. If no one was interested enough to show up at these events, then there would be no reason for them to be hosted. The fact of the matter is that the Republican Club spent its own money to rent out the Cape Cod lounge, that they organized the event and were courteous enough to invite anyone who was interested to come. Any other means of stopping such speeches from going on are infringements not only on speech, but on the concept that people have rights to spend their money how they want to, for goods or services that they want.

So is this really what it has come to? Are the party lines so wide? That a group of people quietly and respectfully having a talk about policies that they believe to be for the good of all of us must be taunted, ridiculed, screamed at?

The sentiments held by many is that the protesters speaking out, in this case, were righteous because they were opposed to hate. Feder had gone, at most, 10 minutes into his speech, and had made statements about a number of statistics. Nowhere was there some enticement for people to commit hate crimes. What these protesters were protesting against wasn't hate. I read Feder's speech, which was mailed out after he was supposed to have given it, and I can say for sure he didn't call for a single act of violence or discrimination.

Having had the opportunity to mingle amongst the protesters before the event, I first saw their buttons that were being passed out. They had the word "Hate" stamped on them, with a black line slanting down across it. In the spirit of the opposition to unnecessary hatred, I asked an organizer for one to wear. A girl, who was wearing one and standing in a group nearby told the organizer, "Don't give one to him, he doesn't want one," probably noticing me as a member of the Republican Club.

Where was there more idiocy and hypocrisy? Was it in my willingness to show that conservatives agreed that hate was generally good to avoid, or was it in people such as this girl discriminating against minorities, as members of the Republican Club are? The idea that you can even stop "Hate" by committing a hateful act is in itself redundant and idiotic. All that was shown at this event was a bunch of snotty children handing out buttons whose sole purpose was to show solidarity in hating others.

The protesters might as well have gotten rid of the line through their "Hate" buttons. It's like them burning down farms to protest starvation.

The belief that a person has more of a right to seize the effort and work of others is the most contemptible evil. It is these people's feelings that it is their right to seize the property of others as a right, then the Republican Club would be fully just in resisting them.

Jon Peterson is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached a jpeterson@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

EditorialatDailyCollegian.com

PROVIDING A FORUM FOR FREE SPEECH

Dear Editor,

RE: "Feder's hate crime speech cut short by protests;" Sam Butterfield, Mar. 11

In light of the public reaction surrounding Don Feder's speech two weeks ago cut short by protests, the Republican Club (UMRC), who sponsored the event, feels the needs to clarify some assumptions and misconceptions surrounding the incident.

One: Contrary to words written in this newspaper and the opinions of some people at UMass and online, the UMRC did not invite the speaker to "provoke" people, nor did it "want" controversy. Our purpose was to open up dialogue about an issue – directly relevant to the student body and the UMass administration – which is frequently dictated by a politically correct viewpoint on this campus.

When planning our marketing campaign for the speaker, we realized that such a sensitive topic – hate crimes – was naturally controversial. This is why we did not feel the need to take the extra step and be intentionally provocative with our publicity efforts. We did not bait liberals on our flyers to come to the event and disrupt it; we did not cry out "reverse racism" when people asked us why we opposed hate crimes; and we did not demand that protesters stop labeling our club and ourselves as "racists" when they were urging people to disrupt the event.

Two: The protests during Mr. Feder's speech were not "harmless," and it was exclusively because of these protests, and not because of the speaker's supposed "inability" to cope with the protests, that he was forced to end his speech. These demonstrations included hissing, booing, and laughing when Mr. Feder was introduced, turning chairs around at the start of Mr. Feder's speech, constant hissing, booing, and laughing during his speech, distributing anti-hate pins and leaflets before the speech urging people to disrupt the event, interrupting and yelling at Mr. Feder repeatedly during his speech, bringing signs into the venue in violation of the school picketing code, flooding into the venue through the side door after admittance was halted, bringing a rat into the Cape Cod Lounge, attempting to enter the venue through the side window, holding up signs that blocked the view of the speaker, screaming at Mr. Feder and chanting repeatedly, "Don't come back" after he was forced to end his speech. For those who deny that Mr. Feder's right to free speech was infringed upon, ask yourself if you think you would have been able to express your opinion in such an environment.

Three: The UMRC not only believes in free speech for those who disagree with us, but we encourage it as well. This is why Republican Club President Greg Collins personally told one of the protesters that he supported his right to protest the event, and why we encouraged him to hold up signs and distribute literature, as long as the protests occurred outside the Cape Cod Lounge.

Four: The people most hurt by the disruptions were not Don Feder or the Republican Club. Rather, the people most hurt were the many self-described progressive Democrats who told us that they were genuinely interested in Mr. Feder's lecture, but were upset that they did not have the chance to hear him speak.

Let's hope that in the future, all reasonable UMass students and concerned citizens – liberal and conservative alike – can unite against intolerance and stand up for the right to free speech.

Even for those with whom we may disagree.

UMass Republican Club

WITH GAFF, OBAMA BECAME HUMAN

Dear Editor,

President Obama's recent remarks have stirred quite a bit of unnecessary controversy.

Sure, it's insensitive to speak condescendingly of the Special Olympics, and, by implication, Special Olympians, but aren't we all insensitive at times?

I hope that my letter will not be received by your readership as a partisan defense of a partisan President.

I'm simply fed up with the mountains that are consistently made of molehills by our national media.

Shouldn't we be relieved? Many of us were worried at the fact that Mr. Obama presented himself as some sort of redemptive, moral figure.

Isn't it a relief to finally see him on the same plane as we see our friends and families?

The president is not a national moral role model. The president never has been, and the president never will be.

The Queen of England is a national moral role model. We quit that country in 1776, officially.

Some of your readers may be wondering: what's my point?

My point is that, in this country, which we are lucky to inhabit, we can either talk about politics like children, who are easily offended, and argue at length in order to hear themselves speak ... or, we can argue amongst ourselves as rational thinking adults.

The president deserves our continued support. He ought to be forgiven. He ought to be allowed to do his work.

Has he had an affair with his secretary? I think not.

Do let us move on, as a country, together.

(Citizenship is our day job.)

James William Mathews
UMass Student

DRUG POLICIES ARE NOT BLACK AND WHITE

Dear Editor,

RE: "Drug market fuels violence;" Eric Magazu, Mar. 23

Mr. Magazu's column, "Drug market fuels violence," was thoughtful and well written. I agree with his contention that the black market in drugs causes terrible violence around the world. I have two areas of disagreement with him however.

First, laws can be expressions of "values, traditions, and morals." But they are also often the result of fear mongering by politicians, eager to indulge in people's innate desire to hunt scapegoats; and the result of bureaucracies who benefit by endless "wars."

Second, I disagree with his black and white moralism, which views all drug use as "enslavement" and "torment." It can be. People are capable of excess. Most people though, are capable of responsible choices and moderation, in determining the course of their lives.

There is nothing wrong with working against excess in yourself, or even going for abstinence. Nothing wrong with preaching about it to others. The problem comes with using government to enforce your belief on others (and predictably creating a black market).

Legalization is the way to go. Either, Mr. Magazu is successful, and every single person never does anything intoxicating, 365 days a year, making drug laws irrelevant and unnecessary. Or, people continue to use, with moderation, the now violence-free legal drugs, and we don't let the small number of "worst cases," who will insist on being self destructive in any case, become the basis of policy for all. (Not that we shouldn't try to help them in other ways.)

Terry Franklin
Amherst Resident

DO NOT BE AFRAID OF EXCELLENCE

Dear Editor,

I am bemused. The uncertain discussion of federal stimulus and student fees over the past few weeks has led me to one conclusion: as cruel as it may be, we are afraid of excellence. Let me explain.

It was several years ago when I began my studies at New York University. At the time – I am unaware of its current fiscal state – NYU was a school where 60 percent of the student body paid cash for a $45,000 a year education. That's cash. Not loans, grants, scholarships or otherwise. Mommy or daddy pulled out their checkbook or debit card or called their banker for a wire transfer. I was unfortunate not to be one of these individuals, and chose to take out loans, which are now totaling somewhere near a mortgage payment.

Most of us at first glance are likely to look at a school like NYU and be disgusted. I wish that you didn't. When a university becomes financially inaccessible, the demands on its financial aid become strained such that the institution is required to be more scrupulous when choosing how to use its funds. Thusly, financial aid will be awarded based purely on need, as merit would be a requirement met long before an acceptance letter was ever written.

I supported the fee increase proposed by Chancellor Holub; and, politics aside, would encourage him to not refund the original fee. The notion is seemly socialist, I admit, but to place fees on all students in order to increase available financial aid dollars is good university management. It would increase the caliber of student, as well as demand that the wealthier among us pay more to insure an education. If you still disagree with a fee increase – besides those who it directly takes dollars from daddy and mommy's pockets – ask yourself this: would you rather have an excellent education, or a cheap one?

The education you receive at any school from the Ivy's, private or state or even our community colleges differs little. What is different is the person who sits next to you in class. Does that person challenge you? Are they a scholar, or a kid with a backpack? Or even better, are you better for their decision to sit next to you? This is what great schools are made of.

Let us not treat state universities as "safety" schools. We attend a premier institution with world-class faculty. However, I wish to engender a culture where we inspire greatness in the eyes of our peers, not jokes, a student with a pen and calculator, not a ping-pong ball and party cup, where we watch free radicals, not a free throw.

Christopher Dunay
UMass Student

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Last House' remake shocks

BY MORGAN MEAGHER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With his first Hollywood film, director Dennis Iliadis has achieved what is these days a rare feat in the horror genre. "The Last House on the Left" is a suspenseful thriller –violent without being disgusting and with more going on under the surface than most films of its type.

The story is an old one, rooted in Swedish lore: parents exact revenge on the men who raped and tortured their child. Like so many horror movies these days, "The Last House on the Left" is a remake. The film has a long cinematic lineage, dating back to Wes Craven's 1972 film of the same name, which, in turn, was inspired by Ingmar Bergman's "The Virgin Spring."The original "Last House on the Left" is the film that established Craven – the man who would go on to make "A Nightmare on Elm Street," "The Hills Have Eyes" and "Scream" – as one of the godfathers of the modern horror genre. Craven wrote the script in addition to directing the original and he produced the remake.

The heroines of "Last House on the Left" are typical horror movie prey. Mari (Sara Paxton) and Paige (Martha MacIsaac) are sweet, beautiful, young, and innocent – but not too innocent, of course. It is a quest to get high that leads them to their doom, and Paige, the bad influence, is the first to get it.

Mari suffers an unluckier fate, but escapes with her life, returning home to the titular house to find her torturers taking refuge there from the storm. After discovering the identity of the strangers, Mom (Monica Potter) and Dad (Tony Goldwyn) go on a killing spree of their own, hunting down the bad guys one by one.

The villains are some of the most frightening to grace the screen in recent years.

Krug (Garrett Dillahunt) is the leader of a dysfunctional family of criminals. His teenage son (Spencer Treat Clark) is reluctantly along for the ride. To redeem himself for his unintentional role in the crime, he eventually tips off Mari's parents and joins forces with them against his family. Krug's brother Francis (Aaron Paul) and girlfriend Sadie (Riki Lindholme) are far more enthusiastic participants. Krug is the perpetrator of most of the crimes against Mari and Paige, but he is far from being the most sinister of the three.

Sadie is by far the creepiest. Dead behind the eyes and delighting in all the violence, she invades the victims' space like a sexual predator. This is not a film for the squeamish or the faint of heart. People who don't care for cinematic violence will not enjoy this movie. That is not to say that this is a film full of cheap, gory thrills. The violence in "The Last House on the Left" is not at all cartoonish or over the top as in many modern horror movies. It is, however, graphic, chilling and totally brutal.

The graphic aspect here is more from the sound of the action than the sight of it. Visually, the violence is relatively toned down, especially when compared to torture porn like the "Saw" series or "Hostel."

The violence in this movie is made more gut-wrenching by its intimate nature. Much of it is slow and deliberate. Although a gun does factor in the story, most of the weapons wielded by both the villains and the heroes are more personal. Knives, hammers and various blunt objects are popular choices, drawing killer and victim close together.

The act of vengeance also unites the parents. At the beginning of the film their relationship is strained. They seem awkward and uncomfortable around one another when they are left alone, possibly due to the unexplained – but much-mentioned death of their son, Ben – one year before the movie takes place.

The task of getting Mari to a hospital reminds Mr. and Mrs. Collingwood of their common interest, but it is the process of getting revenge that really brings them together. The two hold hands as they stalk their victims and work together to drown the first one, Francis, in the kitchen sink. This act forges a bond between them, and the viewer is left with the sense that this unspeakable experience may have saved their marriage.

Iliadis, with the help of cinematographer Sharone Meir, immerses the story in the perfect atmosphere. The close shot of Mari's face during the rape scene makes it by far the most brutal and uncomfortable to watch of the entire film. The camera work is unusually graceful for a horror movie, and the scenery is alternately idyllic and ominous.

Although the movie is at times predictable (it's a dark and stormy night, the power goes out, the gun is out of bullets), Iliadis builds suspense with tense pacing and long, eerie stretches without any dialogue. Though by no means a masterpiece, it is well crafted and, above all, truly chilling both in its execution and its implications.

There's more going on here than just gratuitous gore. The audience inevitably roots for the Collingwoods as the movie plays out, and afterwards is left to question their own baser instincts.

This is the rare horror movie that stays with the viewer, even after they've left the last house on the left.

Morgan Meagher can be reached at mmeagher@student.umass.edu

See LEFT on page 9

Adapted from Wes Craven's 1972 original, Dennis Iliadis' remake of "The Last House on the Left" never fails with regard to suspense and intimate violence. A family of murderous criminals find themselves no match for one of their victims' vengeful families.

Humility and loss in 'Wendy'

BY KEVIN KOCZWARA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"Wendy and Lucy" is one of many new American movies following in the same vein as many great Italian films like "The Bicycle Thief." The movie does not contain chase sequences or high adrenaline action sequences, nor is it fast paced or filled with catchy dialogue, quick edits or melodramatic drama. It's a film that takes a real life situation and documents it with emotion and eloquence.

"Wendy and Lucy" is a story about one woman in search of a job and a new life. Along for the ride is her best friend Lucy, her dog, who Wendy hopes will be there with her until the end.

Unfortunately, Wendy just can't get to her final destination the way she wants. Society and its constructs bring her back to earth – this world is not perfect, dreams do die and friends are lost. This is life, not a magical carpet ride or a Hollywood film. Thus what happens must happen and the characters must go on with their existences.

Wendy is strapped for cash. Her car is old and beat up, showing signs of wear and tear. It breaks down in the parking lot of a Walgreens one morning in an unnamed Oregon town that, like Wendy, is struggling with jobs and money. The engine won't turn, hissing and moaning as Wendy tries to start it after she is asked to wake up and move her car from the parking lot by an elderly security guard.

The two push the car to the street while it is in neutral and park it. The closest auto shop is closed and Wendy is out of dog food for Lucy. She has to manage her tight budget with miles to go until she reaches Alaska, where we she hopes to get a job and start a new life. An ill-advised attempt at stealing opens up a new set of toils for the beleaguered Wendy. In addition to getting caught, she loses Lucy.

The film moves from there as Wendy searches desperately for her dog. Her car problems will only lead her to new depths of emotional understandings.

The film is minimal in dialogue and lacks zany characters. The film does have an actress and a director who brings what seems to be a boring premise to life and give it emotion. The reason the story works is that

See WENDY on page 9

Michelle Williams portrays a distraught Wendy in Kelly Reichardt's "Wendy and Lucy," a down-to-earth drama recounting a woman's struggle traveling to Alaska with her dog Lucy to find work.

Jonestown Massacre to play Pearl Street

Group returns to stage after multiple-year touring hiatus

BY LEE TAYLOR
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The best rock and roll front men live the roll – in the zone on stage and seizing the moment. The Brian Jonestown Massacre's revolving door of band members alludes to the difficulty of living in the moment with eruptive lead singer Anton Newcombe when they hit the stage at Pearl Street April 3.

The dogged grind on the bar and club scene can bring most independent musicians to burn out ahead of their time, but Newcombe's drug-hazed youth in a broken home forced him to succumb to his calling early in life.

Newcombe, 41, has played ringleader of the Brian Jonestown Massacre circus since the band's conception in 1990. The San Francisco neo-psychedelic rockers carry with them the spirit of the '60s. Newcombe's wardrobe draws him as a leftover hippie from the Summer of Love.

The name of the band evokes memories of the first wave British Invasion, referencing late Rolling Stones guitarist Brian Jones. Newcombe, like Jones, is a multi-instrumentalist who can play over 80 string and percussion instruments.

The Brian Jonestown Massacre's first album, "Spacegirl & Other Favorites," was released in 1993. It contains the song "That Girl Suicide," which could place well alongside Britpop singers Blur or the Stone Roses with it's washed out, reverberating guitars and buzzing bass.

It wasn't until 1997's "Their Satanic Majesties' Second Request" that their sound expanded to include more '60s psychedelic elements. Lush instrumentation with acoustic guitar, sitar, and mellotron pianos shaped the album that proved to be a turning point for the band.

Their current sound is more '60s revivalist, sounding much like the Rolling Stones. Lyrically, at times they're as poetic as Donovan. Other releases, on the other hand, are more grounded in the noise-pop of acts like the Jesus and Mary Chain.

Newcombe's grew prolific in his songwriting, releasing five albums total by the end of 1996. The band signed with large independent label TVT Records, providing Newcombe with the money to build a home recording studio.

That year was a busy one for the Brian Jonestown Massacre. The band released three albums, including the lo-fi country-honk "Thank God for Mental Illness," which was recorded for a meager $17 in a home studio.

Filming for the award winning documentary "DIG!" also began in 1996, following the band's quest to stage a revolution in the music industry with friends and Portland, Ore. based band The Dandy Warhols.

The documentary follows the attempts of the two bands to sign major label recording contracts. The Dandy Warhols eventually signed to Capitol Records, while the Brian Jonestown Massacre, riddled with drug abuse and on-stage fights, remained an independent act.

The Brian Jonestown Massacre return to touring after a four-year break. Frontman Anton Newcombe is known for his volatile persona.

Newcombe's on stage volatility, portrayed in "DIG!," resulted in a band member quitting and an assault charge from an audience member who had provoked the singer. Interest in the band's live show since the release of the documentary is partially in expectation of whether or not there would be a fight between the singer and the crowd or his band mates.

The documentary was released in 2004 as well as "Tepid Peppermint Wonderland: A Retrospective," a greatest hits collection which may be the only BJM album one needs. It contains 38 songs in non-chronological order, shuffling from the borderline-obscure to the beautifully druggy kicks of the "Exile on Main Street"-era Rolling Stones.

The Brian Jonestown Massacre is embarking on their first full U.S. tour in four years with a final performance at the Coachella Festival. Their most recent release is 2008's "Just Like Kicking Jesus" EP. Longtime co-writer and guitarist Matt Hollywood will be rejoining the band on this tour.

Brian Jonestown Massacre and opener The Asteroid #4 will perform at the Pearl Street ballroom Friday April 3rd. Tickets are available in advance at the Northampton Box Office for $17.50 and at the door for $20. The Pearl Street night club is located on 10 Pearl Street in Northampton.

Lee Taylor can be reached at ltaylor@student.umass.edu.

THE BRIAN JONESTOWN MASSACRE

PEARL STREET BALLROOM

APRIL 3, 9 P.M.

Keller back in Noho

After last year's full band set, Williams back to one-man act

BY JESSIE DONOVAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The house lights went down at the Calvin Theater in Northampton on February 22, 2008. Across the stage walked a barefoot Keller Williams, accompanied by the WMDs, featuring Keith Mosley (The String Cheese Incident) on bass, Jeff Sipe on drums and Gibb Droll on guitar. Together, they mesmerized the crowd.

Tonight, Keller Williams will be back in Northampton, returning to his roots and performing solo at Pearl Street. The one man band will be on tour through July with special guest Reid Genauer of Assembly of Dust stopping in for a few shows, including for tonight's show.

Listening to Keller Williams is one experience, but seeing him live is entirely different. He does something that few others do. When he plays solo, he moves from instrument to instrument, looping and layering the sound to build his jams. He uses a looping pedal to achieve a cohesive sound. It is sure to make for an experience unlike any other.

He has been dazzling his audience with a zealous, infectious spirit for nearly 15 years. He invokes a passion in the crowd that electrifies the room. He is a crowd pleaser who never fails to captivate his audience, whether playing with one of his bands (Grateful Grass, WMDs or Grunge Grass to name a few) or playing as a one-man band.

Hearing the phrase "one-man band" tends to evoke an image of an awkward guy with 10 different instruments slung across his body, a kazoo hanging out of his mouth and symbols clashing between his knees as his foot stomps to a cheesy polka tune. For some, these words remind them of Keller Williams, a Fredericksburg, Va. native who has played with the likes of the Allman Brothers Band and former Grateful Dead guitarist Bob Weir. He also frequents the festival scene, including last year's Langerado Music Festival and this May's upcoming Summer Camp Festival.

While some have called him "guitar's mad-scientist," Williams is not just an arrogant musician who only cares about the money and fame. He is a fan of music and he is doing what he loves. He showed this side in an interview he did with Bob Weir for the February/March edition of Relix Magazine. Regarding the Grateful Dead shows he attended he said, "I was always in the back of the arena, stadium or lawn (wherever all the freaks dance)." He is just one of the "freaks."

His song, "Gate Crashers

See KELLER on page 9

'Last House on the Left' retains terror

LEFT from page 8

The Collingwoods look to avenge brutalities committed against their daughter in "The Last House on the Left."

'Wendy and Lucy' exudes emotion, avoids melodrama

WENDY from page 8

all the elements fit into place: story, direction and acting.

Director and co-screen writer Kelly Reichardt ("Old Joy") uses the camera as a tool of story-telling, not as an instrument of emotion. Reichardt keeps her distance for much of the film, keeping the camera from growing invasive until necessary and moving the camera when her characters move, giving the viewer a sense of compassion for Wendy.

This compassion for Wendy is necessary for the film to succeed. The movie's simple plot works with Reichardt's delicate touch, making the characters feel alive, as if they can be touched, and their emotional core is never lost. She knows when to bring the camera close, when to pan, when to hold the camera for a period of time on what may seem like nothing at all but a wall, but each meticulous shot and edit has a purpose and creates the atmosphere.

Along with Reichardt's touch comes Michelle Williams' performance, also delicate and true, never exceeding or leaping off the screen. She simply lives as Wendy and gives her an authentic but true-to-life core. Michelle Williams gives a full-body performance, using her eyes, mouth, face and body language to convey any and all emotions. The film is not a melodrama or even a drama of sorts, it is life. Williams never has to open up to the skies and rant to the heavens or have the great on-screen emotional breakdown that shakes the walls. She does break hearts, however, with the subtle drop of a tear and a look away.

She stays inside the character and finds Wendy's soul. She doesn't need words to express herself, she is acting and that requires, more than anything, the use of body language to convey a message and emotion. It is a performance that has largely gone under the radar to the public, but one that should have been recognized.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kevinkoczwara@dailycollegian.edu.

Wendy loses her dog Lucy on a trek to find work in "Wendy and Lucy." Michelle Williams' performance defines the film.

Williams returns sans WMDs

KELLER from page 8

Suck," is about one of the last Grateful Dead shows at Deer Creek Music Center in Indiana on July 3, 1995, just a little over a month before Jerry Garcia died of a heart attack. He was there when the show was canceled because, as he wrote in the song, "all the kids in the parking lot, they tore that fence down" and caused the Dead to cancel a show for the first time ever due to an unruly crowd.

Williams' current tour has sold out many shows already, including in Greenville, Orlando, Atlanta and Austin. After flying under the radar for years but being recognized by his loyal fan base for his talents, he is drawing in newcomers who are venturing out to see the one-man band in all his glory. If Pearl Street had seats, they would all be empty not because they didn't sell tickets – but because everyone who bought tickets for those seats would surely be dancing up a storm. It's impossible to resist the charm of Keller Williams.

Jessie Donovan can be reached at jcdonova@student.umass.edu.

KELLER WILLIAMS

PEARL STREET BALLROOM

MARCH 26, 9PM

KELLER WILLIAMS

SPHS School of Public Health and Health Sciences
RESEARCH DAY • Thursday - March 26, 2009
UMass Campus Center Auditorium • 9:30AM-5:30PM

PROGRAM
9:30-11AM
Considering Graduate School in Public Health and Health Sciences?
Come join us for a presentation on educational opportunities in public health and health sciences at UMASS.
- What public health and health sciences is all about
- Why UMASS Amherst is a great place to study public health and health sciences
- The admissions requirements and application processes

12:30-3:30PM
Poster Viewing and Judging

2:00PM
Light Refreshments

4-5:00PM
Featured Speaker -
David P. Ropeik B.S.J., M.S.J.
The Risk Response, Why Our Fears Don't Match the Facts
Mr. Ropeik is an Instructor at Harvard University and an international consultant, teacher, and speaker on risk communication to government, business, consumer groups, and educational institutions. He is a former Instructor of risk communication at the Harvard School of Public Health, and was co-director of the school's professional education course The Risk Communication Challenge.

5:00PM
Research Day Award Recipients Announced

ALL events are FREE and open to the campus community

For further information:
Contact the Deans' office at 413-545-2526
or phallster@schoolph.umass.edu

Co-sponsored by
The School of Public Health and Health Sciences
The Rho Chapter, Delta Omega Honorary Public Health Society

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?

KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS

- PRESIDENTIAL APTS
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
- PERRY APTS
- 177 N. PLEASANT ST.
- COLLEGE INN APTS
- LANTERN COURT APTS
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.

55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST

LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

24TH ANNUAL HENRY JACOB MATHEMATICS COMPETITION

APRIL 2, 2009 @ 7:00 p.m. rooms 101 and 103 LGRT

Sponsors: James Francis with Deutsche Bank
Roy Perdue with Solutions by Computer

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| FIRST PRIZE | = $1600 | CASH |
| SECOND PRIZE | = $1000 | CASH |
| THIRD PRIZE | = $600 | CASH |
| FOURTH PRIZE | = $200 | CASH |

- Sign-up in room 162 3-D LGRT by 3 p.m. April 2nd and bring your UMass photo ID to competition.
- Competition is open to all freshman and Sophomore degree students on the Amherst campus.
- Continuing Education students and students who are closely related to member of the Math Stat department are not eligible.

UMass hangs tough

Hartford's late inning threats fail to overcome early blunders

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Pitcher Garrett Butt got his first collegiate victory in his first career start as the Massachusetts baseball team registered 11 hits en route to their second-straight victory of the 2009 season, a 6-4 win over Hartford Wednesday afternoon.

The right-handed sophomore was impressive in his debut, giving up just six hits while facing 22 batters and surrendering just one walk and two earned runs.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 6 |
| Hartford | 4 |

"He did a nice job," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "I was hoping he was going to finish the fifth inning, but he got out of his rhythm a little bit and started forcing it, but I think he pitched well."

Butt appeared in seven games last year, all of them coming in relief, and had previously appeared in relief this season in contests against Arizona, Monmouth and Richmond.

He also recorded five strikeouts for the Minutemen Wednesday before being replaced in the fifth inning with the bases loaded.

After scoring the most runs against an Atlantic 10 opponent in a win Sunday over Richmond (24), it looked as if the Minutemen (6-9) were poised for another blowout victory against the struggling Hawks (1-12).

"It was kind of a strange game," Stone said. "It seemed like we were on the verge of blowing them out, and kind of scratched and clawed for runs."

UMass picked up where they left off Sunday while getting some help from a shaky Hawks defense that surrendered two errors in the first inning and four on the day.

Junior centerfielder Brian Baudinet singled to center field, bringing in sophomore shortstop Matt Gedman from third to give the Minutemen a first inning lead.

The Hawks held the Minutemen scoreless until the top of the fourth inning, when senior designated hitter Sam Boone hit into a double play, as sophomore first baseman Peter Copa scored from third after a leadoff single to give UMass a 2-0 advantage.

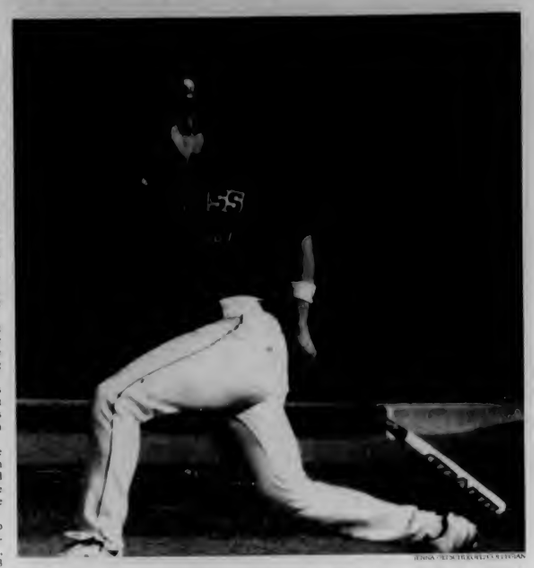
In the top of the fifth inning, the Minutemen again found an offensive rhythm, producing three runs on four hits while leaving two on base.

With the bases loaded in the bottom of the fifth, Mike Amendola was hit by a pitch, putting the Hawks on the board, and then walked Andy Drexel to cut the lead to three.

But redshirt senior Jim Cassidy came in relief and got the out for the Minutemen.

After one run in the sixth inning, sophomore Charlie Benson came in and surrendered an unearned run on a Drexel double to centerfield in the bottom of the seventh cutting UMass' lead to three.

The Minutemen ran into trouble in the bottom of the eighth inning, with senior Mitchell Filenberg coming in for Benson.



With the bases loaded, Filenberg got Cory Bealhm to hit into a double play, and got the final out of the inning on a groundout while giving up one run.

Stone was pleased with his team's effort against the Hawks, but wants others to step up to give his club an even greater chance to win ballgames.

"There are certainly people we know we can count on who can give us a good performance, and we are looking for other people to become more consistent," the coach said.

The Minutemen will travel to New York this weekend for a three-game matchup against Fordham, with Friday's game starting at 3 p.m.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

Garrett Glashoff has played in four of UMass' 15 games this season. The junior is batting .200 with two RBIs and a .273 on base percentage coming off the bench.

Youngsters progressing

ROSENSWAIKE from page 12

advance to the title game.

However, this year's team is much different than last season's. Gone is Kathleen Typadis, possibly the best player in school history, as well as leader Melynda Zwick and last year's leading-scorer Kaytlin McCormick. In fact, their five leading scorers from 2008 are all gone, and the 2009 team has 14 newcomers.

But like Amonte Hiller said, they are young and talented and only going to get better. And what gets UMass the most excited is freshman goalkeeper Katie Florence. Because they know a good stopper in net can keep them in the game against virtually any team in the country.

"Katie is amazing. We play very confidently because we know she can stop anything," senior Holly Drown said of Florence on Tuesday before practice. "She kills us at practice every day when we shoot on her. It's so frustrating."

Florence has played all but one minute in goal all season. She showed how special she can become in a recent three-game span with an 18-save effort in a 13-12 win over Harvard, 17 stops in the upset win over UNH and a solid performance in a 7-4 loss to Yale.

The Minutewomen have a strong young nucleus on offense with sophomores Jackie Lyons (17 goals, seven assists) and Haley Smith (13 goals) and freshmen midfielders Danielle Pelletier, Dayna DeFlieve and Alli Houtis. The talent is there on defense, too, with sophomore Nazy Kerr and freshman Riley Perry.

In total, UMass has 20 underclassmen on the roster. Don't expect the freshman class to have four national championships when they graduate, but Venechanos has this team and program headed in the right direction.

She's got the best coach in the country in her corner.

"She's a great coach and brings a lot of energy to the game. She's a smart and dynamic coach and a true competitor," Amonte Hiller said. "I just think she needs to get the girls to believe in her and her system. I think that's the key."

Eli Rosenswaike is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Next UMass star debatable

BASKETBALL from page 12

3-6 team in the country.

Considering the next game was at Kansas, just about every reporter in the room scoffed at this notion. We would watch on TV waiting for the defending national champion Jayhawks to crush UMass.

Except that never happened. UMass forced Kansas into a seven minute, 30 second stretch with no field goals in the first half to gain a lead, then played a nip-and-tuck game the rest of the way. Lowe missed two free throws when UMass held a 61-60 lead, but Gaffney and the Minutemen forced an errant off-balance layup by Kansas and proved Kellogg prophetic.

In the grand scheme of things the win didn't matter too much, but at the time it was an upset of monumental proportions.

POTENTIAL BREAK-OUT

JEFF – TYRELL LYNCH

It didn't take long for this freshman to find himself thrown right into the starting rotation this year. After UMass took blows with injuries to Luke Bonner and Matt Hill, it was up to Lynch to fill in as the big body down low.

Lynch only started five games and came off the bench for the rest of the year, but in the time he started, the freshman gained valuable experience. The forward/center averaged just 3.6 points and 3.7 rebounds per game. But even coming off the bench, Lynch showed some flashes of his potential. In UMass' loss to Duquesne in the A-10 Tournament, Lynch grabbed 10 rebounds in 14 minutes as well as a team-high nine at La Salle a few weeks earlier.

Often Lynch would appear to try to do too much with the ball instead of using his size (6-foot-9, 230 pounds) as his biggest weapon. With more experience and learning how to stay out of foul trouble, Lynch has the potential to be the next big guy for this UMass team.

SCOTT – ANTHONY GURLEY

The first year back playing after a transfer is usually difficult and Gurley was not immune to its effects. He flashed pieces of the game that got him originally accepted at Wake Forest, but he was too inconsistent and sporadic, too often content to simply sit in the corner behind the 3-point line and shoot instead of attacking the rim.

Whether he is promoted back to starter next year or used as an offensive spark off the bench next year is unknown. One thing I am confident of is that no matter what, Gurley will have a major impact with the Minutemen next year.

Scott Feldman and Jeffrey R. Larnard are Collegian columnists. They can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com.

No. 14 UMass hosts Penn St.

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With a preseason ECAC Defensive Player of the Year in goal for Penn State, the No. 14 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team's offense will be in for a challenge.

UMass hosts Penn State at 12 p.m. on Saturday at Garber Field.

"Anytime you play [the Nittany Lions] it's been a very competitive game, they're very athletic," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

Penn State (3-4, 0-2 ECAC) ended its three-game win streak last weekend with a 5-4 overtime loss to Fairfield. In the game, goalkeeper Drew Adams made 13 saves, while Penn State's top scorers, Jack Forster and Chris Hogan, tallied three goals for the Nittany Lions.

"On attack they are very young, but they are very good," Cannella said. "They have two guys that are freshmen [Matthew Mackrides and Jack Forster that] in the last couple years they've been among the top 10 recruits in the country."

Forster is leading Penn State in points with 21 (12 goals, nine assists), while his older brother, senior Rob Forster, is third on the team with 13 points (10 goals, three assists). The duo is successful on offense, looking to each other for support.

"Rob has been a starter for them for four years, [Jack] was at Penn State last year, blew out his knee in the fall so he redshirted. He is bigger than his brother and stronger and very, very skilled," Cannella added.

Hogan is the team's leading goal scorer (16) and is very strong offensively.

"Hogan is a beast. This guy could probably play football in college at a very high level," Cannella said. "He's very fast, big and strong. He can shoot it from anywhere as well. You've got to be very aware of all three of those guys [the Forster's and Hogan]. But there are other people on that team that can hurt you as well."

The Nittany Lions are strong defensively with experience in the back with defenders John Stuckey and Matt Bernier and Adams in goal. Adams has allowed 56 goals and has a 7.86 goals-against average.

"[Adams] is reason enough to worry and reason enough to try and get ourselves ready the best we can this week," said Cannella.

The Minutemen (4-3, 1-0 ECAC) are coming off an 8-6 win over then-No. 12 Loyola. In the matchup UMass made improvements from its previous game, a 9-8 loss against then-No. 18 Brown on March 14.

UMass cut down on its penalties. Against Brown the Minutemen were called for six penalties totaling four minutes of playing a man down. But against Loyola, UMass was not called for a penalty.

"We cut down in one week. We had six penalties against Brown. That is way too much," said Cannella. "I think our guys knew going into the Loyola game on the road that they really needed to buckle down, throttle down and play good defense without fouling. That goes for our riders as well – the people on the offensive side. So hopefully that can continue. You have to play the game as the refs are calling it."

The last time UMass and Penn State matched up was a 7-5 win for the Minutemen. Overall, UMass leads the series 5-3, going 2-1 in Amherst.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com.

Staying optimistic throughout

LACROSSE from page 12

The heavy underdog UMass squad was able to remain intense throughout, as senior leaders Meg Reddy added a hat trick to goals by freshman Dayna DeFelise and captain Holly Drown, who has now scored in each of the Minutewomen's nine games. Still, the Minutewomen were outshot 39-18 in a recent stretch where they have allowed freshman goalie Katie Florence to see nearly 80 shots in just two games.

Early on, Reddy scored twice approximately 10 minutes into the first half to bring UMass within two, but that's as close as the Minutewomen got, as NU launched into a 12-goal unanswered scoring streak highlighted by a hat trick from NU's Danielle Spencer.

"We have to have a short-term memory right now," Venechanos said of the loss. "We play La Salle in 48 hours, so we're going to learn from this and bring this intensity Friday."

Thankfully for their coaching staff, amnesia seemed rampant for the Minutewomen immediately after the loss, as players appeared loose, one even posing with a NU player for a photo at midfield. This was perhaps one of the eight players on the Wildcat roster who hail from Massachusetts, helping to bring out a sizeable evening crowd of 893, many wearing NU purple.

A fan favorite moment came just before the last minute of the game, when walk-on goalkeeper Leslie Barber shedded her warm-ups and jogged to midfield to replace starter Katie Florence. With the score at 21-5, the table was set for the three-year Andover high school native and former UMass club team goalkeeper to make her collegiate debut. Amidst raucous cheers from the Minutewomen bench, Barber tallied her first NCAA save against the best team in the nation in the final seconds of play.

According to Venechanos, the move meant little as far as a loss of confidence in Florence, who had played every minute of the season for UMass prior to last night's match-up.

"We told her [Florence] she was going to get lots of shots. Some we were hoping more low-angle than others but she stood strong. She continues to have a great season and she needs to take all of these different types of shots and all these types of situations into the A-10 tournament and I'm very confident she will."

Holly Galvin can be reached at hgalvin@student.umass.edu.

NEED AN APARTMENT?

PUFFTON VILLAGE

• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

WRITE FOR SPORTS!!!!

CONTACT ELI ROSENSWAIKE AT

Sports@dailycollegian.com

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Humble, but loud.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 4 | | | 7 | | 8 | | | 1 |
| | 7 | | | | | | 6 | |
| | 2 | 8 | | | | 9 | 4 | |
| | | 7 | | 8 | | 4 | | |
| | 5 | | | | | | 3 | |
| | | 2 | | 5 | | 7 | | |
| | 9 | 6 | | | | 1 | 7 | |
| | 4 | | | | | | 5 | |
| 2 | | | 5 | | 4 | | | 6 |

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY?

Every Wednesday:
LOST UPSTAIRS AT ABC

Thursday March 26:
DOWNSTAIRS 10PM - 1AM
DJ VID KID
SPINNING FUNK, HIP HOP, AND HITS

Sundays:
SUNDAY BRUNCH
10AM - 2PM

Keep updated on ABC events on facebook

29 NORTH PLEASANT ST. AMHERST
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

amherst cinema
Fri Mar 27 - Thu Apr 2

THE CLASS — Fri-Wed 2:15 4:50 7:30 10:00; Thu 1:45 4:15 10:00; + 11:15am Sat & Sun; No 2:15 Sun
WENDY and LUCY — 2:00 4:15 7:00 9:15; + 12:15pm Sat & Sun
twolovers — 2:30 4:45 7:15 9:45; + 11:45am Sat & Sun
KENNETH BRANAGH HENRY V — Sun. Mar. 29 @ 2pm Thu. Apr. 2 @ 7pm
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst — www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Mar 27 - Thu Apr 2

GOMORRAH — 4:30 7:15 10:00; + 1:45 Sat & Sun; + 10:15am 1:45 Wed slumdog millionaire — 4:15 7:00 9:30; + 1:30 Sat & Sun; + 10:00am 1:30 Wed
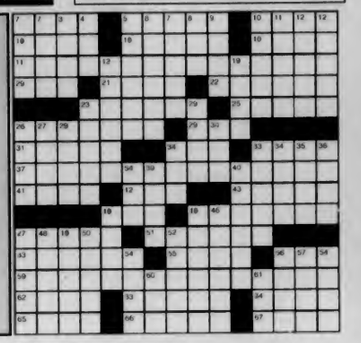
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton — www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584 5848

T Shirts & Sweatshirts in 1-3 Days!
Custom Printed Tees
Student Discounts
sunraise printing
586-7133
sunraiseprinting.com
Hadley, MA 01035



INTERESTED IN GETTING BUSINESS EXPERIENCE?
THE COLLEGIAN IS ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF BUSINESS MANAGER.
COME TO 113 CAMPUS CENTER TO PICK UP AN APPLICATION.

Comics Mail Bag

To thine editor.
By my beard, why dost thou befuddle me? I spend my waking hours thwarting the efforts of Loki and the Ice Trolls with my mighty hammer. Returning to Valhalla, I relax with my Daily Collegian, only to find the previous issue's Sudoku impossible and the comics page repetitive. Ensure your foolishness is not repeated or suffer RAGNAROK!
— Odin

Dear Odin:
I do not take such threats idly. Fear my wrath. Meet me at the clock tower when the moon is nigh, and bring your longsword. And may I recommend the Remington R-9 beard trimmer. It is of superior quality to other beard trimmers in this price range.
— The Comics Ed.

Email your comics and things to: comics@dailycollegian.com

ACROSS
1 Lamb producers
5 ___ Rica
10 Adjutant abbr
14 Place of refuge
15 External
16 Mets' home, once
17 City west of Utica
20 Weather vane direction: abbr
21 ___ Johnson
22 Gather grain into a bundle
23 State positively
25 Furry swimmer
26 More joyful
29 Give a gun to 31 Of largest continent
32 Nice friend
33 Boxer Max
37 City southwest of Omaha
41 This: Sp
42 Dine
43 Strange
44 Towel word
45 Attached lists
47 Sidestep
51 Petrified
53 On the train
55 Fooled vases
56 Purpose
59 City with a driving ambition
62 Changed coloring
63 Hosey item
64 Three decks
65 South African fox
66 Boxed
67 Looked at

DOWN
1 Otherwise
2 Manners
3 Cork's place
4 Farm title
5 Of ___ naturally
6 Eviction
7 Drive
8 It
9 Counterpart of Mars
10 Up to now
11 Pig
12 Do a waiter's job
13 Recipient
18 Gambler's milieu
19 Pronoun
23 Swiftly
24 Manageable
26 Healthy
27 Without any changes
28 Cup + cup
30 Biblical bone
32 Crawling creature
33 Worked with hay
34 Z ___ zebra
35 ___ out a living; got by 36 ___ tight ship; demanded excellence
38 Garland
39 Spacelight agcy
40 Relish tray item
44 Story's star
45 Come
46 Emulated Baryshnikov
47 Baby's word
48 Minds
49 Is overly fond
50 Avant-___
52 Becomes rate
54 Record
56 Not pleasant to look at 57 Redeem
58 City in Oklahoma
60 Madre's sister
61 Bartender's need

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I don't know if God exists, but it would be better for His reputation if He didn't."

— Jules Renard

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Hampshire College is divesting its endowment from Israel, and reinvesting in some goods from my boy Smokey.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
While you were busy checking your NCAA bracket this week, the world turned and left you sad and alone.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You are destined to be tried for your crimes by a jury of your peers, which is unfortunate for a slimy weasel like yourself.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Refuse to go when the light turns green today, and then flip off the people behind you who start honking. Feel more powerful?

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
I'm not one to advocate violence, but when miniature golf is brought into the picture all bets are off.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
If you haven't tried talking to God yet, now would be a good time to start.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
The sounds your mouth makes when you eat peanut butter are utterly irresistible. Use this to your advantage.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Your brain resembles a jellyfish: soft, translucent and poisonous.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Constantly living on the edge will cause you to eventually fall. When that happens, be prepared for a hard landing.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Yelling "Play 'Free Bird!'" loses its humor when you shout it at an actual Lynyrd Skynyrd concert.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
When one day you die and are reincarnated as a dung beetle you'll finally understand the concept of karma.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Don't forget to call and email your legislators and tell them that the Cannabis Reform Act must, uh, be ... like, uh, ummm, something.

WONDERMARK BY DAVID MALKI

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

TIME WELL SPENT BY PATRICK FITZMAURICE

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums
Walk to Campus!
Hurry, Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

ANNOUNCEMENT

You're not alone! Stressed? Panicking? Grieving? Wondering what comes after college? Mental Health Services support groups can help. Call (413) 545-2337

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblowout.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

FOR RENT

Amherst: FREE Wii and entry to win a FREE flat-screen TV! $500 off security! (When you apply before April 15th for lease starting June 1st- Sept. 1st) 2,3,4 BR apts with 2 full baths, AC, dishwasher and FREE HEAT! Bus to UMass. Going Fast! call 253-7377 or go to www.MillValleyApts.com

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

FOR RENT

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

FOUND

Bike near C.C. Call 230-3593 to identify.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 2009

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Learning curve

MAXWELL STARR/COLLEGIAN

Jackie Lyons tries her best to avoid NU defenders in UMass' 22–5 loss Wednesday night at McGuirk Alumni Stadium. On the season Lyons leads the Minutewomen with 17 goals and seven assists.

Minutewomen gain valuable experience against No. 1 NU

BY HOLLY J. GALVIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Facing an undefeated, No.1 ranked defending national champion, the sub-500 Massachusetts women's lacrosse team found victory an unlikely outcome entering yesterday's game. Despite high adrenaline in the first ever women's lacrosse night game at McGuirk Stadium, the Minutewomen fulfilled their own low expectations, in a humbling 22-5 defeat.

| | |
|---|---|
| NU | 22 |
| UMass | 5 |

It didn't take long to silence any pregame murmurs of an upset, as undefeated powerhouse No. 1 Northwestern (10-0) dominated possession by winning nearly 70% of the draw controls. By the end of the first half, the team racked up a 15-2 lead that would prove more than enough to overpower the heavy underdog Minutewomen.

But although UMass (3-6) has compiled an overall record of 1-5 this season versus ranked or previously ranked teams, Venechanos remains steadfast in her scheduling philosophy of translating tough experiences into success when the Minutewomen open A-10 play this weekend.

"Right now, I think our ticket to the NCAA's is the A-10 tournament, so we as a coaching staff make the schedule as hard as we can so that we're ready for anything," Venechanos said. "We're playing against a girl who's six feet [tall], and we're playing against girls who are smaller. We've seen it all"

Yet in this game, where NU senior Hannah Nielson tied the all-time NCAA assist record, the four-time national champion Wildcats ultimately handed UMass its worst beating of the season.

Throughout a dominant Wildcat performance where NU once compiled an unanswered scoring streak of 12, Nielson tallied four assists to stay atop the nation's season category (37), while serving as one of five separate NU players to score three or more goals.

See LACROSSE on page 10

UMass headed in right direction with talent, coach Venechanos

Eli Rosenswaike

Prior to being named the head coach at the University of Massachusetts in 2007, Alexis Venechanos helped lead the Wildcats to national championships in both 2005 and 2006 as an assistant coach.

Northwestern has moved on just fine since her departure. Since then, the No. 1 Wildcats have won two more consecutive titles en route to a 93-3 record over the past four-plus years.

Expecting the third-year UMass coach to replicate that type of success in Amherst is unfair and unrealistic. But the Minutewomen, who fell to the Wildcats, 22-5, on Wednesday night, are making positive strides even though their 3-6 record may not show it.

A 22-5 loss may have you thinking otherwise. But it's not wise to argue with Northwestern coach Kelly Amonte Hiller – who seems to know a thing or two about running a successful women's lacrosse program.

"I think that Alexis has made some great steps with this team," she said. "They have some great athletes, she's doing a great job recruiting and I think it should be exciting for them to start their conference play this weekend."

UMass has lost two-thirds of its nine games this season, but part of that was by-design. Venechanos had her team playing one of the toughest non-conference schedules in the country, something that the Minutewomen will really learn from and use to their benefit when Atlantic 10 play begins on Friday against La Salle.

"Our girls got to see the best competition. We're not going to face a team in the next month or so anywhere near Northwestern," Venechanos said after the game. "We're coming out of this game with some positives: in the second half we finished some of our shots and got possession of the ball. We're going to learn from this and bring intensity on Friday."

Those are the only types of battles that teams playing Northwestern seem to win. The Wildcats are 10-0 and looked primed for a 5-peat, outscoring their opponents 199-58 so far this season.

UMass senior attack Meghan Reddy, who scored a hat trick in the loss, was upbeat along with her teammates following the game, knowing that this game will help them moving forward.

"It was a great experience – this really helps us heading into conference play," she said. "After playing the best team in the nation, you're only going to get better heading into the conference games."

Northwestern was just one of five ranked teams that UMass played to help prepare for conference play. The Minutewomen lost four of those games, but gave strong efforts in a 13-10 win over then- No. 13 Dartmouth on March 4 and a 13-10 loss to then- No. 13 New Hampshire two weeks later.

This is the exact same blueprint Venechanos used in 2008 to improve the program – a season that resulted in UMass' first A-10 championship game appearance since 2003. They also lost four games to ranked teams last year, but that enabled them to beat No. 1 seeded Richmond in a 10-9 overtime thriller to

See ROSENSWAIKE on page 10

MAXWELL STARR/COLLEGIAN

UMass goalkeeper Katie Florence has played every minute but one for the Minutewomen. Florence has 91 saves on 259 shots through nine games this season.

Collegian hands out men's hoops awards

The Massachusetts men's basketball team's season has officially come to a close. It has been a long winding road that was equal parts frustration and fun; both for the team and for two Collegian beat writers.

With the end of the 2008-09 season, Jeffrey R. Larnard and Scott Feldman share their thoughts on some highlights of the season.

MVP

JEFF – TONY GAFFNEY

RYAN JOHNSTON/COLLEGIAN

Senior Tony Gaffney totaled over 100 blocks and 50 steals, acting as UMass' defensive spotlight.

Is there really any question here? Gaffney averaged a double-double (11.5 points and 10.2 rebounds per game), had over 100 blocks and 50 steals and put the team on his back when they needed him most. Does the Memphis game (16 points, 19 rebounds, five blocks) or his near triple-double against Boston College (15 points, 18 rebounds, nine blocks) ring a bell?

He was among the nation's best in blocks (3.8 per game) and rebounds per game and was named the Atlantic 10 Defensive Player of the Year. And let's not forget his leadership as a captain to the team.

SCOTT –TONY GAFFNEY

I feel the same way as Jeff does. There's just no other reasonable argument anyone could make. His stats are impressive: 12 double-doubles, leading the team in blocks, rebounds and steals and being a captain. Even more impressive is the fact that he did it against some of the best teams in the nation.

More than that, Gaffney was the heart and soul of the team. During every game nobody was more competitive or fierce than Gaffney and no one took it more personally when the team lost. He would always shrug off his individual numbers during a loss and seriously believed he should have done more, even if he registered a near triple-double in the game.

UMass may have had a rough season, but that was despite Gaffney's play – not because of it.

Scott Feldman

MOST IMPROVED

JEFF – TONY GAFFNEY

Jeffrey R. Larnard

Again, is there any question? After averaging a meager 3.4 points and 3.8 rebounds per game in his career coming into the year and never recording a double-double, Gaffney nearly tripled his career statistics and recorded 12 double-doubles just this season.

How he wasn't named the A-10 Most Improved Player of the Year is beyond me.

SCOTT – TONY GAFFNEY

Once again Gaffney wins by a landslide. From reserve role player last year, to MVP makes him the runaway candidate for most improved player.

Though Duquesne Aaron Jackson was a deserving candidate for the A-10 Most Improved Player of the Year award, I sincerely believe Gaffney would have won that award in addition to the Atlantic 10 Defensive Player of the Year if the team had done better. But the committee probably just couldn't justify two awards to a player on a team with a losing record.

BIGGEST MOMENT

JEFF – CHRIS LOWE'S LAYUP WITH 0.6 SECONDS AT URI

It is tough to pick the biggest moment, because there was no turning point in the season or game that built any momentum. After big wins, big losses would follow, but if I had to pick one it would be the win against Rhode Island to close out the regular season.

The play by Lowe, and the pick by Matt Glass, was something the Minutemen needed all season. After falling so many times late in games and at the buzzer, UMass needed to have one of those plays to prove it could win down the stretch. Unfortunately for them, it came a little too late in the season. But it was still quite a moment.

SCOTT – UMASS BEATS KANSAS

After starting the season with a 1-6 record, UMass finally bounced back to 2-6 with a win over Holy Cross. After that game Kellogg talked about how he felt his team was the best 2-6 team in the country and how he hoped that after next game they would be the best

See BASKETBALL on page 10

ERIC STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Arguably one of the biggest moments for the Minutemen this season was when senior point guard Chris Lowe converted two free throws to seal a UMass victory against St. Joe's on the road.

the daily collegian

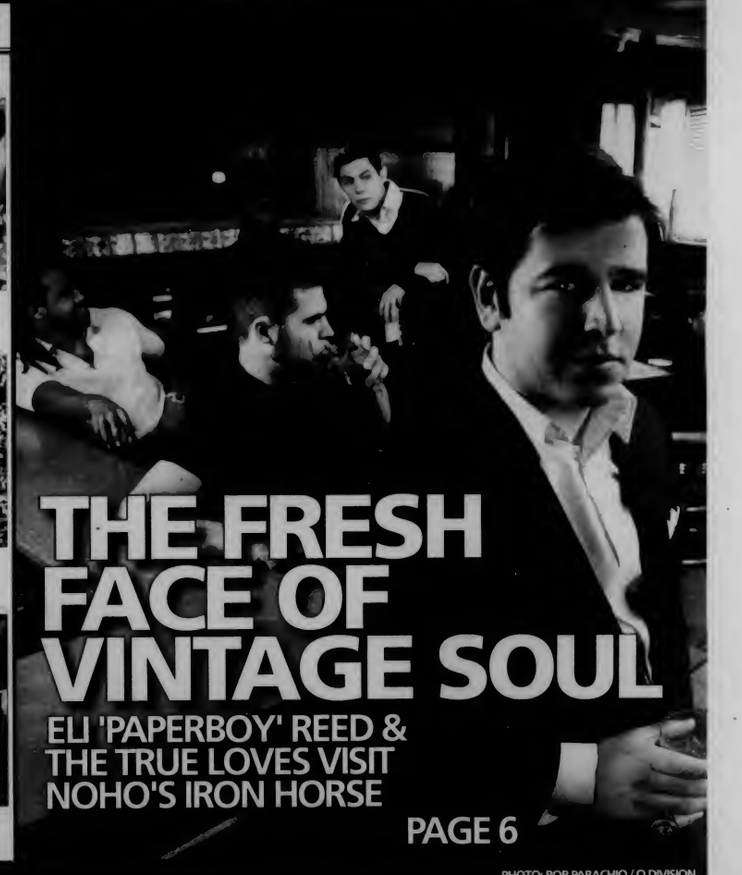
MARCH 27, 2009

inside this issue:

SPORTS

SEE PAGE 13

ARTS&LIVING



SEE PAGE 7

NEWS

SEE PAGE 3

THE FRESH FACE OF VINTAGE SOUL

ELI 'PAPERBOY' REED & THE TRUE LOVES VISIT NOHO'S IRON HORSE

PAGE 6

PHOTO: BOB PARACHIO / Q DIVISION

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIX
ISSUE 38

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Waszczuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Delmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Leigh Greaney
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenswaike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolneirz
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Koczwara
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Turtinen
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Larnard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo P.J. Stanley
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Wellver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. SULLIVAN

COPY EDITOR
MICHELLE FREDETTE

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHAEL SARKES

Seniors to face hiring cuts

By Niina Heikkinen
Collegian Staff

Employers are expected to cut hiring from the Class of 2009 by 22 percent this year, according to the Job Outlook 2009 Spring Update Survey results recently released by the National Association of Colleges and Employers.

College students in the Northeast face the most grim job markets, where projected hiring is expected to plunge 38.9 percent. The job market is nearly as bad in the West; employers are anticipating a 31.9 percent drop in college hiring. The projections come as somewhat of a surprise, as fall 2008 figures suggested that hiring this spring for college graduates would remain consistent with last year, according to the NACE report.

Nationwide, the level of uncertainty among employers about future hiring is even more pronounced than in past years. Approximately 46 percent of employers who participated in the Job Outlook 2009 Spring Update Survey said they felt unsure about their college hiring plans for this year's graduating class. That is a significant increase from last year, when employers expressed a 25 percent level of uncertainty. Meanwhile, the number of companies planning to reduce their hiring of college graduates has nearly doubled to 17 percent of survey respondents since last year.

The effects of hiring cuts are already visible on college campuses as more companies are reducing or even canceling their on-campus recruiting altogether. Within the Five College Consortium, the University of Massachusetts has seen the most dramatic drop in on-campus recruiting, as the public university experienced a 30 percent decrease in the number of companies at its career fair in February, according to Ginger Goldsbury, the associate director for career planning at UMass Career Services. Companies, especially in the financial sector, continue to cancel planned visits to UMass. Goldsbury noted that even before the economic recession began UMass had started to see a drop in on-campus recruitment, in part because more companies were recruiting online.

While UMass provides the most striking example of the effect of slashed college hiring at universities, not all schools in the Five Colleges have been as negatively affected by the change. At Amherst College, the number of full-time job postings has doubled since last year, according to Allyson Moore, the director of the Amherst College Career Center. She said that the administrators who had just seen the data this week were pleasantly surprised by the increase, especially since the college had seen a modest decline in on-campus recruiting. However, Amherst College's case is for the most part an exception.

Director of Career Development at Smith College Stacie Hagenbaugh said that while the number of companies recruiting on campus had not changed significantly, the type of applicants employers were looking for had shifted since last year.

"I'd say we've definitely seen a drop in companies looking for full-time employees, they still come to campus for brand-building and to get résumés," said Hagenbaugh.

Mount Holyoke College has seen a similar shift from hiring full-time staff to more recruitment of unpaid interns, according to Director of Career Services Steve Koppi. He added that companies are still interested in recruiting graduates into their companies.

"When the economy changes later, they will need that talent in the pipeline," said Koppi.

In response to tighter budgets, which are making it more difficult for companies to afford to send recruiters to college campuses, both colleges and companies are coming up with alternative, cheaper ways to connect students with employers. At Smith and Amherst colleges, some employers now leave a drop-box for prospective employees to leave their resumés.

The Internet is also becoming an increasingly popular hiring tool.

Carin Rank, the director of the Career Options Resource Center at Hampshire College, said that because employers don't regularly recruit on its campus, Hampshire College puts added emphasis on online job searching. Hampshire students who register on the list serve receive several daily email updates of new job postings, particularly in more alternative jobs at non-profit organizations and careers in the arts, social justice and scientific research that are not traditionally advertised at career fairs.

"The students' interests are a little different here, the list serve provides jobs that students here are more interested in," said Rank.

Not all college administrators are enthusiastic about the shift toward online recruiting.

"I think online job searching helps you find leads, but it won't serve you as well as talking to people. I think that kind of proactivity is necessary," said Hagenbaugh.

The career services directors interviewed also emphasized that on-campus recruitment was only one part of the job searching process, and what students need to be doing more and more is networking with alumni and employers. With fewer recruiters coming on campus to students, graduates will have to take more initiative to develop and sustain contacts with prospective employers.

"There's nothing like face-to-face contact," said Koppi.

Goldsbury advised students to keep their career options open, as a tightening job market may make finding a first choice job more difficult.

"Apply for absolutely everything that sounds appealing, go to interviews for different jobs ... keep your confidence and keep your spirits up when people keep saying no," she said.

Niina Heikkinen can be reached at nheikkin@student.umass.edu.

Protest results in arrest

By Kat Mauser
Collegian Staff

Passersby walk down Northampton's Main Street. On March 13, protesters marched down Main Street in protest of the city's BID plan.

On March 13, amid a crowd of protesters opposed to the Northampton Business Improvement District (BID), the demonstration took a not-so-peaceful turn as police arrested two individuals on charges of disorderly conduct and assault and battery of an officer.

Commenting on the arrests, community organizer and member of Poverty Is Not a Crime Ira McKinley claims the police used "bully tactics" against the protesters. In an earlier interview about the BID he explained, "You know you're doing the right thing when you get the opposition."

In a statement issued to The Daily Hampshire Gazette, Northampton Police Detective Corey Robinson said, "Initially, they were arrested because they refused to get out of the street, but then one of the protesters bumped into one of our officers and now faces the additional charge.

"The police were looking for an excuse to shut us down because they were nervous about the subject matter we were protesting. People were very playful, dressed colorfully, playing music, dancing around and singing," said Beatriz Bianco, a Hampshire College student and activist who protested at the event.

The protesters were passing out free food and informational cards, but did not have a permit for the event.

"We complied with all their instructions. We weren't blocking the sidewalks, and we didn't prop our signs up against the stairs [of City Hall] after they told us not to," added Bianco.

According to Bianco, the approximately 40 protesters made their way down Main Street singing, dancing and playing drums. Some of the protesters were in the street; Bianco, who uses a wheelchair, was being pushed by a friend, and another friend was walking in front of her.

Bianco added that the police were "pushing us with their bodies [onto the sidewalk]" while they were walking.

She said that after the police urged them to get back on the sidewalk, Bianco was, "literally a foot away," from the first person to be arrested.

"I really have no explanation to justify what the cops did. [The arrested man] did nothing to provoke the arrest and he did nothing to resist it. Three cops slammed him to the ground and he did nothing but try to lift his head up but they kept slamming it back down," said Bianco.

After a short conference on the corner of the street, during which someone called the American Civil Liberties Union, the protesters decided to continue their march.

By that time, most of the protesters were on the street except for Bianco and the friend who was pushing her wheelchair, according to Bianco.

"My friend and I were still on the street because the raised sidewalk is only accessible from one point, so we continued to march in the street. We were as close [to the curb] as we could be," said Bianco.

Then, according to Bianco, two officers got out of their car and told them to move onto the sidewalk.

Bianco said that she attempted to explain the situation to the officers, but the officers ignored her and focused on arresting the friend pushing her wheelchair.

"They ripped my friend's hand off my wheelchair and swung him around to cuff him. I started to roll backwards and I thought it was entirely preposterous they endangered me to arrest him. While they were arresting them, I was addressing them but they ignored me. They didn't even look at me; they separated two human bodies, but they saw it as if they had separated him from a shopping cart or something," said Bianco.

According to Bianco, someone jumped down from the sidewalk to help her, while she continued to address the officer.

After the two arrests were made, Bianco and the rest of the protesters continued with their protest.

Bianco read a performance piece, and the protesters marched back to City Hall in the streets in a "show of solidarity with the people that had been arrested."

When the group arrived back at City Hall there were officers waiting.

The group sat on the steps at this point, and according to Bianco, "The police just sat there watching us. They had vans. They were ready to make mass arrests."

Bianco recalls, "We still had all of our fire, beauty and shine and juice, but we were horrified. All the things [aspects of the BID include a privatized police force] we were protesting, it was exactly as bad as we feared."

Protesters of the BID fear that it will result in gentrification of the downtown area, aiming for a more affluent tourism demographic. The BID includes language reminiscent of a previously tabled panhandling ordinance and many residents fear it will push out the homeless, sacrifice public spaces for private interests, raise downtown rent and increase taxes. The elevated rent may force out some of Northampton's quirky shops, as some shopkeepers may not be able to afford increased rent.

Supporters of the BID state in their literature that these claims are false, and the BID will "make the City a cleaner, brighter, more vibrant place. The end result will improve the experience of all people who come to our Downtown."

The main force behind the BID, the BID Steering Committee, has published statements that express, "The BID is an example of people working together."

The protest was scheduled by the organizers on March 13in anticipation of the March 19 City Council vote. The BID was approved on March 19 with only one dissenting vote.

Kat Mauser can be reached at kmauser@student.umass.edu.

Students attend D.C.'s 'Power Shift'

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

Members of student organizations MassPIRG and MAPS attended Powershift 2009, a global warming and environmental conference in Washington D.C.

From Feb. 27 to March 2, 17 University of Massachusetts students attended Power Shift 2009, a respected national conference that deals with confronting issues of global warming, in Washington, D.C.

The students consisted of members of the Massachusetts Students Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) and Massachusetts Power Shift (MAPS), which describes itself as a non-partisan network of climate change activists.

While at the conference, the students participated in various panels, a designated Lobby Day in which they were trained in how to lobby Congress about issues and listened to keynotes speakers, such as House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and U.S. Rep. Ed Markey, (D-Mass.).

According to MassPIRG member Rebecca Fowler, more than 12,000 people— mostly students, from all 50 states and Puerto Rico—showed up to the event, which was organized by the Energy Action Coalition (EAC) and held at the Washington Convention Center. The initial expectations were for about 10,000 people.

Fowler said that the students attended different panels that discussed ways to expand the environmentalist movement. She attended a panel entitled "Climate Change and the Economy: Making Sense of Their Growing Connection." The panel discussed how helping the environment would also help the economy by creating green jobs, among other things.

But Fowler added that all Power Shift 2009 attendees were particularly excited about making their voices heard.

"The main point of it was the Lobby Day on Monday, when we went to lobby at Congress for some climate change legislation," she said.

Several interest groups also hold their own Lobby Days throughout the year.

Fowler said the EAC put together four demands to put forth to Congress. The group wants legislation forcing carbon emissions to be reduced by 25 to 40 percent in order to get below 1990 levels by 2020 and an 80 to 95 percent decrease by 2050 in order to achieve sub-1990 carbon levels; more clean, renewable energy; an investment in a "green economy" that can create five million green jobs and develop a "Clean Energy Corp" of service, training and job opportunities, and the United States to become a world leader in climate change prevention.

Fowler and about 24 others went to lobby U.S. Rep. John Olver (D-Mass.) and spoke to one of his aides. They told the aide they wanted to invite Olver to a global warming rally, expected to be held on the W.E.B. Du Bois Library lawn on April 18.

Kate MacDonald, a member of MAPS and a UMass freshman, was also at the event in Washington. She said that another important matter of the weekend was pressing for legislation to keep levels of carbon dioxide to 350 parts per million (or ppm), a mark that has already be passed. One ppm is equivalent to 1 milligram of something per liter of water.

MacDonald, an environmental science major, said that this is a level that many world-renowned scientists, like James Hansen, say must be maintained to keep global warming in check.

"[Power Shift] was just a great opportunity to be in the nation's capital, really effecting some serious change ... It was the biggest Lobby Day in the nation's history," she said. "[We want] to send the message that these issues aren't just for hippies. These are very serious issues that are going to be on the forefront of thought in the political arena and we, as people who want something better for our future, really care about."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

CHECK OUT THIS WEEK'S RESEARCH BLOGS AND DIVERSITY BLOGS AT *DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Justice gets knocked out by a slap on the wrist

John C. Bowes received a slap on the wrist from the Eastern Hampshire District Court on Friday, March 14. Bowes and his friend Jonathan Bosse, both white non-UMass students, targeted and attacked former UMass student Jason Vassell last year.

Bowes was convicted of a misdemeanor charge of disorderly conduct and was acquitted of a civil rights violation. The District Attorney's office isn't charging Bosse with any crime or violation. According to a motion to dismiss Vassell's indictment – written by Vassel's lawyers –Bowes and Bosse were previously involved in numerous incidents involving the police,,including at least one incident in which Bowes was charged with a civil rights violation.

Tristan Brosnan

With the outcome of Bowes trial, it's become quite apparent that the District Attorney's office is intent on aggressively prosecuting Vassell while virtually disregarding the prosecution of John Bowes. Not to mention letting Jonathan Bosse off scot-free, without even being charged with a civil rights violation.

A number of witnesses testified in Vassell's pretrial that both John Bowes and Jonathan Bosse verbally accosted Jason with racial slurs. Why couldn't the District Attorney's office get Bowes convicted of a civil rights violation? Is calling Jason the 'N word' repeatedly not enough? Assistant District Attorney Neil Desroches attempted to get Bowes sentenced to attend a diversity sensitivity program, but apparently the DA's office couldn't even win this.

In the face of overwhelming evidence of the racist actions of Bowes and Bosse, it seems the prosecution has one interest – convicting Vassell.

Justice is irrelevant to the DA's office; it seems that the only important thing is a high profile conviction with a long prison sentence. The slap on Bowes' wrist was a slap in the face of Jason Vassell and all proponents of justice.

The consensus among most students and community members is as clear as clean glass: Jason was the victim of a racist hate crime.

The incident at MacKimmie dorm on Feb. 3, 2008, a fairly straightforward. Vassell was the recipient of a barrage of racist verbal assaults and was physically attacked by Bowes and Bosse. These facts have been certified, according to Vassell's lawyers, by numerous witness testimonies in Vassell's pretrial.

> The slap on Bowes' wrist was a slap in the face of Jason Vassell and all proponents of justice.

Nearly everyone I've spoken with has confirmed the obvious: If Vassell goes to trial he'll be acquitted of all or at least most of the charges against him. Why not just let the Massachusetts court systems figure it out then? Can Vassell really afford to trust the same DA's office that failed to convict one of the perpetrators who was blatantly guilty of a civil rights violation?

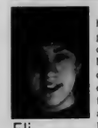
The hypocritical actions of the DA's office and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts are obvious enough to outrage anyone. The Massachusetts court system aims at dutifully serving jugice, but it couldn't be more biased and inconsistent.

If Vassell's case goes to trial he'll have to face tens of thousands of dollars in legal fees – not to mention that another year, if not more, of his life will be taken away. The question keeps resurfacing: Why hasn't Northwestern District Attorney Elizabeth Scheibel dropped the charges against Jason Vassell and saved face?

Vassell's lawyers, David Hoose and Luke Ryan, have pondered the same question. It can be assumed that Hoose and Ryan, based on their professions, are committed to the justice of the court system. Yet even they conclude that the District Attorney's office is inconsistent in their application of justice and are biased against Jason.

"By declining to prosecute one of these men, and bringing inappropriately reduced charges against the other, the District Attorney has engaged in selective prosecution based on the basis of race," write Hoose and Ryan in the motion to dismiss Vassell's indictment.

Evidence released in the motion to dismiss Vassell's indictment has alleged police misconduct, racism and neglecting to note key evidence in their pretrial testimony. One of the most egregious examples was UMPD Lt. Robert Thrasher allegedly calling Vassell a "donkey" and an "asshole," and saying "Now how poor of a black kid he is, I don't know, because I think he is a drug dealer." This theory perpetuated by Lt. Thrasher was based on no evidence. Even it the incident had been a drug deal gone wrong, why was Vassell, the black student, the supposed drug dealer?



The DA's office and the UMPD have had it out against Vassell from the start. They've presumed almost immediately that Vassell is a criminal. Their rhetoric, conduct and actions have all shown them to be guilty of distorting the truth.

Apparently if you're black and the victim of a hate crime you're not innocent until proven guilty, rather guilty from the start. There's no other explanation besides race to explain why the DA's office and the UMPD have criminalized a victim while letting the real perpetrators off the hook.

This miscarriage of justice hasn't gone unnoticed. Justice should serve the victimized and oppressed, not strangle them. Vassell deserves better and so does our community.

Tristan Brosnan is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at tbrosnan@student.umass.edu.

America, you look so beautiful when you smile

Eli Gottlieb

Everyone likes to talk about how bad things are going. The government is bailing out large corporations because they have become "too big to fail" instead of breaking them up, the AIG executives are receiving bonuses from taxpayer money, there is a complete lack of peace in the Middle East (well that one, at least, isn't news) and a $1500 rise in student fees at UMass. Oh, and one of the guys who assaulted Jason Vassell got off with nothing but a misdemeanor conviction.

Ah, but we always forget the good news. For example, Bibi Netanyahu in Israel has explicitly declared that his government will continue peace negotiations. President Obama has already begun work on closing the Guantanamo Bay prison after only two months in office. Those earmarks everyone worries about from the stimulus bill really only make up a small percentage of it. Jerks just may, at some point, go out of fashion.

So actually, let's take a look at our new president. We ought to hold him accountable for what he's done, after all.

On the one hand, it appears that Obama does actually allow former lobbyists to work in his campaign as long as they pinky-swear they won't just represent their lobby's special interest. The Administration nominated a Raytheon lobbyist named William Lynn for deputy secretary of defense. Wow, great job. Let a lobbyist for a defense contractor work on defense procurements and policies. Great idea.

And Obama certainly hasn't lived up to his campaign promise to allow five days of public comment on the White House website before signing a bill into law. I have to ask, however, who could possibly expect him to really do that?

I've seen the Internet, I've seen blogs and I desperately want to avoid a government that actually runs off that sort of thing. If Internet commentators ran the world, NASA's new component of the International Space Station would bear the name "Battleload," the Libertarian Party would own Congress and the government would proceed to round up all Jews for having caused 9/11 through our support of Israel. Internet commentators are bloody lunatics, so I want to give the Obama Administration a pass on this one.

> The Obama stimulus bill has, as a matter of fact, increased the American Opportunity Tax Credit that lets us write off college expenses on our yearly taxes.

The Obama stimulus bill has, as a matter of fact, increased the American Opportunity Tax Credit that lets us write off college expenses on our yearly taxes. It only went up to $2500 rather than the $4000 Obama promised in his campaign, but then again, this version doesn't require community service to get the money. They've also enhanced the Earned-Income Tax Credit for middle-class workers, but again – not as much as promised. Still, Obama's government has banned lobbyist gifts to its employees, outright, and has required all new hires to affirm under oath that their hiring did not come from political affiliation or contributions.

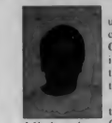
They've created an Office of Urban Affairs and increased support for the National Education Association to finally have the government start helping the majority of Americans who live in cities and metropolitan areas rather than rural areas.

Of particular interest to me, the stimulus bill explicitly allocated $8,trilion, with the possibility of more, towards intercity high-speed passenger rail systems. I've wanted to see high-speed rail take off for a long time now. I can't currently afford a car, and the available bus and train options dwindle as soon as you leave the orbit of a metropolitan hub like New York City or Boston.

Airplanes, of course, go pretty much everywhere. However, they cost so much that I need to either plan the trip far ahead of time or buy a car. A high-speed rail system would do wonderful things for travel, tourism and the job market in this country by increasing people's ability to live where they want to, work where they want to and still travel to other places.

Furthermore, let us not forget that Obama's called a meeting of his top military and international brass to figure out how to get us the hell out of Iraq on his very first day in office. Also, let's not forget that his administration has lifted the federal restrictions on embryonic stem-cell research (I heard the biology majors popping champagne all over campus that day).

They've also added an additional 13 weeks to unemployment insurance for the people who have tragically lost their jobs in this failing economy, while also temporarily revoking all taxes on those benefits.



So while sensationalists, media and Republican commentators continue trying to portray Obama's presidency as one disaster after another, I'd actually say that he's by and large doing what he set out to do.

What more can we ask for?

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

Chipping away at life's stress like Obama

Michael Phillis

Recently, I stood up and, unable to help myself, cursed out my television. Our president was making a presentation and this time I knew I had the right to be angry.

He picked the University of North Carolina to win the NCAA Tournament. This was not OK. I have Louisville.

Some have questioned whether or not Obama has time to make NCAA picks or appear on the Jay Leno show. They apparently forget the generous amount of vacation time Former President George W. Bush enjoyed.

Take it from someone who enjoys arguing the specifics and discussing politics – what Obama is doing right now with his March Madness picks is exactly the distraction we need.

> Take it from someone who enjoys arguing the specifics and discussing politics – what Obama is doing right now with his March Madness picks is exactly the distraction we need.

In stressful times, the occasional distraction is helpful. It's hard to remember everything that is stressing us out these days. Being a junior myself, attempting to do well in my classes while planning my senior year is enough by itself to make most people lose a good portion of their sleep.

There is also everything else that goes beyond our own personal universe of stress and frustration. There is the economy, two wars, bitter parents who now won't be able to retire until they're 80 and just about no job opportunities, making this time anything but carefree.

Yes, in this climate, along with the debates on Capitol Hill, distractions are more needed than ever. By distractions, I don't mean that Britney Spears needs to get married again. No, sports have always been a good answer for some of us.

Last Sunday, games that determined the Sweet 16 provided us with some of the best basketball I've seen in a long time.

Let's be honest, spring break only gives college students a reminder of what a good hangover feels like. Some visit old friends, but few seem to use the break to catch up on sleep or get ahead with work. I've never been able to recharge my batteries during this brief recess we enjoy from our college lives.

The idea, however, lives on for me. Spring break is a distraction and by definition it's an intermission between a stressful first half and a sleepless second half to what seems like a never-ending semester.

I did learn one thing: Find something that allows you to do something selfishly for you. March Madness has been just the thing for me.

For better or worse, I'm going to watch the rest of the games in the tournament because, that's my time – my break from reality. The surprising part is how much this time has helped.

After spacing out with a beer (or a few) in front of the TV, I feel better, can focus longer and am generally able to get more done than if I would have tried to work right through the remainder of the day.

Maybe I'm off here. There are some of you that don't have that much to do. Some of you might not even have to work past midnight. If this is you, please let me know your secret because I'm a long way from figuring out how to make that my life.

During the Great Depression, Franklin Roosevelt would tend bar with his staff in a relaxed casual atmosphere most days. During this casual hour or two, discussing issues of the day wasn't allowed. Everyone abided by FDR's rule (except for his wife) to leave national issues at the door.

These breaks in the grind and stress of the day allowed him and his staff to keep their energy level and productivity high during such a stressful and foreboding time.

For me, basketball is my bartending. For those reading this column, blame your next bit of procrastination on me. We all have far too much to be stressed about, too much to do and way too much causing us worry. Take some time for yourself.

I'll be watching the game.

Michael Phillis is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mphillis@student.umass.edu.

Cure your
I-haven't-had-a-long-enough-break-itis
by purging yourself of your opinions.
Let it all out.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

The price of entertainment

From the beginning, Americans are taught to value the practical ingenuity and wisdom of their forefathers – who can't remember some barmy, loose-lipped old teacher of elementary school, gumming out praise for the invention of peanut butter and the cotton gin? And when you're young, your country is like your father. There is no doubt about reach or brawn. It's the biggest and truest thing you know.

Evan Haddad

But age spoils this relationship, and then you begin questioning those sanctimonious, moll-lycoddling, bewigged grannies who taught you U.S history.

The point is this: The complex lifestyle cleaves to the American identity, like a leech you can't pull off. How many people each month pay the bare minimum just to stave off the bloodhounds of their creditors? How many sail on their Visas and Mastercards like they're magic carpets, and the space between the charge machine is – well, let's just say – a little piece of heaven? Sure, everybody wants luxury; every man wants to be as rich as King Croesus and every woman wants to be a Cleopatra, but life isn't that easy.

But seriously, my observations here in Amherst have led me to do a little recreational prying – research, if you will – into the crypts of consumer statistics. It goes without saying my doubts were confirmed. The numbers, even to my untrained eye, are staggering. They reveal a macabre trend in personal spending, centered largely on T.V, movies and video games. I'm sure a couple of pizzas are involved.

> It seems to live one normal American life these days requires having three others at your disposal – and their names are checking account, savings account and credit.

In short, it appears many Americans are no longer modest and simple, spending what they have. It seems to live one normal American life these days requires having three others at your disposal – and their names are checking account, savings account and credit.

The amount of money dedicated to luxurious living and entertainment in the U.S. continues to rise, while both waist size and job loss balloon to preposterous proportions. Companies are still advertising and people still buying as much as ever. At least, they are in the entertainment business.

The influence of electronic media as a whole steadily deepens its foothold into the precipice of many American lives and reforms our very way of thinking. Living without T.V. now equals not poverty, but ignorance. This is a dangerous assumption; to be without a T.V. is practically to be Amish, or just plain weird.

But most people (including myself) would agree that these assertions about American society are not new or enlightening. Still, the facts give credence to a phenomenon which the founders of mass media entertainment, I'm sure, could not believe.

In 2008, Nielsen Monitor-Plus, a company which reports advertising statistics, revealed that the cost of video game promotions hit a high score, soaring in excess of $823 million dollars. That equates a mound of cash 20 feet tall and 50 feet long – roughly the girth of the nation's top gamers.

CEO of Bioware Ray Muzyka told interviewers from "Computer and Video Games Magazine" that he believes, "it is not a bad thing if people want to play more types of games than they did 20 years ago." Muzyka, in my opinion, wouldn't be worth quoting if his sentiment didn't extend to the entire entertainment industry.

Bioware is a Canadian electronics entertainment company founded in Edmonton, Alta., which has manufactured such sore-thumbers as "Star Wars: Old Republic" and "Sonic Chronicles: the Dark Brotherhood." I would argue that the game titles suggest something a bit foreboding, but that may just be me.

Home entertainment spending in 2008 was affected by the difficult economy, as virtually every other category of consumer goods.

But, analysis of data provided by major production studios nevertheless reveals a resilient industry, with only a small drop of 5.7 percent in sales to 21.7 billion.

On the other hand, Nielsen Monitor-plus reported, spenders blasted a record $488 million through their keyboards for downloads and virtual rentals – an indication that new fronts are developing in the entertainment market to couch the 5.7 percent loss.

But the crème de la crème in this discussion comes from biggest cash-cow of them all: show business. Ticket takers certainly had their hands full last year, taking 1,372,030,570 tickets, which cost a breathtaking $7.18 on average. For those readers who aren't math whizzes, let me spell it out: The industry is still counting the $9,851,179,465 you spent to see "Marley and Me" and "Horton Hears a Who." Just to name a few.

I guess it isn't surprising that Americans blow away so much money each year on ridiculous things like $9 movie tickets and $60 video games.

What's money after all?

This is a nation of hardworking people, and it's impossible to go full steam each day without keeping the water boiling. But what has been said is true: You reap what sow.

Yes, when you're young, your country is like your father: flawless, all-protective, powerful and you can take a lot from it. But when you're a father, the country becomes your son. There's no movie or game you can play beforehand that will show you how to provide for its future.

Evan Haddad is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ehaddad@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY NICOLE TAMMARO

The fresh face of soul

By Brian Wood
Collegian Staff

Eli "Paperboy" Reed stands out in most any crowd with his tailored sharkskin suit, freshly shined leather shoes and classically swooped brylcreamed hair. When he takes the stage with his seven-to-nine piece soul-and-R&B outfit, the True Loves, this effect is only intensified.

ELI 'PAPERBOY' REED & THE TRUE LOVES
IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL
NORTHAMPTON, MA
SUNDAY, MARCH 29
7:30 PM / $15

Reed is, in many ways, an anomaly in today's congested music scene. His sound is firmly rooted in 1960's rhythm and blues, complete with booming vocals and soulful horn arrangements. He releases his singles on vinyl and has a penchant for recording in mono.

This sort of modern musical revival is far from a new phenomenon, but there's something about a white Bostonian in his mid-twenties singing like Sam Cooke that just lends itself towards skepticism.

Luckily, one listen to the blue-eyed soul artist's howls and soul-shattering

See PAPERBOY on page 8

the source
PLANNING YOUR WEEKEND SO YOU DON'T HAVE TO.

CRC BATTLE OF THE BANDS

THE CANNABIS REFORM COALITION IS HOLDING A BATTLE OF THE BANDS TOMORROW, SATURDAY THE 28TH AT THE MERCY HOUSE FROM 6:00 UNTIL 11:00 P.M.

THE BANDS PLAYING WILL INCLUDE, INFINITE BEAVER, SHOKAZOBA, LEGALIZE, GREX, THE BUBONIC SOULS, THE HANDSOME TRUANTS, AND AMATO'S UNNAMED SUPERGROUP. THE MERCY HOUSE EVENT WILL HAVE EVERYTHING FROM FUNKY FREE JAZZ TO CLASSIC HARD ROCK.

THE WINNING BAND WILL RECEIVE THE OPENING SLOT FOR LOCAL MUSIC GROUP, THE PRIMATE FIASCO, AT EXTRAVAGANJA, A MARIJUANA-FREEDOM FESTIVAL MEANT TO RAISE AWARENESS ABOUT THE LEGALIZATION OF MARIJUANA.

VENUE: THE MERCY HOUSE
DOORS: 6:00 PM
PRICE: $5 SUGGESTED DONATION

- ADRIENNE WICKHAM-GOBERT

L.A. band beyond OK

OK Go plays Pearl Street

By Oliver Scott Sneure
Collegian Correspondent

Despite a noted lack of treadmills, the band most known for their YouTube busting video, OK Go, put on an enticing performance at the Pearl Street Nightclub on Wednesday, March 11. The band's edgy geek rock music lent itself well to a live setting.

The last time OK Go came to the Pioneer Valley was as the opening act for Talib Kweli and Ben Folds at the UMass Spring Concert of 2007. This most recent performance featured a slew of new songs that will be on their new album, which is in the works and is tentatively to be released in August of this year.

They started off the night with "Shooting the Moon," off the unreleased album. Opting for a progressive entrance, the group began the song one person at a time, starting with Tim Norwood on a bass drum followed by each member entering the stage, adding in their respective instruments separately. The first half of the night was marked by a few of their more reserved songs such as "Oh Lately It's So Quiet," peppered by their new material which seemed slightly less boisterous and more anthem-like compared to some of their more punk-inspired songs such as "Get Over It," which features repetitive and shouty refrains.

Midway through the night frontman Damian Kulash tried his hand at storytelling, saying that he had been asked by a church group if they could perform one of their songs. He used this as a bridge to introduce the next song: "What To Do," performed with hand bells. "We thought that since our music is being brought into the church, we would bring the church to you!" Damien joked. After this the group played an

See OK GO on page 9

OLIVER SCOTT SNEURE/COLLEGIAN

OK Go performed at the Pearl Street Nightclub on March 11. The show was the band's first in the Pioneer Valley since 2007.

Dumile returns with new moniker, album

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

Daniel Dumile has stayed away from full-lengths for a while, but "Born Like This," a new LP under his new moniker DOOM (named after the Marvel character Doctor Doom, formerly with a preceding MF for "metal face"), was released Tuesday on Lex Records. In the track "That's That," towards the end of the record, DOOM speaks of his absence, asking the listener in an awkward croon "Can it be I stayed away too long? Did you miss these rhymes when I was gone?"

DOOM hardly has to ask. Considering the meager spread of material since Danger Doom's "The Mouse and the Mask," DOOM's 2005 Danger Mouse collaboration, it wouldn't be surprising to find fans thirsting for more. He's released one track on Stones Throw Records' 2006 "Chrome Children" compilation, "Monkey Suite," as well as "Mash's Revenge," from Stones Throw's "B-Ball Zombie War."

DOOM has also been busy with Ghostface Killah, producing tracks for his records "Fishscale" and "More Fish," both released in 2006, as well as collaborating with him on potential full-length "Swift & Changeable," from which one track

DOOM
BORN LIKE THIS'
LEX RECORDS
8.5

"Angels," is confirmed and recorded.

It's also not surprising to find Dumile releasing music under a new name - but don't worry, he's still got the mask on. As a singular being, DOOM has been known as Viktor Vaughn, King Geedorah, the Supervillain (in his Madvillain collaboration with Madlib) and Zev Love X in his first group KMD.

While the name has changed, we still find DOOM in his element producing his own tracks, sampling delicately and reigning over MC's rhyming outside of the mainstream. While he produces many of his own tracks, he also enlists guest producers Jake One, Madlib and the late J Dilla, as well as working in several guest verses including those by Raekwon, Ghostface Killah as Tony Starks, Kurious and Shig.

The album's introduction opens with a chorus of ecstatic "thank you"s over DOOM's own funky "Coca Leaf" beat from his "Special Herbs" series before a bit of ominous boasting. Quickly we're thrown into "Gazzillion

See DOOM on page 9

MORE ARTS ONLINE DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

555 deal
Domino's Pizza
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
OPEN LATE NIGHT TILL 4 AM!

Monsters, aliens, ghosts highlight movie releases

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Staff

Two self-explanatorily named movies with select audiences hit the screen this week in what should prove to be a relatively lackluster weekend at the movies.

Monsters vs. Aliens

This weekend marks the release of yet another star-studded animated feature, bluntly named "Monsters vs. Aliens." The story follows earthly monsters that are called upon to combat aliens that plan to destroy the planet. The children's film presents voices from big names, including Reese Witherspoon, Seth Rogan, Kiefer Sutherland, Renee Zellweger, Paul Rudd and even Stephen Colbert. There are also a few other names recognizable from popular television shows such as Hugh Laurie ("House"), Amy Poehler ("Saturday Night Live") and Rainn Wilson and John Krasinski from "The Office."

Rob Letterman and Conrad Vernon have teamed up to co-direct the production. Both Letterman and Vernon have had success in the animated film business to date. Letterman was in charge of the similarly highly marketed, mildly successful "Shark Tale," with Vernon credited for directing "Shrek 2." He has also been involved with films such as "Bee Movie," "Madagascar," "Shrek" and "Shrek the Third."

These Pixar-inspired computer-generated cartoon movies are really hard to read. There have been grand successes such as the "Shrek" series, and terrible failures like "Delgo." While this genre or particular film may not light up the eyes of students,

See MOVIES on page 9

Paperboy visits NoHo

COURTESY BOB FRASCINO

Eli "Paperboy" Reed & the True Loves will perform this Sunday at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton. Reed is renowned for his fiery stage presence.

PAPERBOY from page 6

shouts is enough to alleviate any suspicions that Reed is part of some elaborate song-and-dance dress-up routine. Reed is no mere imitator; rather he is an artist performing music that makes him – and his audiences – feel good. And he's doing so with an alarming sense of authenticity.

Always a musical deviant, the fresh-faced Jewish boy from Brookline, Mass., started gravitating towards rhythm and blues at the youngest of ages. He spent his early childhood immersing himself in his music-journalist father's record collection, favoring the warm crackle of vinyl and the chops of Wilson Pickett and Ray Charles to the mainstream grunge and hip-hop of the early 90s.

By the age of 16, Reed was already hard at work perfecting his craft, spending his days playing guitar and harmonica in Boston's Harvard Square for donations.

Following high school, Reed migrated south to the birthplace of the Delta blues, Clarksdale, Miss. During his time in Clarksdale he frequented the local clubs, both as a performer and a pupil. Still in his teens, Reed was already making a name for himself in an area where scrutiny is in no short supply.

As highly influential as the move was, it was ultimately short-lived. Reed moved north to Chicago, Ill., at the request of his parents, only nine months after arriving in Mississippi.

Once in Chicago he quickly found a confidant in 60s soul-singer-turned-ministry-worker Mitty Collier. Shortly after meeting him, Collier offered Reed the position of Minister of Music at her church. Playing the organ in the shoe-tapping evangelical church helped infuse the spirit of traditional gospel music into Reed's already-cultured blues background.

After a year at the ministry and studying at the University of Chicago, Reed finally returned to Massachusetts. Fresh from his immersion into traditional gospel and blues, he was ready to pursue his own musical career.

Back home, Reed quickly worked to assemble a backing band – the True Loves – while practicing in the basement of a three-bedroom duplex in Allston, Mass. During this time he self-released his first record, "Sings 'Walkin' and Talkin' (For My Baby)' and Other Smash Hits," a collection of original and covered material recorded in – you guessed it – mono. A string of local performances in the Boston area helped build a substantial following, fueled by word of mouth and Reed's fiery stage presence. As the local shows grew in size, the band began hitting the road, touring extenstvely across the country.

In the spring of 2008, Eli "Paperboy" Reed & the True Loves issued their second full-length, "Roll with You," on Boston-based Q Division Records. The album is full of Reed's mixture of R&B bravado and soulful crooning. The True Loves provide the perfect accompaniment, brimming with energy throughout the album's horn-driven numbers. The album, matched with incessant touring and the group's enthusiastic live show, has brought the band considerable attention in recent months.

Reed has come along ways from playing street corners and Allston basements. Performances at SXSW and Lollapalooza have been accompanied by features on NPR and in Rolling Stone among other top media outlets. Sunday's performance at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton marks the last stop on his current 18-day U.S.-tour. A month-long trek across Europe is scheduled to start in mid-April and a new album is slated for release in the fall.

With every stop and story Reed's true merits seem to grow exponentially. Imitation may be the most sincere form of flattery, but for "Paperboy" & the True Loves, innovation is proving to be the most soulful.

Eli "Paperboy" Reed & the True Loves perform Sunday, March 29, with opening act Jenny Dee and the Deelinquents at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton. Tickets are $12.50 in advance and $15 at the door. Doors open at 7:30 p.m. The Iron Horse Music Hall is located at 20 Center St.

Brian Wood can be reached at bwood@dailycollegian.com.

Pearl Street A-OK

OK GO from page 7

acoustic version of one of their new songs, "Last Leaf." The two renditions broke up any monotony that may have developed and segued into the last set of songs that crescendoed to the last encore.

The second half of the band's performance brought with it heightened energy, confetti and even tambourines thrown into the crowd, which was reminiscent of its performance from the spring concert of 2007. OK Go finished the night with "Do What You Want" which solicited enough response from the audience to bring the band back on for a three-song encore.

The band's musical style is difficult to pin down as it seems to be inspired by a very comprehensive array of influences. In an exclusive interview after the show, Kulash explained a little about his writing process and some artists who inspire his lyrics.

"The lyricists I like come from two very different schools and it's very hard to mix them," said Kulash. "One is simple and direct and articulate – Elvis Costello is a good example – and the other is sonic and aesthetic, so The Pixies for example... I try very hard to write things that are simple and straightforward. However, it's very hard to make things that are simple and straightforward sound musical, because if you say exactly what you mean it winds up sounding pathetic most of the time. It takes me way too long to write lyrics and frankly it's not all that fun of a process for me – but I usually wind up with something I'm pretty happy with."

An audio recording of the aforementioned interview with Damien Kulash will be available on Dailycollegian.com later this week.

Oliver Scott Snure can be reached at ssnure@student.umass.edu.

DOOM delivers disc

DOOM from page 7

Ear," which features beats from unreleased J Dilla tracks "Dig It" and "Phantom of the Synths" as well as Giorgio Moroder and Brenton Wood samples. The second half of the track falls into a sultry groove, something one might find playing in a dusty, desert overworld in an 8-bit video game. The iTunes version of "Born Like This" features a remix of the track by Thom Yorke of Radiohead.

The next track, the minute-and-a-half "Hallskin," was released on DOOM's Myspace page back in February as well as on a five-track promo EP. The rapper flows from beginning to end, rhyming multiple syllables at a time, crafting intricate lingual phrases while warning of false braggers: "Don't believe the hyperbole – it's like a murder spree, get sniped verbally."

"Yessir!" follows, featuring Raekwon on the verse over a gloomy beat, eventually making way for the light and airy "Absolutely," produced by Stones Throw's resident beat guru Madlib. "Rap Ambush" opens with what seems like a sample of a police officer reporting facts from a stake-out. At times, as made evident on previous releases, it's hard to imagine all the syllables spilling from behind DOOM's metal exterior, let alone how he came up with them in the first place. He tears up a few seconds towards the beginning of the track: "Same guys, same disguise, sick arm eyes stare at thick dame thighs."

The biggest victories for DOOM on "Born Like This" are clearly the re-working of J Dilla's "Lightworks" and his collaboration with Ghostface on "Angelz." "Lightworks," DOOM's own version of the cut from Dilla's already-classic "Donuts" record, comes off bubbling as if steaming from a cauldron of festering hip hop parts, save the bright and cheery chorus complete with an enthusiastic woman piping in "the name of the game is the Lightworks," sampled from Raymond Scott's song of the same name. "Angelz" features Ghostface in character as the hustling Tony Starks spitting lines full of crime references over weeping strings matched by a blaring brass section.

This is not to devalue the rest of the tracks on the album, for there are highlights not to be ignored. While "Hatty Boyz" features some politically incorrect samples, it does contain what may be the best few consecutive lines (and references) on the record: "He work harder than a steam engine like John Henry, turn dirt to dollars like Don Henley, ugly and still get hollas like Ron Jeremy."

"Cellz" is built around a Charles Bukowski reading of "Dinosaurus, We" from the film "Charles Bukowski: Born into This," beefed up by doom-laden strings and heavy-handed beats. Bukowski warns of a bleak, apocalyptic future: "As political landscapes dissolve, as the oily fish spit out their oily prey, we are born like this into this. Into hospitals which are so expensive that it's cheaper to die. Into lawyers that charge so much it's cheaper to plead guilty."

The previously mentioned apology for absence finally surfaces a few tracks prior to the end of the album during "That's That," another track built around a sad string (in this case a downtrodden fiddle) and a heavy beat. Notably, De La Soul's Prince Paul and Posdnous make strange cameos throughout the album, as Filthy Pablo and P-Pain, respectively. Posdnous' P-Pain pokes fun at the current auto-tune trend, namely T-Pain, ululating processed vocal phrases in "Supervillainz," which features a verse from Atmosphere's Slug.

The album ends as it starts, with the chorus of "thank you"s appearing as a track in itself, titled "Thank Yah." While DOOM thanks his listener multiple times, it's really the listener who should be paying tribute to the rapper, especially in this age of pirated music and file sharing where a meager percentage of people will actually pay for even a tried and true artist's work. While not an absolute masterpiece, "Born Like This" proves that DOOM is far from finished, providing 40 minutes of solid material to chew over until the next chapter in DOOM's comic book of a persona.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

Box office snoozers

MOVIES from page 8

it certainly has won over early reviewers. Boston Globe movie critic Ty Burr says, "['Monsters vs. Aliens'] is a perfectly acceptable family movie."

The Haunting in Connecticut

It's just about that time again for a few stereotypical horror movies to be released. "The Last House on the Left" was released two weeks ago and has already been outgrossed by a Nicholas Cage movie in one weekend. Things aren't looking good for this week's other release, "The Haunting in Connecticut." The film is based on the similarly named documentary featured on the Discovery Channel about a couple who lived in what was previously a funeral home that they claim was haunted.

Peter Cornwell directs the ghost thriller in what should prove to be the first recognizable film with his name attached to it. The cast, as has become a custom in the horror genre, features no well known names and is headlined by Virginia Madsen ("The Number 23," "Firewall") and Kyle Gallner as Sara and Matt Campbell, respectively.

Critics hate it. Roger Ebert doubts that the film's claim to be "the true story" is even considerably accurate based on the material shown. He said that the story was "more likely... 'loosely inspired by' a story." Upon doing research, he found that the featured couple "couldn't get their stories straight."

Considering what other critics have said in accord with Ebert, you'd be better suited looking for a "genuine true story" about the horrors of paranormal encounters on the Sci-Fi Channel than wasting your precious money at theaters this weekend.

Justin Gagnon can be reached at jegagnon@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY MOVIE COMPANY

"The Haunting In Connecticut" is the latest stereotype-ridden horror movie to be released.

STUDENT DISCOUNT!
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
A Course for Everyone
cherryhillgolf.org
NOW OPEN
Best 9 Hole Course In Western Mass
Just Minutes from UMASS on Rt. 63
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
Tele: 413-259-3138
Walk on anytime!
No Tee Times Necessary!
Fax: 413-259-2407

UM aims to regain A-10 title

By Adam McGillen
Collegian Staff

On Saturday morning, the Massachusetts rowing team will take on Rhode Island, Connecticut and New Hampshire for the Yankee Cup in Kingston, R.I.

The Minutewomen spent over a decade atop the Atlantic 10 Conference, winning 12 straight titles before last season, when Rhode Island took the championship away in Camden, N.J. The streak of UMass titles was the longest of any sport in A-10 history.

Rowing in the Connecticut River over Spring Break, the varsity crews covered 30 kilometers a day, including 15 kilometers per day in smaller boats to prepare for another run at an A-10 Championship.

Entering his 15th season as rowing coach, Jim Dietz expressed his confidence and excitement going into the Yankee Cup. It's tough to get an accurate idea of what the team is capable of, he said, because the waters of the Connecticut River are always moving this time of the year.

With preseason preparations ending, Dietz and the team will be able to better judge where they stand in the conference by measuring the distance between themselves and the other boats when the first official race ends.

The team has made marked improvements in the first two boats over where the team was this time last year, Dietz said, thanks in large part to first-year rowers.

A young team last year, the roster remains heavy with underclassmen. Seven seniors, seven juniors, 21 sophomores and 18 freshmen comprise the roster of 53 Minutewomen.

Dietz expects some of his strongest rowers to be freshman, looking to Julia Richter and Amanda Doolin to have an immediate impact in their first season.

Richter will row in the first boat, joining the team after coming to UMass from Woltersdorf, Germany.

Doolin has already set herself apart, earning the best time on the 2-kilometer run that all incoming freshmen complete to test their speed. Dietz said the team has kept track of freshman times for the last 14 years and Doolin topped every rower in that period with the fastest-time ever. Doolin joins Richter in the first boat.

"Physically, I think we've got to be much stronger than we were last year," Dietz said. "It's exciting when it starts getting into race time."

Opening the season competing against Rhode Island adds to the excitement in the boats. Rhode Island is a conference nemesis according to Dietz, who led UMass through the entirety of its 12-year streak of Atlantic 10 championships – ended last year by the Rams.

Unfamiliar with finishing second, the Minutewomen rowers may be motivated by losing the throne last year.

"I think the girls are hungry for it this year," Dietz said. "You lose, and I think you want it more."

Adam McGillen can be reached at amcgille@student.umass.edu.

New WORLD Theater
FINE ARTS CENTER
30th Anniversary 1979-2009
"Best of 2050"

The Best of 2050!
Thu. & Fri., April 2 & 3
8 pm, Bowker Auditorium
Ameriville by Universes
Thu. & Fri., April 30 & May 1
8 pm, Bowker Auditorium

TICKETS, $15-General Public; $8-Seniors/Low Income;
$5-Students (with I.D.) Call FAC Box Office for tickets 413-545-2511
For info about shows call NWT at 413-545-1972
www.newworldtheater.org

UMass sans Ploch for rest of season

ODU, Richmond may have edge

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Coming off two difficult losses last week, the Massachusetts tennis team faces its most demanding challenge of the season when it takes on Old Dominion and Richmond this weekend without its top player.

Magdalena Ploch, who has had an impressive rookie campaign, rising as a freshman to play both No. 1 singles and doubles, has been ruled out to play the remainder of the season for medical reasons.

UMass coach Judy Dixon spoke on the significance of losing Ploch.

"Two days before our Florida trip, we learned that we no longer had the services of Magdalena Ploch for the rest of the season because she is not medically cleared to play," Dixon said. "It's been really hard on us missing our number-one singles player and number-one doubles player."

The loss of Ploch comes at an inopportune time as the Minutewomen will begin a tough stretch of matches starting this weekend, when they face two strong opponents. Yet Dixon feels the rest of team will rise to the challenge.

"Losing Ploch has made a difference in our results for sure, but what it hasn't done is make a difference in our fight, sprit, intensity and work ethic," Dixon said.

On Friday, UMass will be in Norfolk, Va., to face Old Dominion.

After falling in the semifinals of the Colonial Athletic Association last year, the Lady Monarchs have played well this season in a competitive conference. Old Dominion is among two other CAA teams included in the nation's top 75 programs in the latest Intercollegiate Tennis Association national rankings.

"Old Dominion is ranked 55th in the country and is undoubtedly the best team we will play all year," Dixon said.

On Saturday, fewer than 24 hours later, the Minutewomen will take on Atlantic 10 conference foe Richmond.

Dixon considers Richmond to be the favorite to win the conference this season and thus far, the Spiders have certainly played up to expectations, posting a 12-4 record.

On Wednesday, both Old Dominion and Richmond squared off against one another as the Lady Monarchs hosted the match at the Folkes-Stevens Tennis Center.

Old Dominion jumped out to an early 1-0 lead after claiming two of three matches to secure the doubles point. In singles play, the teams split three matches apiece, giving the Lady Monarchs the 4-3 victory.

With the win, Old Dominion improved their record to a stout 16-4 on the season.

The last time UMass and Richmond met was in the third-place match of the A-10 Championships last season.

The Spiders took two of three doubles matches and won the first three singles matches to claim the 4-0 victory and the third-place finish in the conference. With the loss, the Minutewomen settled for fourth place in the A-10 for the second season in a row after entering the tournament ranked No. 1 because of an undefeated conference regular season record.

As for Old Dominion, this will be the first time in nearly two years that these teams will match up. The last time they met, the Lady Monarchs handed the Minutewomen a 6-1 loss by taking two of three doubles and five of six singles matches.

Dixon realizes her team is in for a test this weekend but also knows that things won't get much easier on the horizon.

"We are definitely considered to be the underdogs in both of these matches," Dixon said. "After these two, we have Boston College coming Wednesday so these are the three toughest matches we'll have all year, and they are going to be back-to-back-to-back, all without Ploch."

However, confidence is something the Minutewomen won't be without the rest of the season.

"This team hasn't backed down from the challenge and they won't back down now," Dixon said. "I'm proud of how they've rallied to do the best they can do and they know that this is really about them playing up to their potential, which is what I'm hoping for this weekend."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Hard part over, but A-10 no cupcake

La Salle, St. Joe's newest challenges

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

For the last two months, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has been preparing for this weekend. The players will get to see how effective their preparation really is starting on Friday.

The Minutewomen (3-6) hit the road to Philadelphia to begin their Atlantic 10 Conference schedule. First stop is at La Salle (3-4) on Friday, then a trip to Saint Joseph's (4-5) on Sunday.

Throughout the season, UMass coach Alexis Venechanos has scheduled her team against some of the toughest opponents in the nation. The team has faced five teams ranked in the Top 15 in the country so far. While the Minutewomen are only 1-4 in those games, the experience is valuable regardless of results.

"We've seen so many different styles of teams at different points in the season," Venechanos said. "From the Patriot League to the Ivy League to obviously Northwestern I think all those styles have prepared us for anything that La Salle brings [on Friday]."

On Wednesday the Minutewomen endured a 22-5 loss to No. 1 ranked Northwestern at McGuirk Stadium. The loss looks bad on the surface, but Venechanos understood that playing the four-time defending National Champions could result in such a loss – so she instructed her team to have a short memory and forget about that game.

The team had to make a quick turnaround after that matchup. They literally went to sleep, practiced Thursday morning and boarded a bus to Philadelphia. Despite this, Venechanos is not worried about her team being fatigued and actually feels the short week is a positive.

"I'm hoping it might work to our advantage, at practice [Thursday] morning the first thing we talked about was La Salle," Venechanos said. "We're looking forward to that game."

Senior captain Meghan Reddy had a strong performance against Northwestern, netting three of the team's five goals for her second hat trick in the last three games. She attacked the net aggressively and has taken the role of being a senior leader. She is one of just three seniors remaining on the relatively young UMass squad – Jackie Rosenzweig and Holly Drown are the other two seniors.

"Reddy is a solid goal-scorer, but the UMass attack has typically been a balanced one. Four players, including Reddy, Drown, Haley Smith and Jackie Lyons have scored more than 10 goals, and both Smith and Lyons have six-goal games to their credit.

The Explorers also bring a balanced attack to the field, as Ashley Rutz, Jill Davis, Stefany McKay and Nora Mcgurkin all have 17 or more points this season.

In addition, La Salle is noted for having a very aggressive, pressure-based defense that focuses on creating turnovers. In many ways the Explorers and Minutewomen are extremely similar.

For these reasons, Venechanos views this matchup as a very even game.

"We have a balanced attack, they have a balanced attack, they have speed, we have speed," Venechanos said. "They have an active defense, we've seen defenses that play as aggressive as they are, they have an athletic goalie, we just played against a pretty athletic goalie (NU's Morgan Lathrop) – so I think it's going to be a battle towards the end."

One thing that UMass will have to focus on is protecting its own goalkeeper Katie Florence. Florence has faced almost 80 shots in the last two games. All of her teammates agreed that she is talented, but few goalkeepers can consistently hold up if that trend continues.

After facing the Explorers, UMass will stay in a hotel and prepare to face the Hawks, who will open up their conference slate against Temple on Friday.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore midfielder Jackie Lyons leads UMass in goals (17) and points (24) this season. The Minutewomen are 3-6 so far this year heading into Atlantic 10 play.

Members of the women's lacrosse team converge Wednesday night after a 22-5 loss to No. 1 Northwestern. UMass travels to Philadelphia this weekend for two conference games.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
Advance tickets & showtimes available online at cinemark.com
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. • 1-800-FANDANGO #Exp 1118#
EARLY BIRD SPECIAL M-F, 1ST MATINEE SHOWTIME $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)
$5 Tuesdays are back!! All shows all day are $5!!
◆ MONSTERS VS ALIENS -3D [PG] (1200- only 3/27-3/29) 220 440 700 920
◆ MONSTERS VS ALIENS [PG] 110 330 550 810 1030
◆ THE HAUNTING IN CONNECTICUT [PG13] 145 445 740 1000
◆ 12 ROUNDS [PG13] 120 410 705 955
◆ DUPLICITY [PG13] 105 400 715 1005
◆ I LOVE YOU, MAN [R] 125 440 745 1015
◆ KNOWING [PG13] 115 415 725 1010
◆ RACE TO WITCH MOUNTAIN [PG] 130 420 710 935
◆ LAST HOUSE ON THE LEFT [R] 135 435 735 1025
◆ WATCHMEN [R] 100 230 430 600 800 930
◆ TAKEN [PG13] 140 425 730 1020
MET OPERA 4/1/09
LA SONAMBULA Encore 7pm
Senior Show 4/2/09 10am
KNOWING
CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Amid rumors, UMass presses on

Atlantic 10 foe Fordham up next

JENNA FLYNN-HILDEBRAND/COLLEGIAN

Junior outfielder Garrett Glashoff and the Minutemen take on Atlantic 10 opponent Fordham this weekend in N.Y., for a three-game series starting Friday.

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Riding a two-game winning streak, the Massachusetts baseball team hopes that when it faces Fordham Friday afternoon, the end result will be a little different from last season's Atlantic 10 season finale between the two teams.

The Minutemen (6-9, 1-2 A-10) fell to the Rams, 13-10, in the final game of the 2008 season on May 17 and will face each other in New York in a weekend three-game set.

"Fordham is a good ball club that has three good starting pitchers and they play tough, so we have to be ready to go," said UMass coach Mike Stone.

The Rams (6-13, 2-1 A-10) will be without infielder Rich Goulian who had a career day against UMass' pitching staff last season in the final game of his career. Goulian went 4-for-5 at the plate with a home run, a double and five runs batted in to lead the Rams to victory.

The Minutemen enter the series having defeated Hartford on Wednesday afternoon, 6-4, as sophomore right-hander Garrett Butt was strong in his first career start. Mike Gedman, who leads the Minutemen with three saves, closed out the victory for UMass.

Offensively, UMass has been impressive as of late, outscoring opponents 30-13 over the past two games with some help from their outfielders.

Junior right fielder Mike Donato has a career-best eight game hitting streak, which is the longest hitting streak by any UMass player so far this season. Donato went 2-for-3 against the Hawks, while sophomore leftfielder Kyle Multner went 3-for-4.

But the Minutemen will face a Rams pitching staff that was impressive and that also got a lot of run support in two conference-opening victories over defending back-to-back A-10 champions Charlotte on March 20 and 22.

"When you beat Charlotte two out of three at their place, you know you have a pretty good ball club," Stone said of Fordham.

The Rams combined for 15 hits in a 13-1 victory against the 49ers Friday, but were not effective the next day, as Charlotte defeated the visiting Rams, 8-5.

Each Fordham player reached base safely on Friday, while infielder Brian Kownacki went 3-for-3 with three runs batted in while registering one of the team's five doubles on the day.

Senior pitcher J.P. Mack went 6 and 2/3 innings while giving up just one run on six scattered hits to improve to 2-2 this season.

On Saturday, Ryan McCrann and Danny Leach each had two hits for the Rams, but it wasn't enough, as the 49ers got 10 hits and were smart at the plate, registering seven walks.

The Rams won the series with the 49ers Sunday with a three-run victory, 8-5, before losing by one run to Stony Brook on Wednesday, 11-10.

Holding on to leads has been an issue for the Rams bullpen, as the Seawolves came back with a late inning surge with four runs in the bottom of the eighth inning to hold onto the win.

McCrann hit a home run and had three RBIs on two hits, while Stephen McSherry, Ryan Maghini and John Kahn had multi-hit games.

While the starters have been impressive for the Rams, the team's collective earned-run average is 7.28 and they have a record of just 6-12.

Along with Mack, Jordan Grangard leads all pitchers with a 2.51 ERA in seven appearances, while five Rams pitchers have an ERA above 10.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

For full coverage of the rumors swirling around that the UMass baseball program is in danger of being cut

GO TO

www.dailycollegian.com

BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN

BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN

UMass softball coach Elaine Sortino, right, embraces athletic director John McCutcheon after a game last season. The Minutewomen will play for the first time this year at home this weekend.

Junior center fielder and leadoff hitter Carly Normandin leads the Minutewomen with a .387 batting average this season. She also paces the team in runs scored (18) and steals (five).

Finally back home

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Forget Christmas, Hanukkah or Kwanza (whichever you choose to celebrate), your birthday, Halloween or even the fourth of July, the best day of the year is none of those.

To Massachusetts softball coach Elaine Sortino the best day of the year is today, the day the No. 18 Minutewomen take on St. Bonaventure in Game 1 of a weekend series – their first home game of the season after 19 games on the road.

"When you've been in a gym for as long as we have and traveling for as long as we have, the best sound of the day is when you hear somebody's cleats on the concrete coming into the dugout," Sortino said following Thursday's practice. "It is a great day; it is the most exciting day of the year."

Almost two months after they played their first game on Feb. 6, and after traveling to Florida twice (as well as California and Georgia once apiece), Sortino and the Minutewomen (13-6, 2-0 Atlantic 10) couldn't be happier to finally play in Amherst.

"There is no place like home," Sortino said. "It is the best day of the season."

For St. Bonaventure (2-14, 0-2 A-10), it's enough of a challenge to face UMass, but facing them at home is an even tougher challenge. In A-10 play, the Minutewomen have won 40-straight games and haven't lost a conference game at home since a 2-1 loss to Charlotte on April 9, 2006. Overall UMass is 155-13-1 when playing at the UMass Softball Complex.

But for the Minutewomen, just having a winning streak doesn't ensure a victory once they take the field. Sortino understands that no team can be overlooked, even one who has won just two games.

"You've got to be really diligent about your focus and make sure you do what you need to do," Sortino said. "We are not a good enough team to take anyone for granted."

In fact, the Bonnies are the last team to come close to ending UMass' streak in A-10 play. In the final conference series last season, the Minutewomen coasted to an 11-0 victory in the first game of a doubleheader before finding themselves down 1-0 in the top of the seventh in Game 2. Two runs in the top half of the inning would give UMass the lead and keep its streak alive.

On paper, St. Bonaventure poses no threat to UMass. Its numbers at the plate are meager and the pitching staff boasts a combined earned-run average of 4.66.

Freshman outfielder Kristin Sullivan is the only bright spot in the Bonnies lineup. Her .318 batting average, in a limited number of at-bats, leads the team and is followed by senior Ashley Kotz's .244 average. Through 16 games, the Bonnies have managed just eight extra base hits (seven doubles, one home run) and scored just 25 runs as a team.

UMass' leadoff hitter, Carly Normandin, has scored 18 runs herself in 19 games.

St. Bonaventure freshman Erin Nargi has gone 1-6 because of the lack of run support and boasts a team-best ERA of 2.85, but it goes downhill from there. Sherri Thompson, one of the other starters for St. Bonaventure, has gone 1-7 in eight starts with a 5.15 ERA. Two other pitchers on the Bonnies staff possess ERAs of over 10.00.

While the numbers pale in comparison to those of UMass – all three pitchers have an ERA of 2.95 or lower and five starters hit over .300 – Sortino has learned through the long history with St. Bonaventure that they can still be a tough team.

"I think they are scrappy, I think they are resilient and I think they'll come at us with a lot of different stuff," Sortino said. "They've got some great athletes on their team and they will definitely put the ball in play and try to shake it up a little bit. We just have to stay calm, stay poised, be patient at the plate and execute when it's a timely opportunity for us."

Game 1 of the two-game series is slated for Friday afternoon at 3 p.m. at the UMass Softball Complex and Game 2 is scheduled for the following day at noon.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Normandin pacing order

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

After playing its first 19 games away from home, the No. 17 Massachusetts softball team will open up its home schedule Friday at the UMass Softball Complex.

Going 13-6 overall (2-0 Atlantic 10) away from the friendly confines of Amherst, the Minutewomen now look to gain an edge against conference foe St. Bonaventure. Home-field advantage has been good to UMass as the team has had nothing but success on its home turf.

The Minutewomen are currently 155-13-1 all-time at home, a .920 winning percentage. It has been 39 games since UMass has lost a game at home, dating back to a 2-1 loss to Atlantic 10 foe Charlotte back on April 6, 2006.

In 85 conference games at home, the Minutewomen have only been on the losing end four times. UMass, which has hosted 12 A-10 Conference Tournaments, has won 10 conference titles on its home turf.

UMass has never lost to the Bonnies at home, holding a 9-0 advantage all-time.

UMass Softball

Pair of aces

In just her second appearance as a starter for the Minutewomen, freshman pitcher Sara Plourde threw a spectacular no-hitter against Dayton on March 22, proving that senior Brandice Balschmiter is not the only one mowing down opposing batters this season.

Plourde, who only allowed one baserunner when she hit the first batter she faced, fanned nine hitters en route to the 11-0 victory over the Flyers (3-20, 1-3 A-10) to complete the sweep by a combined score of 27-0.

Plourde's no-hitter, the 73rd in school history, earned her A-10 Rookie of the Week honors.

In the first game, Balschmiter and junior Bailey Sanders combined for the shutout as part of the one-two punch the Minutewomen feature. Although she's only appeared in five games, Plourde leads UMass with a 1.02 earned-run average, surrendering only three runs in 20 2/3 innings.

The elder starter, Balschmiter, has continued to rewrite the UMass record books. Going 10-4 on the season with a 1.44 ERA, Balschmiter won her 100th career game earlier this season and earned her 22nd A-10 Player of the Week award.

Many of her career totals, however – including a 1.04 ERA, 102 wins, 968 strikeouts and 54 shutouts – trail former UMass legend and Olympian Danielle Henderson, who holds the majority of the school's pitching records.

While she continues to build her legacy during her last season with the Minutewomen, Balschmiter can look ahead to a pro career after being drafted in the first round of the National Pro Fastpitch draft by the Chicago Bandits.

Stormin' Normandin

When the UMass pitching staff fails to silence the opposition's bats, the Minutewomen still have their leadoff hitter, junior outfielder Carly Normandin, to set up the rest of the team's offense and produce offense herself.

Normandin, who has excelled in the leadoff spot, has done more than get on base for UMass as she has become the team's most potent offensive threat. Normandin leads the Minutewomen in four categories: batting average (.387) runs (18), steals (five) and on-base-plus-slugging percentage (1.054).

"She's become everything we would hope she would become for us," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "We couldn't ask for a more versatile leadoff hitter because not only is she very strong, she can take it over the wall, she can do something small if you back up too much."

Normandin, who went 6-for-7 with four RBIs and five runs scored, led UMass offensively last weekend against Dayton from the top of the lineup. As she has done all year, Normandin shone as a leadoff hitter, scoring the first run of Game 1 of the doubleheader, while still driving in four runs in the win.

"She's our pyromaniac, she's our sparkplug, she's the one who gets things started and we're very fortunate to have her and she's a great centerfielder," Sortino said.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

comics

JORNALISM AT ITS FINEST

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

ANNOUNCEMENT

You're not alone! Stressed? Panicking? Grieving? Wondering what comes after college? Mental Health Services support groups can help. Call (413) 545-2337

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblowout.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org Amherst: 2,3, & 4 bedroom apartments, $1200-$2250. FREE HEAT! Great Specials! www.MillValleyApts.com or 413-253-7377

Worship at Dwight Chapel on Sunday mornings at 9 or 11. For rides and information please call us at 256-8059 or visit www.dwightchapel.org

FOR RENT

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

FOUND

Bike near C.C. Call 230-3593 to identify.

ACROSS
1 Engine part
6 Trim pulp items
ds entry to 14 scene of action
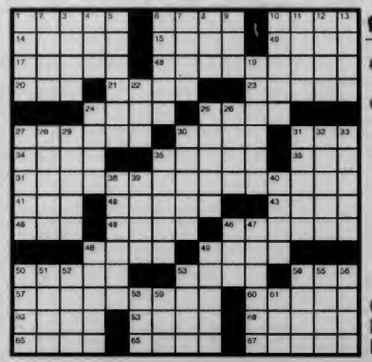
15 Swiss river
16 du Vent
17 "Get lost!"
18 Blame-taker
20 Kitchen spray
21 Cook
23 Campbell's products
24 Part of Austria's terrain
25 Agreement
27 Pulp player's article
30 Pedro's parlor
31 Filled oneself
34 Participate in a crime
35 throat
36 One that crushes
37 Small beginning of a large problem
41 Dutch commune
42 Ram
43 Speed
44 To be in Jalisco
45 Factory
46 Reader
48 Musical entertainment
49 Lily plant
50 Altar plate
53 Trampled
54 Outside: pref.
57 Successful ones
60 Bird of prey
62 High schooler
63 Sweet snack
64 African country
65 Watches
66 Small bird
67 See if a suit fits

DOWN
1 Grate
2 Killer whale
3 Period of time
4 rampage; wild
5 Stroll about idly
6 Enjoys the sun
7 Sporting event
8 Pareseghian
9 Part of a yr.
10 Intolerant one
11 Matty ___ NL batting champ of 1966
12 Sow's opposite
13 Fast transports: abbr.
19 Get away
22 To the point
24 Choir member
25 Capital city
26 Sir Guinness
27 Hubby & wife
28 Remain
29 Biblical outcast
30 Iron alloy
31 Perpendicular to a ship's keel
32 Crumbly pastry
33 Ready & willing
35 Pitchman's accomplice
38 19th-century Irish tragedy
39 Stooges, e.g.
40 Cheese variety
46 Arafat's org.
47 Rat
48 Blood carriers
49 Illegal burning
50 Mealy spread
51 -deucery; backgammon variation
52 One spoken to
53 Linden, for one
54 Like an omelet
55 Victim of an asp
56 Sea swallow
58 "I do"
59 Make a blunder
61 Atmosphere

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

www.dailycollegian.com

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst Outreach



THINK AHEAD

Two 6-week summer sessions

Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net

Registration begins March 9

SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

follow the breadcrumbs

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

Deja two.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 3 | 9 | | | | 8 | 5 | |
| | | 8 | 3 | | 4 | 6 | | |
| 6 | 4 | | | | | | 3 | 1 |
| | | | 4 | 2 | 3 | | | |
| | | | | 8 | | | | |
| | | | 1 | 5 | 6 | | | |
| 8 | 6 | | | | | | 9 | 3 |
| | | 3 | 9 | | 8 | 4 | | |
| | 9 | 4 | | | | 1 | 7 | |

INTERESTED IN GETTING BUSINESS EXPERIENCE?

THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS A NEW BUSINESS MANAGER FOR 2009-2010.

APPLICATIONS ARE AVAILABLE AT 113 CAMPUS CENTER.
DUE WEDNESDAY APRIL 8TH, BY 5 PM.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
There's no way you're going to be able to talk yourself out of getting caught in the Whitmore air ducts a third time.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Your tiny, fuel efficient car is about to be taught an expensive lesson on Newton's Second Law: Force=Mass x Acceleration.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You're not as good at math as Pisces. But now you can't say that you never learn anything on the Comics Page.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Hug something to death today.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Who would have ever thought that Thunderdome would be your demise?

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Fall of the American Empire, Reason #212: How much pie could a pie-eater eat if a pie-eater could never stop eatin' pie?

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
With effortless grace you have been managing to screw up practically everything lately.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Don't stop believing.
I know you can do it.
Hold on to that feeling

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
If this were a soccer game, at this point your disembodied head would be getting kicked around as the ball.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Here are your Unlucky Numbers of the Day...3, 11, 250, 45.
Beware.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Selling advertising space on your crotch has been profitable, butt it is time to expand your business.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Sadly, no one is going to care to donate any money to your "lasagna fund."

QUOTE OF THE WEEKEND

"I don't necessarily agree with everything I say."

— Marshall McLuhan

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELL

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

RAIN | HIGH: 50 LOW: 34 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, MARCH 30, 2009

Heavy decisions weigh on Holub

In climate of economic crisis, chancellor adapts to new job, attempts to balance opinions

By Matt Rochleau
Collegian Staff

Robert C. Holub spent the first five days of spring break in Florida. The weather was mostly sunny with temperatures reaching the high 70s to low 80s each day. But, as has become increasingly common for Holub since coming to the University of Massachusetts and taking on the duties of chancellorship, his focus was anything but recreational.

In fact, he worked.

During a week when much of the University had a chance to relax midway through the semester, he was attending meetings with donors as part of a fundraising trip.

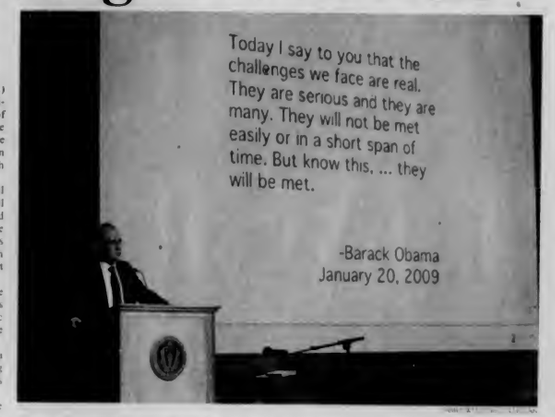
When Holub accepted the job a year ago this May, the budget crisis – what he now calls his biggest challenge – was just unfolding. The economy was souring when he took office on August 1, but as he said, some of the most versed experts in the financial world did not anticipate what has become a reality. Holub said the current economic slowdown surprised him, too.

Beyond keeping Holub busy, the budget crisis and a recently outlined, controversial reorganization plan has different groups of the UMass community wanting and expecting dissimilar things from the chancellor — making it difficult, if not impossible, to please everyone.

The dilemma of considering so many varying opinions is something every chancellor faces, he said, but it becomes more apparent when money is tight.

"The decisions are the same," Holub said. "But the consequences are very different. Reductions to budgets in times of financial crisis may mean putting some people out of work or eliminating programs that are cherished and have been important on the campus."

Holub's decisions affect undergraduate and graduate students, faculty, staff, alumni relations, administration and local residents among others.



Some of those groups overlap and within the groups there are subgroups. The Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), the Student Government Association (SGA), the Graduate Employee Association (GEO), the Graduate Student Senate (GSS), the Faculty Senate, the Professional Staff Union, the Office of African, Latino, Asian/Pacific Islander and Native American (ALANA) Affairs and the deans of the various colleges are just a few of those subgroups. There are also the recently created Budget Task Force and Task Force on Reorganization with ideas of their own which Holub must consider.

"It is difficult to weigh all options," said Holub. "Not all merit equal weight, but it is hard to figure which should carry more weight. I respect very much groups and individuals that try to reason with me rather than simply support their own view or attack me.

"I believe strongly that we are a community, and that what tears a community apart is the dogmatic belief that one perspective is more valuable than another," he said.

Holub attests he does not use a different approach when speaking with the different groups, but does keep his audience in mind.

In a recent testimony to the state legislature asking for stimulus money to help cover the University's deficit, he said his presentation was a bit different than how he has addressed the campus. The testimony focused not only on the budget crisis, but also outlined what benefits the University has to offer the state.

Chancellor Holub briefs the Faculty Senate on budget issues earlier this semester. Holub and administrators across the country's higher education system are dealing with the problem of how to educate with less money.

So far, Holub feels the campus has been fairly supportive of the decisions he has made. However, he acknowledged that opposition exists.

"It's a large University, it's a complex University," he said. "There are many people who have different experiences, who have different ideas. At a place like this you are not going to be 100 percent in agreement on anything."

Trying to evaluate the

See HOLUB on page 3

Students react to electric butts

By Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

Lighting up indoors, now a state-wide taboo, may once again become popular with the possible coming of a new age: the electronic cigarette.

In July 2004, Massachusetts legislators banned smoking in public restaurants and bars with the exception of private clubs. For many Massachuetts smokers, the public indoor smoking ban limits their places to light up. Similar bans nationwide have contributed to the recent decrease in American smokers. Currently, fewer than 20 percent of Americans smoke cigarettes, the lowest numbers since the early 1900s.

As a result, companies such as Smoking Everywhere, Inc. are manufacturing a new type of cigarette known as the "electronic cigarette."

According to the company's president, Eli Elicko, their electronic cigarette is designed to "reproduce the experience of smoking a traditional cigarette without the combustion by-products."

See E-CIGARETTES on page 2

The season for leasing...

The University's housing office hosted area renters in the Campus Center lobby on Friday as upperclassmen prepare to move off campus next semester.

Under 30 and homeless

By Rebekah Diamond
Collegian Correspondent

On a cold February afternoon, Natashia Smith stood not far from a gas station that has a Dunkin Donuts in it at the corner of King Street and Damon Road in downtown Northampton. Though she is just 22 years old, her teeth make her look much older. She dressed in a brown, tattered coat. Many who drive by her on the evening were students; some were her age. She did not look like the others on the street, but it was not her teeth, her unkempt hair or outdated clothes. Rather, it was the sign that she held, which read: "Homeless."

On a typical day, Smith panhandles, which helps to supplement the $708 she receives in monthly Supplemental Security Income (SSI). But sometimes, people respond to her with other help. One afternoon a man brought her a cup of coffee. He told her, "You need this more than I do."

Smith is one of an increasing number of homeless young adults aged 18-30 and who have not only been forgotten by their families but also often by the statistical world as well. They

See HOMELESS on page 2

FDIC chair speaks at UMass

By Maura Anderson
Collegian Staff

Forbes Magazine's second most powerful woman in the world, a former University of Massachusetts professor, told an audience of around 350 on Friday she is cautiously optimistic about the future of the economy.

Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), Sheila Bair, spoke at UMass about the mortgage crisis and its implications for financial regulatory policy.

All 245 seats in the Flavin Auditorium in the Isenberg School of Management were occupied on Friday, and over 100 people lined the walls to hear Bair speak.

In her lecture, Bair focused on the FDIC's role in the current global financial crisis. The FDIC steps in when banks fail, as it did last year with IndyMac Federal Bank based in Pasadena, Calif.

"One of the things the FDIC does is when a bank fails, we always protect the insured depositors," Bair said prior to her lecture. "For a period of time we'll actually run the bank and try to sell it off to the private sector. That's what happened to the big California lender called IndyMac."

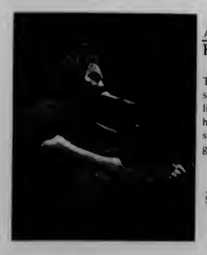
According to Bair, IndyMac Bank had engaged in a number of high risk loans or loans given to people with low credit scores or incomes. When borrowers did not have the income to pay off their loans, they foreclosed on them.

To combat foreclosures, the FDIC came up with a loan modification program to help troubled families facing the possibility of foreclosure.

One of the problems with the loans given by IndyMac Bank and others, according to Bair, was the failure to verify the income of borrowers, something that the FDIC's loan modification program now requires.

"You're not doing anybody any favors if you don't document that they can repay the loan. So we went through and we modified about 13,000 loans," said Bair. "We've now sold IndyMac to a private investment group. As a condition of the sale, they will continue with the loan modification program. That program has been adopted through the nationwide initiative the president has announced."

Tariq Mirza, senior advisor to the office of the chairman, accompanied Bair to the lecture. According to Mirza, the FDIC has been on the forefront of regulatory policy. The loan modification program devised by the FDIC and used with IndyMac Bank has been used as the blueprint for the Obama Administration's new economic program.



Bair stressed the importance of restructuring these loans so people can afford them, something she said the FDIC has been advocating for years.

"So much of what the FDIC is about right now is public confidence," said Bair. "People are still scared. They need something to believe in. The FDIC has been there for 75 years. I

See BAIR on page 2

Henry Paulson (left), Ben Bernanke (center) and Sheila Bair testify at a House Financial Services Committee hearing.

ARTS & LIVING
KICKER

This is place text for the story preview. Insert a few litile snipits about the story here, ideally concise and spelled correctly. Got it, good.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
KICKER

This is place text for the story preview. Insert a few little snipits about the story here, ideally concise and spelled correctly. Got it, good.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORAL & OPINION
COLUMN | POLITICS BY DEFINITION

Phrases like "The War on Terror," and "Bonuses" dominate the public sphere when it comes to policies. Paul Payer thinks the phrasing and presentation of these policies are getting much more attention than the policies themselves.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
PODCAST| BUCKLEY ON BASEBALL

Boston Herald Columnist, WEEI regular and UMass Alum Steve Buckley talks with The Collegian about the future of UMass baseball, evaluates Men's Basketball coach Derek Kellogg and reminisces on his UMass glory days.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY MARCH 27, 2009

UMass baseball presses on

SOFTBALL

After 19 straight games on the road to start the season, the Minutewomen finally get to play at the UMass Softball Complex this weekend against A-10 foe St. Bonaventure.

SEE PAGE 13

WOMEN'S LACROSSE

With one of the most difficult non-conference schedules in the country now complete, the Minutewomen hit Philly for two Atlantic 10 games in a crucial conference weekend.

SEE PAGE 11

JENNA OELSCHLEGEL/COLLEGIAN

DAILY COLLEGIAN
sports
WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 39

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasoziak
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Surkos
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
COPIES EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Leigh Greaney
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenweike
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASS. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASS. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kozwary
ASS. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASS. ARTS & LIVING Melissa Turtunen
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillemeister
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Wellwer

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALPHA LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCRAP IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE BI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HANGERS BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kate Olesin

COPY EDITOR
David Humphreys

PRODUCTION TEAM
Brandon Silvia

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

GEO-LOCATE YOUR NEWS

FOLLOW NEWS GEOGRAPHICALLY WITH DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM'S "NEWSGARDEN" APPLICATION ON THE HOMEPAGE.

NEWS

VIDEO | TUESDAY
HIGHLIGHTS FROM FDIC CHAIR SHEILA BAIR'S SPEECH AT THE SCHOOL OF MANAGEMENT ON FRIDAY.

SPORTS

PODCAST |
BOSTON HERALD COLUMNIST, WEEI REGULAR AND UMASS ALUM STEVE BUCKLEY TALKS WITH THE COLLEGIAN ABOUT THE FUTURE OF UMASS BASEBALL, EVALUATES MEN'S BASKETBALL COACH DEREK KELLOGG AND REMINISCES ON HIS UMASS GLORY DAYS.

ARTS & LIVING

VIDEO | WEDNESDAY
AN INTERVIEW ARAB-ISRAELI FILMMAKER IBTISAM MARA'ANA, WHOSE FILM WHOSE FILM "LADY KUL EL-ARAB" WAS SCREENED AT UMASS LAST WEEK AS PART OF THE MULTICULTURAL FILM FESTIVAL.

PODCAST |
DAILY COLLEGIAN FILM CRITICS PETE RIZZO AND SHAYNA MURPHY TAKE A LOOK AT UPCOMING FILMS AND WHETHER THEY'RE WORTHY OF YOUR ATTENTION.

Former UM prof. returns to speak as FDIC chairman

BAIR from page 1

FDIC Chairman Sheila C. Bair.

think we have a very strong record."

Chairman Bair said she is cautiously optimistic about the future of the economy.

"The banks seem to be on better footing, and the markets seem to be responding very well," she said. "We have a lot of work ahead of us and there's still a lot of pain to go. But I'm starting to see some indications of a turn."

Melissa Lockett, a senior and president of the UMass Finance Society, said the talk was really interesting because of Bair's perspective on the banking side of the crisis and the IndyMac Bank failure.

Christopher Griffiths, a junior, said he came to the lecture to hear what the second most powerful woman in the world had to say about the economy.

Bair was hired as a professor in the Isenberg School of Management at UMass in 2002 by professor Thomas O'Brien. She went on leave in 2006 when the Bush Administration appointed her Chairman of the FDIC.

Bair said she hoped to reach out to students who attended the lecture.

"I really enjoy talking with young people. I enjoyed the time I had here, and I think young people have a lot of idealism," she said. "We need idealism right now because so many things have gone wrong and so many systems failed and I think we need the optimism and hope that young people bring."

When asked if she would consider returning to a teaching position, she said: "I really need to stay [at the FDIC] now. As much as someday I would love to come back, the work we're all doing is very important and I feel very committed to the agency."

Maura Anderson can be reached at maura@student.umass.edu.

Valley struggles to help newest homeless

A man known as "Boxcar" sits outside a Northampton establishment last year. The Pioneer Valley's shelters are seeing populations swell as the nation's economic woes worsen.

HOMELESS from page 1

are not children, but they have yet to establish themselves as adults. It is easy to neglect or ignore her.

It is also estimated by the National Alliance to End Homelessness that between 500,000 and 1.3 million runaways or young adults who are thrown out become homeless. While the causes of an individual's homelessness may vary, there are some trends.

Nearly half of young adults reported intense conflict or physical harm by a family member as a major fact in their homelessness. The study also found that 62 percent of young adults indicated that a member of their household said that they were not wanted. Within two and four years of exiting foster care in a system referred to as "aging out," 25 percent of former foster children experienced homelessness, according to the Alliance.

Smith "aged out" when she turned 18 – the age when Massachusetts foster children are considered adults and are no longer under the state's guardianship. After she left foster care, she went to live with her biological grandmother and her boyfriend. Smith suffers from Attention Deficit Hyperactive Disorder (ADHD) and bipolar disorder. Her grandmother found it difficult to deal with the constant mood swings, and after only a few months, Smith was on the streets. That was two years ago.

Smith's situation is not unique.

Youth who have "aged out" continue to be poor. One study states 46 percent had not completed high school, 50 percent were unemployed, 25 percent had experienced homelessness four years after leaving care, and 80 percent did not earn enough to be fully self-supporting four years after leaving care, according to EndHomelessness.org.

In the past, it was realistic to send 18-year-olds out into the work force on their own, without financial support. Now, that idea is daunting for many, whether they have a high school diploma or not.

In 1972, an average high school graduate, who was male, with no college education, between the ages of 25-34 could expect to earn about $42,630 a year. That number has dropped in 30 years. In 2002 the average, male high school graduate can expect to earn $29,647 a year according to Tamara Draut, author of the book "Strapped: Why America's 20- and 30-Somethings Can't Get Started." The cost of living has increased, and most homeless young adults do not have a high school diploma.

Most modern youth get financial support from their families.

"On average, parents give their children an estimated $38,000, or about $2,200 a year, while they are between the ages of 18 and 34 to supplement wages, pay for college tuition and assist with down payments on a house, among other types of financial help. Even with this assistance, the current move from adolescence to adulthood has become longer and increasingly complex," according to EndHomelessness.org.

Smith, unlike many homeless young adults has a relationship with her mother and her two younger brothers.

"I love my mom," she said.

Smith is able to spend an occasional night at her mother's house. Sometimes her mother will take her to Greenfield, Mass., where Clinical Support Options (CSO) is located. At CSO, Smith is able to see a doctor and get prescriptions she needs. However, she depends on the bus for most of her transportation needs. The CSO provides transportation, but in order to get it one must have an address – the tent that Smith lives in does not count.

Amid the rise of homelessness there seems to be a tendency of homeless young adults developing a sense of complacency. They often appear to have given up hope and their lives become more a matter of routine and survival rather then trying to plot a way out of their plight.

As the country continues to fall deeper into the recession, local shelters are being pushed to maximum capacity. The Amherst Survival Center serves four hot lunches a week starting at noon on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday. The Survival Center has felt the sting of the economic uncertainty, as they have lost some state funding and local stores and restaurants that are a huge contributor to the center have become more conservative with their giving.

Cheryl Zoll, director of the Amherst Survival Center, said the center served an estimated "3,000 households in 2007 and in 2008 that number jumped up 20 percent."

The Center provides food, clothing and basic medical care for anyone in need, homeless or not. Zoll estimates 20 percent of the people they serve are between the ages of 18 and 30.

While the primary goal of the Survival Center is to provide services that deal with essential needs, they do offer other kinds of support.

A representative from the Salvation Army comes to the Survival Center to write vouchers for people to receive free clothes, a free prescription or even a voucher that may help an individual pay their rent. They also assist people with filling out forms to get Food Stamps.

ServiceNet, Inc. of Northampton has many options for those who are homeless or on the verge of becoming homeless. One of them is the Drop-In Center, which opens its doors on weekday mornings and offers a chance for anyone in need to come and eat snacks or talk to counselors who can assist in being part of a transitional process to get the needy off the streets and into a shelter. From there, many individuals are able to move on to temporary housing.

Programs for transitional housing give people a little more help to get on their feet. It's for the folks who are doing everything they need to keep going, but still can not make it, said an employee at the shelter who wished to remain anonymous. The center also helps people sign up for SSI, which is needed to be eligible for subsidized housing.

In subsidized housing, the individual can pay anywhere from 10 to 30 percent of their income toward rent. In order to get it, one has to prove that they have some form of disability. Many people eventually move on from the program and are completely able to support themselves; still others may be further helped along by getting permanent housing, provided to those who are unable to sustain themselves because of physical, medical or mental disabilities.

For the homeless who do receive SSI, there is another aspect that must be dealt with: where the SSI check is sent, since many do not have an address. Smith receives $708 in an SSI check each month. In her case, it is mailed to her mother's house. Plenty of other homeless people are not that lucky.

It's hard for many homeless people to find someone they trust enough to have the check sent to them, said an employee at the Drop-In Center. However, individuals do have the option of having their check sent to the Center where they can come pick it up.

Spring for most people is a time of new beginnings, for the homeless it's a time where they no longer have to fear freezing to death. This spring – despite the economic turmoil – it is possible for Natashia Smith and thousands like her to find warmth and comfort that is not just from the sun, but from shelters where people open their hearts and wallets and try to give opportunity to those who have lost it all.

Rebekah Diamond can be reached at radiamon@student.umass.edu.

Students examine e-cigs as FDA does

Nati Ariali blows smoke from an electronic cigarette he sells at a kiosk in a mall in San Jose, Calif.

E-CIGARETTES from page 1

"The 'smoke' in our electronic cigarettes is a water vapor resulting from a proprietary process of vaporizing a water/flavors/nicotine mixture," said Elicko.

Without second-hand smoke and carcinogens wafting into the faces of non-smokers, many electronic cigarette companies believe their product may be safe to be smoked in public places.

"We believe that the product is an improvement over and different from traditional cigarettes for reasons including that our electronic cigarette provides adult smokers a real smoking experience without the fire, flame, tobacco, tar, carbon monoxide, ash, stub or smell found in traditional cigarettes," said Elicko.

University of Massachusetts Health Services tobacco treatment specialist Tom Schiff believes despite the lack of second-hand smoke emissions, tar and other carcinogens, the tobacco cigarette still has health risks.

"It's complex, but yes, I do believe there are health risks," said Schiff. "[Electronic cigarettes] are not being counted as a way to quit smoking, but rather as a way to continue smoking. As compared to other nicotine replacers like patches, gums, lozenges or prescription nicotine inhalers or nasal sprays which are to help people quit smoking, there is nothing I've seen that implies that electronic cigarettes are going to help people quit."

Many UMass students who smoke want to try electronic cigarettes believing them to be healthier than traditional cigarettes.

"I want to try the electronic cigarette, because cigarettes are really expensive. I probably spend about $400 per semester on packs," said freshman, accounting major Kent Allen. "I like to be healthy, and electronic cigarettes do not have as many harmful carcinogens. Plus, I like to try new things, and I'd be helping the environment by not throwing my butts everywhere and polluting the air with my second-hand smoke."

Some students don't believe electronic cigarettes will get them to start smoking.

"I want to be cool like all the kids who smoke cigarettes, but I don't want to kill myself," said UMass freshman Aidan Griffin. "Electronic cigarettes are probably not that healthy."

Electronic cigarettes have not been approved by the FDA and are not being sold in Massachusetts convenience stores. There are many websites that are selling starter packs online at around $54. The starter packs often include at least one type of the various cartridges needed to smoke these cigarettes. Some cartridges can be different flavors, while many are nicotine-flavored.

"The tobacco industry has been trying to develop some sort of smokeless cigarette for a number of years," said UMass public health expert, David Buchanan. "The basic idea is they want to develop a cigarette that can give some of the flavor and nicotine without including the smoke which contains tar and other chemicals that have health risks. It is something like a holy grail to save the tobacco industry if they can develop a 'safe' cigarette.

"The major lesson here is, and again, going back to early 60s, the tobacco industry came up with a low tar and low nicotine cigarette. Everyone said this was a big step. But smokers compensated for the low amounts of tar and nicotine, and they started inhaling deeper and smoking more. Then these cigarettes wound up being more hazardous for people," said Buchanan.

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu

Holub balances more than budget, meetings

HOLUB from page 1

University's fiscal future is now the focal point of Holub's schedule.

"I put in a lot of hours," he said describing his typical day-to-day routine. "I think that it has been exacerbated maybe by the budget crisis because then I have to have more meetings to deal with the budget and the reorganization."

Holub's job sends him to dozens of meetings beyond Amherst, the majority of which are held in the Northeast – namely places like Boston, New York City and Washington, D.C.

Both on and off campus, Holub said he's had around 50 meetings on the budget alone since November.

When he's not on the road, odds are he's in his office in the Whitmore Administration Building on the flagship campus.

On a typical day, from around 8 a.m. until around 5 p.m., he's engaged in various meetings. After which, he usually sits at his computer until around 6:30 p.m. or 7 p.m., reading his mail and replying to e-mails, before heading home to Hillside, an on-campus residence reserved for chancellors.

There he usually has dinner with his wife Sahine, his 86-year-old mother Marilyn and three young daughters Madelaine, Shoshanah and Natalie, ages eight, six and two – respectively.

After spending some time with his family, but before calling it a night, he checks his e-mail again or finishes something else he'd been working on earlier that day, while still trying his best to keep his work away from home.

"Then I go to sleep and it starts again the next day," he said.

However, relaxing is sometimes difficult.

"It keeps me up at night, and actually wakes me up early in the morning sometimes," said the 10th chancellor to serve the Amherst campus. "I've had a lot on my mind lately with regard to the budget and the reorganization and things like that."

Weekends tend to be less busy with meetings from time-to-time, and the chancellor frequently attends dinners, fine arts or athletic events.

Trying to stay on top of his schedule has proven difficult, yet as Holub put it: "That makes it interesting, too, that you have so many different things to do in a day. You'll be dealing with donors in one moment and legislators in another and faculty in another and students in another moment and budget issues."

However, when all of the meetings are over and decisions must be made, he said being the person who has the final say can be a less than enjoyable part of what he does.

In October, the Commonwealth's legislators reduced UMass' state aid by $25 million.

In December, UMass issued 31 "notices of nonreappointment" to part- and full-time non-tenure-track faculty. In February, professors agreed to freeze their salaries. Earlier this month, the University issued 60 more nonreappointment notices to non-tenure-track professors bringing the total to 91 professors this year – around 6 percent of the faculty.

Student fees were increased by $1,500, though that is expected to be rebated due to $82 million of federal stimulus money allocated to UMass by Gov. Deval Patrick last week to help the University recover from a $46 million deficit.

News also came last week that UMass will eliminate one or more of their sports programs – possibly baseball – to help cope with the budget crisis.

Having to raise fees, cut people's budgets, layoff employees, freeze construction projects, cap administrative spending or tell others that funding is not available for what they would like to do are just some of the examples.

"On the other hand, it wouldn't prevent these things from being done," Holub said. "Someone else would have to do them. And, I like to think that I do them with sensitivity and good judgment, and that's the reason that I'm here."

Prior to working at UMass, Holub taught at the University of California Berkeley for 27 years, achieving the rank of full professor and serving in several administrative posts.

There, Holub said he also dealt with many "strong-minded" groups who each wanted and expected different things from him. That experience has proven helpful for what he faces now at UMass.

"If we start from the common perspective that the institution or the campus is more important than anything relating to the individual or the smaller groups, then once decisions are made, I believe the community is more easily reconciled and can move forward more easily," he said.

In 2006, he left Berkeley for Knoxville, Tenn., to serve as the University of Tennessee's chief academic officer for two years before becoming provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs.

Tennessee was in the early stages of a budget crisis when Holub worked there, which has worsened since. He said his focus then was as it is now, "gathering information and trying to reach the best decision for the campus."

Though, Holub said none of his positions at either university have had as many responsibilities as being chancellor of over 25,000 students and more than 210,000 alumni.

BALANCING MORE THAN A BUDGET

As much as he said he enjoys the responsibility and challenges of his job, the one thing he said he couldn't live without is his family.

But being chancellor can interfere with how often he can be with them.

"I think if I were a faculty member I'd be able to spend more time with [my family], although as a faculty member I was very busy too," said Holub. "There's always going to be that tradeoff and being so busy does take me away from them. But I do have time with them in the evening and we eat dinner together, and I see them in the morning before I leave, and then on the weekends we do things, and we very often go to sporting events together – at least with the two older girls [Madelaine and Shoshanah] – so there's still time that we spend together."

His eldest daughters' favorite sporting event is hockey and they have been to several of UMass' games this season.

"They ask me sometimes what the students [chanting in the stands] are saying and I say 'Well, they're wishing our team good luck and the other team bad luck.'"

Other than a number of football games, Holub's youngest daughter Natalie usually doesn't attend because she's a little too young, he said.

"When she gets to be five or six then I'm sure she'll come along as well. Of course maybe then the older one won't want to come. She'll have other things to do. She'll want to go out with her friends rather than with her father. But, we'll see what happens," Holub said.

Holub's wife Sahine helps with taking care of the kids as well as doing fundraising for the University and work for organizations like the Amherst Survival Center.

The couple met at Ohio State where Sahine, a native of Germany, was a graduate student and Holub was a visiting professor, both involved in German studies.

They dated for about a year before getting married in November 1998.

Holub, a New Jersey native who described his childhood as "fairly normal," originally planned to become a doctor, but changed his mind during his senior year of college after working for a pharmaceutical firm in Philadelphia. He still received his bachelors in natural science from the University of Pennsylvania, but also earned a masters in comparative literature and later a masters and doctorate in German from the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Holub's interest lies in 19th and 20th-century German intellectual, cultural, and literary history. Not counting a book still several years in progress, Holub has written 12 books and more than 100 articles and essays on topics ranging from early 19th century German realism to postwar examination of the Holocaust.

The chancellor said such scholarly works are one of the things he is most proud of.

"But, I hope, if you'd ask me the question 10 years from now, I'd be able to point to some things that I've done in administration," he said.

COMMUNICATING ON THE JOB

Holub said one of the most important things he has learned in his career has been to communicate with others.

"You need to talk to them," he said. "There has to be some endeavor to understand where other people are coming from, what their history is, what the history of the institution has been, what their experiences have been. I think you develop that gradually as you go through various administrative positions."

At UMass, one of the first things the chancellor said he did to establish communication was to arrange appointments with all of the deans, to visit their colleges, talk to the staff and see the facilities in person.

Holub said he's currently setting up a staff council so he can meet with representatives of the staff on a more regular basis.

"I can't claim that I have a perfect understanding of the campus. Certainly I've only been here since August," Holub said. "But I'm trying to learn about the campus more and more, and I have to count on that dialogue with other people to have that understanding."

In fact, one thing Holub said he regrets is not meeting with members of the campus as often as he would've liked. The reason, again, has been his busy schedule do to the University's budget woes.

"I'm under no illusions about the central administration," said Holub. "I don't think we've done as well as we should do with regard to the support of faculty and I hope that I can improve that. That's my goal."

"I think that I regret in this first year that I wasn't able to schedule more meetings with faculty to get to know faculty better and to get to know students better," he continued. "But, that was forced on me by the various budget problems that we've had."

Interacting with students in the classroom is something Holub said he misses since leaving his role as a faculty member at Berkeley. So, next semester he will be one of the professors teaching a class of around 20 incoming freshman in a new course called first-year seminar.

"It's difficult for me to arrange a regular course because my schedule is so demanding. It isn't difficult for me to find three hours a week, but it's difficult for me to find the same three hours week after week," said Holub. "But, a first-year seminar that meets once a week, I think I can probably keep the time open most of the weeks to be able to meet with them. And, I look forward to sitting in a class with students again."

He said he is also considering meeting with students outside the classroom on a more informal basis. He mentioned the idea of going to the dinning commons with his family to have dinner.

"[Students] were important to me as a faculty member, but I guess even more important to me now as a chancellor," he said.

Holub has also kept communication-focused through a website made to address the budget crisis, creating a Budget Task Force and Task Force on Reorganization to give him feedback and keeping the community up-to-date on his decisions through campus-wide e-mails.

In one of his latest e-mails sent out on March 12, the chancellor announced his decision to reorganize the University's colleges for the fall semester in an effort to cut costs.

Holub said he had briefed the deans from each of the colleges the day prior to sending out the e-mail.

"I think in general they were in favor of it," he said. "Some deans felt less comfortable with it than others. But there were some difficult decisions to make, and we're going to try to make everyone comfortable with the reorganization and the direction we're moving in."

With eight months of chancellorship now under his belt the he said is enjoying the job overall.

"I think that there's enough that's enjoyable in the position, there's enough that's challenging that keeps me intellectually stimulated that I enjoy doing what I'm doing," he said. "I think this is my last job. I mean that's the way I'd like to think about it. But, I don't know. You can never tell what's going to happen. But, I didn't enter into this job as a step to another job."

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com

Chancellor Holub said much of his time is spent in meetings related to budget issues, but students have been voicing their opinions in other forums in an effort to make sure their opinions are heard.

Chancellor Holub addresses students and faculty earlier this semester. He said the campus community is a major voice that he is counting on to help shape University policy.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 30 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The lexicon of policies

Paul Payer

Global War on Terror. Socialized Medicine. Bonus.

Chances are you've heard these words thrown around in conversation or in the news throughout the past couple weeks. Each term is an example of political branding, the marketing of an idea or concept with the goal of creating a certain public perception. Although the above terms refer to wholly separate issues, they are similar in that they have entered the American lexicon at some point to dictate government policy and public opinion.

Following the Sept.11, the White House introduced the phrase "global war on terror" to characterize the ongoing military campaign in Afghanistan. The language was forceful and broad, declaring war on a concept such as "terror" rather than a singular organization or state. The vague definition allowed for a relatively easy expansion of military activity in terms of spending and logistical operations without significant public objection.

The term fell out of favor in 2006 as public support for the Iraq War continued to decline, and Pentagon officials began referring to the military operations in Iraq and Afghanistan as the "global struggle against violent extremism." The issue was raised again last week as reports surfaced claiming that the Obama White House had "banned" use of the term "Global War on Terror."

In actuality, no ban was issued. Rather a senior civil servant within the pentagon issued a memo advising against use of the term. Regardless, it would be a safe bet to assume that Obama and his administration will avoid the phrase in future dialogue over Middle East policy.

Although seemingly inconsequential, the words used to describe policies and agendas directly shape how those ideas are received by the public and government. In the realm of health care reform, advocates face the challenge of not only proposing effective and financially sustainable policies, but avoiding the label of "socialized medicine" promulgated by groups which oppose reform aimed at changing the nature of a largely free-market based system. On this issue, as most in Washington, valuable resources are spent on crafting a message rather than a policy, a trend which has a detrimental effect on the efficiency and quality of the public policy process but is a proven necessity in American political culture.

What about that final term, "bonus"?

Although it hardly seems important, the words used to describe policies and agendas directly shape how those ideas are received by the public and government.

In a somewhat reverse take on this use of language in politics, the word "bonus" became a lightning rod for public anger over the greed and incompetence of failed Wall Street firms on life support with public tax dollars. The failed financial firm, American International Group (AIG), under fire earlier this month for paying out nearly $165 million in bonuses to company executives, payouts which would theoretically be funded directly by tax dollars used to bailout the firm. In the face of intense public outrage over the prospect of millions of dollars rewarding wealthy executives for their failed business efforts, the U.S. House of Representatives overwhelmingly passed legislation taxing the bonuses at 90 percent.

In this instance, it was the people manipulating language to advance a message against the big bad corporation.

Never mind the fact that bailout money had been used by other companies to fund employee salaries since the establishment of the Troubled Assets Relief Program in October 2008. No, this was different. These were bonuses.

Well, not quite.

The word bonus has a certain connotation: a financial award based on exemplary performance or, according to the Merriam Webster dictionary my mom got me for me at Staples before my first day of seventh grade, as "something in addition to what is expected or strictly due." The AIG bonuses in question were actually contractually guaranteed and non-performance based, but it was the connotation not the substance that dominated this issue.

I don't intend to defend greedy AIG executives, but I also disagree with the notion that we should establish a precedent which allows public anger to disregard the United States Constitution. The acceptance of such excess by these AIG executives is as reprehensible as the behavior of CEOs and executives who drew huge paychecks and golden parachutes from taxpayer funded bailouts over the past six months of this financial crisis. Unfortunately, not only is their behavior similar in terms of greed and disgust, but as well as in terms of contractual obligation and legality.

Of course, something must be done to prevent the use of taxpayer dollars for the payment of excessive salaries. But unconstitutional legislation aimed at penalizing an isolated group of individuals isn't a sensible solution. It's a symptom with the sole purpose of manipulating language to generate a political message.

Allowing that type of thinking to prevail in the public debate over this issue and the larger economic issues that face this country will prove to be as counterproductive as waging a neo-conservative foreign policy fraught with failure and a decline in national image under the guise global security or road blocking health care reform by crying socialism.

What is needed now is substance over political theater, and an honest dialogue with the American people as to how their tax dollars must be spent.

Paul Payer is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at ppayer@student.umass.edu

Looking for return value in banks

Nicole Sobel

The current disastrous state of the banks is concerning to most citizens. However, thanks to President Barack Obama's long-awaited plan to revive the banks, there's a small possibility we could be seeing a significant change in the direction that things are currently headed towards if certain assumptions Obama has about the future are right, the most notable of which is the assumption his plan will succeed. Other than assumptions made, there's not much confidence on this issue – other than simple faith – to believe it will pan out.

Many people were apprehensive when this plan was brought to the table; however, it does represent some good ideas that could rescue the banks, if they are followed through in the correct manner. In the short term, the plan would provide financing to buy $500 billion of banks' bad assets – and we all know they have plenty of them at this point. Obama proposed that all of the financial assistance would be in the form of low-cost government loans and loan guarantees for private investors who buy the troubled assets.

There are many assumptions concerning this plan and if the prayers of the banks are answered, there will be almost no doubt that the government loans will be repaid in the end, with interest.

The banks are hoping that the battered assets will recover handsomely, providing they follow the stipulations the bill provides. However, the big problem is clearly that there has been no independent assessment of the assets, or underlying collateral, and this provides for no assurance that they will recover by much at all.

According to the Wall Street Journal: "Investors are currently offering 30 cents on the dollar" for certain toxic assets. And although banks are currently unwilling to sell at that price, it still doesn't mean that the offer price is too low. They are simply apprehensive, and fearful that taking such losses might render the banks insolvent.

Even if the sums put up by the government are enough to cleanse the banks entirely, throwing money at them, even with private capital involved, would not be fair.

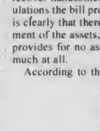
When looking at the big picture of this rescue mission, we can see that it's most likely with government subsidies that investors will soon be offering something more to the banks' liking. And on the flipside of that positive, the negative would of course be big losses for the government.

When we compare and look at loans from the government and loans from investors, it's clear that the sum differences are huge.

The concerns and fears when it comes to saving the banks is repayment of the loans. It's the same notion that anyone receiving a loan has come face to face with before. However, when we're talking about a loan for school versus big money loans from the government, there's only a modicum of similarity. It must be understood that unsolved problems with the bank rescue still exist, and sooner or later they will surface. Even if we are to assume that the assets do increase in value, allowing the governments to he repaid, there are still a number of issues of concern that this rescue mission brings about.

Successful sales will rid the banks of some of their bad assets, but not necessarily all, or even some of them. What is really needed is for the sums to be enough to balance the banks' assets and liabilities and provide a reasonable confidence to resume lending and absorb future losses. There is no certainty right now, but the Wall Street Journal approximates it's north of $2 trillion, which is much more than the administration was looking at in terms of numbers.

It's unrealistic to think that this plan is fool-proof in any way. Even if the sums put up by the government are enough to cleanse the banks entirely, throwing money at them, even with private capital involved, would not be fair.



It's proposing a socialization of losses, with little value flowing to taxpayers. With the recent bailout money used by AIG in such an irresponsible manner, the government can't afford to piss off anymore taxpayers with irrevocable financial mistakes.

In order to save the banks in a proper and successful fashion, Obama and the administration need to concentrate on, and base their decisions on current reality – not assumptions about the future.

If not looked at intricately and realistically enough, there could be huge unnecessary risks. The Obama Administration still has yet to give us any concrete reasons why their plan should be filled with any confidence from taxpayers or investors. They need to start examining whether or not they need to separate banks that can pay all debts, versus banks that cannot, acknowledging the losses, firing executives at failing banks, and then move on to seeing how the government can revamp and reconstruct the institutions.

Nicole Sobel is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at nsobel@student.umass.edu.

Friendship in the Facebook age

Elie Feinstein

The other day I was doing my usual route to class when I noticed a familiar face, so I smiled and gave a casual nod. She kept walking, glanced my way for a second, and then, completely ignoring me, walked straight ahead. I, of course, was shocked. I stood there, mouth gaping open, watching in amazement as my friendly nod lost itself in a medley of strangers. "But," I thought aloud incredulously, "we're Facebook friends. And moreover, you friended me!"

Now, before I get bombarded with hugs, kisses and Hallmark cards – you can get those at Target, busses leave every 15 minutes – let me add a few crucial details. She wasn't listening to her iPod or talking on her cell. She didn't seem to be in a rush. In fact, she looked like she was in a good mood.

That is, until she noticed me.

On second thought, it wasn't really me she noticed so much as it was two worlds colliding in front of her: the real world and the virtual world. I was a sort of the jack-in-the-box unleashed. I had abandoned my cubicle at noon at a 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. job. And this bothered her for two reasons. One, have you ever tried to tell your co-worker to stop messing around and get behind the desk? And two, have you ever thought to yourself, "I hate this damn desk!"

This is, undoubtedly, a "cubicle culture." We are living in the era of Facebook, MySpace, Skype, and Twitter. Blogs, forums, and chat rooms. It is the era of Blackberries, iPhones, iPods, iTouch and the iCan't-talk-to-you-right-now-hut-I'll-call-you-later-when-I'm-not-busy. It is the era of text messaging and instant messaging.

But it is the age of mixed-messaging.

The word "friend" has lost its meaning. And the fact that virtually every Facebook profile states either "my friends mean everything to me" or that "I love hangin' out with my friends" seems to suggest a discrepancy. Friendship has been reduced to a click of the mouse. The people who mean the most to you are lost in the shuffle with people you just met and people you just forgot you met and people you never met but really want to get you to join their 1,000,000 strong group. Almost there, guys.

No. Social network sites have very little to do with friendship, though they have everything to do with the idea of friendship. They are businesses, trying to make a profit, and they've been extraordinarily successful. They've developed into a social phenomenon. They are a part of pop culture.

Social network sites have very little to do with friendship, though they have everything to do with the idea of friendship.

But the irony screeches like nails on a chalkboard. Facebook capitalizes on people's social insecurities. It lets people reinvent themselves. It reassures people that they have friends, that they are somewhat popular, that they are the "most lovable," that they did make it into someone's Top Friends, that they have been tagged in a picture within the past week and that people are still writing on their wall even though it's way past their birthday.

That reminds me – it was my birthday that day. Facebook reminded all my Facebook friends it was the anniversary of me peeing on the doctor alongside my equally devoted twin brother. And the cynics said common courtesy was dead. Fools.

Now none of my friends have to know anything about me at all. They just have to review my profile, make a reference to one of my favorite quotes, mention that they, too, enjoy fishing for pike, and agree that, yeah, it would be strange to be standing at the edge of the rain.

But it might be nice to be standing there in the rain with my friend. Maybe then we could just let our sweatshirts sag with the water and laugh about how we both lost service and know that whatever we say will probably be forgotten in a day or two, and we won't be able to look up the transcript online. Maybe then, we'll listen.

Elie Feinstein is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at efeinste@student.umass.edu

Seek school spirit to stay accountable

Eric Magazu

There is a missing element from student life at The University of Massachusetts reflecting a broader trend in America and throughout the other nations that comprise what is today tenuously called Western Civilization, and in times past was referred to as Christendom. This missing element is the lack of a broad civic and national engagement. On a college campus, this idea is often referred to as school spirit.

This lack of school spirit is detrimental to our personal health and well-being, and will result in a further decay of the dignity and respect of our campus.

The major problem that underlies this decay is the radicalization of the notion of individual liberty into something far beyond what was intended by the principles of freedom and equality found in America. Even amongst left leaning political movements – which traditionally have been founded on the idea of addressing the needs of those who are on the less privileged end of the social spectrum – the idea of having genuine love and concern for our fellow-man seems to have been lost. We have turned compassion for our fellow-man into a bureaucratic function.

There is a difficult balance of how to address such civic decay without intruding upon individual liberty. But we know human beings have wired within themselves the attractfon to serve within causes that have as their goal something greater than the desires of the individual members.

This does not mean that all people have an equal drive to participate as actively as others within these movements, but simply that we seek to belong to one or more groups. This feeling of belonging is often referred to as our identity.

Belonging to a larger society, such as a college community, serves to elevate our behavior, as in most cases a certain discipline is required to maintain full membership. We seek to live up to the expectations of others within the group because we know that they will hold us accountable. In order to accomplish the same without being part of a group is much more difficult because it will require an extraordinary amount of self-discipline to maintain the same level of integrity without external reinforcement.

In addition to political forces that have shaped our more individualistic understanding of the world, the exponential growth of technological advances, while serving the great purpose of relieving suffering and facilitating access to information, have served to allow us to become more detached from the community around us.

A planned agenda cannot change what is inside of man. If the insides are rotted, no amount of external dressing that can mask the foul taste.

Perhaps technology will one day serve as a mechanism that transforms the very way we define our communities. It may even replace the current paradigm completely. Without the physical proximity required in traditional communities, we can pull from a much wider range of available people and make our communities much more specialized. This being acknowledged, the impersonal, and sometimes virtually anonymous, nature of technology facilitates our separateness. Without the physical interaction, we simply cannot be as intimately committed to the communities in which we take part.

The immutability of human nature has thus far been left out of this equation. Absent some change in the way that we look at the world, external changes have no power to repair the breaches within our communities. What is needed is the transformation of our hearts and our minds.

If we do not do something more urgently, we will find that the very structure of our individual freedom will erode. In the Republic, the Greek philosopher Plato argued that democracy has the tendency to erode into tyranny. Without the proper course of action, we could find ourselves willing to give up on the very freedoms that have sustained the American people for over three centuries.

Thus stands the diagnosis of our current challenge. We have allowed ourselves to become disconnected from each other. We have exchanged our old civic virtues for a moral wasteland. The more difficult component is what is needed to repair this damage. This is where many social and political movements have made their entrance into various times in history. They have come on the scene with the idealistic nature of repairing the breach.

A planned agenda cannot change what is inside of man. If the insides are rotted, no amount of external dressing that can mask the foul taste.

What is instead needed is a change in our understanding of the world around us. It is something that must be brought to each and every individual human being. If we commit ourselves to such a change, over time, the repair will come naturally. We will easily find the politicians we are looking for, and we will know how to use technology rightly.

Fortunately for us, the repair works rather rapidly once we commit ourselves to the proper treatment. We will quickly find other people that will support and reinforce us. There is much evil inside of man, but with the right intervention the good can be redeemed.

This goal is not far from us, if we choose to accept the mission. We will establish a society, and a university community, that will stand as a lamppost testifying to our highest ideals.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu.

Warning! Ed/Op is not for everyone.
Ingredients include: Spitting rhetoric, dropping bombs, mind blowing quotes
Common symptoms: Complaining to your friends, telling a newspaper that it is dumb
Treatment: Write Letters to the Editor at editorial@dailycollegian.com or visit DailyCollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 30, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Wilco frontman Jeff Tweedy loosens up in Northampton

Jeff Tweedy performed solo at the Calvin Theater Friday night, offering new and old material spanning his entire career. The Wilco frontman rallied with the crowd, not against them as he has been known to do, doling out sing-alongs and playing three encores.

By Lee Taylor
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — The city of Northampton seems more like home to Jeff Tweedy each time he comes around.

The Wilco front man looks quite civilian walking down King Street on the afternoon of his sold-out performance at the Calvin Theater. One might not suspect that the ragged guy wearing a winter hat and gym shorts in 60 degree weather just came off of a cross-country tour with Neil Young or that he performed with members of Radiohead and the Smiths in New Zealand earlier this year.

Tweedy waved the alt-country and folk flags in Uncle Tupelo and early Wilco albums, but he has never made the claim himself that he is the spokesperson for anything. His habit of turning the unexpected corner keeps fans and critics on their feet. His gentle soul and fervent desire to create music has gained an attraction of so many fans with minimal help from radio airplay.

Each Wilco album plays like it's carrying the sonic weight of the world and when Jeff and company tour for a new album, they play it like they're selling you the best new car in the lot. Four years after his previous solo performance at the Calvin Theater, Tweedy comes back with more material but less to prove.

Wilco keyboardist Mikael Jorgensen's band Pronto – played in support of Jeff Tweedy. The usually meek Jorgensen stepped out from his usual role behind the keyboard and proved that he too can handle the front man duties quite well, singing and playing guitar.

Tweedy took the stage braving a roaring audience and competed for attention for the majority of the show. So reserved in person, he entered his element under the dim lights and actually played to the zeal of the audience, so drunk and in love with him.

The biggest surprise is how he did not keep the crowd waiting to hear fan favorites like "I'm Always in Love" and "Jesus, Etc.," whereas past solo shows saw these songs hurried in the set list among material from side projects and rarities.

Both "Remember the Mountain Bed" and "Bob Dylan's 49th Beard" did not need acoustic adaption from album form. The stripped down numbers flashed an aura of tradition and overlooked beauty in the simplicity of a folk song.

Tweedy segued the two folk songs into two new songs slated to appear on the next Wilco album. The songs were cheerfully recognized by most ardent fans, but left a questionable note for the rest. Picking up where 2007 release "Sky Blue Sky" left off, the new material embodies the same sweet yet melancholy spirit.

"Don't try to tell me my everlasting love is a lie," sang Tweedy, alluding to the peaks and valleys of marriage.

The selection of songs was well compromised except for the apparent omission of songs from "Sky Blue Sky," Wilco's most recent release. Hailed as "the greatest Eagles album the Eagles never made," by Entertainment Weekly, the album took on mixed reviews from fans.

Tweedy and Wilco have been using the internet to their advantage since they streamed "Yankee Hotel Foxtrot" before its release. The band's official website, wilcoworld.net, offers a form to request songs to be played live. Tweedy sarcastically chided the crowd for choosing the same songs he played last time he was in town.

Tweedy closed the first set with the poetic and sweet "California Stars," a song penned and closed half a century ago by late folk icon Woody Guthrie, but sung with as much heart as something he wrote himself.

Tweedy was surprisingly easy going with the

See TWEEDY on page 6

Conan replaces Leno's 'Show'

By Aaron Barnhart
McClatchy Newspapers

KANSAS CITY — As Conan O'Brien surveyed the scene, he couldn't resist telling a joke.

"There's a big breaking story that no one's gonna get!" he declared, as the entire newsroom of Kansas City's "Breaking News Leader," stood patiently in a long line waiting for a turn with him.

Conan O'Brien is taking over "The Tonight Show" from Jay Leno this spring. And for the past month, ever since he signed off "Late Night" for the last time, he's been meeting and greeting at NBC affiliates across the country.

Just as Leno once did when he found himself in second place behind David Letterman, Conan O'Brien is running for mayor of late night.

"This is nothing," he said after two hours of signing autographs, taping promos and doing interviews with local media. "Yesterday, wherever I was, they had me working 4 hours solid." (Actually, he was in both Indianapolis and St. Louis the day before.) "But I'm energized by it."

The 30-city blitz was built around what the tour's publicist called "markets of opportunity," mostly in the Midwest and Texas, where "Tonight" comes on at 10:35 p.m. CDT.

Despite being on the road for most of a month, O'Brien looked morning fresh while working the crowd. He signed a salesman's neck, held up babies that were brought to him and gave extra attention to Emily Morrison, the daughter of KSHB-TV videographer Chris Morrison. She brought a card to sign.

"Emily, nice to meet you," he wrote. "Best, Conan O'Brien."

Someone suggested that after he was done here, he should go next door and barge in on the St. Patrick's Day parade. That, Conan assured him, would be a bad idea. (Besides, he was expected Denver that afternoon.)

"I'd be like the Lucky Charms leprechaun – they'd tear me limb from limb," he said.

After working through a line that went 50 deep, he went into makeup and then the news studio, where the local news anchors of were waiting to take some formal shots.

"This is how we walk through town," he joked as he locked arms with them.

In the annals of late-night TV, this is as momentous a time as that watershed year of 1993, when Leno was fighting to save his job, Letterman was soaring to new heights on a new network and a 6-foot-4 beginner known only inside the offices of "The Simpsons" and "SNL" took Dave's place at NBC.

The stakes are just as high this year, but somehow they don't feel that way. In part that's because people's late-night entertainment options have grown exponentially since then. Besides "The Colbert Report" and Adult Swim, Conan's "Tonight Show" will have to compete with people playing tennis on Wii and watching "The Daily Show" commercial-free on their DVRs.

Also, the sense of the new is missing this time. No one's carving out virgin territory, the way Letterman did on CBS. Leno isn't leaving NBC, he's just taking his act to 10 p.m. ET starting this fall. Even Jimmy Fallon, who took over O'Brien's spot on NBC's "Late Night," is well-known to a generation of late-night watchers from his "SNL" years.

"In '93 I was clinging to Evel Knievel's rocket going over the Snake River canyon, and six

See CONAN on page 6

Still not an actor, John Cena back to big screen in 'Rounds'

By Roger Moore
The Orlando Sentinel

Renny Harlin, who hasn't had a hit since he divorced Geena Davis, was the right guy to lift World Wrestling Entertainment's infant film division to something closer to legitimacy. If anybody could shoot and cut an action film to hide wrassler John Cena's lack of Actors Studio training, it's the director who made Stallone look like a mountain climber in "Cliffhanger" and Willis look like he was really worried those planes were going to crash in "Die Hard 2."

In "12 Rounds," Cena isn't the stiff he was in "The Marine," in which he played a guy who gets after some villains who snatch his girlfriend. In "12 Rounds," Cena is positively Matt Damonish in playing a cop who battles an Irish terrorist who snatches his girlfriend. He's Matt Damon with muscles, or at least a guy who looks like Matt Damon (literally) on steroids, struggling to stop a speeding streetcar, to defuse a bomb, exit a falling elevator or get out of speeding cars, fire trucks or helicopters. He still can't emote worth a lick or even manage a cocked eyebrow, which wrestler Dwayne Johnson rode to film fame. But it doesn't matter as much this time.

Harlin, the Finnish action specialist, keeps his hero in motion - from the opening foot chase through a darkened 9TH Ward of New Orleans (where most houses are empty or boarded up) all the way to the "Can you believe this $@%#?" finale.

Cena plays Danny, a beat cop who runs down a terrorist the FBI has lost, and is promoted to detective for it. A year later, the bad guy escapes from a Florida prison and traps Danny in a "12 round" re-match with the one fellow who bested him.

"It's our anniversary," Miles Jackson (Aidan Gillen) purrs in an authentic Irish accent. "This is a game. Y' like games, Danny?"

See CENA on page 6

John Cena provides basic, emotionless action film bravado in World Wrestling Entertainment's "12 Rounds." The WWE superstar plays a hero cop bent on running down a terrorist who has gotten away from the FBI.

Chicago rapper, Common, sought to relieve dark times in the United States with a therapeutic record to inspire, enlighten, and illuminate. The Grammy winner puts responsibility on himself to encourage youths.

Common implements 'Mind Control' therapy

By Audra D.S. Burch
McClatchy Newspapers

Well before the government declared the country to be in recession, Common - the Chicago hip-hop artist – was already chronicling its pain.

He took pen to paper, offering a synthesized, hook-inspired mosaic of music in his eighth studio CD, "Universal Mind Control" (G.O.O.D. Music/Geffen).

"I initially wrote this, because the nation was in such a dark space," says Common. "The economy was slowing. We were facing challenges politically and socially. There's so much suffering. I wanted to write something inspiring, enlightening and illuminating. I wanted this CD to feel like therapy."

With Common, 37, born Lonnie Rashid Lynn Jr., fans get a bald, bearded wordsmith who is among the architects set on broadening hip-hop's stereotypical boundaries. They get a Grammy-winning artist who knows how to wow a crowd with raps steeped in the cadences of spoken word. They get a poet, a budding actor, an activist and an artist who has built a career on a template of thoughtful lyrics and social responsibility. His is a musical legacy that notes the dollar bill but doesn't linger at the altar of materialism, misogyny and crassness. Common seems to be about peace and love.

Since his first release, "Can I Borrow A Dollar?," Common has deftly managed the delicate balance of hip-hop's kinetic creativity and chronic excesses. In his second album, "Resurrection," he delivered "I Used To Love H.E.R.," a critical commentary on hip-hop music and the broader culture. He came from the underground but surfaced into mainstream notice after partnering with Kanye West, who produced his albums "Be" (2005) and "Finding Forever" (2007).

Common recorded parts of Universal Mind Control (2008) at South Beach Studios.

"I love Miami," he says. "I was down there working with the Neptunes. I would go into the studio and look out the window and see all that sunshine. It just allows you to release," he says. "It was a fitting place to record an album that I wanted to be inspirational and uplifting."

Away from the studio, Common supports PETA, vegetarianism and HIV/AIDS campaigns and his Common Ground Foundation, which is dedicated to youth empowerment. He was also featured in the "Yes We Can" video that supported Barack Obama's campaign.

"I think my greatest responsibility is to the youth," he says. "I try to encourage them and listen to them and help them to be better people. I try to help them be lovers of self, readers, intel-

See COMMON on page 6

Tweedy plays classics, covers

TWEEDY from page 5

deafening crowd. He actually played to the crowd's rowdy antics this time, rather than harassing them for being inattentive as he has done in the past.

The encore sets were the most fun portions of the show. The pop classic "A Shot in the Arm" was followed by a beautiful rendition of "Via Chicago," made sweet with harmonica.

Tweedy seldom acknowledges musicians of his generation, but his cover of Radiohead's "Fake Plastic Trees" was as wholehearted and sincere as one can be in emulating Thom Yorke's atypical vocal range.

The second encore featured another new song, "Wilco, The Song" followed by a most uninhibited performance of "Heavy Metal Drummer."

"I miss the innocence I've known. Playing Kiss covers, beautiful and stoned," were the only words Tweedy sang, having the audience sing the entire song for him in a sing-a-long more appropriate for a bar show than the Calvin Theater.

The usually reserved singer loved every moment of it. He appeared to be in a total artistic comfort zone, riling the crowd up by belting out "Casino Queen" from Wilco's debut country-rock release, "A.M." The songwriter cashed in his meager enthusiasm for full-on embracement of his fans.

For the third and final encore of the night, Tweedy came out to the very edge of the stage and stood perched over the front row.

"I noticed some of you trying to take pictures before," reminded Tweedy. "Well let me pose for you." Holding his guitar high above his head while playfully rendering arena rock poses, he proceeded to hammer at his unplugged acoustic guitar and, without a microphone, bellowed out "Dreamer in My Dreams," a blues rock romp with on the spot lyrics.

For the last song, he remained unplugged for the Uncle Tupelo number "Acuff-Rose," receiving a more thunderous applause than times he has appeared with his band behind him.

Tweedy has all the right in the world to boast a new air of optimism. His band has finally seen the revolving door of members come to a close and when it's just him on stage, he doesn't even have to sing every word to be heard loud and clear.

Lee Taylor can be reached at

Fledgling "Tonight Show" host Conan O'Brien goofs around with NBC 6's Pam Giganti recently in Florida. O'Brien has been touring around the country meeting with NBC associates in support of his new program.

Conan, 'Tonight' barbarian

O'Brien aspires to achieve lauded late-night supremacy

CONAN from page 5

months later the story was that it was a miracle I wasn't dead," said O'Brien as a makeup artist touched him up. "My wife said to me, 'You're not launching a show this time.' And she's right."

But that doesn't mean things won't change on "The Tonight Show with Conan O'Brien," which will sign on from new digs at L.A.'s Universal Studios June 1.

"When you think about the fact that we were on 'Late Night' for 16 years, closing in on 3,000 shows, I feel like if we DON'T change, we're going to be in trouble," he said. "It's like saying to the Beatles, 'Don't change your mop tops. Keep singing 'I Wanna Hold Your Hand.'

"There, I've just compared myself to the Beatles."

As he's traveled the country, O'Brien said he's noticed "a generational reaction" to his new time period. "Certain people will say, 'Well, this is a big change for you.' And then, anyone in their 30s or younger they say, 'Oh yeah, it's gonna be great.' It's no big deal."

So which is it, deal or no deal? Well, at first, a little of both.

He'll be playing to a larger crowd, both in the studio and at home. ("Tonight" draws about 5 million viewers a night, compared with 2 million for "Late Night.")

But the band will be the same. And Conan's getting his old sidekick back, Andy Richter, though this time he'll serve as "announcer" and will devise and star in comedy sketches, but won't be required to sit on stage the entire time.

"Andy gives us a deep bench," O'Brien said.

A lot of what will define the "Tonight Show" in the future - "the future, Conan?" - hasn't even been thought up yet, said its next host.

"When I fly around the country and talk to people, there are so many people who will ask me to please do the 'string dance' or growl at them," he said. "Well, most of those things I did unconsciously. I know this sounds narcissistic, but when I enjoy what I'm doing, that's good television. People want to see me having fun."

Cena loses emotion, ups action film bit

Danny (John Cena) hunts down terrorists in explosive chase scenes in Renny Harlin's new WWE film "12 Rounds."

CENA from page 5

Aye, lad, we all do. Except for Danny. But since, once again, Cena's playing a guy who has lost his girlfriend (Ashley Scott) to the bad guy, Danny must play along.

He is sent hurtling through New Orleans, wrecking stuff, saving (or not saving) innocent bystanders, trying to stop a streetcar not named Desire.

Very "Die Hard 3," in other words. Except that in this movie, while the WWE was willing to spring for lots of cars to wreck, it didn't blow a dime on casting a decent villain. Why not get a "heel" (a villain wrestler) to do the dirty work? At least he'd be scary. I kept expecting this Gillen fellow to blurt out, 'Aaaaaaallways after me Lucky Charms!'"

There's a prickly and not-helpful F.B.I. agent (Steve Harris) in the way, a partner (Brian J. White) who says "Have I ever let you down?" just after letting Danny down, and a lot of cell-phone threats, clues, tearful pleas and frantic calls for "back up."

Noisy, cut into a head-snapping blur with little room for humor, or for Cena to even try showing some emotion, "12 Rounds" is an occasionally exciting but always empty action-movie experience.

But there's news in this latest upgrade of the WWE movie brand, and it comes from behind the camera. The Finn isn't finished after all.

See for yourself.

Common mixes music with acting

COMMON from page 5

ligent people, professionals. I help them to dream."

Common created "Universal Mind Control" in between advancing his blossoming acting career. He"s already taken on quirky gangster flicks ("Smokin'Aces," "Street Kings" and "American Gangster") and stylish action flicks ("Wanted"), and now he's diving headlong into blockbusters with the upcoming "Terminator Salvation." There"s also a juicy role in a "major studio comedy" about which he remains gently evasive until the project and/or his role is greenlighted.

"I am so inspired by the whole acting process, from the acting class to the auditions to actually getting the part," Common says. "I am hungry for acting. I see myself becoming one of the greatest actors of our time a la Will, Denzel, Leonardo. I have been really trying to choose roles that I can sink my teeth into and learn from the people around me and grow."

Still, music remains a huge component of his DNA.

"They are both ways to express yourself artistically," he says. "I am still passionate about music. I still love going on stage and connecting with real people."

Common performs at the Essense Music Festival in New Orleans in 2007. His new album "Universal Mind Control," released last year, features production from The Neptunes.

Sitcom success eludes ABC

By Hal Boedeker
The Orlando Sentinel

How did ABC lose the gift for sitcoms?

The network of "Bewitched," "Happy Days" and "Barney Miller" can't come up with a half-hour hit these days. It's a pity, because a blockbuster sitcom like "Roseanne" or "Home Improvement" could lift the Disney-owned network.

ABC dramas "Grey's Anatomy," "Lost" and "Brothers & Sisters" continue to connect with young adults. "Dancing With the Stars" has revived ABC on Mondays.

But the network is limping in comedy. "Desperate Housewives" has turned dramatic lately, and "Ugly Betty" is waning. Despite adorable Christina Applegate, "Samantha Who?" hasn't achieved hit status.

Four new comedies don't seem likely to help ABC.

The best of the four is "Cupid," which debuts at 10 p.m. Tuesday. It isn't exactly new, either. This remake of a 1998 fantasy follows Trevor Pierce (Bobby Cannavale), who claims he's Cupid and says he must unite 100 couples to regain entry to Mount Olympus. (One hundred couples would translate into a five-year run.)

Dr. Claire McCrae (Sarah Paulson), an uptight psychiatrist, tries to reason with Trevor with little success. He's just a wild and crazy god when it comes to love.

The mediocre premiere presents two major problems. The first couple that Trevor helps - an Irish musician (Sean Maguire) and a New York reporter (Marguerite Moreau) - are more intriguing than Trevor and his shrink.

The remake isn't as charming as the original, which paired Jeremy Piven as Cupid and Paula Marshall as his doctor. Both have gone on to other comedies: He to HBO's "Entourage," she to CBS' "Gary Unmarried."

"In the Motherhood," which airs at 8 p.m. Thursdays and debuted last week, represents ABC's feeble attempt to transform a successful Web series into a sitcom. The main problem: The three moms are mighty annoying.

In the premiere, Rosemary (Megan Mullally) faked a pregnancy to gain attention. Jane (Cheryl Hines) lied to her children and her nanny (Horatio Sanz). Emily (Jessica St. Clair) leveled with her young children with disastrous results.

The lame comedy made me long for a lovable mom – say Marion Cunningham of "Happy Days" – and to see Hines back on "Curb Your Enthusiasm." But I did want to know more about Sanz's diet and exercise plan. He looks marvelous.

"Better Off Ted," which airs at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday, debuted a couple of weeks ago and has largely been ignored by the audience. And for good reason: This send-up of corporate life is no "Office" or "30 Rock."

Good guy Ted (Jay Harrington) is just too bland, and heartless villain Veronica (Portia de Rossi) constantly upstages him. The show sabotages its wackiness by shifting to single dad Ted's sweet daughter. ABC hasn't helped the show by slotting it after "Scrubs," which the audience has rejected. The prognosis: "Better Off Ted" will be dead soon.

"Surviving Suburbia," which debuts at 9:30 p.m. April 6, brings back Bob Saget of "Full House." He plays a cynical dad, but his acid outlook isn't enough to juice up this blah comedy, which was originally slated for The CW. Picking up comedy from theCW - that tells you how far ABC is from its "Happy Days" heyday.

The show is likely to be sampled because it will follow "Dancing With the Stars." But nothing in "Surviving Suburbia" is as amusing as "Dancing" host Tom Bergeron's quips or judge Bruno Tonioli's remarks. These days, ABC can't deliver the comedy in sitcoms.

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
■ PRESIDENTIAL APTS ■ COLLEGE INN APTS
■ COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS ■ LANTERN COURT APTS
■ PERRY APTS ■ MILL HOLLOW
■ 177 N. PLEASANT ST. ■ CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Costly errors hinder Minutemen

UMass suffers 3 straight, one-run losses to Fordham

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

Three-plus errors in multiple, one-run games can be a deciding factor for game outcomes.

The Massachusetts baseball team dropped all three games this past weekend to Fordham (9-13, 5-1 Atlantic 10).

With the Rams sweep of the Minutemen (6-12, 1-5), UMass has lost eight one-run games this season. This weekend was particularly difficult for the Minutemen because rumors have circulated that the program might get cut altogether from UMass, as part of unavoidable budget cuts due to the currently despressed economic situation.

"Our guys battled throughout the whole weekend under some tough circumstances; with all the rumors that have been circulating around," UMass coach Mike Stone said about the rumors of the program getting cut at some point. "But it's just a matter of staying composed, poised and doing some positive things at the end of the game."

UMass' starters gave up at least four walks in two of the team's three games in the Bronx this weekend.

In the second game of Saturday's double-header, senior Mike Dicato (2-2) issued just two free passes, a low on the weekend among the Minutemen starters. UMass lost 3-2, in 10 innings. The story of this game wasn't earned runs, but errors. Dicato allowed only one earned run in seven and one-third innings pitched.

Fordham hit Dicato for two runs overall, with one run coming off of an error by shortstop Matt Gedman in the second inning. Gedman started every game this weekend in place of Austin Weymouth, who is currently sidelined with a shoulder injury. Stone expects Weymouth to be out for several weeks.

Jared Freni had a difficult outing against the Rams on Friday. He gave up four runs and seven hits, including a two-run homer in five innings of work.

Gedman had one hit in the contest while also drawing three walks.

First baseman Peter Copa started the scoring for the Minutemen with an RBI sacrifice infield hit, driving in outfielder Brian Baudinet. Third baseman Jim MacDonald scored the only other UMass run with a single into left field in the fourth inning. Freshman catcher Tom Conley drove MacDonald in with a base hit to center later in the fourth.

MacDonald finished the day going 2-for-3 with a run scored.

Mike Gedman relieved Dicato and issued two walks that would lead to the loss. He gave up the winning hit to Fordham catcher Chris Walker, who had an RBI single.

The earlier game of the doubleheader was equally as uneventful for UMass. Mitchell Clegg (1-1) pitched six innings of one-hit baseball for the Minutemen while striking out three and giving up two runs. Walks were an issue, however. Clegg issued five walks, more walks than given up by all Rams pitchers combined.

Bryan Leigh relieved Clegg for the final two innings of the game, allowing just two hits and one walk.

"It wasn't the hits that hurt us, it was the walks," Stone said of the performances of his pitching staff. "We had some walks that led to our undoing and put us in difficult positions."

For the second time that day, UMass scored the first run, by way of a MacDonald double in the top of the second inning to drive in outfielder Mike Donato.

Fordham starting pitcher Jake Rabinowitz pitched eight innings, allowing one run on five hits while striking out seven and walking three.

Donato was the only Minuteman with multiple hits in the game. He went 2-for-4 with a run scored.

Friday night's game saw another three-error game for UMass. The first error came in the third inning when Mike Gedman committed an error that allowed a run to score, followed by a two-run homerun given up by Minuteman started Jared Freni (0-1), who gave up four runs off of seven hits in five innings.

Chris Kaible earned the win for Fordham.

Next, UMass will travel to Storrs, Conn. to face Connecticut (11-11) for the first of two meetings this season.

Mitchel Clegg threw a one-hitter Saturday against St. Bonaventure, but he walked five batters and surrendered two runs in the Minutemen's 2-1 loss to the Fordham Rams.

The Huskies are hitting .289 this season behind the consistent offense of shortstop Mike Olt. He has five homers this season and 23 RBIs.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Kentucky job not all it's cracked up to be

Wildcats head coach Billy Gillispie was officially fired by Kentucky on Friday after a quarterfinals loss in the NIT. The Wildcat's 14 losses in 2008-09 were the second most in Kentucky history.

By Gil LeBreton
McClatchy Newspapers

FORT WORTH, Texas — It was legendary football coach Paul "Bear" Bryant who first told us all we need to know about Kentucky basketball.

Bryant coached the Wildcats' football team for eight seasons beginning in 1946, a period that overlapped the 42-year run of basketball legend Adolph Rupp.

As the late Bryant told it, both coaches were honored by the university one year for having had successful seasons.

Rupp was presented a new Cadillac. Bryant was rewarded with a new cigarette lighter.

As current evidence suggests, basketball at Kentucky hasn't changed much since. In the football-crazy Southeastern Conference, Kentucky is like the neighbors who insist upon driving to another church.

One by one, Wildcats supporters weighed in on the Internet this weekend, reminding us that basketball at Kentucky entails "higher expectations." There is, some suggested, an "image" that Kentucky basketball is expected to uphold.

And in the end, Billy Clyde Gillispie of Graford, Texas, was deemed to be incapable of living up to that.

What a crock.

There is little evidence to suggest that Gillispie was any different a head coach in his two seasons at Kentucky than he was in his three years (2004-07) at Texas A&M.

Stubborn and occasionally ornery? Yes.

Testy, at times, with the media? Indeed.

Demanding and hard-driving on his players? Absolutely.

Assembling and molding an elite program? Well, Kentucky will never know.

Gillispie was fired Friday by Kentucky athletic director Mitch Barnhart. As Barnhart put it, "He's a good basketball coach, but sometimes it's just not the right fit."

There is more to the job than wins and losses, the AD said. And after seeing Eddie Sutton, Rick Pitino, Tubby Smith and Gillispie all try to navigate the program's meat-grinder gauntlet, that's hard to argue.

"This is a cradle-to-grave love," Barnhart said at a Friday news conference.

Without question, Kentucky fans adore their basketball Wildcats. But it's no more than bayou fans love their LSU football Tigers. No more than Florida and Georgia fans love their Gators or Bulldogs.

The difference is in the delusion. The basketball expectations at Kentucky border on fantasy.

Rupp won four NCAA championships. In the 50 years since Rupp's last one, the Wildcats have won three.

During the same 50 years, both Southern Cal and Alabama can claim at least shares of seven national championships in football. Nebraska and Miami have won five. Texas, Oklahoma and Notre Dame have won four national titles.

All those schools have fired and hired football coaches over the past 20 years. But in ushering out Gillispie and turning on his predecessor, Smith, who won a national title in 1998, Kentucky basketball has shown how reckless its expectations have become.

Granted, Gillispie is no stand-up comic. My few experiences with him at A&M were what I would call "cautiously professional." He sneered at a couple of postgame questions, answered the rest, and then departed the interview room without applause. The grumbling on the street in Lexington is that Gillispie didn't shake enough hands or pucker up to enough people in their navy blue suit.

Schneider save clinches win

M. LACROSSE from page 10

the game, Penn State's leading scorer Chris Hogan (one goal) took one last shot hoping to tie the game at nine, but Schneider was ready and his save secured the Minutemen's victory.

"In the first quarter [Hogan] stuck the same type of shot on me. It wasn't that I was guessing he was going to shoot that, I just knew I got to get my hands up, my body up," Schneider said. "And I made a real tough save on a great shot."

UMass (5-3, 2-0 ECAC) started the scoring off, going up 2-0 at the start of the first period with a man-up goal by Mike Fetterly at 13 minutes, 48 seconds and Balise's first goal at 8:43.

The teams traded goals for the majority of the match up – the game was tied six different times (at two, three, four, six, seven and eight). Penn State took the lead twice at 14:05 in the second period with a goal from Colton Voshurgh making the score 3-2, and again at 9:41 in the second with Jack Forster's second goal of the game, putting the score at 4-3.

The third period was a struggle for the Minutemen, who were outscored 2-1, they had seven turnovers compared to Penn State's one, and only took six shots to the Nittany Lion's 15.

"Not a great period for us, especially coming out leading 6-4," Cannella said. "We had 18 turnovers for the game, seven in the third quarter. You've got to get it to 10 or 12 a game, limit it that way. That really cost us; it allowed Penn State to really handle the ball a lot in the third quarter, we got tired defensively."

Balise had the lone UMass goal in the third period after a successful offensive play by the Minutemen.

"It was one of the only times in the third quarter that we moved the ball more than once," said Cannella. "We moved it twice and got it to Timmy and fortunately he put it where Adams (13 saves) wasn't. It was a huge goal for us."

The Minutemen were successful on clears, going 21-for-24. Penn State (3-5, 0-3 ECAC) failed on seven clears, going 21-for-28, and failed clears often resulted in goals for UMass. Failed clears have harmed UMass against teams like Brown, Loyola and Albany, where the Minutemen have turned the ball over and the opposing team has scored.

The Minutemen have struggled maintaining momentum and winning back-to-back games. UMass has a chance to extend its winning streak to three when it hosts St. John's next Saturday.

"It's great to get a second one in a row for our whole team's confidence," Balise said. "Now we can try and keep this rolling for our next game."

GAME NOTES

Connolly now has 22 goals and three assists on the season. Connolly's game-winning goal was his second of the season ... UMass had goals from five players: Connolly, Balise, Art Kell, Ryan Hantverk and Mike Fetterly.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com.

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781-396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

New WORLD Theater
UMass FINE ARTS CENTER
30th Anniversary 1979-2009
"Best of 2050"
The Best of 2050!
Thu. & Fri. April 2 & 3
8 pm Bowker Auditorium
Amerivillle by Universes
Thu. & Fri. April 30 & May 1
8 pm Bowker Auditorium
TICKETS $15 General Public $5 Sponsored by Imagine
$5 Students with UID at FAC Box Office for tickets
For info about shows call NWT at 413-545-1972
www.newworldtheater.org

Minutewomen bounce back

UMass tied atop Atlantic 10 standings after 2 straight wins

BY HOLLY J. GALVIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There's nothing quite like traveling down the road to redemption.

Less than 72 hours removed from its worst loss of the season, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team powered its way to a three-way tie atop the Atlantic Ten conference standings after earning two road wins in Philadelphia – home to both this year's Atlantic 10 Tournament and the team that played spoiler against UMass in last year's conference championship game, the Temple Owls.

UMass (5-6, 2-0 A-10) won't be satisfied until a return visit to the City of Brotherly Love yields a place atop these same standings when it really matters: the A-10 Championships on April 24.

Nevertheless, conference play got off to an excellent start Friday for the Minutewomen.

UMass 17
La Salle 2

UMass blew out La Salle, 17-2 in its conference opener. Then on Sunday the Minutewomen gutted out a come from behind 10-8 win over Saint Joseph's.

UMass 10
St. Joe's 8

Both opponents have recently defeated slumping defending champion Temple (0-9, 0-2 A-10).

The two UMass wins have coincidentally set up an opportunity for the Minutewomen to take full control of the A-10 standings next weekend when fellow league leaders Richmond and George Washington come to Amherst.

In Sunday's back-and-forth scoring bout with St. Joseph's, however, it was the Minutewomen who came out on top. With the score tied at seven with 23 minutes to play in the second half, UMass turned things up a notch once the game went foul-crazy.

SJU's Jenna Martino and Rae Wojnar were both carded in the seventh minute of the second half, giving UMass a two-man advantage the Minutewomen underclassmen quickly made the Hawks pay for. Controlling possession, sophomore Haley Smith fed freshman Danielle Pelletier for a goal and an 8-7 lead. Smith, who logged two goals and two assists in all, had scored the previous UMass goal with only 9 seconds remaining in the first half to initially tie the game.

Sophomore Jackie Lyons, whom Venechanos had during preseason noted as a player who "likes to put the team on her back," scored what would eventually be the game-winner 16 minutes, 45 seconds into the game. Lyons' goal, her fourth of the afternoon and 21st of the season, was scored with a man-down in a game loaded with penalties.

Minutes later, UMass called a timeout with 9:14 to go. From there, the game was for the Minutewomen's taking, and UMass coach Alexis Venechanos' squad did not disappoint.

Pelletier would later find the back of the net once more to make it 10-8 and give UMass a bit more breathing room and the defense was able to hold the lead, a game situation Venechanos had stressed earlier this season.

The defensive wall began with recent A-10 Rookie of the Week Katie Florence, whose difficult game against No. 1 Northeastern seemed little but a distant memory in Philadelphia

Down by two with under five minutes to play, the Hawks were not about to leave their home turf without a struggle, maintaining a lengthy possession in UMass' defensive zone. Florence seemed in top form, however, making two clutch saves on shots taken inside the circle from SJU's Jenna Martino and Jessica Westlake. After a failed clear attempt, Florence stopped a close left wing shot from the Hawks' Grace Dinn to preserve both the lead and the win.

Saturday's 17-2 win over La Salle had an entirely different flavor, providing a timely confidence boost immediately after a two-game stretch where the Minutewomen were outscored 40-15. UMass came in with a perfect 10-0 history against the Explorers, and remained unbeaten against La Salle, as nine different Minutewomen scored in the blowout, which included 16 unanswered UMass goals.

Coming off a hat trick against the top team the country, Meghan Reddy set a career-high draw control record of 12, and with over a month to go in the season, is just seven draw controls shy of the all-time team record set by Reddy's fellow captain Holly Drown in 2007.

Holly J. Galvin can be reached at hgalvin@student.umass.edu

STANLEY GUTSTEIN

Stephanie Hopkins, right grabs a pass earlier this season against Stony Brook. Last Friday, The Minutewomen crushed La Salle 17-2 in their first Atlantic 10 game. UMass has never lost to the Explorers, going 11-0 all-time.

STANLEY GUTSTEIN

Merritt Cosgrove and the Minutewomen recovered from a 22-5 loss to No. 1 Northwestern on Wednesday with back-to-back road wins

Salato's bat, Plourde's arm control Bonnie's

SOFTBALL from page 10

defense in the back ... it just didn't matter if anyone got a hit [because] the defense is going to make the plays," Plourde said.

After playing their first 21 games on the road, Plourde spoke for the rest of her teammates on how they felt after playing their first series at home.

"It feels amazing versus being on the road," Plourde said. "It's so different being with your own crowd. There's definitely nothing better."

The first inning proved to be trouble for Plourde, too, but catcher Meghan Carta made sure the Bonnies would stay off the board, throwing out Shelly Seeger when she tried to steal second.

At the bottom of the inning, UMass got on the board after a nice heads-up play by Normandin. After singling to right field, Normandin stole second after noticing that pitcher Erin Nargi's attention was elsewhere.

The next batter Magill laid down a bunt, intending to move Normandin to third base. Nargi's throw to first base was low and skipped by Maureen Wells allowing Normandin to score.

Like Balschmiter, Plourde settled down immediately after the first inning. The freshman struck out the side in the second and third inning.

Samantha Salato provided all the offense the Minutemen would need driving in five RBIs on the day hitting a bases loaded triple in the second inning extending UMass' lead to 7-0.

Salato hit a home run later in the fourth inning, only two batters after Magill sent one over the fence.

The game was called after the fifth inning with UMass leading 10-2.

GAME NOTES

Sortino was hit with a line drive in the second inning and was brought to the hospital. She walked off the field on her own accord.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

Team pleased by production, dependability of freshmen

FRESHMEN from page 10

season than Bailey Sanders, the only other pitcher on the roster.

At the plate, Magill has become one of the top hitters in UMass' lineup. The second basemen has become a versatile tool for the Minutewomen. Magill has speed having stolen two bases in three attempts, has occasional power with a double, triple and a homerun – she hit her first career homerun in Saturday's win – and she is as dependable as anyone can be with a .375 batting average.

"Kyllie means a great deal to this team, she is very consistent," Merchant said. "Everyday you know what you're going to get from Kylie, she's going to work hard, she is going to come every single day and give you the same effort."

The consistency that Magill has brought at the plate and in practice earned her the No. 2 spot in the line up on Saturday after batting in the nine spot for most of the season.

"[Kyllie] has been doing a great job at the plate, having great at bats so we wanted to get her a couple more at bats each game," Merchant said.

Magill went 5-for-5 last weekend against Dayton scoring four runs and continued her success this past weekend. In Friday's matchup the rookie went 1-for-3 scoring a run and then followed that up with a 1-for-1 game on Saturday with two runs scored and two RBI. Magill reached base in her two other plate appearances, the first on a sacrifice bunt and an error and the other when she was hit by a pitch with the bases loaded.

The hits in both games brings her current hitting streak to seven games and gives her hits in 12 of her last 13 games.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

BRIAN THERIAULT HOAN

Samantha Salato was the offensive spark for UMass on Saturday. She drove in five RBIs in the Minutewomen's 10-2 win over St. Bonaventure. This included a bases-loaded triple in the second inning and a two-run home run in the fourth. The game was called after five innings.

NEED AN APARTMENT?
PUFFTON VILLAGE
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Check out www.Dailycollegian.com as sports editors Eli Rosenswaike and Jeffrey Larlard are joined by Boston Herald Columnist, WEEI regular and UMass Alum Steve Buckley as they podcast about the future of UMass baseball, first year basketball head coach Derek Kellogg and much more.

Happy days.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | 1 | 5 | | | | | 3 |
| | | 7 | | 6 | 8 | | 9 | 4 |
| | | | | | 2 | | | |
| 5 | | 6 | | | 7 | | 8 | |
| | | | | 5 | | | | |
| | 7 | | 9 | | | 3 | | 6 |
| | | | 2 | | | | | |
| 2 | 5 | | 8 | 4 | | 1 | | |
| 7 | | | | | 9 | 8 | | |

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I believe that banking institutions are more dangerous to our liberties than standing armies."

— Thomas Jefferson

TRICK BAG BY ANNIE MONTAGUE

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

BLISS BY HARRY BLISS

"For the last time — there is no 'other woman'!"

CHEAP CITY BY MICHAEL CAPOZZOLA

ACROSS
1 Tibetan guru
5 Steel bar
10 Decorate ory
14 Acted like
15 Aquarium resident
16 Literary pseudonym
17 Medium-sized dog
20 Draft board abbr
21 Word with up or backer
22 Assert without proof
23 Loathe
25 Curvy characters
26 Corpse
29 Unser & Capp
31 Sprightly
32 Guinneas, e.g
33 Controversial defense org
37 Broccoli and asparagus
41 Chews and swallows
42 Old age security abbr
43 Rope with a slipknot
44 Impact's noise
45 Like a sacher bag
47 Russian girl's name
51 " Goes By"
53 Resist
55 Permanent name
58 Scallop's home
59 Leukocytes
62 Uno in Ulm
63 Pig out
64 Borders
65 Invasion date
66 4-legged critter
67 Locale

DOWN
1 Can't keep up
2 Military addrs.
3 Allen & Gibson
4 Recipe direction
5 Light
6 Part of a stove
7 Items used in a combat sport
8 Fitting
9 " Breckinridge"
10 Despicable fellows
11 Holiday aides
12 Feudal subject
13 Makes smaller
18 Five and six
19 du Verit
23 Valleys
24 Saga
26 Canary's home
27 Taj Mahal's site
28 Limited intake
30 Permit
32 Turkish title
33 Have to pick feet justified in complaining
34 Blood problem
35 majeste
36 Not new 38 By way of
39 Ms. Bombeck
40 In need of iron
44 Pedestal
45 Larry, for one
46 Glowing coal
47 Planted
48 Insect
49 bifida
50 -tosky
52 Rock
54 Declines
56 Undergarment
57 "Sesame Street" fellow
58 Watson, to Holmes abbr
60 Enkindled
61 Trauma dirs

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst Outreach
THINK AHEAD
Two 6-week summer sessions
Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net
Registration begins March 9
SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You will be surprised and amazed how well the new mullet suits your hair care needs.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Ask your Virgo English professor the tough questions this week.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You are destined for fame, thanks to an especially memorable episode of "To Catch A Predator."

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Your high school guidance counselor always told you to "do what you love," even if what you love could involve 20-25 years in prison.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
A revolving door will be your undoing today, but thanks to modern medicine you will be back on your feet in just a few months.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
There are plenty of bad but tolerable jobs out there, but you still insist on following the elephant parade with a shovel and bucket.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Helpful hint: The Du Bois elevators have enough oxygen for a single trapped passenger to last them 3.4 hours.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You've devoted your life to analyzing poems that others have written in mere seconds... Do you ever feel that you have wasted it?

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You tell everyone that your favorite color is beige, but secretly deep down, you know that it is still magenta that is your true love.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You've got huge feet, which means one thing, and one thing only: You've got a bright future as a clown.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
When the skies turn black and open up with a roar of thunder, you'll know that you took the wrong brand of aspirin.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Start a slow clap today to celebrate another successfully done slow clap. Hopefully someone else will respond to yours in kind.

DON'T MESS WITH LEXUS
TEXAS
COMICS @ DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

ANNOUNCEMENT

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

FOR RENT

Amherst: 2,3, & 4 bedroom apartments, $1200-$2250. FREE HEAT! Great Specials! www.MillValleyApts.com or 413-253-7377

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room eat in kitchen, pantry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 miles to campus! www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

FOUND

Bike near C.C. Call 230-3593 to identify.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 30, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Connolly ices victory

UMass beats No. 14 Penn State in thriller

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Jim Connolly did it again.

The No. 14 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team thanked its senior attack once again on Saturday afternoon after he scored the game-winning goal with 55.2 seconds left in the game to beat Penn State, 9-8.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 9 |
| Penn St. | 8 |

The Minutemen extended their winning streak to two after Connolly's diving, wraparound shot snuck over goalkeeper Drew Adams' right shoulder.

"I don't know what it was, but he got in pretty tight and he got past them and he finished it," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "Thankfully for us, it was a great individual play from a senior and obviously you want your seniors to play big for you in games like this."

The performance of the senior's once again led to the Minutemen's win, with a hat trick from Connolly and Tim Balise, along with a strong performance in goal by Doc Schneider (15 saves, including 12 in the second half).

With 30 seconds remaining in

See M. LACROSSE on page 7

SARA FITZGERALD/COLLEGIAN

Jim Connolly, (center), scored the game-winning goal with 55 seconds left. Connolly leads the Minutemen with 22 goals and three assists.

SARA FITZGERALD/COLLEGIAN

Minuteman midfielder Rory Pedrick attempts to slip past the defense. UMass defeated the No. 14 Nittany Lions in a wild back-and-forth game, where the Minutemen did not take the lead until the final minute.

Pitching leads Minutewomen

UMass outscores SBU 14–2 in conference opening series

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team started their home-opening weekend the way any team would want — with two wins over a conference opponent. The Minutewomen swept their weekend series against St. Bonaventure.

Reliable Brandice Balschmiter, didn't have her best outing of the season, nonetheless, she was still a dominant force. The senior pitched a complete game in UMass' 4-0 win, striking out nine while allowing only four hits in Friday's game.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 10 |
| SBU | 2 |
| UMass | 4 |
| SBU | 0 |

"I think the team played pretty well, getting the win on opening day is always great," Balschmiter said. "I think I was able to change speeds on my pitches today a lot better than I have in the past. Overall, I'm happy we got the win and that's all that matters."

After a difficult first inning where Balschmiter struck out two batters, but allowed two hits, the senior settled down and put aside the home opener jitters behind her. Balschmiter allowed only two more hits over the next six innings.

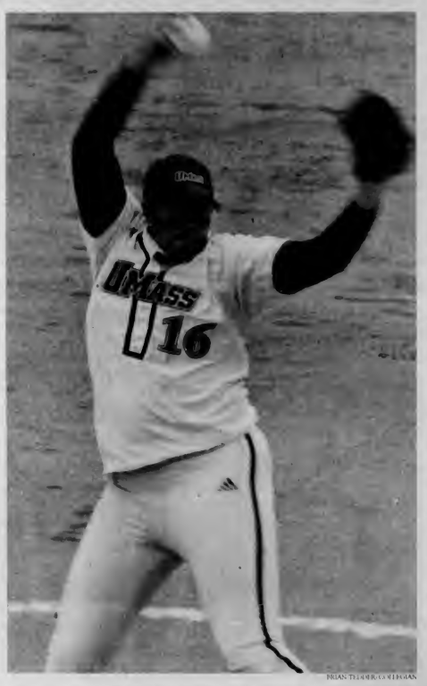
"I thought [the whole team had home opener jitters.] I thought we were really tight and we did our best to work our way out of it," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "We came up big when the situation counted, we moved the runner and we got some timely hits."

The defense behind Balschmiter was just as reliable as her. In the top of the fourth, shortstop Whitney Williams made a diving stop on a sharp ground ball that was destined for the open outfield grass. She couldn't get the out at first base, but the changed a certain double into a single.

Williams started UMass' fourth inning rally, leading off the inning by taking four straight balls from St. Bonaventure (2-16, 0-4 Atlantic 10) pitcher Sherri Thompson. Whitney Mollica followed up by laying down a perfect sacrifice bunt to advance Williams to second base. Sarah Reeves then hit a line drive to St. Bonaventure second baseman Andrea Swanger, who bobbled the ball, which prevented any play at either base.

After a seven pitch at bat Michelle Libby doubled off the right field wall driving in both Williams and Reeves.

The following inning UMass (14-6, 4-0 Atlantic 10) added to their lead.



Kyllie Magill led off the inning with a double to right field and scored after Carly Normandin singled to centerfield.

Libby drove in UMass' fourth run in the sixth inning.

In Saturday's game, the Minutewomen gave the ball to freshman Sarah Plourde. She had one of her best outings of the season, pitching five innings, striking out 12 batters and allowing only two earned runs en route to a 10-2 victory.

"I thought I moved my pitches around really well and the

See SOFTBALL on page 8

BRIAN TEDESCO/COLLEGIAN

Brandice Balschmiter had a typical outstanding performance on Friday pitching a complete game shutout with seven strikeouts in UMass 4–0 win.

Rookies Plourde, Magill crucial contributors

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For a team loaded with veteran experience, any contribution from a rookie is welcome. The contributions the Massachusetts softball team is getting from two of its freshmen have been more than that.

One addition, Sara Plourde, has established herself as a dominant force on the mound in just six appearances and the other addition, Kyllie Magill, has cemented a spot in UMass' (15-6, 4-0 Atlantic 10) line up and at second base.

For Plourde, her journey with the No. 18 Minutewomen began back on Feb. 20 against then-No. 9 Tennessee. Her first collegiate appearance was somewhat of a rough outing – by the standards she has set so far this season – she gave up three hits, three walks and two runs in three innings of relief in a 6-1 loss.

Since her first appearance, Plourde has built a 3-0 record in three starts, all three of which were complete games. After giving up three hits and two runs in her first outing, Plourde has given up five more hits and three runs in five other appearances. One of those appearances was a no-hitter against A-10 foe Dayton. If not for a hits batsmen on Plourde's second pitch of the game, the freshman would have pitched a perfect game in just her second career start.

"Sara Plourde is going to be great. She works really hard and she has good command of her rise ball," UMass assistant coach Jessica Merchant said after Plourde beat St. Bonaventure 10-2 on Saturday. "She kept [St. Bonaventure] off balance, but needs to get ahead a little more. That will come from time."

The freshman ranks second on the team in earned-run average (1.36), just behind the three-time Easton All-American Brandice Balschmiter (1.34). Her opponent's batting average also ranks first on the pitching staff at .098.

Plourde has also established herself as a strikeout pitcher early in her career with impeccable control. Through 25.2 innings pitched, Plourde has struck out 42 batters against only walking seven. In Saturday's victory over the Bonnies (2-16, 0-4 A-10), Plourde struck out 12, including three innings where she struck out the side. Saturday's performance was one strikeout shy of her career best (13), which she set March 14 against Jacksonville.

The strong performances by Plourde has moved her to what appears to be the No. 2 spot in UMass' (15-6, 4-0 A-10) rotation. Plourde has pitched more innings (25.2 to 19) and made more appearances (six to four) so far in the

See FRESHMEN on page 8

UM struggles in road trip, losing streak extends further

BY STEVE LEVINE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It was a tough weekend for the Massachusetts tennis team, as the Minutewomen dropped both of their road matches against southern foes No. 55 Old Dominion and the Atlantic 10 powerhouse team of Richmond. The back-to-back losses lowered UMass' record to 8-10. The team has lost all four games during its road trip across the south.

| | |
|---|---|
| Old Dominion | 6 |
| UMass | 1 |
| Richmond | 7 |
| UMass | 0 |

After losing two straight matches in Florida against Barry and Florida Atlantic, the Minutewomen traveled to Virginia for the second half of their trek down south. UMass was welcomed last Friday by Old Dominion, one of the strongest teams in the nation. UMass could only muster two wins on the day, coming from No. 5 singles player, Laura Danai, as well as the No. 3 doubles team of Candynce Boney and Lauren McKay.

Danai's victory did not come easily, as the match eventually called for a third set tiebreak. Danai won the first set, 6-2, dropped the second set, 6-1, and then won the tiebreak, 10-7. The victory improved Danai's singles record this season to an impressive 12-5. Boney and McKay provided UMass with its other victory, winning the No. 3 doubles match, 8-4.

With the win, the Monarchs improved to 17-4.

In Richmond, the Minutewomen's fate was not much better, as they dropped a 7-0 decision against Richmond. With the win, the Spiders improve to 13-4, with a 21-0 streak against A-10 opponents.

UMass lost every match of the day, most of them by a considerable margin. The most competitive matches came from the No. 6 singles match and the No. 3 doubles match.

At No. 6 singles, Lauren McKay split the first two sets before losing the tiebreak, 6-2. At No. 3 doubles, it was McKay again forcing a tiebreak with teammate Boney, with UMass eventually falling, 8-6.

Aside from those two matches, the Minutewomen could not find many other bright moments. At No. 1 singles, Boney fell to UR's Pamela Duran, 6-3, 6-3. At the No. 2 match, Kaitlyn Carpenter followed suit as she fell to UR's Erin Clark, 6-4, 6-1. No. 3, Maude LeCluyse lost to UR's Helen Cunningham, 6-1, 6-1. No. 4, Tanisha Hodgson fell to UR's Ashlee Vosters. And finally No. 5, Danai lost to UR's Isabel Arana.

The No. 1 doubles team of LeCluyse and Danai lost, 8-6, while the No. 2 team of Hodgson and Carpenter fell, 8-1.

In the midst of a four-game losing streak, the Minutewomen hope to reverse the trend as they return to Massachusetts for a match slated against Boston College in Chestnut Hill, Mass. Like UMass, BC has also been struggling, as it has dropped three of its last four matches. Following this match, UMass has just three opponents remaining before the start of the A-10 Championships that begin on April 17.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO/MEGAN ESTATE

Laura Dinai's win in a third set tiebreaker at Old Dominion was one of the few bright spots during an otherwise disappointing weekend.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 59 LOW: 32 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, MARCH 31, 2009

A Cardinal visit

BY MATTHEW M. ROBARE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Cardinal Sean Patrick O'Malley visited the University of Massachusetts' Newman Center on Sunday to join the community for Mass and preach a homily.

Sean Patrick Cardinal O'Malley, the Archbishop of Boston, celebrated Mass at the Newman Catholic Center at the University of Massachusetts on Sunday.

Before the 7 p.m. student Mass, Cardinal O'Malley joined the Newman community in a free spaghetti dinner.

Joining O'Malley for the Mass were the Bishop Timothy A. McDonnell of Springfield, the Rev. Dan Hennessey, director of vocations for the Archdiocese of Boston, the Rev. Gary Dailey, director of vocations for the Diocese of Springfield, the Rev. John Gawienowski, UMass '80; the Rev. Sean O'Manion, UMass '93 and '99; and the Rev. Doug McGonagle, director of the Newman Center.

In his homily, O'Malley preached on the topic of loving God and Jesus Christ.

O'Malley spoke of the Gospel of John, when Christ told his disciples to "love each other, as I have loved you."

With that as his theme, he told several stories to illustrate it, such as one about a man who burned down the house he had worked in all his life in order to save his neighbors.

O'Malley also spoke about the need to unite with Christ's suffering in order to fulfill the commandment and connected it to the Gospel reading for the day, quoting Jesus in the Bible to say, "Anyone who loves his life shall lose it, and anyone who hates his life in this world will keep it to life eternal."

His homily was well received by all that attended.

"I think it's wonderful. One of the things we forget is that people from all over come to the Newman Center and the more we can help them realize

See CARDINAL on page 2

Cardinal Sean Patrick O'Malley, Archbishop of Boston, visited The Newman Center at UMass on Sunday to join its Mass.

Man arrested for recent break-in ### Springfield man charged with breaking and entering, larceny of property in Amherst

BY SAM BUTTERFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Amherst Police on Friday arrested a Springfield man on charges of breaking and entering and larceny of property over $250 in connection to a break-in last Wednesday at the Boulders apartment complex on East Hadley Road.

Police arrested 21-year-old Herbert Nicholas Levy on Southampton Road in Westfield at approximately 3 p.m. on Thursday.

Levy was held in lieu of $1,000 bail and was arraigned Friday at Eastern Hampshire District Court in Belchertown, Mass.

Police said Levy had most of the property they believe was stolen from the Boulders apartment at the time of his arrest.

Among the items taken from the apartment, according to the police, were a television, a laptop and Nintendo Wii and Xbox video game consoles.

Police said they were unsure if Levy was involved in a string of other recent burglaries around Amherst and that their investigation into that matter, as well as whether there may be accomplices, continues.

Amherst Police Lt. Ronald Young said that although some home invasions did involve forced entry, students can also take a good deal of precaution against burglary by locking entry points to their homes.

"Although this break involved a forced entry," he said, "A surprising number of breaks involving student housing is through unlocked windows and doors. A decent lock and awareness will prevent a lot of problems."

Young added that the APD often recovers items whose owners are unidentifiable.

"It is also not uncommon for us to recover stolen property and not know who the owners are – the property is not marked and most people do not know their serial numbers, there are a lot of iPods in Amherst," he quipped.

One University of Massachusetts student who was the victim of a similar break-in during spring break said he feels it could happen to anyone at any given time.

"They [the burglers] came in right through the front door," said UMass senior Jack Keverian.

"The majority of the things taken were my roommate's — they got his Burberry suit, his [PlayStation 3]. From me the biggest thing they got was my TV," said Keverian, a resident of the Salem Place apartment complex in Amherst.

When asked whether he thought Amherst area homes and apartments are generally safe from intrusion, Keverian said "No," and that he felt similar problems could happen elsewhere.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sjbutterfield@gmail.com.

Local women contact police

Multiple reports of a man in a vehicle following walkers

BY SAM BUTTERFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Several women have recently reported being accosted or trailed by a man in a vehicle as they have gone for walks in Hadley, Sunderland and Amherst.

The first incident was reported in Hadley on Feb. 26, by a female who said a white male in a silver sports utility vehicle stopped as she walked on Hockanum Road and asked for directions, according to Hadley Police Chief Dennis J. Huckowicz.

After the man asked for directions, he walked down the road behind her as she returned to her home in South Hadley.

The suspect was described as being between 40 and 60 years old, with a dark beard and graying dark hair.

Huckowicz said the incidents seem to indicate that different men have been responsible, as the police have received varying descriptions of both the vehicles involved and men involved, Huckowicz stressed that the first incident was the only time where the driver had even spoken to any of the women.

"There haven't been any further reports, these have been different incidents and we've been hearing different descriptions of both the men and the vehicles," he said, "there has only been one incident where there's been any sort of conversation or contact," he added, referring to the first case.

In Sunderland, a separate incident occurred the night of March 10, when a woman was walking her dogs on Silver Lane.

A man in a light-colored minivan slowed down as he approached the woman and opened his door, leading the woman to grab her dogs and run home.

She reportedly told police she heard running footsteps behind her.

Upon entering her home, the woman said she heard a car door slam and a vehicle drive away.

She described the man as a white male in his mid-30s to 40s, balding, with an average build.

Sunderland Police said the matter had been addressed, and that while they were unsure if any actual crime had been committed, they had spoken to an individual and nothing further had been reported.

The next two incidents both occurred March 11. A woman in Hadley told police she was walking on Shattuck Road when a man in a tan car slowed to her walking pace, rolled down his passenger window, and followed her for a period without saying anything.

The second instance was reported by a woman who was jogging on Smith Road in Amherst the night of March 11.

She said a man slowed his vehicle and spoke to her, though she told police she did not feel threatened.

The Sunderland Police Department said it wants to inform residents there was the potential for crime to be committed and for women to be assaulted or harassed, but that no incident had actually been criminal in nature and that they had looked into the matter and dealt with it.

The SPD, as well as the Amherst Police Department, will soon offer a six-week RAD (Rape Aggression Defense) course to educate women in self-defense and risk avoidance.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sjbutterfield@gmail.com.

UMass greens with the leaves

SAMANTHA WEISMAN/COLLEGIAN

University of Massachusetts students hung plastic water bottles from a tree at the bottom of Central's hill as a visual display, citing the need for students to "Ditch the Bottle" and stop using water bottles as part of an environmentally friendly initiative.

ARTS & LIVING

SAND T: NEW WORKS

Artist Sand T's work is being displayed at the Student Union Art Gallery. Her work is a simple visual experience with the use of basic elements.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

ANOTHER LOSS

The UMass baseball team dropped to 6–13 this season after an 8–1 loss to UConn in Storrs, Conn. The Minutemen will play their first home game and their first Atlantic 10 contest this weekend.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORAL & OPINION

COLUMN | BUREAUCRACY

Collegian columnist Nick Bush is fed up with the general bureaucracy at the University of Massachusetts, and is convinced there is nothing any of us can do to stop it.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

PODCAST| BUCKLEY ON BASEBALL

Boston Herald Columnist, WEEI regular and UMass Alumnus Steve Buckley talks with The Collegian about the future of UMass baseball, evaluates men's basketball coach Derek Kellogg and reminisces on his UMass glory days.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIX
Issue 39

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Wanczenik
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Leigh Greaney
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Bountouwaike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
Web Editor Victor Jaark
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Emily Stapleton
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Kozewarz
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Tartinen
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Larnard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo P.J. Stanley
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Multimedia Pete Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Welwer

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been recognized since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call 413-545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Joe Meloni

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION TEAM
Dan Centola

Campus Perspectives
What is your opinion on this matter?

Do you feel safe on the University of Massachusetts campus?

By Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

freshman
Nutrition major

"I feel very safe on campus. Sometimes it makes my friends nervous how safe I feel. I tend to be bolder about running around campus by myself than most people. It may also have something to do with the fact that I'm from the area – I am from Wilbraham [Mass.]. The campus is also very well lit, and it's in the middle of nowhere surrounded by fields and woods. There are mostly only college kids here and they are not here to hurt each other but rather to have a good time and go to school."

- Lauren Ross

freshman
Wildlife conservation major

"I feel safe because everybody is always walking with someone else. People don't have to worry about any crime or being taken by some creep. I haven't come across any crime or reason to be scared. I'm also a guy, though. So I can take care of myself."

- Orlando Cordero

freshman
Wildlife conservation major

"I feel safer on campus. I just have never felt uncomfortable walking around. Also, I grew up in Springfield so I'm used to worse conditions. Springfield is nothing like up here, because everyone is just so chill and laid back up here. I've never come across a situation where I needed security or police for help, so I feel very safe."

- Phil Bates

freshman
Political Science major

"I'd say I do feel safe on campus. Personally, I'm from Brooklyn so I've seen worse stuff there than people have probably seen in their lives. So UMass feels like a safe environment to me. People are just different here. No one is trying to prove themselves. People are just being themselves. When that happens, there is no threat."

- Maria Tsamasiros

your week ahead on Daily Collegian

GEO-LOCATE YOUR NEWS

Follow news geogrpahically with dailycollegian.com's "Newsgarden" application on the homepage.

NEWS

Video | Tuesday
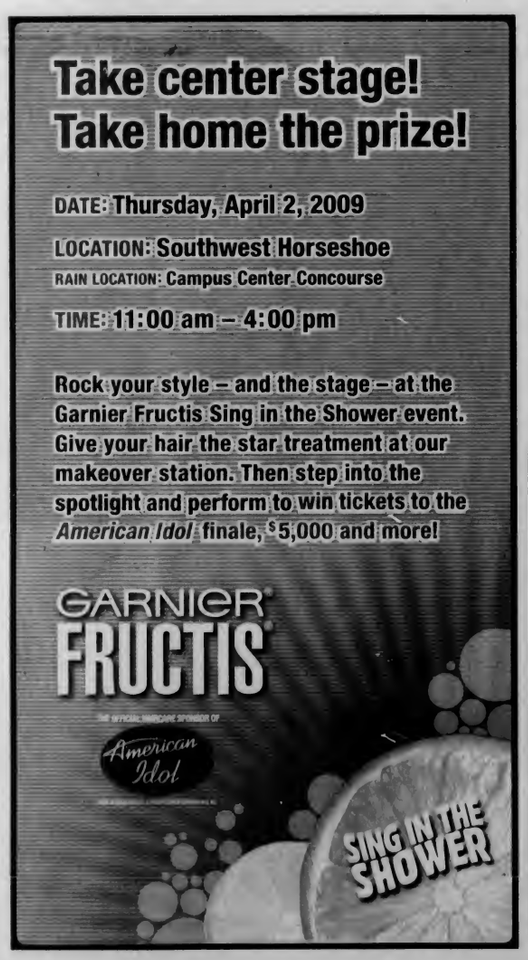
Highlights from FDIC chair Sheila Bair's speech at the School of Management on Friday.



SPORTS

Podcast |
Boston Herald Columnist, WEEI regular and UMass Alum Steve Buckley talks with the Collegian about the future of UMass Baseball, evaluates Men's Basketball coach Derek Kellogg and reminisces on his UMass glory days.

ARTS & LIVING

Video | Wednesday
An interview Arab-Israeli filmmaker Ibtisam Mara'ana, whose film whose film "Lady Kul el-Arab" was screened at UMass last week as part of the Multicultural Film Festival.

Podcast |
Daily Collegian film critics Pete Rizzo and Shayna Murphy take a look at upcoming films and whether they're worthy of your attention.

O'Malley joins Newman Mass

CARDINAL from page 1

that the Church is not just in their home dioceses the better we will be," said Bishop Timothy A. McDonnell, of Springfield.

At the end of the Mass, the Rev. McGonagle gave Cardinal O'Malley a copy of Richard Cardinal Cushing's inaugural sermon from when the Newman Center opened in May of 1963, after which O'Malley joked he didn't feel so guilty about preaching such a long homily, because Cardinal Cushing's must have been even longer.

"It was great," said the Rev. McGonagle.

"The Cardinal was energized, I think he was surprised. It was his first visit and he didn't realize how big a facility this is," he added.

The Newman Center's chapel, dedicated to Our Lady Seat of Wisdom and St. Jude Thaddeus, was packed with members of the Newman community.

"You didn't want to be standing next to the door when the people came out," added McDonough. "It was like a wave."

For his part, O'Malley greatly enjoyed the Newman experience himself.

"It was a great joy to be here, to see the wonderful facility. I'm grateful to the bishop for the invitation. There was a wonderful singing of the liturgy. I look forward to coming again," he said.

Matthew M. Robare can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Check out The Daily Collegian's News Blogs!

Research, Student Life and Diversity Blogs

Interested in writing for News or starting your own blog?

Contact Will McGuinness at News@dailycollegian.com for more information

MIT police throw away newspaper

By John A. Hawkinson
UWire Freelance Contributor

Two MIT Police officers were suspended March 18 after admitting that they cleared 300 Tech issues off the stands in the student center and put them in paper recycling late the previous night.

The March 17 issue of The Tech prominently featured an article and photograph about an MIT police officer's arrest.

Officer Joseph D'Amelio was apprehended on March 14 in East Boston with more than 800 tablets containing oxycodone and $16,000 in cash. D'Amelio has been charged with drug trafficking and is in jail on $500,000 bail.

MIT is forming a panel to review D'Amelio's activities and their implications.

The Tech received a tip late Tuesday night that police officers had removed copies of The Tech from stands in the Student Center.

The 300 newspapers were found in a recycling bin outside. Another 100 papers were found in a recycling bin at the east end of the Infinite Corridor. The Tech filed a police report.

On Wednesday, the two officers came forward through the Campus Police Association, their union, according to both Campus Police Chief John DiFava and union president Joseph S. West.

DiFava said the officers were placed on administrative leave without pay. The police department is "looking into the entire incident, photographs, interviews," DiFava said.

DiFava expects the investigation to complete within days, not weeks. Members of the MIT Police are under a lot of stress right now, West said, referring to the arrest of D'Amelio.

"It's a very dark time in the MIT Police history," said Brian J. Sousa, the union's acting steward.

"It's affecting a lot of people personally," he said.

As police officers, any questionable incidents put their reputation at risk, and this incident is no exception.

"We do take a lot of heat," West said. "We want to apologize for the unfortunate incident that took place," West said. "As a union, we've never experienced an incident like this."

In a joint statement, DiFava and Kirk D. Kolenbrander, vice president for institute affairs, said, "This is a very serious matter. Openness of communication is of fundamental importance at MIT. Free and open distribution of The Tech is very much within that value, and has to be treated with the highest seriousness and sensitivity."

"I can't emphasize how seriously we take this," DiFava said. "This was incredibly egregious," referring to the newspaper theft.

Police union officials said that the two suspended officers made a mistake, but should be allowed to return to work.

"They're both great guys," said David Smith, vice president of the union. "We don't believe they deserve to be fired," he said.

West said both officers have "unbelievable track records," and that both have been with the MIT Police for over 10 years, and have families to support.

"All we can do is apologize," West said. "We're going to work harder to make the trust come back from the students, the faculty, and the staff," he said.

Students seem to think that the theft incident didn't deserve major punishment.

Daniel D. Hawkins, class 2012 said that this "only fuels the distrust that the MIT community feels for the Police," but that "suspension without pay for a while would be an appropriate punishment."

Manuel Cabral, also in the class of 2012 said that "relations are pretty strained. It would be nice if we could get along better. We can work things out. Giving them a second chance would be better than saying 'you can't have your job.'"

In response to D'Amelio's arrest, MIT is forming a review panel to "investigate the arrest and its ramifications," according to a statement released Thursday by Executive Vice President Theresa M. Stone SM '76.

The panel will consist of "experienced, respected, objective individuals," and will report to President Susan J. Hockfield and Provost Rafael L. Reif. "Ensuring the safety of MIT's students, faculty, and staff is MIT's paramount concern," the statement said.

The panel will not include students, Kolenbrander said.

Obama talks auto restructure

By Kevin G. Hall and Margaret Talev
McClatchy Newspapers

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama's rejection Monday of restructuring plans offered by General Motors and Chrysler increases the likelihood that one or both carmakers could declare bankruptcy.

Obama found the plans inadequate to turn the companies toward sustained profitability. The plans were required to be submitted before the government would give nearly $22 billion in taxpayer aid that the two companies sought.

Instead, Obama promised GM enough working capital to get through the next 60 days and Chrysler the next 30 days. The firms were sent back to revamp their restructuring plans, and the administration signaled clearly that bankruptcy, once unthinkable, is now an option for GM.

"We cannot and must not and we will not let our auto industry simply vanish," the president said. At the same time, he cautioned that he won't support "an unending flow" of tax dollars to bail out the firms. "These companies and this industry must ultimately stand on their own, not as wards of the state."

Obama said that his automotive task force had concluded that GM must be vastly restructured to have any hope of survival.

Just weeks ago, both GM and the administration were confident that bankruptcy could be avoided. Now it appears likely. A senior administration official, discussing the matter on the condition of anonymity in order to speak freely, emphasized that a "significant restructuring that employs parts of the bankruptcy code is the best way to turn GM around quickly."

Chrysler, the task force concluded, is no longer viable as a standalone company and must be merged or liquidated.

In a statement on its corporate website Monday afternoon, Chrysler Chairman and Chief Executive Robert Nardelli announced that his company, which is owned by Cerberus Capital Management, had reached a tentative "framework" toward a merger with Italian carmaker Fiat.

"We are pleased that Chrysler, Fiat and Cerberus have reached agreement on the framework of a global alliance, supported by the U.S. Treasury," the statement said. "Chrysler has consistently said that the alliance with Fiat enhances its business model that expands its global competitiveness."

Later Chrysler issued a clarification to its statement, saying the company remains short of a final deal and that "substantial hurdles" must first be resolved.

Obama confirmed that his administration had asked GM Chief Executive Rick Wagoner to step aside. Wagoner's successor will be GM's operating chief, Frederick "Fritz" Henderson, whose résumé and compensation package is similar to Wagoner's.

Obama's auto task force chastised GM and Chrysler for not presenting realistic plans to produce more fuel-efficient cars profitably. The government is now setting manufacturing priorities for the carmakers. Some automotive experts questioned the logic of forcing carmakers to produce hybrid vehicles.

"The market for fuel-efficient vehicles rises and falls with gas prices. Until there is a consistent and compelling reason for consumers to buy hybrids, such as stabilized gas prices, automakers cannot realistically turn over their product lines to that more-expensive, less-profitable product that has only achieved 2 percent market share after all these years in production," Michelle Krebs, editor of Edmunds AutoObserver, an online news site covering the auto industry, wrote in a commentary Monday.

Some Republicans immediately accused the president of imposing a state-driven industrial policy on private companies.

"This is a marked departure from the past, truly breathtaking, and should send a chill through all Americans who believe in free enterprise," said Sen. Bob Corker, R-Tenn., in a statement. He accused Obama of erecting an industrial policy that picks winners and losers.

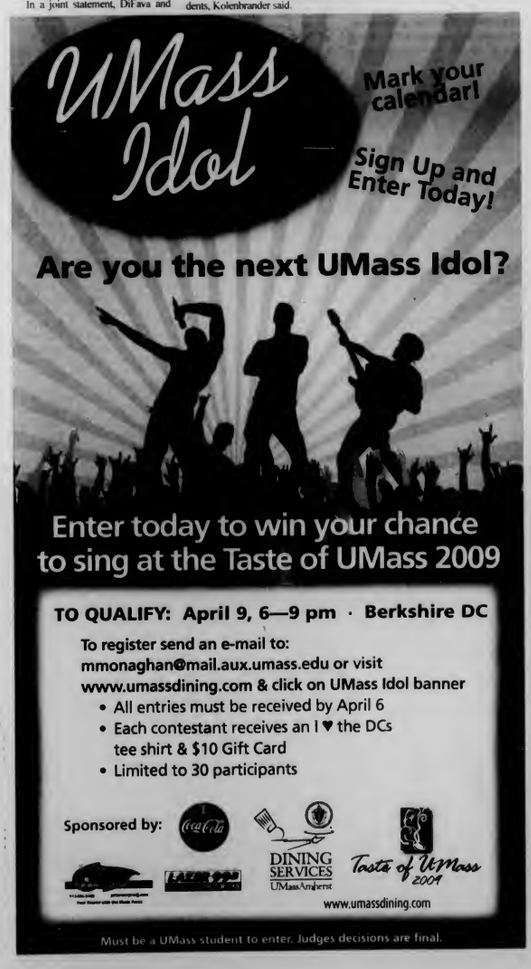
Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., added in a statement, "We are now told these two companies are getting their last check from the taxpayers, and that if they don't finally come up with truly viable plans then they'll be forced into bankruptcy. Unfortunately, we've heard this before, from both this and the previous administration."

Bankruptcy experts were more forgiving of Obama.

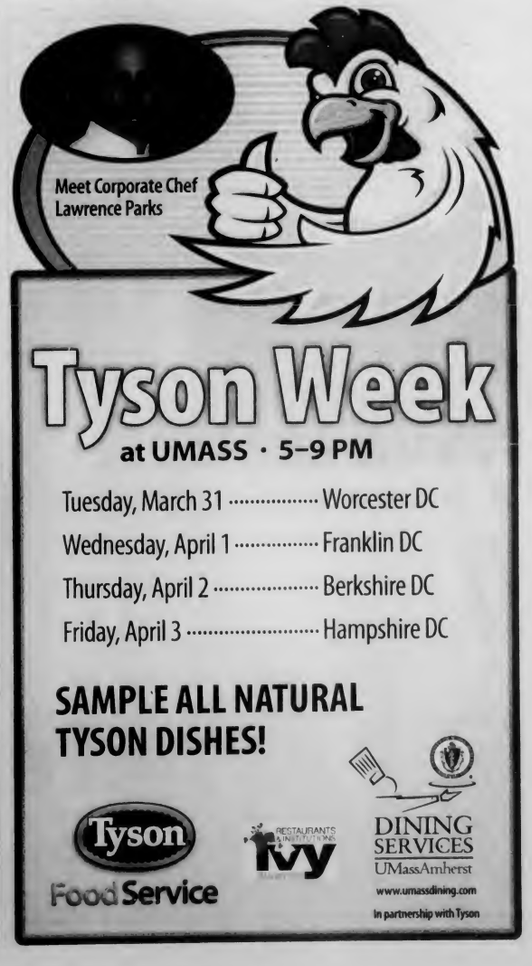
"I want to know the Republican who in their heart of hearts would be willing to say the only carmakers making cars in the United States will be Ford, Toyota, Nissan and BMW," said Douglas Baird, a bankruptcy expert at the University of Chicago School of Law.

Talk of industrial policy or the nationalization of GM misses a vital point, he said.

"The alternative is not simply letting GM go through a bankruptcy. GM will not survive in bankruptcy, or outside of bankruptcy without federal assistance," Baird said. "Some companies, like some horses, should be taken out to the back pasture and shot. If you don't have a government intervention, it will die."



Bankruptcy conjures up negative images of shuttered, rusting factories. The administration is working on a structured bankruptcy in which GM could use bankruptcy law to shed commitments to creditors and void union contracts after negotiating these changes first.



In theory, this would be a quick process.

"GM is a little bigger and more complex," than auto-parts supplier Delphi, which has been in bankruptcy since 2005, said George Magliano, director of North American automotive research for forecaster Global Insight. "It's going to take a lot longer than people think, that's the key bottom-line issue. You are going to have lawyers involved, you need funding – the government is now involved up to its armpits with this thing. It's not a 30- to 60-day process."

President Barack Obama stands with Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner, left, and his newly appointed director of Recovery for Auto Communities and Workers, Edward Montgomery, right.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 31, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bureacrazy

Almost everyone knows that completing even the simplest transactions with the University of Massachusetts bureaucratic machine can be even more demoralizing and futile than trying to teach a grizzly bear to tap dance.

Hours spent on "hold" as a punitive punishment to those brave enough to call and argue against the wisdom of the almighty state school administration.

Nick Bush

Being bounced around Whitmore's various offices like a pingpong ball, as one person passes the buck to another like a perverse game of hot potato.

Getting charged a late fee for not paying the fees that you never should have been charged with in the first place, which in fact, you called last time with the sole intent of having these fees removed from the bill ... and after two brutal hours on the phone with various nitwits were finally removed (or so you thought) ... but now another fee for paying for the previous fees via credit card ... and so on, and so on, until most students and parents get disenchanted and give up.

What's the point of fighting onward when the odds are so stacked in the other direction? The Machine rolls on.

We are not cattle, branded on our behinds with Sam the Minuteman decals.

Dealing with UMass is never pretty. If you want to get anything actually accomplished, you're going to need patience, charm, grit and more than a little luck in not falling through the bureaucratic cracks.

In most instances in dealing with the Bursar's Office, for instance, you'd have a better chance digging a hole to China from your backyard.

What real power do students have here over their fate?

While surely we can all appreciate our state's love and devotion to public higher education (we currently rank 47th in the country in per capita spending, and 49th in spending per $1,000 of citizen income), isn't the administration ultimately responsible to the tuition-paying student body in the way it runs the University?

I understand that my education is being subsidized by the government, but that doesn't mean I must swallow the bitter pill and take a number in the eternal queue line that masquerades as a purveyor of solutions. Can't the new Robert Holub administration attempt to find a creative way to put a human face on the machine?

It is time for the administration to change the way it looks at – and deals with – the student body. We are not cattle, branded on our behinds with Sam the Minuteman decals. (OK, some of us might have "UMass" on our behinds right now, particularly those of us living in the Southwest Residential Area).

For too long a time we have been the cash cows, slapped with barcodes, meal plans and student ID numbers, and then herded into two years of on-campus housing because it's a very profitable situation for UMass.

Thanks to our lack of funding for higher education compared to states like California and Washington, the administration often has no choice but to shadily squeeze out more fees and rent from students in order to avoid further cuts. Until the citizens of Massachusetts hold their government accountable for failing to fund public higher education, the mindset of the UMass system will not change.

If UMass went to the effort of creating an open forum where failures of the school's bureaucratic process could have light shined upon them, it would be the first step toward resolving its more obvious pitfalls.

Just having offences out in the open air would work wonders in streamlining the system.

But, in order for this to happen, the administration would have to want for it to happen – and for some time now it has quite clearly benefited from its own inaccessibility to students.

In fact, with the recession resulting in budget cuts and belt-tightening across the board, you can bet your frilly hat that the administration is buttoning down the hatches to make it through the economic storm.

The University needs every last dime, and the queue line is getting longer by the second.

There won't be a new shiny, happy face on UMass this year – or probably any time in the foreseeable future.

But just remember this the next time you're on hold listening to Barry Manilow, or pinballing across Whitmore: You're not alone and it doesn't have to be this painful.

Nick Bush is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

DON'T FORGET TO SAY:
"RABBIT, RABBIT, RABBIT"
WHEN YOU WAKE UP TOMORROW.
OR ELSE.

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

America's silent treatment

Subhan Tariq

The United States has a policy that to me makes no sense at all. Essentially, it is either you are our friend, or else we won't talk to you. For years, the United States has completely cut relations with countries because they don't like us or they may have done things that we don't like.

For 50 years we haven't had relations with Cuba and have put an unnecessary and repressive embargo on them because we don't like the country's Communist government. Until recently, we didn't have relations with Iran because of the Iranian Revolution, in which the American-backed Shah was removed.

It wasn't until recently that we started talking to Iran again.

At a time when we should talk to those who don't agree with us in order to help change their opinion, the United States has a polarizing opinion, in which we just cut off those who we don't like.

Case in point, 2006: With democratic elections that put Hamas in control, instead of talking to Hamas and trying to talk them out of their militancy, we decided to not recognize their government and polarized the Palestinian people.

Diplomacy is based on talking to another country, not on completely ignoring those who we don't like.

The United States has put an incredibly repressive embargo on Cuba. It has become so bad that people in Cuba don't even have paint to paint their homes.

The United States virtually keeps all things out of Cuba in an effort for Cuba to change its regime. News flash: It hasn't worked.

We have started to talk to some countries after ignoring them for years – countries like Iran and North Korea. We've started to talk to them. "Why?" you may ask. It's because they began to pose a big threat to our safety.

The United States started talking to North Korea after it developed its nuclear program and tested what looked like a nuclear weapon.

The United States also started talking to Iran over the past few years. Again we started talking to Iran after years of rhetoric about how Iran was a terrible country, even labeling them as part of the "Axis of Evil."

We started to talk to Iran after it began to develop its nuclear program, which it insists is meant for peaceful purposes.

The United States has a polarizing opinion, in which we just cut off those who we don't like.

At a time in history where it seems as if many people have become polarized against the United States, we must be willing to talk to others rather than just cutting them off when we don't like what they are doing.

Before people get ready to call me "anti-American," understand that I love this country.

I grew up in the United States, currently live in New York City and was in sight of the World Trade Center when it was attacked on Sept. 11, 2001.

Part of being a patriotic American is identifying the flaws in policies of the United States and working on correcting them, rather than blindly following policies and pretending as if they don't exist.

American foreign policy over the past eight years has been incredibly damaging to our moral standing around the world and it is time we begin to change it.

President Barack Obama began to try to reverse course by trying to speak directly to the Iranian people, something that was met with understandable skepticism.

Now is a time where we must talk to everyone in the world, especially those who don't like us.

We must talk to the governments of Cuba and Iran and we have to go out of our way to talk to Hamas.

The United States must show its moral standing in the world and how it can once again be the country people turn to as a mediator.

Many may read this and say, "He is saying to talk to repressive regimes."

I am not calling for unconditional talks, rather suggesting benchmarks that countries meet before we begin to talk to them.

For instance, one benchmark can be that countries follow and respect international law. This would also give more legitimacy to international law, which has seen its legitimacy fade with countries such as the United States violating it.

When students get into fights, it is the duty of their resident assistant or the Ombudsman to resolve the issue and come to a peaceful resolution. The key to any conflict or disagreement is communication.

Communication to see what happened and what went wrong.

The United States must open itself up to communication once again, for if we don't, and if we become polarized and don't talk to those who don't like us, we have the most to lose.

A lack of communication on the part of the United States is a security threat to our safety. I don't know about you, but I want to be safe.

Subhan Tariq is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached atstariq@student.umass.edu

UMass baseball's imminent strike out

Matt Kushi

Imagine this scenario. You are working a job that you really enjoy. You enjoy the city that you are in. You have a good network of friends, especially among those that you work with. Your girlfriend lives in the area as well. Life seems to be going well.

Suddenly, one day while you and your co-workers are working on a big project, you learn that your company may cut your department due to budget reasons.

You and your co-workers are given two choices. You can either stay in this city that you love and still be around your girlfriend and a few select friends – or you can leave this city, your good friends and your girlfriend to find the same job in another city.

For members of the University of Massachusetts baseball team, this nightmare has been their life for the past week. It has been rumored that the baseball team might be cut due to budget cuts within the athletic department.

Yes, we have heard of the monetary reasons for cutting athletic teams.

I would like to present another perspective on this matter. One that takes into consideration human emotions and lifestyles.

For the past three years, I have had the privilege of being a student manager for the UMass baseball team.

Over this past week, I have seen how these rumors have turned their lives upside down. They are in season and dealing with all of the stresses that a Division I varsity season carries.

Not only do the players have to worry about representing their school, they also have to worry about the fact that they may have to file transfer papers in a couple of weeks.

The men on this team are good men.

It has been rumored that the baseball team might be cut due to budget cutting within the athletic department.

I see them at every practice drenched in sweat. I see them play their hearts out in games where attendance is a measly 50 to 100 people. Yet, they still play as if they were playing in front of 10,000 people.

An athletic team is so much more than just an athletic team.

It is a family. A family bonded by the goals of successfully representing your school and bonded by the love of the game that it plays.

We tend to look at athletics as entertainment. It is so much more than that. It is a venue in which we can place hopes, dreams, redemptions and lives.

I have to look no further than my own story. I entered college, in the fall of 2006, as a shy and lost 18 year old. Part of this was as a result of a serious injury I had sustained the late spring of 2006.

I was one whose athletic dreams had been shattered by the betrayal of his own body and lost the essence of who he was in the aftermath. Now, with three years of being a student manager with the UMass Baseball family under my belt, I may still be on the quiet side but that is who I am.

Baseball is not what defines me, but it has helped me broaden my boundaries and interests. Due to that, I have purpose and a family of friends.

However, I am merely a volunteer for the team. Cutting the program does not force upon me a decision to transfer. It means that I may have fewer friends on campus.

For the players on the team, transferring is the big decision.

They either stay and get their full education with the benefit of being around some friends but not baseball – or leave and get to play ball, but at the expense of starting the college experience anew.

This is not a fair deal. Over this past week, I have discussed with many of them what their plans are. Many of them are torn.

Deciding not to play ball anymore is not an easy decision. It is asking you to throw away something you love. Baseball, or any sport for that matter, is not easy to just throw away.

Just like being in love is an unexplainable thing, the connection between a player and the game is unexplainable.

If the program is cut, you are telling all of the players that have worked so hard to balance their academics and athletic lives that it was all for nothing.

We are preaching that academics come first, yet we are almost forcing them to put their athletics first because they are being told that they must choose between the two at a time when they are not yet ready to give up on the game that they love.

In Ben E. King's song "Stand By Me", there is a line that goes: "If the sky that we look upon / Should tumble and fall /And the mountains should crumble to the sea / I won't cry, I won't cry, no I won't shed a tear /Just as long as you stand, stand by me."

Members of the UMass student body and UMass Administration, what the UMass Baseball team asks is that you stand by them.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

Liberals are calling the kettle black by calling it provocative

Greg Collins

1. If you oppose hate crimes laws, you are provocative.
2. You oppose hate crimes laws.
3. Therefore, you are provocative.

This sequence sums up the logic of a large segment of students and faculty on campus, which labels any opinion resembling conservatism as "provocative."

Reaction from the Don Feder event, in which radical and non-radical students alike claimed that opposing hate crimes laws is just yet another example of conservative students on campus being "provocative," confirmed this logic.

Labeling any viewpoint that does not conform with one's political opinions as "provocative," directly contributes to the stifling of intellectual diversity on this campus, which is sorely in need of it.

What do students and faculty mean by labeling opinions other than their own as "provocative"?

It means that they think that the particular viewpoint is not an opinion grounded in reason or logic, but rather in emotion and passion. They think that there is something different – something inherently "wrong" – with that viewpoint.

And they think that any difference of opinion is not due to the limitations of their own viewpoint, but rather to the limitations of the people with whom they disagree.

How would you feel if someone said that your support for President Barack Obama was "provocative"?

How would you feel if someone said that your support for abortion rights was "provocative"?

How would you feel if someone said that your support for hate carimes laws was "provocative"?

I could go on and on.

How would you feel if someone said that your support for global warming legislation was intended to incite people? How would you feel if someone said that your support for government welfare programs was intended to get people mad?

How would you feel if someone said that your support for same-sex marriage was a way to demean heterosexuals?

Unfortunately, there is a double standard on this campus and across the country.

The labeling of an opinion as "provocative," as well as, "reactionary," "confrontational." or "incendiary," shapes the political spectrum in a way that establishes vacuous guideposts as benchmarks for provocative and non-provocative thought, determined only by those in power according to their personal feelings and not by any objective standard.

More so, calling opposition to hate crimes as "provocative," and considering such an opinion out of the mainstream of public opinion, does little to actually address the issue of whether hate crimes are legitimate forms of crimes.

Social science departments' course syllabi, covering readings, books, films and campus lectures, are overwhelmingly biased in favor of contemporary liberal thought.

But instead of studying this particular issue, people will address the supposed public opinion of the issue, and then label all of those who do not conform to this viewpoint as "different" in a negative, not positive, way.

This shaping of intellectual dialogue and information flow is rampant on campus.

I have heard countless stories from students who say that they have been perceived as "different" in some sort of alien sense by professors for expressing what we would consider today to be conservative beliefs.

There was a public outcry when Collegian columnists disputed the conventional wisdom of Justice For Jason leaders and like-minded students and professors. Social science departments' course syllabi, covering readings, books, films and campus lectures, are overwhelmingly biased in favor of contemporary liberal thought.

The issue is not whether conservatism is better than liberalism, or vice versa.

Instead, the issue is that political dialogue on campus is shaped in a way that already predetermines which political viewpoint has more merit.

Rather than students claiming that any non-liberal viewpoint is "provocative," and rather than professors assigning liberal readings, hosting liberal guest lecturers and showing liberal films, students and faculty should either not participate in politics at all. That, or they should be willing to address alternative viewpoints as seriously as they do their own.

However, this problem goes deeper beyond professors and students.

The UMass administration itself does little to encourage intellectual diversity and challenge the notion that conservatism is "provocative."

I don't know if any empirical study has been undertaken, but I can bet you that if you counted up all of the liberal politicians and professors invited to this campus relative to conservative ones, there would not even be a comparable numerical comparison.

UMass strongly publicizes students' and professors' efforts to combat global warming, encourage multiculturalism, and support social and cultural movements, whatever these three initiatives actually mean.

And so I publicly issue the challenge to the UMass administration today: how about publicizing the activism of pro-life groups on campus, as well as pro-choice groups?

How about publicizing abstinence only sex education, as well as safe-sex education? How about publicizing the efforts of students on campus who question the notion of man-made climate change, as well as the efforts of those students who accept it?

How about supporting intellectual differences, free flows of information and diversity of thought?

Provocative concept?

I think not.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 31, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Macrobiotic diet saves life

The Dancing Vegan restaurant focuses on healthy food choices

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's well documented that a healthy diet rich in whole grains and light on red meat can serve to protect from the onset of cancer. But, after diagnosis, can a drastic change to a macrobiotic diet help save one's life?

According to Dr. Wilmore Webley, this might not be the case.

"There is no scientific evidence to support this," Webley said in an e-mail interview. "There is evidence that a diet high in whole grains and vegetables and possibly low in saturated fat, red meat and preserved meat products can help to prevent many types of cancers," he continued. He also claimed that a strict macrobiotic diet "could actually harm such a person since there is a limited amount of calories, vitamins, proteins, iron and even calcium."

In Mariana Pina-Bergtold's case, however, diet seems to have been the key to survival.

Pina-Bergtold, co-owner of The Dancing Vegan – the new take-out restaurant in Pittsfield, Mass., seemingly owes her life to a change in diet. In 2000, she was diagnosed with non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and told she had three months to live. After altering her diet into one both vegan and macrobiotic, without the help of chemotherapy, the cancer has ebbed and she is alive today.

In spite of Dr. Webley's skepticism, he certainly does not rule out the possibility that the diet could be of use.

"There are aspects of a macrobiotic diet that could be important in cancer prevention and possibly treatment," he said. "A macrobiotic diet is designed to reduce the amount of harmful toxins that a person takes in and could therefore reduce the chances of mutation from these toxins."

Those practicing a macrobiotic diet and lifestyle, first developed at the beginning of the 20th century by Japanese philosopher Nyoichi Sakurazawa (known by his pen name George Ohsawa), believe that harmony with nature could be achieved through eating simply and with balance, promoting body health and warding off disease. Pina-Bergtold and her partner Yukiko Sato began their restaurant in response to the utter lack of local options for those practicing macrobiotics or veganism.

"The diet itself is what you make of it," Pina-Bergtold said. "You've got to learn who you are and how the macrobiotic principles work for you. The diet is changing constantly day to day, depending on seasons, the local area, natural produce and the body's condition."

Before Pina-Bergtold was diagnosed, she ate a standard American diet. While it was rife with fresh foods, it was also heavy with the processed and non-organic foods common in a rich, gourmet diet. She emphasized that one "can have wonderful flavors in food" without one's health suffering.

After Pina-Bergtold learned of her cancer and that she was terminally ill, she was admitted to the Kushi Institute in Becket, Mass., where she eventually met Sato. In just 18 months, her cancer had receded.

"The Kushi Institute saved my life," she said. "I was reborn."

She proceeded to study at the Institute for five years, claiming one must study macrobiotics and put in a lot of work in order for the diet to yield results.

"There's so many vegan and vegetarian options in the area, but you've got to travel south to Lenox or Great Barrington," Sato said. "[In Pittsfield], we could try to go out, but there's nothing out there to eat."

See VEGAN on page 6

Mariana Pina-Bergtold, co-owner of The Dancing Vegan, thanks the Kushi Institute, above, for saving her life because of its focus on macrobiotics.

Sand T's artwork has been featured at numerous venues around the state, including the MASSACHUSETTS ARTISTS 2009 Juried Exhibition at the Brush Gallery in Lowell and the UMass Student Union Art Gallery.

Juicy texture in pieces

Sand T shows work at Student Union

BY CAROLINE SCANNELL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The idea that "less is more" underlies the exhibition of SAND T: New Works, currently on display at the Student Union Art Gallery.

"The primary intention of this body of work is to create a simple visual experience with the basic elements of dot, line, color, surface and light," artist Sand T said in a statement.

The pieces in the show consist of carefully drawn lines in graphite, paint on archival tempered clayboard and acrylic glass sheets overlaid with clear, chunky epoxy resin layers and resin drops.

"The physicality of "drawing the lines" and "dropping the dots" underlines the artist's fixation with chaos, the keen desire to bring order within the structural grid," her statement reads.

Sand T explains, "I hope viewers see the beauty of simplicity. I attempt to communicate through my artwork which deals with repetition, iteration, geometric abstraction, monochrome or limited color and light."

Though a sense of cleanliness and structure dominate the works there is a luminosity and tactile quality about the thick hard resin drops that contributes a juicy texture to the pieces.

Though the works rely heavily on geometric forms and vaguely architectural elements, they avoid projecting any kind of rigidity. In fact, the epoxy resin layers have a hard candy-like quality to them, appearing as though they may melt in the viewer's hands, or dribble down the wall come summertime.

"I loved the 'frozen' clear and organic characteristic of the resin dripping off the edges of the acrylic glass sheets in my work," she explains.

Her experimentation with resin in past works and fascination with the medium led her to take on a more minimalist approach in her recent art that is currently on display.

"It gave me new ideas that I should bring the dazzling

See SAND T on page 6

Decemberists debut at No. 14

'The Hazards of Love' initially released exclusively to iTunes

BY TODD MARTENS
LOS ANGELES TIMES

The latest release from the Decemberists landed at No. 14 on the album charts this week despite a sizable handicap: It wasn't available on CD.

EMI's Capitol Record opted to sell "The Hazards of Love" as a near-exclusive via Apple Inc.'s iTunes Store for a week. Illustrating the growing viability of the digital marketplace, the experiment resulted in iTunes shoppers downloading about 18,000 copies during the week ended March 22, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

The iTunes sales and an additional 1,000 copies sold on vinyl put "The Hazards of Love" solidly in the top 20 before the CD hit stores Tuesday.

"It's a real paradigm shift," said Matt Wishnow, who runs the online music store Insound.com. "Now, because of leaks and intentional distribution of either artwork or music, the excitement is ripe way before release date. It puts labels and artists in a very challenging position but creates opportunities for them to monetize the pre-street-date event."

"The Hazards of Love," a 17-song suite with fantastical lyrics and a genre-hopping sound, is the fifth album from the Decemberists, an orchestrated pop band from Portland, Ore.

The band's last release, 2006's "The Crane Wife," sold 26,000 copies during the first week. 6,000 of which were digital downloads. The album went on to sell 292,000 copies, including 69,000 digital.

Releasing an album via digital outlets before a physical release isn't new. The Beggars Group in 2007 released the latest from English rapper Dizzee Rascal as a download-only, and recent albums from Nine Inch Nails and Radiohead were released online weeks before hitting retail shelves.

This month, Universal Music Group's Interscope Records rushed the Yeah Yeah Yeahs' "It's Blitz!" to digital outlets ahead of the CD's release March 31. In two weeks, it has sold 18,000 downloads.

The surprising success of the efforts is opening some eyes in the music industry – and making some retailers worry that digital outlets will get first crack at more and more music.

"It's starting to feel like when vinyl was being forced away and the CD was taking over," said Terry Currier, who runs indie retailer Music Millennium in Portland. "It got to a point where our customers couldn't depend on the vinyl being out for street dates and just converted over to the CD."

Howard Handler, EMI's head of marketing for North America, cautioned against reading too much into the move. He stressed that a digital-first release is a rarity and not part of EMI's game plan.

"It wouldn't be right to draw any sweeping conclusions about it," Handler said. "This was right for this artist and this release and this set of fans."

Jason Colton, who co-manages the Decemberists with Ron Laffitte at Red Light Management, said they were aware there might be some push-back from retailers about the one-week digital exclusive.

"We looked at it very closely and balanced any resistance with what we thought was best for this record and the band's career," Colton said. "The Decemberists have built up considerable goodwill at retail, and we were sure to super-serve independent retailers with a vinyl release timed to the iTunes exclusive."

But with downloads outselling vinyl 18 to 1 during that week, music stores had to wait until the CD release to cash in on the new album.

The Decemberists released their newest album, "The Hazards of Love," at No. 14. For the first week it was released exclusively on iTunes and sold 18,000 copies in the week ending on March 22.

Prince releases new, but tricky website

Fans get early listen to triple-titled triple album

BY J. FREEDOM DU LAC
THE WASHINGTON POST

It isn't always easy loving Prince – which seems to be just how the brilliant but occasionally baffling musician wants it.

This week, Prince launched a splashy intergalactic website, LOUSELOW3R.com, offering his most obsessive fans a year's worth of access to various manifestations of his creative genius – including an early crack at his new, at-times-terrific triple-titled triple album – for $77. But before they could sign up, they had to figure out how to get past the site's instruction-free front page, a task that required the unearthing of two clues stashed like Easter eggs on the page.

Once the user registered, the Prince treasure hunt continued, with three new albums ("LOUSELOW3R" – and "MPLSoUND," plus a new protege's project, "Elixer," co-written and co-produced by Prince) stashed in different sections of the Flash-heavy site. To access "MPLSoUND," for instance, one had to triple-click the strings of the powder-blue Fender Stratocaster that popped onto the screen only after one clicked on the white swan with a headphone jack for a head. And no, I was not dreaming when I wrote this.

Is this how Prince treats his most devoted fans?

After running the digital gantlet, though, there was a real reward, not just in the archival videos and other extras that were pulled from Prince's vaults and splashed throughout the site, but also in some of the new music, too.

"LOUSELOW3R" and the funked-up "MPLSoUND" are not exactly all-time Prince classics, but they're filled with enough standout musical moments to keep discerning musicologists happy. (As always, they're also filled with titles that look like typos: further evidence that the unspoken title's

See PRINCE on page 6

Prince released his new website, LOUSELOW3R.com, with videos, new music and other extras - perfect for obsessed fans.

Macrobiotic desserts

VEGAN from page 5

The co-owners opened The Dancing Vegan on Jan. 26 and have been pleasantly surprised at the response. The restaurant is a take-out-only amalgamation of daily menu items, specialties to spice things up and healthy, vegan dessert alternatives. Because the business is still young, the restaurant does not have any paid employees, just friends helping out in the kitchen.

Sato, originally from Sapporo on the Japanese island of Hokkaido, got her start experimenting with veganism before she headed to the states for the first time, curious as to whether or not she could create healthier dessert alternatives using less butter and sugar.

"The desserts I made at home were wholesome, but pretty and not so tasty," Sato said. "Then I took a macrobiotic dessert class in Tokyo which really focused on the effects of sugar and dairy in one's diet."

The lessons she learned in class stuck with her and through the program she discovered the Kushi Institute where she eventually met Pina-Bergtold. There, Sato learned more about macrobiotics, which was then considered a full-fledged hobby. She took a job in the institute's kitchen, which she held for a year and a half, before eventually settling down to start her current business.

The Dancing Vegan's spread is 100 percent vegan (even the chocolate), 90 percent kosher, and 95 percent organic. It also accommodates wheat- and gluten-free diets. The only non-organic foods used at the restaurant are ones that are either extremely hard to find organic or are very unreasonable price-wise.

"We're not high-end," Pina-Bergtold said regarding the restaurant's prices and clientele. "My goal is that everybody can eat from here."

The restaurant has also started a meal plan option, providing meals five nights a week, Monday through Friday, for $80. The meals include a grain, a bean, a vegetable and dessert three times a week.

Pina-Bergtold said that due to a lack of promoting the deal, there are just two people signed up for the plan, but that the numbers could increase with the addition of another full-time chef.

There is no scientific evidence regarding the diet and its relationship to cancer, but according to Webley, "There are currently some clinical trials underway to examine the efficacy of a macrobiotic diet, but that data is not yet available." He said that a macrobiotic diet could act as a complement to chemotherapy, but should not and cannot stand on its own as therapy.

Pina-Bergtold seems to think otherwise.

"I had no chemo. I walked away, adopting a different diet and healed myself through diet," she said.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

Triple album out today

PRINCE from page 5

Version of His Royal Badness is to drive copy editors crazy.) The generally strong quality comes as something of a relief, given some of his earlier, execrable efforts, from "The Rainbow Children" to "Come."

Prince's newest triple-titled triple album is out today exclusively at Target or on the company's website.

The sprawling three-album set will be available exclusively at Target stores and on the company's no-Easter-eggs-required website beginning tomorrow for $11.98. Including the tracks from "Elixer" – a limpid, fairly generic set of airy, cooing soul by Bria Valente, who is Prince's new Tamar (who was supposed to be his new Apollonia) – that works out to roughly 4 cents per song.

Call it the Prince stimulus package! And don't bother with the double-entendre: The formerly freak-nasty singer scraped his dirty mind – and music – out of the gutter when he became a Jehovah's Witness. One reminder comes on "Love Like Jazz," a snoozy "LOUSELOW3R" song on which Prince, now 50, sounds downright tame as he sings about the female form over some Esquivel-style lounge music.

Prince could have easily cut this and several other duds (helter-skelter surf-pop song "No More Candy 4 U," the cranky hip-hop rant "Ol' Skool Company") to make a single, superlative disc out of the project. But he'd apparently rather leave the editing to others. That, and he opted to keep his musical personalities separate.

"LOUSELOW3R" is a moody, meandering, esoteric psychedelic-rock album on which the little purple polyglot gets in touch with his inner "Purple Haze" and pays homage to Jimi Hendrix via liberal use of Hendrix's sonic signatures, from the wah-wah that opens "Dreamer" to the driving fuzztone chords of the explosive workout "Wall of Berlin."

It's one guitar virtuoso feting another, with Prince turning in dazzling instrumental performances on track (the simmering statement song "Colonized Mind") after track (the tender but blistering "Boom"). Occasionally, though, the instrumental prowess simply sounds self-indulgent, as on the New Age almost-instrumental "Back 2 the Lotus," whose shifty, spacey jazz chords suggest Prince trying out for Phish.

Prince turns his funkier side loose on "MPLSoUND" (short for Minneapolis Sound), which is full of frisky club songs that tend to blend the musician's vintage synth-and-drums sound with some modern twists, most notably the Auto-Tune vocal effect. Whereas Auto-Tune can be a dangerous weapon in the hands of some artists, Prince uses it sparingly to add to the giddy feel of club jams such as the boastful "(There'll Never B) Another Like Me" and the high-octane standout "Chocolate Box." It's thrilling stuff that serves as a reminder of why we loved Prince in the first place.

Contemporary art

SAND T from page 5

resin 'drips' to the surface of my work and get rid of unnecessary detail," she said.

At the same time, there is a feeling of hardness to the pieces that extends beyond the medium itself. The artist uses strong colors including aqua, onyx black, noire, navajo white and clear. The boldness of color and strictness of form in the pieces, "suggest time, concentration, and energies of motion possessing meditative qualities," she writes. In this vein, some works are imbued with a mystical feeling as shiny reflections of sunlight glint off the resin drops.

In addition to her own art practice, Sand T has worked to cultivate a vibrant arts community in Malden, Mass. For 10 years she ran a non-commercial gallery space in a garage adjacent to her home. The gallery, artSPACE@16 received numerous awards including Best of Boston in 2008 while Sand T herself has been frequently recognized for her involvement in the local art scene.

"The primary goal I set for artSPACE@16 was to provide a space for innovative contemporary art in Malden to encourage partnerships between the City of Malden and components of the artist community on arts collaborative and to motivate others to join in to establish an artists' community in Malden," she wrote.

Upon reflection, she likens her gallery work to philanthropy drawing on her infinite desire to give to the art community of Malden.

"I'm a walking billboard for the local arts scene," she wrote.

Last May, she closed the gallery doors to focus more heavily on the production of her own art work. But the artSPACE@16.com continues to function as a news bulletin for upcoming local arts events and as an electronic archive of past shows.

In conjunction with her exhibition of new works on display at the Student Union Art Gallery, the gallery will host an artist talk where Sand T will discuss her experience in the gallery business and her own artistic practice.

SAND T: New Works will be on view in the Student Union Art Gallery until Friday April 3. The artist talk will take place Friday at 1 p.m.

Caroline Scannell can be reached at cvscannell@student.umass.edu

Sand T is currently displaying her work, SAND T: New Works, in the Student Union Art Gallery. Her work will be displayed until April 3 and she will hold a talk on Friday at 1 p.m.

Glimpse at true Urban

'Defying Gravity' is 1st album release since all the drama

By Randy Lewis
Los Angeles Times

Keith Urban's life has been tumultuous, to say the least, since the release of his last album, 2006's "Love, Pain & the Whole Crazy Thing." His stint at the Betty Ford Center to treat alcohol addiction, the strain that put on his brand-new marriage to Nicole Kidman, her decision to stand by him, the birth last year of their first child – all cast a giant spotlight on the music in "Defying Gravity," his first album since all the drama went down.

Keith Urban's newest album gives a look inside the male psyche, especially that of someone who leads a public and private life.

The new collection, due out Tuesday, provides a fascinating look inside the male psyche, in particular that of someone who's trying to strike a balance between maintaining the public persona that made him one of country music's biggest stars and being an artist honestly expressing his too-human failings.

The opening salvo from the album, the single "Sweet Thing," is classic Urban. This is the guy who has sold millions of singles, albums and concert tickets over the past decade by fulfilling the role of the ideal – or idealized – boyfriend/husband: romantic, thoughtful, communicative, vulnerable but not excessively needy, a bit dangerous yet unrelentingly focused on his loved one.

Like so many of his hits, "Sweet Thing" is consistently catchy, stuffed with lyrical, melodic and instrumental hooks, twangy enough for country radio but accessible to mainstream pop fans with drum loops and smart 21st-century production touches.

That Keith Urban is front and center in several tracks that are assembled masterfully, but ring slightly hollow in the context of his life: "Kiss a Girl" prizes commitment over indulgence in fleeting pleasures; "Hit the Ground Runnin'," one of three songs he didn't have a hand in writing, serves up a peppy vow: He'll not let the object of his affections go out of his life easily.

"If Ever I Could Love" and "My Heart Is Open" acknowledge past heartbreak but skirt the fallout with proclamations that a new love won't let him down. In these moments, there's a nagging feeling Urban's hiding behind a mask, one he's exceedingly comfortable wearing.

Things get more interesting when he lets down that mask, conceding that there might be times when he'll have to take more than he can give and when even the best relationships fall into crisis.

"'Til Summer Comes Around" is a moody piece centering on a love interest who disappeared without explanation. "Why's It Feel So Long" explores a similar theme: despite the song's breezy, quasi-Caribbean lilt and plucky banjo, there's an air of desperation in Urban's lyrics when he explores the unease that sets in after a lover's departure.

He turns to Radney Foster and Georgia Middleman for "I'm In," which has Urban conceding that love is "scary business," but nonetheless "I'll show you how good it can be."

The album ends with "Thank You," perhaps the most directly revealing track Urban has written (this one in collaboration with Rick Nowels): "By the time I knew that I was in too deep, I'd gone too far / And the light that used to guide me had faded from my heart," he sings.

The song turns briefly, atypically, self-centered ("When the rain started falling / You know it only fell on me"), but the signature break in his voice is touchingly credible.

It's a welcome moment of honesty, a rare glimpse behind Urban's mask.

UMASS ALUMNI
Entrepreneurship: Challenges and Rewards
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION UMASS AMHERST
Campus to Career - Alumni Panel
Tuesday, March 31 • 5:30 p.m.
Memorial Hall (between Herter Hall and the Old Chapel)
Have a dream and a passion to start your own company? Hear what alumni have to say to better prepare and position yourself to be a successful entrepreneur.
PANELISTS INCLUDE:
Dr. Shawn Kinney '99PhD.....Hyaluron, Inc.
Ms. Erica Walch '96, '06G.....Speak Easy Accent Modification
Mr. Boris Revsin '08.....CampusLIVE.com
FREE REFRESHMENTS
Thanks to the support of Cape Cod Chips and Kraft/Nabisco
Drawings!
Movie passes • $25 UStore gift card
Seniors can enter to win a $1,000 cash prize from Liberty Mutual!
Drawing to be held at Commencement Ball on May 21, 2009
Seating is limited. RSVP today at UMassAlumni.com/students.

NEED AN APARTMENT?
PUFFTON VILLAGE
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Domino's Pizza
2X Tuesday
Buy any large pizza, get second one FREE
413-256-8911

Villanova's run highlights NCAA tourney

By Dick Jerardi
McClatchy Newspapers

PHILADELPHIA – When the 61 games were done, the Final Four was not unpredictable, but, nevertheless, consists of a combination of four teams that was far from obvious. Nationally, Villanova probably was given less consideration than by those in Philadelphia and around the Big East who had seen enough to understand the essence of Jay Wright's team. And Michigan State, under the radar in the Big Ten, played a near-perfect game Sunday to take out Louisville, the overall No. 1 seed.

North Carolina and Connecticut were no surprise. And nobody will be terribly surprised if they meet a week from Monday night in the championship game at Ford Field in Detroit.

Carolina and UConn will be solid favorites. Anybody who does not think 'Nova has a chance just has not been paying attention. Are the Wildcats likely to beat UNC in the second game on Saturday? No. Is it possible? With this team, almost anything has to be considered, including a national championship.

Michigan State does not appear to have the firepower to hang with UConn, but the Spartans do have some serious athletes. Will that be enough to beat UConn? Again, unlikely.

UNC (32-4), UConn (31-4), Michigan State (30-6) and Villanova (30-7) are a combined 123-21.

Best Game

Villanova's win over Pittsburgh was one of the best games in tournament history. Given the stakes, the caliber of play, the back and forth, the comebacks, the crazy plays and the ending, it is right there on the list of great regional finals. Not Duke-Kentucky 1992, but really, really good.

The key play for Villanova was Dwayne Anderson's steal, followed by a run-out and one when the 'Cats trailed by four. The winning play was brilliantly called, beautifully set up and run about as good as a last-second play can be run. Did you notice three Panthers defenders behind Scottie Reynolds when he caught the ball, leading to an instant fastbreak with the ball in the middle, the kind of situation a player like Reynolds has faced thousands of times in practices and countless times in games? All Reynolds had to do was make a good decision. And he surely did that.

Conference Numbers

The third Big East team could not make it, but the league has been dominant, going 17-5 and keeping alive the possibility of an all-Big East final. And nobody in this town needs to be reminded what went down the last time that happened.

The Big 12 could not get a team to the Final Four, but showed itself second best during the tournament, finishing with a record of 11-6. The Big Ten is 8-6 and the ACC just 7-6. Still, a team from each league got through.

The Upset

Michigan State's Tom Izzo is one of the best preparation coaches in the game. He had a wonderful plan for Sunday's upset of Louisville.

The Spartans squeezed the court on defense, giving the Cardinals very little room to operate and daring their non-shooters to shoot long shots. On offense, Michigan State moved the ball against the pressure with short, crisp passes. The Cardinals' defense could not move as fast as the ball and, eventually, Louisville got frustrated and tired, playing right into the trap set by the Spartans.

Most Dominant

The numbers Connecticut put up on the way to the Final Four are almost beyond belief. The Huskies have attempted 78 more free throws than their opponents, outrebounded them by 65 and blocked 25 shots. UConn has shot 122-for-237 (51.5 percent) and held their opponents to 99-for-271 (36.5 percent).

UConn fouls less than any team in the country and has Hasheem Thabeet on the baseline in case anybody's man gets near the rim.

Too Fast

When North Carolina is getting teams to miss long shots and running the ball the other way with the blur that is Ty Lawson, it is just about unbeatable. Oklahoma, which missed its first 15 shots from the arc, found that out Sunday.

Villanova is at its best at a fast-paced game, but the Wildcats may have to be a bit judicious against UNC. Or maybe they just play their go-for-it style and take their chances. Hard to tell these guys they can't go with anybody.

Good Enough

Pittsburgh did not play especially well in its first three tournament games. The Panthers were anything but imposters against Villanova. They played great hoops and made enough big shots to win the vast majority of regional finals. They did not lose it. Villanova won it. Pitt was certainly Final Four caliber.

Same with Missouri. Mike Anderson's team never backed down from UConn. Anderson did not get enough run in the coach of the year discussion. He took a dead program to within moments of the school's first Final Four. Anderson's UAB team was the last to beat Memphis in Conference USA. That would be 62 games ago. And Anderson got Memphis again in the Sweet 16.

Villanova, shown celebrating after their 78-76 victory over Pittsburgh Saturday, has reached its first Final Four since its historic upset over Georgetown in the 1984-85 season.

Owls off to best start in A-10 since 1984

A-10 BASEBALL from page 10

conference record in the A-10. The 49ers will also be in action tonight and will try to halt their skid as they host Wake Forest (13-11).

Temple atop A-10

On Saturday Temple completed a three-game sweep of La Salle (9-13, 0-6 A-10) to maintain its share of the A-10 lead.

The Owls are off to their best start in A-10 play since 1984, and have been nearly unbeatable since snapping an eight-game losing streak earlier this season. They have won nine of their last 11 games and look poised to make a run at the A-10 regular season championship.

Senior co-captains Carmen Del Mastro and Sean Barksdale are having solid seasons for the Owls. Del Mastro is having the best season of his career and leads the team in four major offensive categories. He is batting .444 with 40 hits, 28 runs scored and is 12-for-12 in steal attempts.

Barksdale is also on pace to have the best season of his career and could find himself in the Temple record books come season's end. The outfielder has 22 RBI in 22 games and needs 49 more to break the school's all-time record. He also ranks second all time in steals and needs 33 more to move into first place.

The Owls have a favorable conference schedule for the next two weeks. They will face Massachusetts on Friday and travel across Philadelphia next week to take on Saint Joseph's (8-14, 3-3).

Lehman Unbeaten

George Washington (13-14, 3-3) senior Pat Lehman is having the best season of his career and possibly the best in the A-10 this season.

The right-hander has started six games this season and has a 3-0 record. He has gone at least seven innings in all but one start and leads the conference with 46 innings pitched.

In those 46 innings, he has allowed eight earned runs, giving him a conference best earned run average of 1.57. He allowed more than one earned run only once, when he gave up four against Rhode Island on March 22.

He is also the conference leader in strikeouts (50) and opposing batting average (.186), tied with Charlotte's Patrick Lawson.

Lehman's most impressive performance of the season came on March 8 against Farleigh Dickinson (4-13), when he threw a complete-game shutout. He struck out 13, while letting up just hit and not allowing a walk.

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu.

Temple has been dominating conference play recently. After snapping an eight-game losing streak, the Owls have won nine of their last 11 games en route to an unbeaten conference record.

Saint Louis turning corner as conference season heats up

A-10 SOFTBALL from page 10

until recently and much of the improvement has to do with the pitching staff's ability to end their personal pitching woes.

Saint Louis currently has the worst earned run average in the A-10 with a 5.94 mark, slightly behind Dayton at 5.93. The Billikens have also allowed 10 or more runs five times this season.

However, SLU has improved lately, allowing four or fewer runs in each of the last six games, all of which were at home. The teams they faced, though, included two of the worst teams in conference.

Dayton is currently 3-24 and is tied for last place in the conference standings while St. Bonaventure sits last in batting average (.166) and second to last in runs scored (23).

Despite everything that SLU has going against it, the team is still undefeated in the A-10. The Billikens will be tested, however, when they continue conference play against URI and Massachusetts this weekend.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Huskies roll past UM

BASEBALL from page 10

Serino then walked Matt Burnett and Mike Olt to load the bases. He struck out Peter Fatse to give himself breathing room but center-fielder George Springer made Serino pay for his mistakes with a two-out grand slam. Mike Nemeth ended the inning by grounding out to first baseman Peter Copa.

Serino's next two innings were a lot cleaner as he gave up three hits and struck out three Huskies. In the fourth inning, UConn started giving him trouble on the baselines and things got significantly worse for the Minutemen.

Fatse drew a leadoff walk then beat the throw of catcher Tom Conley to steal second base. Springer came to the plate and drew a free pass as well, setting up Mike Nemeth for an RBI single to right field.

Doug Elliot then hit a sacrifice fly to score Springer. Serino surrendered another run before the inning ended.

Sophomore Garrett Butt relieved Serino in the sixth inning and promptly gave up a solo home run to Springer, the first batter he faced. Despite the rocky start, he escaped any further damage that inning, allowing the one run and two hits.

In 19 games, U.Mass has yet to see its home field, a common scenario with northern teams. Whether the field will be ready for the Minutemen on Friday remains unknown.

"Hopefully the field will be ready when we play at home on Friday," Stone said of UMass' first home series, against Temple. "Obviously, the weather and conditions don't really promote [playing early season games at home] that each year and that's why we play so many games on the road first."

The Minutemen will next travel to Worcester to take on Holy Cross (8-14). This will be the first time this season that UMass will face a team in the state of Massachusetts. The game will start at 3 p.m.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Please join us for our eleventh annual
Freedom Seder
Based on the Exodus themes of the Jewish Passover Seder, the Freedom Seder uses stories, music, poetry and ritual to express our yearning for universal liberation and multicultural unity. People of all religious and cultural backgrounds are welcome!

Thursday, April 2 at 5:30pm
Campus Center 11th Floor
UMass Amherst
FREE including buffet dinner with foods from around the world
For reservations call 545-9642
More info at www.umass.edu/jewish
UMASS AMHERST
Presented by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Black Student Union, Muslim Students Association, Delta Xi Phi Multicultural Sorority, and cosponsored by the Jewish Student Union and the Center for Student Development.

Phillies look to repeat

By Jim Salisbury
McClatchy Newspapers

CLEARWATER, Fla. – The last time a National League team repeated as World Series champion, Gerald Ford was in the White House, cookie-cutter multipurpose stadiums were still really cool, and a blackberry was something you popped into your mouth after rinsing with cool water.

The Cincinnati Reds, with future Hall of Famers on the field and in the dugout, ruled baseball in 1975 and 1976. On a short list of the greatest teams ever, they carried a moniker that even today resonates with greatness.

The Big Red Machine.

Thirty-three years later, the Phillies are preparing to see if they can become the first NL team to repeat as World Series champs since the 1976 Reds.

While the odds might be against the Phillies, it is not far-fetched to imagine Chase Utley stepping to the microphone and once again declaring this team world (ahem) champions one of these next few Octobers.

The Little Red Machine?

The pieces are there.

"That's definitely what we're thinking about," manager Charlie Manuel said. "We have the talent. We've got an opportunity to keep winning these next few seasons. But first we're going to work on this one. Repeating is hard, but I think we can."

Former general manager Pat Gillick, who became a front-office adviser with the club after it won the World Series in October, concurs. The window doesn't have to close on this nucleus after one championship.

"I'd hate to jinx us, but, yes, I think we can do it again," he said. "I think we'll be right there."

Before the Phillies last season, eight teams had won the World Series in the 2000s. All of them went into the next season thinking they could do it again; none did. Four, in fact, did not make the playoffs.

As Manuel said, it's hard to repeat, especially in an era when rising salaries can force owners to break up teams, when players can bolt for free agency, and when competitive balance is improving. Injury and underperformance can also scuttle a team's hopes of repeating.

In the 1970s, three teams - the Oakland Athletics, Reds, and New York Yankees - all repeated as World Series champs. Since them, only the 1992-1993 Toronto Blue Jays and the 1998-2000 Yankees have won consecutive championships.

The Phillies, in some ways, resemble several of the aforementioned teams.

Their infield, headlined by Utley, Ryan Howard, and Jimmy Rollins, compares favorably to the Big Red Machine's, which featured Hall of Famers in Tony Perez and Joe Morgan, the game's all-time hits leader in Pete Rose, and a highly respected talent in Dave Concepcion.

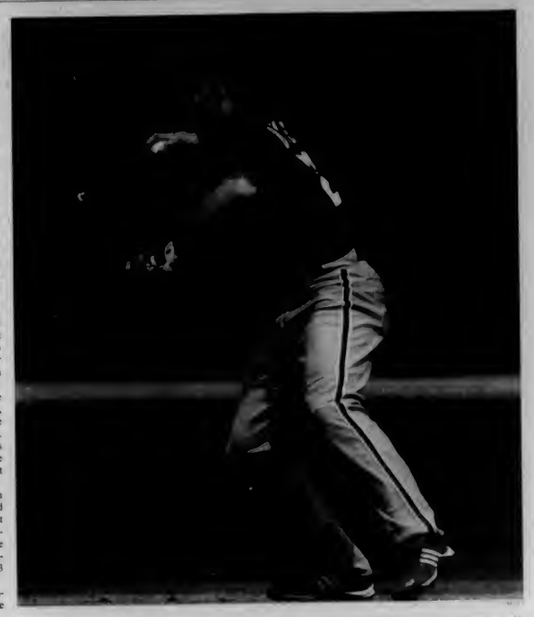
The Yankees' championship teams from 1998 to 2000 were anchored by an all-world closer in Mariano Rivera. In 2008, the Phillies had the NL's best bullpen, led by closer Brad Lidge.

The Blue Jays' title teams were, of course, built by Gillick, whose acquisitions of Lidge, Jamie Moyer, Joe Blanton, Matt Stairs, Jayson Werth, and Greg Dobbs helped put the Phillies over the top.

In a wide-open and competitive NL, the Phillies are well-positioned to contend the next few years.

The team's nucleus features five elite players (Lidge, Howard, Utley, Rollins, and Cole Hamels) and a strong supporting cast that can - and has - won. What's more, this talent is in its prime years. The team is no longer young and promising. It is experienced and proven.

Phillies officials believe the team can win another title in the next three seasons. That much became clear when the team signed Howard to a three-year, $54 million deal in February. The contract bought out Howard's remaining salary arbitration years. He can become a free agent after the 2011 season, when he will be 32. There's a chance the Phils will look for a younger, cheaper alternative at first base when Howard's contract is up. Lidge's deal also runs through 2011, though there is a club option for 2012. Utley and Rollins will both turn 33 after the 2011 season.



In short, there's no telling what the Phils will look like after 2011. Clearly, the team will be in a go-for-it mode these next three seasons. It has to be. The talent is there, but the meter is running. Guys are getting older. The payroll is going up, and at some point it figures to level off.

While Manuel acknowledges a three-year title window, he is focused on 2009. The club won 92 games last season - hardly an eye-popping total - but got hot at all the right times. The Phils won the NL East with a 13-3 finish and the World Series with an 11-3 postseason.

With the season opener approaching, there's a lot to like about this entire team.

Little Red Machine?

Maybe.

Chase Utley and the Phillies will be attempting to become the first National League team to win back-to-back World Series titles since the Cincinatti Reds in 1975.

Coach firings an epidemic

By Carlos Monarrez
McClatchy Newspapers

The body count is growing. Like a mobster movie or a horror flick, they have been picked off one by one. Some victims saw it coming. Others never knew what hit them.

But they all – 15 coaches in the NBA and NHL – have shared the same fate this season.

Fired!

Some dismissals have been surprising. On March 9, the Montreal Canadiens cut loose Guy Carbonneau with 16 games left in the regular season. The Habs were in playoff position and had just come off a win at Dallas. In February, the Phoenix Suns fired first-year coach Terry Porter despite a winning record (28-23).

In Detroit this season, Pistons rookie coach Michael Curry has faced criticism. Those in charge at firecurry.com are imploring team president Joe Dumars to make Curry the ninth NBA coach fired during the season, which would tie the record set in 2004-05.

But even when the team was on an eight-game losing streak in February and struggling mightily at home, some experts didn't believe Curry's job was in peril.

"No, I would be surprised if he were fired," David Aldridge, an NBA analyst for TNT, said recently in a phone interview. ". . . Obviously, Michael is a first-year head coach and will have to learn on the fly, and I think Joe is committed to going forward with that. I've gotten no indication from anybody that Michael is in danger."

With 10 regular-season games remaining and star players battling injuries, there's almost no chance Curry would be fired before the end of the season. He'll survive a rookie campaign in which fellow first-year coaches Porter, Tampa Bay's Barry Melrose and Ottawa's Craig Hartsburg did not.

The trend in the NBA has been to ax a coach after a bad stretch that often is capped by a bad loss.

P.J. Carlesimo was the NBA's first casualty after the Oklahoma City Thunder lost its 10th straight. The Washington Wizards dismissed Eddie Jordan after a 1-10 start and two days after a 122-117 loss to New York, which had only seven players available. The Knicks also had a hand in Reggie Theus' firing in Sacramento, which booted him two days after New York scored 43 first-quarter points and beat the host Kings, 114-90.

Big losses have had a lot to do with the firings, but so has big business and the impatience it has engendered among owners.

"They want to win and win now," 76ers forward Elton Brand told reporters after coach Maurice Cheeks was fired with a 9-14 record in December.

The Pistons have racked up quality wins this month against Orlando, Denver and Boston. That has helped take the heat off Curry, who said recently he has not concerned himself with the firing epidemic. He simply considers it the nature of the beast.

"It's part of it. It's the landscape of pro sports now," Curry said.

According to a theory put forth by Aldridge, the Celtics are to blame for the rash of firings. Boston went from the Eastern Conference cellar in 2006-07 to a deluxe apartment in the NBA sky as world champs last season.

"Then I think a lot of owners said, 'Well, why can't we have a turnaround like that? Why can't we, if not win a championship, have a major turnaround? If we just do these one or two things we could have a turnaround like that,' " Aldridge said. "Well, yeah, if you have Kevin Garnett and Ray Allen you could have a turnaround like that."

This has been Curry's saving grace. Instead of adding players, the Pistons are trying to unload them to save salary-cap space for the big free-agent market of 2010.

Griffin's season over with loss to UNC

By Mike Jones
McClatchy Newspapers

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — With just over a minute to play, Oklahoma coach Jeff Capel made the tribute substitution for Blake Griffin.

Sooner fans stood and applauded. So did many in the large contingent of North Carolina faithful who swelled Sunday's attendance for the South Region final to 17,025.

But other than that moment, the Sooners' 72-60 loss to the Tar Heels was best signified by the sound of one hand clapping.

Griffin, with 23 points and 16 rebounds, did all he could against a double and triple-down defense, easy for Carolina to execute because the Sooners' backcourt that didn't hit a three-point shot until little more than five minutes remained offered no reason for a sagging guard to stay at home on the perimeter.

"We have good players," Capel said. "Sometimes good players don't make good plays. It stinks because so much was at stake."

As predicted, this game wasn't about Griffin and Carolina's Tyler Hansbrough, who was relegated to a bit player (8 points, 6 rebounds). Point guard Ty Lawson (19 points, 5 assists, 5 rebounds, 3 steals) and backcourt mate Danny Green (18 points) assumed the starring roles.

"That's what makes our team so dangerous," Lawson said. "If one person isn't having a good night, other people will pick it up."

Other people were missing for the Sooners.

For so much of this 30-6 season, Capel doggedly contended his was not a one-man team. Unfortunately, on this afternoon one step away from the last weekend, it looked like it.

Sure, freshman guard Willie Warren scored 18 points with a late flourish. But neither he nor Austin Johnson or once-again slumping Tony Crocker had much scoring success during meaningful minutes in the game, which were far-to-few for OU.

Warren was the only guard in double figures. He hit two of nine 3-pointers. The rest of the team was 0-for-10.

"The main problem for us was none of our shots were falling early," Warren said. "We just couldn't hit shots from the outside, and that's what usually got us wins in the first three games (in the NCAA Tournament)."

Capel asked that the subject of Griffin's future not be broached. He said that he would huddle with Blake sometime midweek or so, "and most likely do the same thing with Willie."

Warren, however, reiterated his plan Sunday to remain at OU rather than opt for the NBA draft.

More than likely, though, we've seen the last of this level for a wonderfully talented player destined to play in a lot of NBA all-star games.

After the game as the teams filed past one another, Griffin hugged Hansbrough before North Carolina coach Roy Williams stopped him.

"He said I was one of the greatest players he's ever coached against," Griffin said, speaking in front of his dressing quarter stall.

"And he told me not to think about this game, but about the season. That was nice of him to say as long as he's been in this business and as many players as he's coached against."

Ty Lawson (19 points, five rebounds, five assist) helped lead UNC past Oklahoma to clinch yet another Final Four appearance.

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781-396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

ESBOnline

Anytime Banking

NOW OPEN ACCOUNTS and do all your banking at ESB Online 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. Have immediate access to the account information and bill paying capability you need with just the click of a mouse.

bankesb.com
Easthampton Savings Bank | 413.527.4111

Member FDIC
Member DIF

ScandihOOvians
Scandinavian Design for Living. A Beautiful Lifestyle

Wallow in piety.

| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 8 | | 3 | 7 | | 5 | | |
| | | | | | | | 6 |
| | | | | | | 8 | 1 7 |
| | | 2 | 9 | 1 | | 6 | |
| | | 8 | 2 | | 3 | 9 | |
| | | 1 | | 4 | 8 | 2 | |
| 7 | 3 | 9 | | | | | |
| 1 | | | | | | | |
| | | | 4 | | 1 | 3 | 5 |

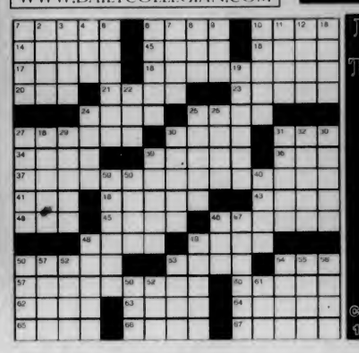
Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Distorts
6 Trunk
10 Place to sit
14 Of wide girth
15 Copycat
16 Walked on
17 Tree secretion
18 To the right
20 NYC's zone in summer
21 Pine
23 French city
24 Tribe member
25 London, for one
27 Hammer
30 Secretary of State (1961-69)
31 Buchanan's successor, for short
34 Like fine wine
35 "Miss Thompson" 53 Rita Hayworth film
36 Communist
37 East Coast teams
41 Most famous 1969 bride
42 Zodiac sign
43 Arrow poison
44 Sped
45 Gentlemen
48 Shock
49 Weights
49 "What a pity!"
50 Sophia
53 Consumer ___ Grama Arbs'
54 ___ Gatsby
57 Loathings
60 Shared belief
62 Clear youth
63 Learned by ___, memorized
64 Mr. Pyle
65 Stops
66 Buick residue
67 30 Across and others

DOWN
1 Sported
2 Not up
3 Others
4 Chi's follower
5 Group of 100
6 Keep motel while roasting
7 ___ for picks
8 Grassy area
9 Make a boner
10 Baby carrier
11 Spoken
12 Tiger's cry
13 Inserts
19 Supported
22 Word of disgust
24 Auto maker
25 Traitor
26 B ___ boy
27 Main area of study
28 Launch vehicle
29 Indicate one's awareness
30 Levels, in London
31 Fight site
32 Type of palm
33 Old car
35 Mikado
38 Marsha and Jackie
39 Actress Moran
40 Bites
46 Stein contents
47 Spill
48 Gulls' squeins
49 Thing worth having
50 Overdue
51 Hot spot
52 Marsh growth
53 "Do ___ others..."
54 ___ and the King of Siam"
55 Harness part
56 Holy miles
58 Apr. addressee
59 Tic Tac Toe win
61 Poet's word

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Interested in getting Business Experience?



The Collegian needs a new Business Manager for 2009-2010.

Applications are available at 113 Campus Center.
Due Wednesday April 8th. by 5 pm.

Quote of the Day

"Half of the modern drugs could well be thrown out of the window, except that the birds might eat them."

— Dr. Martin Henry Fischer

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Having your identity stolen will only benefit you, since your current identity is quite the loser.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your job at McDonald's has led you to question modern theories of quantum mechanics. String theory is just not possible.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You know enough to dress to impress, but also to drink to get drunk. Screw whta tehy thinjk and lscjkasla.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You love looking at thingies so much that you should become a Thingy Doctor, or at least a Whoopie Pie Doctor.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Little did anyone suspect that your preoccupation with the board game Clue as a child would lead to your murder spree.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your dreams have been haunted by screaming crustaceans ever since you quit Red Lobster.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Remember: Only bad conversations begin with "If you were the opposite sex..."

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You'll be caught in a dangerous stampede today leaving Mahar, after your professor announces that the class notes are online.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Adding a cowboy hat and bullwhip will give you that kinky Western flair you were looking for.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Drunk dialing your boss will finally give you the courage to ask for that raise, and an opportunity to not get it.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your room is infested with 8-foot pythons (if you know what I mean).

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You have a long career addressing troubled youth with condesending crap ahead of you.

Dayley by Annie Keithline

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! by Tim Rickard

Labrat By Richard Martell

Classifieds

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Announcement

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

For Rent

Amherst: 2,3, & 4 bedroom apartments, $1200-$2250. FREE HEAT! Great Specials! www.MillValleyApts.com or 413-253-7377

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

For Sale

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 31, 2009

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen's struggles continue

Serino surrenders grand slam in 8-1 road loss to UConn

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A six-run thumping of starting pitcher Nick Serino brought the Massachusetts baseball team its 13th loss of the season. Connecticut beat the Minutemen, 8-1, in their second-to-last game before the home opener at Earl Lorden Field.

UMass (6-13, 1-5 Atlantic 10) had hits from four players in the loss. Designated hitter Sam Boone and third baseman Jim MacDonald each had two hits against the Huskies (12-11), who outhit UMass 11-7.

| | |
|---|---|
| UConn | 8 |
| UMass | 1 |

Brian Baudinet started off the offense for the Minutemen with a leadoff walk in the top of the second inning. Then he took off for second base shortly thereafter, en route to his team-leading fourth stolen base of the season.

Baudinet kept running when UConn shortstop Nick Ahmed couldn't handle the throw from catcher John Sulzicki.

UMass capitalized on the scoring opportunity after Huskies starter Doug Jennings walked Mike Donato. MacDonald hit into a double play that brought home Baudinet, with the only UMass run of the day.

"Just not sharp enough," UMass coach Mike Stone said of UMass' effectiveness in the game. "We just didn't do enough to win the game. When you're not sharp mentally you're not going to be sharp physically."

Serino (1-2) went five full innings in the loss, giving up six hits and four walks while striking out five. UConn hitters started the damage in the first inning when Ahmed singled to left field to start the game. The next batter, second baseman Pierre LePage laid down a sacrifice bunt to advance Ahmed to second base.

See BASEBALL on page 7

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Brian Baudinet, shown last year, scored UMass' first and only run during the team's 8-1 loss to UConn Monday. Baudinet's performance has been one of the few bright spots this season. He leads the Minutemen with four stolen bases including one against the Huskies.

BRIAN TELLO/COLLEGIAN

Whitney Williams and the No. 22 Minutewomen enjoy the luxury of veteran leadership from UMass coach Elaine Sortino, who is in her 30th year. Teams with first year coaches aren't so lucky, combining for a 13-50 record.

First-year coaches face many challenges

New coaches leading teams to a combined 13-50 record

BY NICK O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The 2009 season will be the first for three coaches in the Atlantic 10. La Salle, Rhode Island and Temple all enter this season with new coaches at the helm.

Headlining the new cast of coaches is an old face – first-year Temple coach Joe DiPietro – who spent the last six seasons at La Salle. The Explorers then filled their coaching vacancy with first time head coach Brianne Brown, who was an assistant under DiPietro.

A–10 Softball

URI, meanwhile, went outside of the Atlantic 10 to fill its coaching vacancy, selecting former Marist coach Erin Layton for the head coach position.

DiPietro earned 77 wins in his time at La Salle, 22 of which came in his last season with the Explorers. He had previously been an assistant coach for the Philadelphia Force of the National Pro Fastpitch League. DiPietro replaced former Casey Dickson at the helm for the Owls.

Dickson, who went 55-68 over her three seasons at Temple, resigned from her position on May 23. DiPietro was appointed on July 17.

In his first season at Temple, DiPietro has gone 3-19, 1-3 A-10, losing to his former team twice.

After losing its head coach, La Salle looked to Brown to become the sixth head coach in the history of its softball program. After working with infielders and outfielders as an assistant, Brown assumed the head coaching role and has the Explorers roughly the same level as DiPietro's Owls – she is 3-13, 2-4 A-10 record.

The final hiring, URI coach Erin Layton, has fared the best of the three new coaches – Rams have gone 7-18, 1-3 A-10 so far. Layton, who was introduced as the new Rams coach on August 18, took the job after leading Marist to back-to-back conference tournament appearances in her two years at the school.

Layton replaced former Rams coach Deb Smith, who resigned in early May. Smith posted a 44-99 record in three seasons at URI, finishing up her stay there with a 14-38 in her final season.

RAMS STELLAR STAFF

Fordham, which has played the most games of any team in the A-10, boasts one of the premier pitching staffs in the conference. Led by a one-two punch of their two young starters, freshman Jen Mineau and sophomore Chelsea Plimpton, the Rams currently hold the second best earned-run average in the A-10 (2.37).

Mineau, who was named Louisville Slugger/NFCA Division I National Player of the Week last week, is coming off of a monster stretch. The freshman went 3-0 in six appearances, including a perfect game and a no-hitter.

Currently fifth in the A-10 with a 1.71 earned run average and third in strikeouts with 72, Mineau anchors a young Rams' staff that has seen a lot of innings this year. Mineau is tied with Charlotte's Emily Jeffery for the top spot in the conference in innings pitched (90.0).

While Mineau has had some exceptional performance as of late, her teammate Plimpton remains one of the top pitchers in the conference. She is right behind Mineau at sixth in the conference in earned run average with 2.23, but has pitched half as many innings.

BILLIKENS PEAKING

After starting the season with at an ice-cold 1-6, Saint Louis has gotten hot at the right time. The Billikens have gone 5-1 in their last six games, four of the wins coming against conference opponents, sweeping both Dayton and St. Bonaventure.

The Billikens started the season with a win against Southern Utah, but followed it up with several devastating losses; falling to Virginia 11-0 and Nevada-Las Vegas 18-3 to begin the losing streak and were outscored 74-18 during that period. The Billikens broke their streak with back-to-back wins against Tulsa and Louisiana-Monroe.

SLU had been unable to pull out of frequent slumping

See A–10 SOFTBALL on page 7

Dayton rally caps off sweep of 49ers, tie for division lead

BY MIKE MASTONE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Dayton baseball team rallied from an 8-1 deficit Sunday to defeat Charlotte 14-10 and complete a three-game sweep of the 49ers.

Charlotte (14-9, 1-5 Atlantic 10) held a 9-4 lead heading into the bottom of the fifth inning, but the 49ers failed to control an explosive Dayton offense. Jacob Spaeth capped off a five-run inning for the Flyers with a game-tying grand slam – his second hit on the day. The Flyers (15-10, 6-0 A-10) gained the lead two innings later on an RBI single by Scott Dunwoody and never looked back.

A–10 Baseball

Dayton reliever Cameron Hobson came in for starter Chuck Ghysels after 4 2/3 innings and shut down the 49ers. Hobson struck out 10 and allowed one unearned run in the final 4 1/3 innings, securing the victory for the Flyers.

Dunwoody scored three runs on the day, and his single in the seventh extended his hitting streak to 11 games. He is batting .310 on the season with 15 runs scored. Spaeth's grand slam was his first home run of the season. He leads the Flyers with 23 runs scored and is second on the team with a .390 batting average.

For the 49ers, freshman outfielder Justin Wilson continued his hot streak and went 2-for-6 on the day with a home run (the first of his career) and two RBIs. He leads the conference with a .455 batting average with 35 hits on the season.

Dayton is now tied with Temple (11-11, 6-0 A-10) for the A-10 lead, as both teams have swept their A-10 competition. The Flyers have won nine of their last 11 games and look to extend their winning streak to four Tuesday against Butler (4-18).

Charlotte, who defeated No. 5 North Carolina (20-6) last Wednesday, has the third-worst

See A–10 BASEBALL on page 7

UM wins Yankee Cup

BY NOAH STEINBERG–DI STEFANO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts rowing team captured the Yankee Cup in Kingston, R.I., edging defending champion Rhode Island by one point at the Campanella Rowing Center on Saturday.

In the first scored regatta of the season, the Minutewomen competed against URI, Connecticut and New Hampshire. It was the first Yankee Cup title for the Minutewomen since the 2006 season.

After defeating the United States Coast Guard Academy in its first scrimmage of the spring, UMass was feeling confident going into the race against their division rival. Despite losses to URI in the Varsity 8 and Junior Varsity 8 races; the first novice eight, novice 4, light weight 4, varsity A 4, varsity B 4 and, the quad all won their races by sizeable margins to edge defending champion Rams.

Connecticut came in third with 15 total points and New Hampshire finished in last place with 10 points.

The regatta on Saturday began bright and early at 8:20 a.m. The win for UMass ended a frustrating streak for the Minutewomen, who had lost to division nemesis URI in the last two Yankee Cup competitions.

Coming off the victory, UMass will set its sight on its next opponent, Holy Cross, who it will take on this Sunday. The regatta will take place on the banks of the Connecticut River, just past the Calvin Coolidge Bridge in Northampton.

Last year, UMass defeated the Crusaders in a tight race. The race is the lone home regatta for the Minutewomen, who will travel to Camden, N.J., for the Knecht Cup next weekend.

The Minutewomen got some encouragement Saturday with the balanced performance that all boats displayed in their Yankee Cup triumph. Varsity, lightweight and novice rowers alike rose to the occasion to beat a strong Rhode Island team. UMass will look to use the win as springboard for the remainder of their season.

Looking a few weeks down the road, all members of the Minutewomen have one date circled on their calendars – the Atlantic-10 Championships on April 18. The Minutewomen will look to capture their 13th overall Atlantic 10 championship after relinquishing the title to URI in last year's competition.

Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano can be reached at steinber@student.umass.edu.

APRIL

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY (That's what she said) | THE FIRST THING YOU GRAB IN THE MORNING

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY MORNING WOOD

HIGH: 285.78K LOW: 276.89 K | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | WEDNESDAY, APRIL 1, 2009

Hampshire makes move to cannabis-based fee system

By Harvey Schlangberg
Morning Wood Staff

In yet another controversial move, the Hampshire College Board of Trustees announced late Tuesday that it would move to make cannabis the official currency of the small liberal arts school located in South Amherst.

Citing its increased liquidity in a time of monetary uncertainty, Hampshire College officials released a report Tuesday at 4:20 p.m. titled "The Proposed Benefits of an Alternative Financial Solution Through Cannabinoids and Their Enhancement Of...Shit I'm Hungry."

Across campus, students hailed the move as a victory for personal liberties, civil rights, child labor, animal rights, struggling artists, the working poor, afflicted minorities, Bob Marley and his family, the National Basketball Association, the recording industry, and the campus community.

"Hampshire is like, totally taking down the corporate machine and showing the man that the little guy can like, win, you know," said sophomore Sunflower Sanders as she passed a recently purchased marijuana cigarette from the campus store around a circle of friends.

"Yeah...yeah, it's like, showing the war makers and the, you know, dudes in suits or whatever, that we won't take it," agreed Sanders' friend, junior Sky Ericson.

Though financial experts predicted that the new financial plan would be difficult to implement, due to the frequently varying price of marijuana, Hampshire officials were confident that the school could come to an agreeable resolution on pricing.

"Well a gram is 15, that's obvious, two g's is probably going to go for 30, but you might be able to talk us down to 25, an eight's going to be 45, unless it's something dank, and an O is going to be somewhere between 220 and 240, so we'll work it out," said Hampshire vice president of financial operations Carl Lefontaine.

The campus store was already starting to make adjustments to its price structure.

"A Red Bull, that used to be three bucks," said store clerk and Hampshire senior Eva Hernandez. "Now it's a bowl pack."

Education analysts said the move will make Hampshire a sure pick for certain demographics.

"I'm guessing we're going to start seeing a lot more applications to Hampshire from international students, particularly Central and Latin American applicants from rather prestigious families in that region, perhaps also the children of certain celebrities, I understand Snoop Dogg's daughter is considering Hampshire quite strongly, and I believe 50 Cent is a doctoral candidate," said Kaplan consultant Lisa Burkrate.

"This really locks up what we call the Che t-shirt demographic," she added.

Throughout the world of academia, other schools took notice.

Reed College in Portland, Ore. is expected to vote on a proposal to accept either marijuana or hallucinogens such as LSD and peyote for tuition next week, while Brigham Young University, Oral Roberts University, Bob Jones University, Princeton, Stanford, Duke, the University of South Carolina and Greenfield Community College opted to terminate their exchange programs with Hampshire.

Students were expected to ring in the new era at Hampshire with "Ja Fest" at Campus Center Wednesday, where student organizations planned to show the film "The Wall" and distribute free starter kits of the Grateful Dead record "American Beauty" and a small water pipe sometimes referred to as a bubbler.

Harvey Schlangberg can be reached at schlong@themorningwood.com

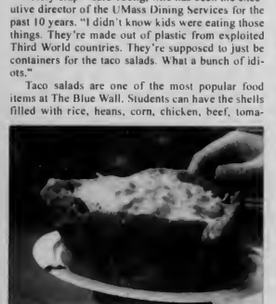
Taco Salad shells apparently 'not for human consumption'



By Dick Trickle
Morning Wood Staff

Members of the University of Massachusetts staff yesterday were horrified to hear that students have been eating the flaky shells containing The Blue Wall's 'taco salads,' as the shells were never meant for human consumption.

UMass Dining Services higher-ups, including executive director Ken Toong, said the shells were merely for presentation and that he never thought students would be stupid enough to eat them.

"Holy crap!" said Toong, who has been the executive director of the UMass Dining Services for the past 10 years. "I didn't know kids were eating those things. They're made out of plastic from exploited Third World countries. They're supposed to just be containers for the taco salads. What a bunch of idiots."

Taco salads are one of the most popular food items at The Blue Wall. Students can have the shells filled with rice, beans, corn, chicken, beef, tomatoes, cheese, and pink sauce among other things, but Toong said the shells are meant to be brought to the "Taco Shell Return," located at the back of the eatery, when students are done eating. He said he didn't even think the shells were fully digestible.

COURTESY OF FLICKR USER TRIAL WITH TACO SALAD - JUST RIGHT

Um yeah, you weren't supposed to eat that...it'll probably be fine.

"Boy, I'd hate to be with some of those kids in a car with the windows up," Toong said.

Some students, like sophomore Danish language major Tommy Marin, said they weren't too surprised to hear the news.

"Now that I think about, those yummytastic shells were too good to be true," said Marin. "I don't care what anybody says, though – I'm going to keep eating them anyway."

Fellow student Ann Chovee, a senior BDIC major with a concentration in Lifetime Original Movies, said she couldn't agree less with Marin, who she said is a complete moron.

"That's freaking awful. I can't believe I've been eating those things every single day for the past two years. This is [expletive] [expletive] [expletive] [expletive] [expletive] [expletive] crazy," she said.

Chovee said she initially considered suing UMass until she remembered that after all the budget cuts the University has endured, even if she did win in court she would only enough money to buy a few pieces of licorice.

She added, however, that there was a little bit of relief in learning about this ordeal.

"This certainly explains my irritable bowel syndrome lately," she said.

After being told about the mix-up, Chancellor Robert C. Holub exploded into laughter. After grabbing his left side and wiping away a few tears, he said, "That's [expletive] hilarious. This type of holubaloo never happened down at the University of Tennessee."

Dick Trickle can be reached by e-mail, but he much prefers snail mail. So attach a letter to your pet snail, and send that little guy on over.

'F*ck' the dealer fails to get dealer laid, according to study

By Woodward and Bernstein
Morning Wood Staff

A recent study by the STDS (Sexual Trysts and Drinking Services) has shown that the popular drinking game "F*ck the Dealer" has had little to no effect on the dealer having sexual intercourse.

STDS official Ingrid Winters explained that in a Southwest-wide survey, University of Massachusetts students reported that regardless of begging, pleading or even drugging, the results remained the same: no sex for the dealer.

Many former "dealers" of the game agreed with the survey results.

"I played 'F*ck the Dealer' with this one chick for two hours, and all I got out of it was puke all over my sweatshirt. Not cool, man," said Jake Lichen, a UMass sophomore and women's studies major.

Freshman and public health major Steven Danley agrees.

"It's all in the name! What about it don't girls understand?" said Danley.

However, a few students argue that the game brings the opportunity for intercourse, but the dealer has to ultimately "close the deal" so to speak.

"What I usually do is I wait until I've dealt a few rounds of 'F*ck the Dealer', then I tell the girl that I'm a UMass athlete. Works every time," said a student who wished to remain anonymous.

"The game is typically played with one of the three trifecta of cheap college beer; Busch, Keystone or Milwaukee's Best. However, I usually opt for a game of 'Edward Fortyhands' to be played beforehand, otherwise I have to resort to the straight vodka," said super senior and criminal justice major Tom Newton.

Other students give simpler advice.

"Just pick sluttier girls to play," said Gordon Polaski, a junior and economics major. "Go for sorority girls first, but if they aren't available, check the frat houses around 2 a.m. when the keg's tapped. If all else fails, girls from Sylvan are pretty lonely. They'll be excited you just asked them to play any game!"

Studies also suggest that failure to copulate following "F*ck the Dealer" may have more to do with the dealer's interpersonal skills and physical features than anything else.

"I'm way more likely to sleep with a guy who will actually act sociable at a party than one who sits in the corner playing stupid card games," said Diana Lucelli, a sophomore and psychology major. "If he is actually an athlete, that helps, too."

As product sales plummet throughout the nation, the developers of "F*ck the Dealer" wish to remind consumers that there is no guarantee for success in any game.

"We can only go so far," said Don Peterson, executive director and creator of "F*ck the Dealer" in defense of the study's results. "It's all set up for the dealer; a social atmosphere, a deck of cards, large amounts of alcohol consumed in consecutive minutes...if you can't manage to get yourself laid after that, there's no help for you anyway."

Woodward & Bernstein can be reached at ilovewatergate@themorningwood.com.

Restructuring Ahoy!

Holub takes flagship status literally

UMass to become first pirate maritime academy

By Capt. Jack Meoff
Morning Wood Staff

Last week self-proclaimed "Admiral of the Black" Robert C. Holub, announced his plans to turn the University of Massachusetts-Amherst into a pirate maritime academy in an attempt to battle the $100 million deficit faced by the University next semester.

The plan includes a number of measures designed to both streamline existing colleges and create new forms of revenue.

The crux of Holub's proposal involves making each of each of the 150 plus academic buildings and residence halls seaworthy and moving them to the Connecticut River where they will float downstream "plundering heavily along the way," explained Holub in a statement. The University will exit the river into the Long Island Sound, and proceed to be "the scourge of the eastern seaboard."

"Next semester will see a number of changes at every level," said Holub. "The onetime costs of outfitting residence halls and academic buildings with masts, sails, capstans and hundreds of feet of high quality rope will be far outweighed by the money plundered from other campuses, towns and principalities."

The proposed changes come against recommendations for the Reorganization and Budget Task Forces created by Holub earlier this year.

"This is a serious departure from the college of Arts and Sciences we had proposed," said Jane Fountain, chair of the Reorganization Task Force. "While a larger College of Privateering has its place in certain types of higher education institutions we surveyed, we feel it would be disadvantageous here at the University of Massachusetts."

The plan also introduces a new financial model for the University: 90 percent of all proceeds from looting and pillaging by students will go directly to the University in lieu of traditional fees and tuition. Students will retain 10 percent of their total plunder for expenses, like "rum, weaponry, and pirate garb and other study aids," according to Holub's statement.

Admiral of the Black Robert C. Holub, pictured here with Polly the Piratical Parrot, announced his plan to plunder the Eastern Seaboard.

Students are expected to bring in a minimum amount of loot according to their class year, those with a substandard Booty Per Plunder (BPP) will be flogged, any subsequent offense will result in immediate plank walking.

Opinions have been mixed about the proposed changes.

"Personally I think this is a great move for UMass," said junior, looting major Margret 'Peg Leg' Stevens. "Plus I'm really looking forward to plundering the hell out of those loaded Amherst college pricks."

"I'm totally against the plan," said senior, horrowaggling major Jonathan "The Sieve" Lincoln. "Ninety percent of our haul is outrageous, if I want to get extorted while pretending to get an education I'll do it the old fashioned way and go to Hampshire."

SGA president Malcolm "Falcon" Chu, said he would fight the administration "tooth and nail," to raise the amount of booty retained by students.

President of the Massachusetts Professors Association, Max 'The Knave' Page, who has sometimes been at odds with the University, has voiced his support of the plan.

"This is a step in the right direction in terms of providing students with a good, affordable education about shanties, pillaging and the briny deep in general."

Page, a professor of advanced gunnery, said he was looking forward to teaching his first class next fall.

Holub said those who weren't onboard with the plan should, "get ready to dance the hempen jig and spend the rest of their days in Davy Jones' Locker."

"These be difficult times," continued the statement by Holub, "and we be in a position that calls for decisive action. We can no longer wait for the state or federal governments to determine our fiscal future. Now be the time to seize the plentiful riches at sea and make our own fate, Sail ho! A black spot on those who defy the might of the Flagship University of Massachusetts!"

Capt. Jack Meoff can be reached on his mighty pirate ship, The English Riding Coat

GEO to protest fee decrease

By Brendan Hall
Morning Wood Staff

The Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) announced yesterday it plans to protest the recently-announced fee rebate by holding a four-man march to Amherst Center.

"We just think this is really unfortunate timing," said Jack Schwartz, executive director of bitching and moaning for GEO. "We literally just got a bunch of new picket signs to protest the increase and they go and change the figure on us."

Schwartz and three other GEO members will be marching – Macbooks in messenger bags – from Whitmore to Amherst Coffee, where they plan to buy one latte each, sit for four hours and discuss how "counter-hegemonic" their protest is.

"We might also stop at Food for Thought Books to hold up the line talking to the cashier about post-post-structuralism and pick up the newest issue of The Economist," he said.

Schwartz said he is concerned if the issue of a fee increase is no longer at the forefront of GEO's grievances with the University, they'll lose the support of the campus community because nobody cares if their kids don't get free daycare.

"If we don't have this to complain about, I might have to go back to grading papers for Gen-Ed classes," he said.

He hopes that the protest will have an effect similar to last year's campus-wide student strike, which didn't actually change anything but directly resulted in the creation of seven new all-purpose protest chants, including: "No Justice, No Peace – Stop Raisin' Our Fees," and "We're Here, We're Queer – Well, Not All of Us, Actually, But We Recently Attended a LGTBQ Ally Training Seminar."

The Republican Club plans to hold a counter-protest that same day.

"We're not really sure what they're protesting," said Republican Club president Bull Connor. "But we know we're against it."

The Radical Student Union (RSU) and International Socialist Organization (ISO) and Ambiguously Far-Left Students for the Legalization of Marijuana and a Free Tibet (AFLSLMFT) are planning a counter-counter-protest in response to the counter-protest.

"We're against hate," said Jennifer Melendez, a member of the RSU and ISO, as well as several other advocacy groups that pretty much do the same thing. "And we hate the Republican Club, because if you're a Republican then you automatically hate gay people and black people and gay black people – so you shouldn't be allowed to vote or express your views in a public forum."

Graduate student Ed Cutting said he plans to attend all three events, skulking in the back and taking pictures before returning to his one-room shack to comment on every story on DailyCollegian.com.

"It's what I do every Wednesday," he said.

Chancellor Robert C. Holub declined to address the protest, the counter-protest and the counter-counter-protest when reached for comment late last night.

"Get off my lawn," he said.

Brendan Hall can be reached while walking forlornly to Amherst Center on assignment

Better spin for Obama

By Luis Dinglestein
Morning Wood Staff

The leaders of America's largest banks and brokerages met with President Obama Friday to discuss putting a better spin on the nation's fiscal collapse.

"It was a very fruitful discussion in which we discussed many positive things," said Morgan Stanley chief executive John J. Mack.

"America is a stronger and more secure nation than ever, and I believe that taking the steps we are taking to correct the problems we're addressing is the best solution" he added.

In a press conference on the Rose Garden after the summit, Obama described the gathering as one of cooperation and discourse and announced that America had "turned a corner," in the handling of its financial woes.

"We're very pleased to be able to tell you that we will never tell you about our problems again," he said.

"Together we can end all discussion of the issues ailing our nation right now, and can instead use positive language and euphemisms to describe our altogether disastrous state, er… excellent condition," he continued.

"The basic message is we're all in this together," saod John Stumpf, Wells Fargo's chief executive after the meeting. "We're trying to do the right thing for America."

The meeting came as part of the president's new "Moving US Forward" initiative, which is expected to include three stages. The first, the so-called SUCKS (Solving Urgent Crisis, K?, Sweet) phase, began this week.

During this phase, President Obama is expected to don a different village person outfit at each stop on a tour of struggling Rust Belt cities, which White House press secretary Robert Gibbs said is intended to put a light twist on otherwise sobering news for many blue collar workers.

"We want to show the people a good time, you know, let them know we understand that things are hard. Besides, who wouldn't to hear a little YMCA right now," he told reporters before pulling out a rubber chicken from the podium, placing it in front of his face and saying "I'm an economist, everything is terrible right now, bok-bok," In a mocking tone of voice.

The second phase, which officials have been tight-lipped about due to its confidential nature, will involve a nationally televised meeting between Treasury Secretary Tim Geithner and magician Criss Angel, during which the two are expected to hold a séance channeling Franklin Roosevelt's ghost for advice. If the séance is unsuccessful, Angel is expected to make Geithner disappear forever.

The third phase, which officials stress is only tentative pending the results of the first two phases, will involve yet another stimulus package where the treasury is expected to print at least $100 billion worth of 100's.

"We hope these measures will move the American economy forward and help us rise to meet the challenges of the future," Gibbs said, "who wants to play freeze tag?"

Luis Dinglestein can be reached at lhatewallstreet@themorningwood.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS MORNING WOOD
CXVIX
WE ARE KIDDING

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Ernest P. Worrell
MANAGING EDITOR Drew Carey
BUSINESS MANAGER Jackson Z. POLAKZZ
PRODUCTION MANAGER Richard Reid
NIGHT SUPERVISOR April O'Neal
ADVERTISING MANAGER Curl Winslow
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Meg Griffin
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cristiano Ronaldo
COMICS EDITOR Nerguine Adam Stagnes
EDITORIAL EDITOR Jackie Burkhart
EDITORIAL EDITOR The Grimace
NEWS EDITOR Harvey Milk
SPORTS EDITOR Mrs. CPA
PHOTO EDITOR Chad Pennington
FEATURES EDITOR Karl Marx
PHOTO EDITOR Amish dude
WEB EDITOR Hot Carl
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Some freshman schmuck
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Joe Rogan
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Estelle Constanza
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Henry Paulson
CLASSIFIED MANAGER John McEnroe
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Dirk Kuyt
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Title IX
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Dirk Diggler
ASSISTANT NEWS Wicked Mike Sarkes
ASSISTANT NEWS Barron Hipp
ASSISTANT NEWS Pepper Ann
ASSISTANT SPORTS Seamus O'Toole
ASSISTANT SPORTS Paul Shanley
ASSISTANT SPORTS Kosmo Kramer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Ed 'the Godfather' Cuming
ASSISTANT PHOTO Steve Carell
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Chucky Finster
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Antonio Rosario Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Jaws

THE MORNING WOOD APPEARS EVERY APRIL 1ST. THE WOOD IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, NOT LEGALLY BOUND BY ARIS. FOUNDED EARLY THIS MORNING, THE PAPER BEGAN AS THE LIMP NEWS AND BECAME THE WET DREAM AROUND 9:01, THE SUPPOSED CROP AT 9:14 AND THE PUBLISHED TENT AFTER 9:56. HAPPENING DAILY SINCE THE BEGINNING OF TIME, MORNING WOOD HAS BEEN APPENING AT UMASS STUDENTS SINCE APRIL 1998. FOR PEOPLE WHO GIVE A SHIT, AND QUICK COPIES, CALL 413-545-3500 M-F 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M. (FOR YOU EARLY RISERS).

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jackson Z POLAKZZ

COPY EDITOR
Still some broad

PRODUCTION TEAM
Richard Reid, Tony Toughnutts

Opinion is sexy, bitches

THE MORNING WOOD

THE BARTLETT STALL

TODAY, THE WORLD ENDS

"Salman Rushdie is sentenced to death."
-Ayatollah Khomeini

Too much voter turnout

When the rumors of a potential shift to online voting in Student Government Association elections The Collegian supported the movement. We apologize for such a misguided endorsement of a process that would dare to further democratize a body as important as the SGA. Funding the Bike Racing Club and Campus Crusade for Christ is something far too pressing to allow legitimately elected officials to make the decision.

Thankfully, the SGA opted to continue its elections in the same manner they have in the past. No one voted, again, and it's better that way. However, the numbers were a little too high for our liking. Too many students are taking interest in the SGA and something needs to be done about this.

In order to further disenfranchise the student body – which is the aim we important people must take to govern the student body the way we need to – the SGA must adopt a more convoluted system of elections. And the best possible way to do this is to look all the way to the top.

No, not at Chancellor Robert Holub; but at the United States of America and President Barack Obama. In the current system, every student's vote counts the same. What kind of bullshit is that?

We are proposing a University of Massachusetts electoral college. The only concern at the moment is that Holub might try to reorganize us into some other college at UMass. Since Southwest has the most students living in it, southwest area would count for 100 votes. Win Southwest and you win the election. After that, Central will count for 90, Orchard Hill gets 60, Northeast gets 10, North five and Sylvan one. The figure for Sylvan is tentative because we haven't received the final figure for Sylvan suicides from last week.

> This system just makes too little sense to ignore. Some well-formulated idea like online elections would provide a clear-cut winner.

Commuter Area students get no vote at all. Those rich assholes don't deserve the right to vote anyway, and we all know it takes way too much time to count the ballots anyway. But not so much time and money that wacky idea like online voting should ever be considered.

This system just makes too little sense to ignore. Some well-formulated idea like online elections would provide a clear-cut winner, and none of the nine people who actually know what the SGA does can let that happen. Transparency sucks – we all know how dangerous democracy really is.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of managing editor Joe Meloni.

Tonight, a bro died at UMass

Rorschach

Rorschach's Journal March 31,

Saw squirrel carcass in ditch by Berkshire. Surrounded by beer cans and the heartless footprints of Jordans and high heels. This campus is afraid of me. I've seen it's true Facebook.

Campus is festering with the lost souls of the young. Too obsessed with their face books and their 30-racks to see the decay that has emerged from the corpse of their innocence.

Soon, all of the pestilence that rots this school from the core will rise as all the bros and whore and hippies with flood the gutters that line their dorms.

> The accumulated filth of all their sex and murder will foam up about their waists and all the ho's and bro's will look up and shout "Let's get fucked up!" And I'll whisper "no."

The accumulated filth of all their sex and murder will foam up about their waists and all the ho's and bro's will look up and shout "Let's get fucked up!" And I'll whisper "no."

Looked at self-righteous douchebag who drinking a 40 in front of JQA. Hate his kind wearing their North Faces as far as the eye can see, blinding with their pretentious clothing bought by their parents. Ugg boots trample was self respect this city campus once had.

Someone's knocked off the masked people that live in Sylvan. Haven't been active in years, how can they track us down? Has to be someone with a grudge. Went to investigate my way.

Went to bide in man's refrigerator and wait to ambush him. Refrigerator filled with month-old Chinese food and 24 new Busch Lights. Smelled worse than me. Ate his sugar cubes and canned beans.

Got to Puffton at 10:30 p.m. Broke guy's finger – no one talked. Broke another and guy with popped-collar squealed.

These people are the weak, pampered offspring of a once great generation that infected their children with the medication and the liberal filth until all that was left was an empty sack of flesh. I'll teach these people.

None of you understand. I don't go to school with you. You go to school with me!

Intoxicated man came up to me, said it was Holub. The Chancellor, should've known.

Broke into Whitmore at 4 a.m. with 40-year-old guy in a bird costume. Tried computer, password was "bobbyrules."

Found out the truth. Holub's in Antarctica plotting the new budget. Increasing fees would cause nuclear winter, he's going for the insane alternative. Holub's plan can't be allowed to see the night of day. Too many lives at stake.

Whether I'm alive or dead upon this reading, I hope the world survives long enough for this journal to reach you. I live my life free of compromise, and step into the shadow without complaint or regret. Rorschach. April 1st.

You don't find Rorschach. He finds you.

Fake Ed/Op: Just as satisfying as real Ed/Op, just with swears.

A wicked sweet column

Pat "Sully" Sullivan

Hey brah, so this is my newspaper paper. I wrote this for my politicl 100 class and I got a C+ on it.

Yo, my buddy Murph took a look at it, and he was like said: "This is similar to something that would appear in a newspaper." He really said that.

Yo, I'm gonna make some wicked sweet points that'll just blow your mind, man. It'll be like that one time, me and my boys were playing flipcup at this guy's dorm in Thoreau and I was down five-tossing and I beasted those puck ass bitches.

You know, that there's supposed to be this lee increase of like a thousand dollars? That's friggin' lame, brah. We should do something about that. My girlfriend (well, not my real girlfriend, it's this girl I hooked up with at a party and text three times during class) was like, "heyyy, we should, like, protest and stuff. <3 txt me hck."

I was talkin to my brother Sully, my cousin Sully and my aunt, Sully, and we were talking about this Feeder guy coming to have a hate crime speech. Who invited a guy to yell hate speech at people? I heard that a bunch of Nazis showed up and made him leave the stage because they killed the First Amendment. That's messed up.

It's like, hey brah, why we hatin'? There's not even any Republic guys here. I mean, my freshman roommate Lucas was a Republican and he was like "man, go Huckahee." And we were all like "stfu lol, wicked Obama." He was also a Giants fan. Manning Sucks.

You know how I found out about this stuff? This newspaper thing here has news and shit in it. I just read it for my horoscopes (I'm a scorpio. Sup?) and the Sudoku. But I heard that people write news and stuff about the things that happen on campus. Dude, that's sweet.

> You know how I found out about this stuff? This newspaper thing here has news and shit in it. I just read it for my horoscopes (I'm a scorpio. Sup?) and the Sudoku.

It's like people take all the important sounding things and put them together so that people can have access to a broader spectrum of information through one medium (My buddy Schmitty from Dickinson wrote that sentence. Say hi Schmitty).

Hey, I'm still not done with this? Whatever, I'm going to Brad's kegger up in Puffton, I'll fix this part later. I'll definitely not hand it in like this.

Pat "Sully" Sullivan can be reached at a dorm floor near you. If he is wearing shoes, you may write on him.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

SHAMWOW, YOU'RE GONNA SAY WOW EVERYTIME

DEAR EDITOR,

Did some guy just throw up on your floor? Dude spill beer everywhere? Get a Shamwow.

You guys don't have time to be cleaning the stuff you have in your dorm. You make a spill, grab a Shamwow. I mean, look at this headset, you know I'm serious when I got this headset on.

You're gonna say "holy shamwow" everytime.

Vince
The Shamwow guy

HOW CAN STAND THESE DAMN, DIRTY HIPPIES?

DEAR EDITOR,

Hey, what kind of people do you have writing for this paper? This is bullcrap!

I see those damn dirty hippies you got writing for this rag. You may have a goose problem now, but if you don't start getting rid of these hackensack playing hippies with their Woodstock music and their damn commie thoughts, you're gonna have a damn hippy infestation.

This is science people. I've done studies on the hippies I have locked in my basement. First, people will use your large patches of grass to play ultimate Frisbee. But soon, there won't be room on buses because the damn hippies don't believe in cars.

And what's this I hear of you employing a ginger? The state of Colorado doesn't stand for these things and neither will I. Gingers don't have souls, what's wrong with you people.

You must respect mah authoritah.

Eric Cartman
Colorado Resident

MEXICO IS NOT GOING TO KIDNAP YOU

DEAR EDITOR,

Come to Mexico, it's not going to unfold anything like the plot of "Taken." I mean, we don't even know where Liam Neeson is.

Not a Mexican Drug Cartel

WHEW, THAT WAS CLOSE

DEAR EDITOR,

Hey guys, we found 80 million dollars under the couch, so we don't have to cut any teachers. Wow, I'm really glad we found that. We were going to have to make some real sacrifices; replacing toilet paper for biodegradable tree bark, brand naming dorms, and firing all cleaning staff so you actually have to flush your toilets and clean up your vomit and replacing all meat in the DC's with goose meat from the pond. Sorry.

But we were so gonna keep Student Bridges. Get used to those middle schoolers at the DC's. And you can have that pool now. Man, this is sweet.

Oh yeah, we still can't get you new driers. We don't know how.

UMass Board of Trustees

CAN'T WE ALL JUST GET ALONG?

DEAR EDITOR,

While I understand the antagonism that the New York Yankees receive because of their long term success as a baseball franchise, I believe that it is possible to appreciate the positive qualities of any sports teams. Just like the Boston Red Sox, the Yankees have a long history through both the players and fans.

Even Boston fans must be able to appreciate the grit and determination that players such as Derek Jeter put into the game. It is no fault of New York fans that all True Yankees are gamers that are always clutch and are never too selfish to just think about getting hits and home runs.

Frank DiPietro
From New York, fahget about it

NO, WE CAN'T

DEAR EDITOR,

Yankees Suck! Yankees Suck! Yankees Suck! Yankees Suck! Yankees Suck! Yankees Suck! Yankees Suck! Yankees Suck! Yankees Suck!

Andrew "The Iron Liver" McSouthwestguy

REMEMBER ME?

DEAR EDITOR,

Hi there all you college kids. It was so nice to see you guys makin' all those Facebook groups for me and supportin' me through that long campaign. That Barack Obama may have won the presidency but we got the support of all those people that love America and hate those left wing socialists.
I haven't read what you're writin' on those groups or what you guys are chantin' at those rallies, but I'm sure it's wonderful.

You guys are goin' to vote for me again whenever they have one of those election thingies again right? My advisors haven't been returning my phone calls and no one in Washington will talk to me anymore, but I'm sure they've been on vacation since the day after the election.

Sarah Palin
2008 Presidential Candidate

THIS IS NOT SPARTA?

Dear Editor,

You there. Yes, you there with the cloth helmet with a red "B" on it. Stop it. You are not in Sparta. You do not have a conveniently located pit of doom on your campus. So stop saying you're in Sparta. You don't even kick people when you say it. So unless you start sending people flying into that Kraken pit with the birds in it, stop it.

Leonidas
King of the Spartans

Letters to the editor will not be read. Ever. Exceptions can be made only if letter includes a drawing with a turtle enclosed with it. If you are submitting through e-mail, stop it, because turtles cannot travel through computers and PETA will come and yell at us for endangering turtles. We love turtles.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

MOSTLY CLOUDY HIGH: 55 LOW: 39 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | WEDNESDAY, APRIL 1, 2009

UM asked to return Feder fees

FIRE requests reimbursement for disrupted hate crime speech

BY S.P. SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Nearly three weeks after a speech by conservative columnist Don Feder was canceled due to disruption from a highly vocal group of protesters, the University of Massachusetts is being asked to reimburse the UMass Republican Club, who put on the event, for all or some of its cost.

The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE) sent a letter to Chancellor Robert C. Holub on March 24 requesting that the University reimburse the Republican Club $444.52 it charged for additional police presence at the event, after news broke that the Coalition Against Hate (CAH), a collection of campus groups such as the Radical Student Union and International Socialist Organization, planned to protest the event.

FIRE says that charging a registered student organization [RSO] more money for police protection when an event is controversial in nature is in direct violation to the constitution, and that UMass should reimburse the club what it was charged for all but two of the officers present.

"UMass Amherst very clearly contracted for two officers originally," said FIRE spokesman Adam Kissell in a telephone interview Monday. "Once the event was deemed controversial, it was increased to five officers."

According to data provided by Club President Greg Collins and FIRE, the club was initially charged $280.48 for two police officers standard fare for any event for which police presence is necessary.

But after rumors of a counter-protest spread across campus, the club upped police presence to five officers: one UMPD police supervisor for $164 and four officers for $561, at a total of $725.

Kissell says that this is a violation of "content neutrality" and an affront to the Republican Club's first amendment rights.

"Burdening controversial speech is unconstitutional," he said.

He also said there's a precedent for the club's case. Two years ago, the University of California, Los Angeles asked a conservative group on campus to pay over $12,000 for security at a debate on illegal immigration, but waved the fee after pressure from campus community members and FIRE.

FIRE wrote the letter to Holub asking that the club be reimbursed for all but two of the officers, claiming that the University essentially charged the Republican Club more for their event because of its controversial nature.

"In order to host a controversial event where protesters are expected, UMass Amherst thus required a student organization to provide hundreds of dollars in extra funding for security. This extra security was provided solely because of the potentially hostile reaction of audience members to the content of the speech," the letter said.

University spokesman Ed Blaguszewski said Monday that he hadn't been given any information on the issue. "It may still be pending with the Office of Student Affairs or the UMPD," he said.

Kissell said the University has three weeks to respond before further action is taken.

But Collins said that the Republican Club is looking to be reimbursed for the entire cost of the event – including $1,000 for Feder, and $956.91 for ads in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian – because police failed to control the protest and the group's First Amendment rights were infringed upon. He estimated that the event cost the club over $3,000.

He said the Republican Club will be meeting with Dean of Students Jo-Anne T. Vanin next week to discuss the matter.

"The hope is to clarify the Code of Student Conduct and Massachusetts General Laws; we want to make sure this type of protest doesn't happen again," Collins said.

In the meantime, the club is planning a First Amendment rally today, co-sponsored by the UMass Democrats, the Student Alliance for Israel and The Silent Majority.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsulliv@dailycollegian.com

The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education sent a letter to the chancellor on March 24 requesting that UMass reimburse $444.52 the Republican Club was charged for additional security at Don Feder's speech.

Work-study jobs hard to find

BY SHAYNA MURPHY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For University of Massachusetts freshman Tiffany Hartford, searching for the ideal work-study position is an ongoing project this semester.

Hartford was reticent about getting a job last semester even though she knew she had a work-study award.

Student work-study is a federally-subsidized program that provides students with money for part-time employment while they are enrolled at any of the 3,400 colleges or universities that participate in the program nationally.

"I wanted to get a feel for my class schedule first and for the campus," said Hartford. She also said she didn't want to get too overwhelmed.

Yet by winter break's end, Hartford had changed her mind. Early this semester, she began sending out everything she needed to apply for work-study, including "references, a cover letter, a resume," said Hartford.

Hartford had her hopes set on becoming an administrative assistant, because she had heard that administrative assistant positions offer flexible schedules. She interviewed for an open position at the Center for Student Business, but she didn't get it.

So she applied at the economics department, hoping to pick up weekly shifts as an office assistant. And when that didn't work out, she even turned up for the Residence Hall Security hiring session, hoping to get hired as a security monitor.

But all searches turned up empty, and she has yet to find a job on campus.

Hartford said potential employers were put off from hiring her for different reasons including her "weird schedule," as a teaching assistant. Also, because Hartford is not an upperclassman, it was implied to her by her potential employer that she had not progressed far enough in her education. Also, Hartford was told that she wasn't "skilled enough in languages and database entry."

But Hartford's inability to find a job on campus is indicative of something else. As more students compete for campus employment, many students have found work-study positions and other employment opportunities are shrinking.

Students granted federal work-study awards have been forced to refrain from using their work-study awards altogether because of the competition and lack of availability of positions.

Work-study jobs can range from office work in campus academic departments to community service work off-campus with private, nonprofit organizations such as America Reads/America Counts.

According to the U.S. Department of Education, an estimated 793,000 students received work-study awards in 2008 – a 15-percent increase from the number of work-study recipients in 2006.

This increase in the number of work-study recipients, which may be attributed to the effects of the economic recession, has been felt on UMass' campus.

In a recent e-mail interview, UMass spokesman Ed Blaguszewski noted that approximately 5,143 students received federal work-study in the 2008-2009 award year, including undergraduates, graduates and summer-term students.

According to the U.S. Department of Education, employers are expected to pay only 25 percent of a work-study student's salary, while the rest is covered by the work-study award. Therefore, as a work-study student, 75 percent of Hartford's salary has already been paid for by the federal government.

Yet, as more students compete for the same number of campus jobs, students like Hartford, unprepared for such competitiveness, may be hard-pressed to find employment even with work-study awards.

Eligibility for federal work-study is based on a student's expected family contribution (EFC), which is calculated through the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA). The award is then included in a student's financial aid package for the upcoming academic year.

While eligibility for work-study is determined by a student's EFC, requests for the awards are made specifically by universities or colleges.

"Because there is a set funding amount for the campus, [federal work-study] is awarded to higher-need students at or below certain EFC levels," said Blaguszewski. Other factors, such as a student's residency, career or dependency, can help determine a university's view of a students' EFC levels.

The average work-study award for returning in-state students was about $1,700 during fiscal 2008, according to the UMass Office of Institutional Research. The average award for first-year students was $1,500, which is less than the

See WORK-STUDY on page 3

Federal bill will send over $4M to University

A bill recently signed by the president will increase the total amount of UMass-Amherst's federal funding to $5.2 million this fiscal year.

Integrated Science gets $1.9M

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A federal appropriations bill that will provide more than $4 million for various research programs and other projects on the University of Massachusetts campus was recently signed into law by President Obama, according to a statement released by the UMass Amherst Office of News & Media Relations.

The statement said the appropriations, sponsored by the Commonwealth's ten U.S. congressmen and two senators, include $1.9 million for the construction of the Integrated Science Building, and funding for research in global climate change and the impact of roadways on wildlife.

"These are funds coming from the federal government... and we're very pleased that we're going to be able to put the money to use," said UMass spokesman Ed Blaguszewski.

Chancellor Robert C. Holub praised members of Massachusetts' congressional delegation for their support of the UMass campus.

"We are extremely grateful to our representatives in Congress for their support for all of these projects," he said in a statement. "These projects are all worthy in their own right, but the funding is particularly welcome during this time of constrained resources."

According to the statement, the bill also includes funding for the Pioneer Valley Life Sciences Institute (PVLSI), a research collaboration between campus and Baystate Health Systems, based in Springfield, Mass.

Though excited to receive more federal funding, there are some who think the money could be spent to more directly help students.

Chrissy Calahrese, a junior majoring in mathematics, said her biggest qualm is with the $1.9 million that UMass plans to spend on the Integrated Science Building.

"That's almost half of what we're getting, and putting it into one building seems kind of ridiculous," she said. "It's helping the kids that are in the science field, but I am more in the math field. If we could find a way so that we could kind of help out all the people [at UMass], that'd probably be better."

Evan Cuce, a sophomore majoring in environmental science, said he is glad UMass is committed to researching climate change and wildlife.

"I think those are important issues to do research on," he said. "But, also, I think there are other ways the campus could use the money as well."

He mentioned that the funding could be used to lower students' mandatory fees.

Some say that more government spending will only worsen the current economic situation, but Cuce said he isn't worried.

"I think $4 million is kind of a drop in the bucket and I think some good could come out of this," he said.

An appropriations bill funding the U.S. Department of Defense that passed last fall included an extra $1.2 million for hydrogen fuel cell research on campus.

With the federal stimulus bill passed earlier this month, the total federal funding sponsored by members of Congress for UMass campus projects is more than $5.2 million in this fiscal year.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

ARTS & LIVING
UNIQUE TROUBLES

A rare husband-and-wife team entering the upper echelon of the opera world, are working together as professionals for the first time in "The Elixir of Love," which opened Friday.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
COMMENTARY | A CALL FOR SAFETY

Collegian sports writer Jeffrey R. Lamard thinks all base coaches should wear face protection after seeing softball coach Elaine Sortino get struck with a foul ball.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORAL & OPINION
COLUMN | DIVESTMENT

The decision on whether or not to divest from companies that benefit from the Israeli-Palestinian conflict may seem small at first, but Zamil Akhtar says that this small step can send UMass in the right direction in stopping the war machine.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
PODCAST| BUCKLEY ON BASEBALL

Boston Herald Columnist, WEEI regular and UMass Alumnus Steve Buckley talks with The Collegian about the future of UMass baseball, evaluates men's basketball coach Derek Kellogg and reminisces on his UMass glory days.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIX
ISSUE 41

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wanczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olsson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
COMICS EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Leigh Greaney
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenzweike
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendon Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kocsvara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ross Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Lamard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Weliver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ARGUS LITE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION TEAM
Nick Guarino

your week ahead
DAILY COLLEGIAN

GEO-LOCATE YOUR NEWS

FOLLOW NEWS GEOGRPAHICALLY WITH DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM'S "NEWSGARDEN" APPLICATION ON THE HOMEPAGE.

NEWS

VIDEO | TUESDAY
HIGHLIGHTS FROM FDIC CHAIR SHEILA BAIR'S SPEECH AT THE SCHOOL OF MANAGEMENT ON FRIDAY.

SPORTS

PODCAST |
BOSTON HERALD COLUMNIST, WEEI REGULAR AND UMASS ALUM STEVE BUCKLEY TALKS WITH THE COLLEGIAN ABOUT THE FUTURE OF UMASS BASEBALL, EVALUATES MEN'S BASKETBALL COACH DEREK KELLOGG AND REMINISCES ON HIS UMASS GLORY DAYS.

ARTS & LIVING

VIDEO | WEDNESDAY
AN INTERVIEW ARAB-ISRAELI FILMMAKER IBTISAM MARA'ANA, WHOSE FILM WHOSE FILM "LADY KUL EL-ARAB" WAS SCREENED AT UMASS LAST WEEK AS PART OF THE MULTICULTURAL FILM FESTIVAL.

PODCAST |
DAILY COLLEGIAN FILM CRITICS PETE RIZZO AND SHAYNA MURPHY TAKE A LOOK AT UPCOMING FILMS AND WHETHER THEY'RE WORTHY OF YOUR ATTENTION.

Crime Log: March 23rd – 29th

Five out of the six arrests by the University of Massachusetts Police Department (UMPD) this week occurred as a result of traffic stops on campus, prompting the question, 'Does the nicer weather in fact lead to more arrests by police?' "We do get a significant amount of arrests off traffic stops during the warmer months," said UMPD Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald. "Its human nature; officers are more willing to get out of their cars and interact with people, making sure [they] are driving responsibly and restricting alcohol coming onto campus."

THURSDAY

Joshua A. Haan, 20, of 242 Perry St. Douglas, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on University Drive at 7 p.m. and charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

FRIDAY

Jonathan M. Wong, 18, of 33 Whittingham Road Basking Ridge, N.J., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on Stadium Drive at 2:33 p.m. and charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Patrick E. Sullivan, 21, of 98 Warwick Way Centerville, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on Lincoln Avenue at 10:41 p.m. and charged with OUI liquor, greater than reasonable and proper speed and motor vehicle lights violation. "The officer observed the car first off of Mass. Ave in the area of Lot 71 and the vehicle appeared to be speeding," said Archbald. Once the car was stopped, Sullivan was given a portable breath test (PBT) and field sobriety tests. "He took a PBT at the car stop and he registered .215 and then another test at the station registering .20, which is pretty significant alcohol consumption," he added. Sullivan failed all four field sobriety tests administered.

SATURDAY

Paul Modzelewski, 20, of 233 Britton St. Chicopee, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on University Drive at 4:35 a.m. and charged with OUI liquor, failure to stop/yield and possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

SUNDAY

Patrick Richard Curran, 21, of 64 Summer St. Danvers, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop while riding on the Berkshire House sidewalk at 1:48 a.m. and charged wit OUI liquor and operating on a sidewalk. "The initial observation was that Curran was operating a blue jeep utility vehicle on a sidewalk. First he was on Mass. Ave. and then he traveled from Lot 71 onto a sidewalk destined for pedestrian access only," said Archbald. After being stopped for that violation, the appearance of alcohol was evident. "When the officer approached, she detected an odor of an alcoholic beverage emanating from his breath, his face was flushed and his eyes appeared glossy and bloodshot," he added. Police said Curran admitted to the alcohol charge. "He admitted he had consumed a significant number of Bud Light beers and that he had just stopped drinking; he also failed all field sobriety tests," said Archbald.

Deshawn Townsend, 18, of 53 Seymour St. Apt. 2 Roslindale, Mass., was arrested after a disturbance in Southwest at 2:51 a.m., and charged with disorderly conduct. "A reporting party stated that there was a large altercation in the area of the Southwest horseshoe, and it was reported that a possible gun was involved," said Archbald. No gun was shown, but according to police, the allegation was that someone had reached down into his waste band – as if he were going to retrieve a gun. "One of the responding officers was waived over by a reporting party and was directed to a vehicle leaving the area," he added. The car was stopped and the four people inside were ordered out of the car. "One party in particular did not cooperate with the officer's orders at gun point, and he was subsequently arrested and charged with disorderly conduct," said Archbald. Everyone including the car was searched. "No weapon was found," he added.

—Compiled by Adam P. Coulter, Collegian Staff He can be reached apcoulte@student.umass.edu

Malicious virus might spread mayhem

BY AMAN BATHEJA
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

FORT WORTH, Texas — April Fools' Day pranksters may find themselves outmatched this year.

A cunning computer infection that is believed to have infiltrated millions of computers is expected to receive a set of instructions from its creator on April 1.

"Everybody is a little bit nervous about it," said Mike Stute of Dallas-based Global DataGuard, a network security firm. "It could be nothing. It could be very dangerous."

Either way, the anonymous creator of the Conficker virus has caught the attention of computer security experts around the world, with Microsoft going so far as to issue a $250,000 bounty on those who created it.

The Conficker worm, a malicious software program also known as Downadup, has spread through a vulnerability in Microsoft Windows. Windows users who automatically receive updates from Microsoft are probably safe. Likely, so too are those with updated antivirus software.

The Conficker worm is thought to have easily found millions of Windows users who haven't updated their operating systems or don't have the right protection.

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security released a tool Monday to detect whether a computer is infected by the Conficker worm.

Yet other than reducing an infected computer's defenses, Conficker hasn't done much else to its victims, a departure from most computer infections that tend to do a lot of damage early on, according to computer security experts.

Instead, the most recent version of Conficker appears to be designed to wait until April 1 and then begin searching the web for the next set of instructions from its creator.

"He could, say, delete the entire contents of the hard disk," said Mike Cotton, a researcher for San Antonio-based Digital Defense. "Or steal credit card info … He could tell the machines to send massive spam attacks across the Internet."

…Then there's the theory this is all an elaborate hoax, fittingly to be revealed on April Fools' Day.

Whether the goal is money or bragging rights, many experts are in awe of Conficker. Some call it the most sophisticated worm ever created.

"This is like these guys have learned four or five of the top techniques and put them all together in a worm that is elegantly written," Stute said.

Margaret Perez, who fights viruses on business computer networks as owner of Tech Support Mobile Services in Fort Worth, said the talk about Conficker has been unavoidable in recent weeks.

"It's like a hurricane coming when something like this happens," Perez said. "We've been seeing a barrage of these kinds of viruses for a year now. This one is probably the most serious of them all."

But for all the hype, Perez said there are an untold number of serious infections targeting PC users all the time, and after Conficker is beaten, likely something worse will come along to replace it.

"Maybe for like 15 days, it's actually going to be the Conficker worm," Perez said. "Then it's going to mutate to Conficker AB, or Conficker G Generic. It mutates. Just like a disease mutates."

Blissfully unaffected by worries about Conficker are computer users not on Windows.

The online design firm Alamofire in Southlake, Texas, runs only Apple's Mac OS and the freely distributed Linux operating systems on its computers, said company head Josh Williams.

The company's products include applications for Facebook and the iPhone. Security experts worry that social networking sites and mobile devices could be the next easy target for creators of malicious entities like Conficker.

Security is a priority for the company, Williams said, but in the end, users need to be careful about where they go online and who they allow to access their information.

"Ultimately common sense is a key ingredient to security," Williams wrote in an e-mail. "You can use all the security patches in the world, but if you hand your password out to a phisher or download an application you received in an e-mail, those patches aren't going to help you."

CHECKING YOUR COMPUTER

How to see whether your home computer is infected with Conficker:

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security released a tool Monday to detect whether a computer is infected by the Conficker worm. You can access it at www.us-cert.gov.

How to remove Conficker from your home computer:

Tools to remove Conficker are available at several websites including www.microsoft.com/protect/computer/viruses/worms/conficker.mspx

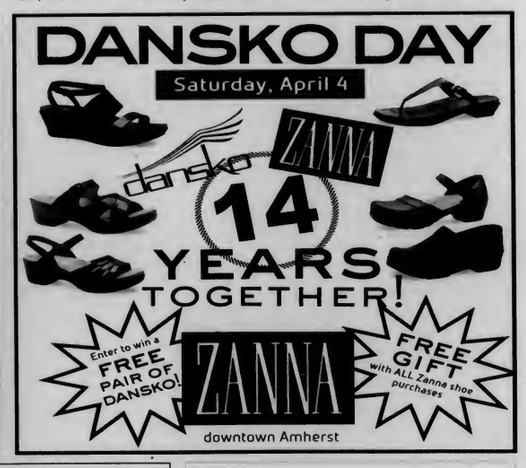
www.mcafee.com



www.windowsupdate.com

www.symantec.com

Conficker may block infected computers from accessing many security sites. If you cannot access one, San Antonio-based Digital Defense recommends finding an uninfected computer and copying the Windows Malicious Software Removal Tool at http://www.microsoft.com/security/malwareremove/default.mspx onto a CD and then loading it onto the infected one.

Jobs becoming scarce

WORK-STUDY from page 1

$1,800 work-study award Hartford received for the year.

Although work-study money is set aside for a student, a student doesn't have access to it unless they have a job that approves work-study. Students are paid at an hourly rate for the work that they do, but are also free to use their time at work to study or do class work. At UMass, which operates on a bi-weekly paycheck cycle, students earn a paycheck that they are able to use at their own discretion.

Aside from giving a student some much-needed spending money throughout the semester, a work-study job also carries other perks.

According to a 2007 article in the Chronicle of Higher Education, the money a student earns at a federal work-study job has no impact on a student's EFC for the following year. This wouldn't be the case if a student were to work at a job that doesn't accept work-study, because any income a student made could decrease the financial aid he or she receives in future semesters.

In the year to date, Blaguszewski claimed that 2,067 students have earned all or part of their federal work study awards while an estimated 40 percent of students have yet to use their work-study awards.

"Financial Aid awards a large number of students, knowing not all of them will use the award," said Blaguszewski. "This is an effort to help employ as many students as possible and to use the entire federal allocation for the year."

Across UMass, top student employers have found that confusion about work-study awards can be common and can contribute to a student not using their award.

"There are students who say they don't have [a work-study award], and then later on we'll find out that they do," said Kevin Wissmann, assistant manager of human resources and organizational development at UMass Auxiliary Services. "We assume they may be using [the award] somewhere else, or that they just don't know they have it."

Auxiliary Services includes Dining Services, as well as facilities that run within the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center, such as the Blue Wall and the University Store.

According to Wissmann, Auxiliary Services employs about 1,400 students, making it one of the largest employers of students on campus.

When students apply to work in Auxiliary Services, they're asked if they have a work-study award that they'd like to have put toward their salary. Of the students they employ, about 10 percent, or approximately 143 students, use federal work-study.

Wissmann estimated that there are as many as 100 additional students working in Auxiliary Services who have work-study awards, even though they've claimed they do not.

If unused, a work-study award can be converted to a Federal Direct Loan, said Blaguszewski. An unused award cannot be carried over to another school year or applied to existing grants or scholarships, which means that any money a student fails to use during the year simply goes to waste.

Wissmann worries that reaching out exclusively to work-study students is a risk.

"There's just not enough demand," said Wissmann of work-study jobs in Auxiliary Services. Although he recently considered making hiring exclusive to work-study students because it would be cheaper, he ultimately ruled it out, deeming that it would be too difficult and unrealistic to expect 1,400 student positions to be filled with only work-study students.

This past February, the House of Representatives passed the Omnibus Appropriations Act, which included a $200 million increase in funding for the federal work-study program. The act, which was approved by the Senate on March 10, also increases funding for the Pell Grant, which provides need-based grants to low-income students.

While additional funding could increase student financial award amounts, and potentially make financial awards more available to other students, additional funding does little to address the problem UMass' work-study population has finding jobs on campus.

Mia Santos, a junior transfer student from Holyoke Community College, wasn't short on award money at the beginning of the semester when she began searching for a campus job.

Unlike Tiffany Hartford, Santos had been in the work-study program before. Back when she attended HCC, she earned work-study as a tutor.

"The [tutoring] job helped alleviate confusion [about work-study]. I knew that I'd be getting a check," said Santos.

But like Hartford, Santos found that work-study jobs were in short supply on UMass' campus. Santos applied to several academic departments, but she wasn't hired for any position. She also applied for positions at retail stores like Big Y and CVS, but her off-campus searches proved unsuccessful.

"The [student employment] website definitely needs to be updated more," Santos said after securing a position as an intramural sports referee.

The student employment website available through Financial Aid Services runs ads for vacant job positions throughout the year. The website is the most common way students find out information about campus jobs. The listings are divided between work-study and non-work-study students, with the bulk of the listings geared towards students with work-study.

Santos sent out multiple e-mails to employers that were advertising on the website, only to discover that many of the positions had been filled by the time she contacted them despite the listings remaining "vacant" online. And while some employers let Santos know that the positions she was interested in had already been filled, others didn't. Some didn't even bother to return her e-mails.

"I applied, and he never replied," said Santos of one potential employer. Not knowing whether the position would be available made it difficult to determine whether or not to keep searching elsewhere.

"I get bothered when they don't e-mail back," said Hartford, who also encountered her share of employers who never replied to her e-mails.

"They could at least say no," said Hartford.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu

Classroom paper cut

BY HANNAH SAMPSON
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

MIAMI — In some school classrooms, paper is becoming more of a relic than an educational staple.

The result: homework done online. Paperless term papers. Math problems completed on an interactive whiteboard. An entire course of physics problems contained on a single compact disc. And, schools hope, savings in an ever-tightening budget crunch.

"It's budget, it's green, it's best educational practices," said Mark Strauss, principal of Virginia Shuman Young Elementary in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Educators are trying to trim the reams of paper they use to save money, spare trees and keep kids engaged in ways that old-fashioned writing just doesn't allow.

While schools would be hard-pressed to eliminate paper altogether, technologies like interactive whiteboards and document projectors have proven to be popular substitutes.

Strauss keeps track of how many copies teachers are making and sends a note (e-mail, of course) to those who have fewer than 500 per month with "a thank you for thinking green and helping the budget," he said.

Those who exceed 2,000 copies in a month get a note urging them to reconsider their paper-dependent ways.

"If they can get more engaged in active learning and less reliant on worksheets, they'll learn more," Strauss said.

Christopher Stella, who teaches a fourth- and fifth-grade class at the school, posts to his class website all the information he might have otherwise sent home with kids on paper. Documents for homework are scanned and posted as PDF files.

Kids can write book reports on a book-themed website and submit them to the teacher there.

"The interest level for anything that's technology-related is much higher," Stella said.

At South Miami Middle, seventh-grade civics teacher Sofia Padilla prefers to have her students learn on computers or through games like "Jeopardy!"

"That's what those kids are used to," she said. "So we kind of have to move with the times and keep their interest piqued."

While today's students were born into an age of technology, some parents haven't quite adapted.

Seven-year-old Brandon Baum works on an interactive computer white board at an elementary school Ft. Lauderdale, Florida.

"Some parents ask 'Where's the paper?'" said Dawn Huckestein, who assigns homework online and has her second- and third-graders at Virginia Shuman Young use the interactive whiteboard. "It's what they're used to."

She explains to them that her method is "not just being friendly to the earth, but being friendly to the budget."

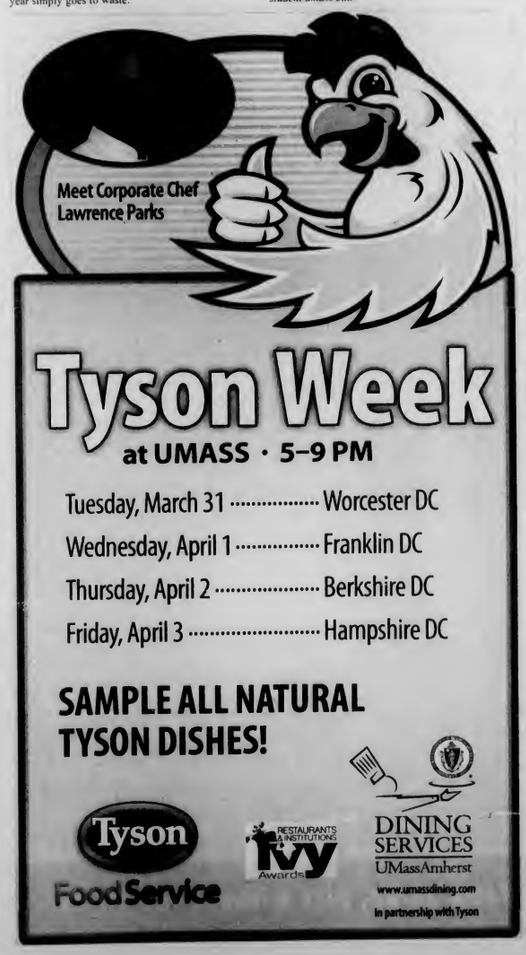
MAST Academy in Key Biscayne, Fla., a school known for its focus on green innovation, tries to conserve paper and recycles what gets used.

One way they cut down on paper "E-mail, e-mail, e-mail, e-mail," said principal Thomas Fisher. "Everyone's favorite communication initiative."

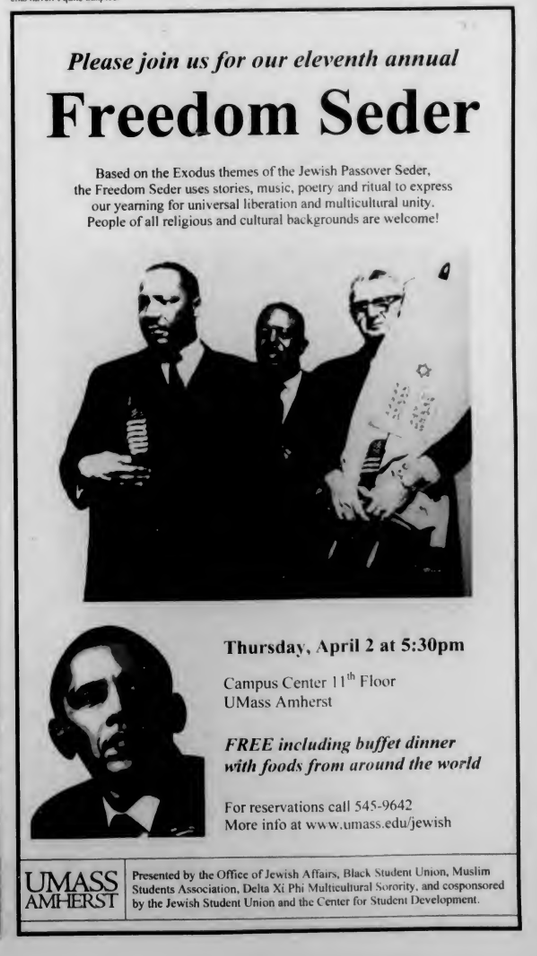
Teachers get one case of paper, which contains 5,000 sheets, each semester, Fisher said.

"We say, 'Look, this is your allocation. Use it as wisely as possible,'" he said.

Erica Kane, a fifth-grade teacher at North Lauderdale Elementary, said she tries to be as frugal as possible in her classes because paper is not easy to get.



"We would use the fronts and backs and wouldn't miss any spaces," she said.



Kane said she's also printed reports on the backs of fliers, used paper brought in by students and even used old pin-feed printer paper, the kind with sides that need to be ripped off.

Some administrators and teachers say students are allowed to print materials at school but are urged to print out only what is needed.

Many Broward teachers say they use a document camera and projector and have students copy from the board in their own composition books instead of giving handouts.

Some post their materials online. Others simply buy their own paper if it is scarce at school.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 1, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Life not a Disney movie

Eric Tripoli

I was recently in town to get a haircut on one of my few days off from school or work obligations. I arrived and was told it would be about a half-hour wait, and there were three people ahead of me. I thought little of this, sat down and read through the magazine selection in the obligatory fashion while I waited.

Also in line was a college-age woman, an older gentleman with a walker and a mother with her young son who was jittering all over the place. His name was Gavin – I am not sure why – and he was four-years-old. Granted, at that age, the boy probably has not had many haircuts. And of course, at age four, we are all a bit more hyper and much more easily amused by simple things.

The soundtrack to the entire experience consisted of the boy interrogating his mother as to when it was his turn. He had been there first. He had been waiting the longest. He wanted to go next. The truth of the matter is that he was not there first. But for some reason he had failed to notice the individuals waiting there previous to his arrival.

The barrage of questions as to why the situation was not all about him was only ended when it finally was his turn, at which point he did not feel the need to get his haircut anymore, much to the dismay of his mother.

"I want" and "I need" are met so readily and quickly, one would think that the normal child was a member of a noble bloodline or royal house.

The stylist coerced him into the chair and kept his mind busy by making small talk. Each sentence spoken by the boy began with the word "I," whether he was answering a question or just making a general statement. Every sentence.

My annoyance with the majority of children is public knowledge if you know me. I have trouble dealing with people who do not know how to communicate effectively unless they begin all their statements by saying "I." This is bad news for me because I also serve tables at a commercial restaurant that attracts its fair share of families.

As a server, you cannot help but eavesdrop on conversations all around the restaurant. Some of the interactions of parents with their children are truly upsetting to me, whether they berate them in public (an all too common occurrence) or praise them for coloring in the lines. The most prevalent attitudes that these children have are consistent with those of individuals who believe that they are special, set apart or more important than the others in the room.

I see this as a most dangerous way to bring up children. The world of children is made up of baby food labeled "graduates," and fashion that depicts children as miniature adults. Concurrent with these trends is this continued notion that children are entitled to be special or important. "I want" and "I need" are met so readily and quickly, one would think that the normal child was a member of a noble bloodline or royal house.

In the real world, we all know that this is far from the truth. As we grow up, we learn just how average we all are and how few people are willing to wait on us hand and foot in order to make us happy. The fantasy that we are all individual snowflakes is quickly extinguished.

Raising a child with this twisted sense of entitlement presents such a huge contradiction. The child is reared thinking that because his or her parents are willing to fulfill his or her wishes, others will as well. Unfortunately for these children, the real world will later kick them into line via educational institutions, jobs, military work, among other things.

Granted, it has been a while since I was four years old, but now at age 25, I have looked back on all the mediocre things I have accomplished as well as the notable feats that I have fought for tooth and nail. I regret very little in my life, but my mediocrity vastly outweighs any combination of components that make me "special" or "an individual."

However, there are certain forces out there that continue to convince parents and their children that kids are above the average, normal adult. Walt Disney, the Make-a-Wish Foundation, Nickelodeon, the list goes on. I think that there needs to be a more realistic way of raising children today, one that both nourishes and enriches them in positive ways but also keeps them grounded and aware that the world at large is not out to satisfy their every need or whim.

Children are not small adults. They are curious, shy, ignorant – but excited – blank slates that need to see the world in a more standard fashion that is less focused on them and more appreciative of their environment on the whole, not simply on those facets that directly affect them. Without new and more practical approaches to child rearing, the future generations will find it tougher to reconcile that, no, Walt Disney World is not a place just for them, but that cubicle is what keeps them alive and surviving.

Eric Tripoli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at etripoli@student.umass.edu.

Divest from the war machine

Zamil Akhtar

On March 25, we the students took our first step toward holding this University accountable for how they fund our education. By voting to call for divestment from companies that "profit from war and occupation," the Student Government Association (SGA) has done something that resonates far beyond the walls of our school.

War is the plague that brings suffering to millions of our fellow human beings, and occupation is the means by which entire peoples are deprived of their God-given right to self-determination. But what difference will a non-binding resolution calling for divestment from suffering and oppression make in a world full of it?

It's an ancient adage which answers that question, "Every great journey begins with the smallest step."

For people sick of watching others suffer, to see this process begin at a university so in-bed with the war industry is disheartening. Go to a career fair at the University of Massachusetts and you'll see companies like Raytheon prominently displaying themselves, recruiting heavily from this University. This creates jobs for UMass graduates, no doubt, and divesting from some of these companies may turn them away from recruiting here.

But if investing in war companies is benefitting the pocketbook, it's killing the soul at the same time, by turning us into supporters of mass death.

War companies, like any other business, profit when there is a demand for their products. The more war, the more demand there is for weapons, so these companies have a vested interest in prolonging conflicts in which their weapons are used. The wars in Iraq and Afghanistan are prime examples. The companies listed in the resolution have earned record-breaking profits as a result of these wars.

While American soldiers and innocent civilians are dying by the thousands, a bunch of fat corporate bosses are reaping the benefits in mountains of cash. That's the reality of war profiteering, and due to the military industrial complex that exists in this country, it's a powerful force in government and the private sector.

While American soldiers and innocent civilians are dying by the thousands, a bunch of fat corporate bosses are reaping the benefit in mountains of cash.

Halliburton, mentioned in the SGA resolution, is one of the best examples of this. After the 2003 invasion of Iraq, the oil giant received preferential treatment in the acquisition of contracts. One of the suspected reasons for this is former Vice President Dick Cheney's ties to the company. It was also discovered that former Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld had himself taken control of Halliburton's $7 billion Iraq oil contract. Halliburton thus profited from its ties to the very people who started this illegal war on false pretenses. Should we not take objection to this, and refuse to be invested in this company?

Other than conflicts in which U.S. soldiers are directly involved, these companies make a killing funding foreign wars. Take the example of the Iran-Iraq war of the 1980s, in which U.S. defense companies sold weapons to both sides, fueling a war that killed over a million people – all for profit.

Or take the Israeli occupation of Palestine, in which the company Caterpillar, mentioned in the resolution, is responsible for providing the bulldozers that have leveled thousands of Palestinian homes so that Israelis can colonize their land.

Before we can divest from all this suffering, we need transparency. UMass is a public school, yet our $250 million endowment is run by a private company that keeps the investment portfolio a secret. We the students should be outraged that a university funded by our tax dollars and tuition hides what it does with our money.

As mentioned in the resolution, the mission of this University is "to provide an affordable and accessible education of high quality and to conduct programs of research and public service that advance knowledge and improve the lives of the people of the Commonwealth, the nation and the world."

Once we stop supporting wars which destroy millions of lives, we can make good on this mission. The SGA has taken a single step toward this goal. It has also gone further than merely calling for divestment, it will create a committee to screen for socially responsible investments.

A large movement may begin here in the Five College area, as Hampshire College has already divested from companies that profit from war and suffering, and we at UMass have begun following suit. But in time, when it spreads, that's when our single step will have mattered.

In 1978, UMass divested from apartheid South Africa, an oppression that seemed like it would last forever. The conflicts around the world that have plagued our generation may seem to be never ending – but that's because the fire is blazing. Take the fuel out of the fire, and it will die. Stop investing in war, and It will die.

Zamil Akhtar is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at zakhtar@student.umass.edu.

Even hate speech deserves freedom

Ben Rudnick

By some whim of serendipity, my column on free speech was published the morning of the UMass Republican Club's (UMRC) Don Feder event just before spring break. It may seem like ancient history now, and there's certainly been a great deal written about it. Yet, my mind dwells on some of the implications of that day that I do not think have been examined yet.

With regard to those brandishing the "Abolish Hate" buttons and signs, is it really your desire to do away with the emotion of hate? You clearly support the enactment of laws against "hate speech," but do you really think that those laws will do anything but create a much more dangerous form of bigotry?

If you force people to swallow their "hate speech" instead of expressing it, then all you have done is drive that hatred underground, where it can only feed upon itself until the whole seething mass of it explodes with unpredictable, and perhaps dangerous, results.

Would it not be better to let those that you may call bigots express their beliefs, thereby identifying themselves to you? In addition, if you truly believe that what Don Feder had to say was so clearly hateful, would it not have been better to allow him to express that hatred so that objective audience members at the event could see it for themselves?

If his opinions were so heinous that they convinced you all that he is a "hate criminal," then it seems more sensible to me that you let others hear those opinions. And as a result, they can be converted to your point of view. The best way to counteract any opinion is to provide a more compelling, contrasting one, not to shut down that opinion in the first place.

Ask yourself if your goal is to convince others to adopt your point of view. If it is, then you might consider a change in tactics. Had you allowed Feder to express his views and then challenge him afterwards, you could have gained a few more supporters. Holding signs is one thing, but booing, hissing, shouting rude or threatening comments is another. And those comments about Feder's daughter clearly crossed the line. I don't mean to imply that those who disagree with Don Feder have no right to express their views, I merely suggest that more people could be persuaded by reasoned debate than by yelling.

I cannot really claim full credit for these. During a discussion in my class on the nature of constitutional rights just before Feder's speech, the question arose whether the UMRC deliberately planned the event in order to provoke a protest, which they could then use to publicise their cause.

The UMRC contend that such is not the case, and it is up to each person to decide if they believe that. However, it is certain that, based on past occurrences of loud reactions to their invited guests, they were prepared for the possibility that a protest might ensue. The plain truth is that, by choosing to disrupt the event instead of engaging in a debate about hate crimes legislation, the protesters guaranteed that the vast majority of press coverage would concern free speech and not the issues about which they care so deeply.

If you force people to swallow their "hate speech" instead of expressing it, then all you have done is drive that hatred underground.

In another session of the same class, we discussed whether people are as passionate about free speech as they used to be. This prompted me to mention the case of the Nazis in Skokie, Ill., in my previous column because I hoped to convey some of my personal investment in speech issues. But I realize that the history to which I am so attached cannot have the same impact on those who did not witness it.

Recalling the emotional impact that case had on my family bestows upon these issues a resonance that a factual recounting cannot transmit. Perhaps the "Don Feder Incident" will provide an experiential reference for those who either witnessed it directly or have feelings of any kind about its larger implications for both our academic community, and society as a whole.

Imagine yourself trying to express a controversial opinion in class. Considering how intimidating it already is to speak against the majority in those circumstances, suppose what it would be like if 50 percent of the people there were yelling at you, calling you a racist, bigot or homophobe.

You may argue that Don Feder's speech is different than a classroom environment, but is it really? We are all members of an academic community - supposedly – and one of the foundational elements of an effective academic environment is intellectual freedom.

If this ideal is not protected in all the available forums on campus, then it is ultimately not safe in any of them. Academia is supposed to be more open-minded than society as a whole, and that means that the views of all must be allowed expression.

Vehement disagreement is protected by the Constitution, but to have intellectual value, that dissent must take the form of respectful debate – not through the chaos of a shouting match.

Ben Rudnick is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at brudnick@student.umass.edu.

Stealing not justified by assuming negligence

Ben Moriarty

Last week, I lost my wallet.

I was in between two classes, going to the library to print out a paper. As I ventured toward that giant brick monstrosity in the middle of campus, I passed my friend. We talked briefly, causing me to be late for my class, and also making me have to hustle to the library to print it out.

I successfully printed out the paper (I hadn't lost my wallet or UCard yet), and then went to my next class. As I sat down, I noticed something.

Why isn't there an uncomfortable lump on my rear?

As you probably know if you keep a wallet in your back pocket, it leaves an uncomfortable lump on your tuckus until your body can stop registering it as new stimuli.

For me, those lumps are usually never registered as new stimuli, but that day, it was. I had a hole in my back right pocket, forcing me to keep my wallet in my back left pocket. So while I was uncomfortable for most of the day, if fate hadn't spared me to be wearing crappy jeans with holes in the back, then I wouldn't have noticed that my wallet had gone missing.

Upon realizing it was missing, what went through my mind was what would have gone through anyone else's mind at the time. I had just turned 21 years old last week, and if I lost my temporary license, I wouldn't be able to go out drinking that night. Or the next night. Or the next.

So I did what every other college kid would have done. I got up, left class and went to retrieve my license in what would probably be a failing attempt. And, God willing, my wallet as well.

On my way there, I went through many scenarios in my head.

I wondered what would happen if I walked in, saw my wallet on the ground from afar, scurried over, but then saw someone pick it up.

If I went over and said, "Hey, that's my wallet," and then he tried to pick a fight with me because he really wanted to have my Tufts Health Plan card, I figured I would just let the guy have it if he wanted it so much.

So to everyone who is willing to return an iPod, wallet or phone instead of taking it for themselves by using rash rationalizations like the fact I am an idiot, thank you.

More than likely, though, I would just not find it. I would go, search the ground, ask some random people, and then it would never be found. I would have to call my mom to figure out how to deal with my lost debit card because I am an incompetent fool.

Then I contemplated as to why someone would steal a wallet on the ground anyway? Not many people find it morally acceptable to steal from a store, but if you find a wallet on the ground, it suddenly becomes okay to take the money from it or just steal it entirely.

This reminded me of the just-world phenomenon, where people rationalize what they do and convince themselves that the person deserved it in some way.

You've probably seen this many times in your life. Like when you talk to Republicans and they tell you that welfare should be abandoned because the people who participate in the program are lazy and abuse the system.

In my case, if someone found my wallet, they could justify it by saying I deserved it for being clumsy, or for being irresponsible or whatever. And while I may be all of those things, I don't see how it is my fault that my wallet fell out of my pocket. And even if I was forgetful enough to leave it somewhere, I don't see how that could possibly change the fact that taking something which isn't yours is stealing.

It is, no matter what rationalization you can come up with. If something isn't yours, and you are able to return it to its rightful owner but choose not to for whatever reason, it is stealing.

So I scoped out the library, never found my wallet, and was distraught that I lost my new over-21 license.

In a last-ditch attempt, I asked the library's front-desk clerks if someone found a wallet.

And in fact, someone had. And it was mine. With my license, cash and racially enlightening health card all still in it.

So to everyone who is willing to return an iPod, wallet or phone instead of taking it for themselves by using rash rationalizations like the fact I am an idiot, thank you.

And for those of you who are not willing to succumb to the just-world phenomenon, the world thanks you as well.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu.

Real Ed/Op: just as satisfying as April Fools Ed/Op, just without the swears.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 1, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Gay bars are struggling with the influx of bachelorette parties using their space and changing the landscape of the community.

Gay rights battle puts strain on parties

By Dawn Turner Trice
McClatchy Newspapers

CHICAGO — They've become a familiar sight in gay bars: women holding bachelorette parties.

The bride-to-be is often easily identifiable. She's the one wearing either a veil or tiara or feather boa or phallic-shaped blow-up hat, and is surrounded by women who begin the night somewhat reserved but metamorphose into pelvis-thrusting vamps as their blood-alcohol levels rise.

The women come to celebrate without having to worry about straight men pawing them. The gay men are there because, well, they don't want to be around a lot of women.

For years, some bar owners have tried to accommodate both groups, but that's becoming increasingly difficult. With California's vote last November in favor of the gay-marriage ban known as Proposition 8, some gays are saying that bachelorette parties at their bars are becoming more than a minor nuisance. They're a constant reminder that gays don't have equal marriage rights.

"The women are a hoot, and some can be just delightful," said Geno Zaharakis, the owner of Cocktail, a gay bar in Chicago. "But because not everybody can get married, watching them celebrate, it's such a slap in the face. Prop 8 just reopened the wound."

Zaharakis told me Cocktail stopped hosting bachelorette parties a couple of years ago when he noticed his gay patrons weren't just complaining about the women being minor irritants but about them "flaunting" their right to marry. So Zaharakis hung a sign on the front door of his establishment that says, "Bachelorette Parties Are Not Allowed."

If that message isn't resonant enough, he offers a written statement: "Until same-sex marriage is legal everywhere and same-sex couples are allowed the rights as every heterosexual couple worldwide, we simply do not think it's fair or just for a female bride-to-be to celebrate her upcoming nuptials here at Cocktail. We are entitled to an opinion, this is ours."

Indeed, some gay men and straight women have a friendship that's reminiscent of the old television show "Will & Grace." And many men make the distinction between their "girlfriends" who frequent gay bars and are sensitive to the marriage issue and other women who are merely seeking good music and "go-go boys" (translation: nearly naked male dancers) for a bachelorette party.

"We appreciate that these women are not homophobic and... want to party with us," said Jens Hussey, a gay man who's in a four-year relationship and worries about being able to make medical and other decisions regarding his partner. "But with all that's going on [in] the media about us not being able to marry, are [these women] willing to march with us or raise money with us or work to change somebody's attitude to help us get equal rights?"

Hussey recently was on hand at Circuit Night Club, another Chicago gay bar that caters to bachelorette parties. But he said he'd rather see women take such parties elsewhere until everybody legally can wed.

Circuit presents a Las Vegas-style male revue called SinZation that includes Honey West, billed as "the only transgender emcee of a male revue show anywhere in the country." Buff dancers don't strip bare-naked but get so close – using creatively draped G-strings – that hardly anything is left to the imagination.

On a recent Saturday night there, the gay marriage issue wasn't remotely on the minds of two groups of women whose inhibitions flew out the door as the dancers left the stage to retrieve dollar bills that the women strategically placed around their bodies.

"Gay men are far more reserved," said Hussey, watching and laughing from the sidelines.

One woman from Kansas City told me she enjoyed being able to drink as much as she wanted and not having to worry about being propositioned by a straight guy or waking up the next morning in his bed.

I found it ironic that, as the women got liquored up, they were the ones doing the pawing and clawing until soon they resembled the straight guys they were trying to avoid.

And this, more than the equal rights issue, is why Art Johnston, the owner of the popular Halsted Street bar called Sidetrack, prefers not to hold bachelorette parties in his establishment.

"As gay men who understand discrimination, none of us want to look like we don't welcome folks," Johnston said. "But it comes down to ignorant, bad behavior...that's the issue."

For others, though, the issue is gay marriage, and women who are considering hosting these parties should think about that issue. Such a party may feel less like a celebration in the presence of men who feel they're being discriminated against.

As the show got under way at Circuit with a theatrical mist floating over the audience, I asked reveler Blythe Thomas whether, in general, she believed holding bachelorette parties in gay bars was "heterosexist," or insensitive.

"I never would have thought about it like that," Thomas said, watching a curtain-like screen rise on four soon-to-be-nearly-naked dancers. "I could see how this could be frustrating to gay men. Maybe it's something I'll think about next time."

Maybe. But, for now, it was showtime.

Unique troubles for couple

'Elixir of Love' pairs singers and lovers

By Mark Stryker
McClatchy Newspapers

DETROIT — Soprano Ailyn Perez and tenor Stephen Costello, a rare husband-and-wife team entering the upper echelon of the opera world, are working together as professionals for the first time in Michigan Opera Theatre's production of "The Elixir of Love," which opened Friday. The young couple, married since September, is still learning to negotiate the boundaries of their professional and personal lives, but they've already figured out something important about themselves:

No rehearsing at home.

"We have to have a mediator," says Costello, chuckling, before mentioning objective referees like a vocal coach or conductor. "You're right," adds Perez, rewinding her memory. "I remember when we were trying to figure out something at home and it didn't go well. We do need a mediator."

At 27 and 29 respectively, Perez and Costello are fast-rising singers whose joint appearance as the young lovers Adina and Nemorino in Donizetti's classic late 18th-century rustic comedy adds an intriguingly naturalistic scrim to the casting. It is not the only unique angle at work. This new production – directed by James Robinson with freshly designed costumes and sets – updates the action, originally set in southern Europe, to early 20th Century in Napa Valley. MOT is part of a four-way consortium of opera companies that shared the cost of creating the production; MOT's initial investment was $60,000.

"The Elixir of Love" opens MOT's spring season, which includes only two operas rather than the customary three. The company canceled "I Pagliacci" originally scheduled for April in the face of the recession. "Carmen" closes the season in May.

Operas don't come more melodically alluring than "Elixir." The frothy story concerns a lovesick tenor, a brassy ingenue, some implausible obstacles that keep them apart and a quack of a doctor with his magic potion. There are a number of signature tunes that even non-opera goers are likely to recognize, especially Nemorino's tender anthem, "The Furtive Tear."

Last week Perez and Costello talked about their relationship in a joint interview at the Detroit Opera House. They are an attractive couple. He's tall and thin, with blue eyes, short hair and scruffy beard. She has dark eyes, flowing hair and cherubic face and a smile that lights up a room. The couple became friends while performing in a production of "Elisir" as students at the Academy of Vocal Arts in Philadelphia. He had a crush on her but was too shy to say anything; she assumed his silence meant he wasn't interested. But their relationship slowly morphed into something deeper.

One night in 2005, when Perez was having relationship trouble, Costello said: "You're too pretty to be all sad and everything. I'll take you out salsa dancing. Do you like salsa dancing?"

Perplexed, she looked at him: "You salsa?!"

By 2006, they were engaged, but planning a wedding was tricky with their increasingly busy schedules. Both have signed with the same manager, who helped solve the puzzle by mapping out their commitments and giving them three brief windows for the wedding – or else risk having to wait an extra year or two for the stars to again align.

Opera singers, Ailyn Perez and Stephen Costello, are starring in the Michigan Opera Theatre's production of "The Elixir of Love." But the real story is how they are a married couple since September.

MOT general director David DiChiera, who first heard them a few years ago when auditioning singers in New York, says that Perez and Costello are both level-headed enough – and talented enough – to cope with unique circumstances.

"I think it's a challenge if both are focused on major careers and one doesn't move as fast or isn't as successful as the other," says DiChiera. "But if both have bright prospects, it can be a good thing, especially if they can work together once in a while."

Perez, who sang Susanna in MOT's "Marriage of Figaro" in 2007, has sung Juliet in Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet" at the Salzburg Festival, Marzelline in "Fidelio" for Opera Company of Philadelphia and Violetta in "La Traviata" for Florida Grand Opera. She soon will sing Violetta for San Francisco Opera.

Costello was impressive enough in his Metropolitan Opera debut last year in a small role in "Lucia di Lammermoor" that conductor James Levine asked him to sing the lead role of Edgardo in "Lucia" later in the season. The next two seasons will see his debuts in high-profile roles at Royal Opera House in London, Chicago Lyric Opera, San Francisco Opera and a return to the Met.

Together the couple will share the stage in "Faust" in San Diego, "Rome and Juliet" in Philadelphia and "La Boheme" in Cincinnati Opera.

Of course, working together has its pluses and minuses.

"The pros are you get to spend a lot of time together," says Costello. "Before we came here, we were apart for 2 ( months, and sometimes you can be apart for four months depending. Plus, at the end of the day it's like you're at home, even though you aren't in your own apartment.

"The cons are that after singing a performance or working all day, you just want to go home and veg. You have to worry about the other person's space; I don't want to do too much to bother her because I know she has to sing again tomorrow. Or when you don't agree with something, it can be tricky.

"Like if I didn't live with her, we'd have a discussion in rehearsal and then I'd go home and forget about it. But now I'm at home and looking at her across the room and I'm like, 'Why are you doing that?'"

If one or the other isn't feeling well during a performance, that can be even greater distraction for the partner than it would be for singers who weren't married or in a relationship. Then there is the jealousy issue. Costello recalls watching from the fourth row while his wife sang Juliet, and the Romeo on stage climbed on top of her in a bedroom scene. He turned to their manager sitting beside him and said, "I'm a little uncomfortable right now."

On the other hand, both Perez and Costello say there is nothing is more exciting than seeing your spouse succeed when you know exactly how much work and sweat goes into singing opera at the highest level.

"There's just a huge joy to see him realize his dreams," says Perez.

You can tell by the way Costello nods in agreement that he feels the same about her.

Mariska Hargitay's role on "Law and Order: SVU" has brought her multiple prime-time television awards and fame, but there is more to her than just her television persona.

Insider answers reader show-biz questions

By Rich Heldenfels
McClatchy Newspapers

Q: Is Mariska Hargitay of "Law & Order: Special Victims Unit" the daughter of Jayne Mansfield and Mickey Hargitay? Tell me something about Mickey Hargitay. What is Mariska's acting experience and what has she appeared in recently?

A: She is the daughter of Mansfield and Hargitay, who wed in 1958 and split about five years later. Mansfield was the famous movie bombshell, who died in an auto accident in 1967; Hargitay was known mainly as a bodybuilder – Arnold Schwarzenegger played him in a TV-movie about Mansfield – and died in 2006.

Mariska Hargitay has been a working actress for more than 20 years in television and movies. You can find a detailed list of credits at the Internet Movie Database, Imdb.com. Her most recent work has been on "SVU," which can be demanding enough; in January, she suffered a collapsed lung and ensuing complications.

Q: A number of years back a vampire movie (possibly British) was made starring David Niven and Teresa Graves (of TV's "Get Christie Love"). Can you tell me the title and whether or not the movie is available.

A: "Vampira" – released in the U.S. as "Old Dracula" – starred Niven as Count Dracula and Graves as Countess Vampira. I do not know of an authorized release of the 1974 film on video in the U.S. I did see a VHS at Amazon.co.uk, but that's in the British video format. And, if you search on your own, be careful because there are several other films called "Vampira."

Graves, also known for a stint on Rowan & Martin's Laugh-In, was on track to be a major star. But she left acting after "Get Christie Love" ended its short run in 1975 and focused on work with Jehovah's Witnesses. She died in 2002 in a fire in her home. Niven died in 1983; he had been suffering from ALS, also known as Lou Gehrig's disease.

Q: My husband and I love to watch the WKRP in Cincinnati reruns and noticed that the theme music sounds a lot like the voice of Richard Sanders, who played Les Nessman. Does Richard Sanders sing the theme song to "WKRP"?

A: No, although many viewers of the show think so. The opening theme was sung by Steve Carlisle.

Q: Could you tell me if "October Road" is coming back on TV? My husband and I really loved the show.

A: The series ended its two-season run in 2008. The first season is on DVD and the second season is due on DVD in May. The show's creators moved on to "Samurai Girl" and more recently "Life on Mars." According to Broadcasting & Cable, there have been allusions to "Road" in both those shows. For example, Mars had a sign referring to "Cataldo Homes," tenements named after an "October Road" construction-business villain.

Q: I recently purchased the "Hawaii Five-0" DVDs. Upon watching the pilot, I was surprised that James MacArthur was not starring as Danno. Any idea why the quick change between the pilot and the first episode? I agree with the choice, just curious.

A: According to MacArthur's official website, Tim O'Kelley, the first Danno, "was not well received by a test audience." Producer-writer Leonard Freeman remembered MacArthur from the Clint Eastwood movie "Hang 'Em High," which Freeman produced and co-wrote, and brought MacArthur into "Five-O." He remained with the series from 1968 to 1979, 11 of its 12 seasons.

But, he says on the website, "I grew bored. After Leonard Freeman died (in 1974), the series began to stagnate. It had started out very fresh and 'cutting edge' with stories and villains relevant to the times, but this did not continue once he was gone. The stories became more bland and predictable and presented less and less challenge to me as an actor."

Drop ninth one-run game

BASEBALL from page 8

UMass scored two runs in the top of the seventh, but ran into trouble in the bottom half of the inning. Jake Gorman and Chris Sintetos both singled, while Billy Cupelo was hit by a pitch to load the bases for HC.

A fielder's choice ground ball to second by Brendan McCrea brought Gorman home while Cupelo scored on an error, and Oxford later knocked in McCrea to cut the deficit to one.

"There are some plays that should've been made out there defensively, especially when Mitchell Eitenberg was pitching, that needed to be made that weren't," Stone said.

"We need to have a better cushion."

With just one hit and no runs in the top of the eighth inning by the Minutemen, the Crusaders tied the game in the bottom of the inning on a single by McCrea that brought in the pinch runner, Chris Blanchard.

Again, with a runner on third with one out in the top of the ninth, UMass was not able to generate scoring in the later part of the game.

"We had chances in the eighth inning, as a team, we could've blown them out. We had opportunities, and we didn't deliver," Stone said.

"We haven't made the routine play or executed the pitch or driven someone in, and when you don't do those things at the end of the game, you're vulnerable at the end of the game to lose," Stone said.

After a scoreless first inning, UMass scored twice in the top of the second, when senior third baseman Jim Macdonald led off the inning with a single through the left side and was followed by a double to the left field corner by junior left fielder Mike Gedman. With runners on second and third with no outs, freshman backstop Tom Conley took an 0-1 pitch to right for a single, scoring Macdonald while sophomore first baseman Peter Copa followed with a sacrifice fly that brought in Gedman.

But HC was not fazed, cutting their deficit in half with a two-out left field homerun by Matt Perry in the bottom of the fifth inning.

In the top of the sixth, Macdonald hit a two-out single to center field while Gedman followed suit with an RBI triple over centerfielder McCrea's head to give the Minutemen a two-run cushion once again.

The team will be back in action later this week in its home series opener against Temple, April 3-5.

The Owls are coming off a 14-10 defeat of Villanova Tuesday afternoon in the Liberty Bell Classic after winning three straight games against La Salle.

For Stone's team, however, in order to generate offense in the second stages of games, they will have to go back to the drawing board to be successful against the Owls.

"Were going back to fundamentals and basics, because we aren't good enough now," Stone said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Junior Brian Baudinet looks for a hit in a game last season. The outfielder leads UMass with a .345 batting average and seven doubles.

BRIAN TSUCHIYA/COLLEGIAN

Senior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter leads the Minutewomen with a 1.34 earned run average in 94.1 innings pitched in 2009. The three-time Easton All American has also struck out 103 batters to go with her 11-4 record.

DU's Costello a multi-threat

SOFTBALL from page 8

Another threat to UMass is Kirsten Costello. Costello has an on-base percentage of nearly .500 and is 4-for-4 in stealing attempts. Only having five RBIs on the season isn't the concern as her numbers are ideal for any leadoff hitter.

"It's definitely in the back of my mind," said Balschmiter of Costello's ability on the base paths.

Pitching is a major question mark for Dartmouth, however. The New Hampshire college has a combined ERA of 4.44 – almost as high as St. Bonaventure.

It's going to come down to how well Balschmiter pitches in front of her hometown crowd this afternoon. In her last outing, Balschmiter struck out nine while only walking one. The senior is going to concentrate and make sure her mistakes are few, especially against Khalil and Costello.

The Minutewomen don't have much time to rest after their match up with the Big Green as they take on Vermont in a doubleheader Thursday afternoon at 2:00 and 4:00 p.m. Vermont is struggling this season, posting a 3-21 record and going 2-8 in its last 10 games.

Much like the game against St Bonaventure, the Minutewomen are going to need to concentrate and get the job done despite facing a far inferior opponent.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

BRIAN TSUCHIYA/COLLEGIAN

UMass coach Elaine Sortino wears a protective mask while base coaching at third base last season after she was struck by a foul ball earlier in the season.

Helmets need to be worn by base coaches

SAFETY from page 8

at the time with their third child – loved to see their father on the baseball field.

Unfortunately, that game against the Arkansas Travelers would be the last one Coolbaugh would take the field for. In the ninth inning, Coolbaugh took a foul ball to the head that killed him.

Since Coolbaugh's death, it has become a requirement for base coaches in the major and minor leagues to wear helmets.

It was sad that it took someone's life before the professional baseball league implemented this rule, and it is beyond me why every other softball and baseball league, college or professional, has not followed suit.

Sortino wore an umpire's mask after being struck last year, but told the Daily Hampshire Gazette that she hadn't thought about wearing a mask again, but chances are she will come the Minutewomen's game this afternoon.

The Atlantic 10, if not the NCAA, should quickly institute this rule. To the knowledge of the A-10 Commissioner, Bernadette V. McGlade, no talks of this have occurred, but it wouldn't be a bad idea.

"I think it is certainly a worthy discussion topic," McGlade said Tuesday. "I was very disappointed that it occurred and concerned for [Sortino's] health and that everything would be fine."

Thankfully, Sortino has escaped with just a bruise. But why take the risk when it has such serious implications?

Is a helmet too bulky? Will it prevent a coach from giving the proper signals? I have thought and thought hard and can think of no excuse or reason a coach would not put on a helmet.

I just hope a rule is in place soon. I really don't think another life has to be lost for someone to realize the need.

Jeffrey R. Larnard is a collegian columnist and can be reached at jlarnard@dailcollegian.com.

Georgetown underachieving

ECAC from page 8

Against Penn State, it was Jim Connolly again who led the way for the Minutemen with a hat-trick performance. Also notching a hat trick was senior attack Tim Balise.

Next up for UMass is a trip to New York for an ECAC match against St. John's.

GREYHOUNDS CATCHING UP

In the middle of the standings are Loyola and Rutgers; both share the same conference record of 2-1.

For Loyola, the two victories came against Penn State and St. John's. At Penn State, the Greyhounds won, 8-7. Six of the goals came from junior attack Cooper McDonnell and senior attack Shane Koppens, who each registered a hat trick.

After two of their following three non-conference matches, the Greyhounds welcomed conference foe St. John's and defeated them, 10-7. McDonnell and Koppens made their presence known again with each player scoring two goals. McDonnell also chipped in two assists for a total of four points. Freshman midfielder Mike Sawyer also added two goals.

Loyola will next play Rutgers on April 4.

RUTGERS BOUNCES BACK

Although the team is 3-6 overall, Rutgers has made the most of in-conference play. The Scarlet Knights' only loss came at the hands of conference-leading Fairfield, in a 5-4 decision. Sophomore attack Kory Kelly was their top scorer, scoring two goals and adding an assist.

Two weeks later, Rutgers slipped past Hobart with a 5-4 victory. This time it was freshman midfielder Michael Diehl who highlighted the Scarlet Knights' scoring. He registered two goals and an assist.

One week later, Rutgers defeated St. John's, 14-10. Kory Kelly showed up in the box score again, this time with four goals. Junior midfielder Hunter Burnard also had four points, two goals and two assists.

HOYAS UNWORTHY OF HYPE

Surprisingly, Georgetown currently sits at the bottom of the ECAC standings with a conference record of 0-2. Overall, the Hoyas are 3-5, which was unexpected considering all of the preseason praise they received. Coming into 2009, Georgetown was the pre-season favorite to win the ECAC conference, and was ranked No. 6 in the country.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

SARA ARRIGHI/COLLEGIAN

Junior midfielder Brian Shea of Penn State reaches for a ground ball against UMass earlier this season.

BC, UM lost previous four

TENNIS from page 8

exasperating the injury, Dixon wants her to rest and then come back strong for the match Sunday.

"Our primary concern is getting Boney ready for Sunday against Quinnipiac because I don't want her out for too long."

Boston College, meanwhile, has begun a downward slide in the Atlantic Coast Conference, dropping its last four matches to conference foes, beginning with losses to North Carolina State and Wake Forest.

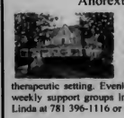
Things didn't get any better this past weekend in Weymouth, Mass. as the Eagles had similar problems to that of the Minutewomen, falling to both North Carolina and Duke by the same scores – 6-1 and 7-0, respectively.

No. 18 UNC had little difficulty on Friday in claiming its first ACC win since defeating Wake Forest on March 7. The Tar Heels (14-6) lost just seven games in sweeping the doubles point and collected five straight-set singles victories to defeat BC.

The lone bright spot for the Eagles came at No. 4 in the final match of the day, as sophomore Katharine Attwell topped Sophie Grabinski, 4-6, 6-3, 10-6.

Against No. 7 Duke on Sunday, BC was swept in both doubles and singles play, marking the second consecutive match in which the Blue Devils (14-3) did not drop a single set.

The loss puts the Eagles at 6-9 on the season with a 2-6 record in the ACC.



Though BC is far from playing well at the moment, Dixon feels that her team is in for a challenge regardless, especially without Boney.

"Frankly, this match is going to be very rough for us," Dixon said. "We'll just do the best we can, like we've done all year, and hope that we can come out of this match with a look towards Quinnipiac."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Like Sports?
Write for the Daily Collegian
Contact Eli Rosenswaike at Sports@DailyCollegian.com

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

ScandihOOvians
SCANDINAVIAN DESIGN FOR LIVING, A BEAUTIFUL LIFESTYLE

22 Strong Avenue, Northampton, MA (413) 584-0002
25 ½ Pleasant Street, Amherst, MA (413) 256-1814
SCANDIHOOVIANS.COM

Bon appetit.

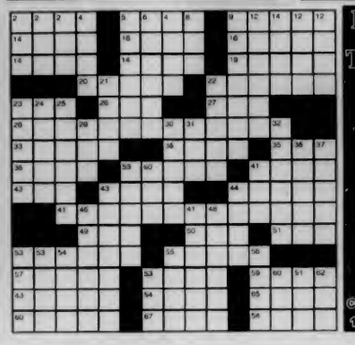
| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 6 | | 6 | | 6 | | | |
| | | | | | | | 7 |
| | | | | | 7 | 7 | 7 |
| | 2 | 9 | 1 | | 1 | | |
| | 8 | 2 | | 6 | 1 | | |
| | 1 | | 6 | 6 | 1 | | |
| 8 | 8 | 8 | | | | | |
| 8 | | | | | | | |
| | | 4 | | 1 | 6 | | 6 |

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NOTE: This puzzle uses the numeral "8" several times in answers — such as "ICHIRO" meaning "SONATE." Those are not errors.

ACROSS
1 Villain
5 Latin I verb
9 Map book
14 Business transaction
15 Bananas
16 Clear a winter windshield
17 Give
18 Expand
19 Was bold
20 Containing sediment
22 Divide
23 ___ double take: look twice
26 Teacher's group: abbr.
27 Commotion
28 Lack of empathy
33 Weaken; impair
34 "___ the true ___ the puritan ___"
35 "___ a Rock": 1965 hit song
38 Pain
39 With 46 Across, timely greeting
41 1st name in country music
42 School for priests: abbr.
43 "Sport of Kings"
44 ___ nothing
45 See 39 Across
49 Don and family
50 Contraction
51 Nov. 1 honorees
52 Finally
53 Choose
57 Breakfast item
58 Locks
59 Trumpeter Al
63 Extremes
64 Consumer
65 Actor Grant
66 Precede in time
67 Oscillate
68 Was patient



DOWN
1 Strange
2 Storm or Prizm
3 Highstalled it
4 Gladdens
5 Confuses
6 Fruity cocktail
7 ___ in the ointment
8 Decisive
9 Inserted
10 Whistler
11 Old Italian money
12 Maple genus
13 Put to sleep
21 Naturist
29 French region
23 Prima donnas
24 In readiness
25 Lung disorder
29 Part of the "Old MacDonald" refrain
30 ___ the iceberg, tiny evidence of a thing hidden
31 ALA. or Qwest
32 Gives in
36 "If I Had ___": Lyle Lovett hit
37 Martin and Steenburgen
38 Lift with effort
40 Everyone
41 Literary initials
43 Lying flat
44 ___ Guinness
46 ___ out: eliminate
47 Greaser
48 Value too highly
52 On
53 Guided journey
54 Overdue
56 Uncomplicated
58 Mail
58 Show affection
60 Furious
61 Deli purchase
62 Knight: for one

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst Outreach
Online or On Campus
Plan now for the summer
Session 1: June 1- July 9
Session 2: July 14- August 19
Registration Ongoing
Check our classes at Spire or UMassULearn.net

INTERESTED IN GETTING BUSINESS EXPERIENCE?
THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS A NEW BUSINESS MANAGER FOR 2009-2010.
APPLICATIONS ARE AVAILABLE AT 113 CAMPUS CENTER,
DUE WEDNESDAY APRIL 8TH, BY 5 PM.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Wicked cigarette!"

— Joe Meloni

DAYLEY BY ANNIE KEITHLINE

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Today Mercury is pushing through your sun sign today, indicating that it's time to take a look at your tax returns.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Mars is passing through Venus today, which means you are going to go to the store to buy cereal.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Today will be an adventurous day. Are you ready for an adventure today?

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You are going to find yourself in a classic Taurus moment today.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Uranus is huge today. Watch out.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Stuff will happen to you later today, some amount of time after you finish reading this horoscope.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You're going to get a raise today. Good for you. You really deserve it.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
It's going to rain today, unless it's sunny outside.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
When you find ten dollars today, you will be quite excited.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
With Saturn transcribing Orion's Belt, things are going to occur today.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Stay concentrated on your work today. You have a lot to do.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You wasted your time reading these horoscopes today (even more than usual).

You asked for it, and you got it!

SUPER SPECIAL CROSSWORD ANSWER SECTION

4/1/09 4/2/09 4/3/09 4/6/09
4/7/09 4/8/09 4/9/09 4/10/09
4/13/09 4/14/09 4/15/09 4/16/09
4/17/09 4/20/09 4/21/09 4/22/09
4/23/09 4/24/09 4/27/09 4/28/09

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office. $11.00/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assignment Office, 325 Whitmore and is due April 17th.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

FOR RENT

Amherst: 2,3, & 4 bedroom apartments, $1200-$2250. FREE HEAT! Great Specials! www.MillValleyApts.com or 413-253-7377

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations. Veterinarian examination. Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 1, 2009

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Junior pitcher Bryan Leigh started on the mound yesterday for the Minutemen in their 6-5 loss to Holy Cross. Leigh received a no decision for his 6.1 innings pitched in which he gave up four runs (two earned) on seven hits while striking out four.

UMass falls by walk-off HR

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

It looked as if the streak were over. The Massachusetts baseball team had a 5-1 lead going into the bottom of the seventh inning, and thought that their run support would be enough to hold off a surging Holy Cross team that had won three of its past four games.

| | |
|---|---|
| Holy Cross | 6 |
| Umass | 5 |

The Minutemen had a streak of their own to break. UMass had suffered four straight defeats, with three of them coming by one run.

But another early lead was not enough for the Minutemen (6-14), as Holy Cross (9-14) erased an impressive start by UMass with five unanswered runs – including a walk-off home run in the bottom of the ninth, as the Crusaders went on to defeat the Minutemen, 6-5, Tuesday afternoon.

"It was terrible, we were cruising along but we let them hang around, and we didn't cash in on any opportunities with the bases loaded. We didn't deliver, and that came back to haunt us," UMass coach Mike Stone said.

In the bottom of the ninth inning, Eric Oxford led off and took the third pitch from Mike Gedman to right field to win the game for HC, as the Minutemen dropped its ninth one-run game of the season.

Holy Cross stormed back from a 5-1 deficit in the later innings, setting up Oxford's heroics. Three runs in the seventh inning and another in the eighth for the Crusaders tied the game at 6.

See BASEBALL on page 6

A call for safety before its too late

Jeffrey R. Larnard

To me, last Saturday was the greatest day so far of 2009.

It was a beautiful day in the sixties. I bought burgers, hotdogs and corn on the cob to grill on the fire pit my roommates and I may or may not have illegally built in our backyard. I enjoyed the food and spent the rest of the night sitting on a couch outside staring at the fire – the cheapest form of entertainment there is. It's pretty riveting – wearing shorts for the first time this year too. Wicked awesome, I'd say.

But for some reason, I don't think Elaine Sortino, coach of the No. 18 Massachusetts softball team was having as much fun as I was on Saturday. And I don't make this assumption because I followed her around Saturday night to see if she was having a good time. I make it because she was struck on her right cheekbone with a foul ball in Saturday's 10-2 victory over St. Bonaventure, something I feel calls for base coaches to be required to wear helmets at the very least, if not masks as well.

All joking aside, it was a scary scene. With UMass up 4-0 in the bottom of the second, runners at first and third, first basemen Sarah Reeves toed in from the right side of the plate. After getting ahead 3-0 in the count, Reeves soon found herself battling with the count quickly becoming 3-2.

On the next pitch, Reeves made solid contact with the ball but too early as she pulled the ball foul, sending it screaming towards Sortino. With less than a second to react, Sortino turned away from the ball and threw her arm up which deflected the ball somewhat, just enough to make it miss her square in the nose or mouth and instead on the cheek.

"I was really, really lucky," Sortino said Monday to The Daily Hampshire Gazette. "I don't know how I got my arm up. I thought it was coming for my eyes. I think my arm saved my life. I think [the ball] went up my arm into my cheek."

Sortino quickly fell to the ground, holding her face, as the medical staff ran onto the field to her aide. The crowd at the UMass Softball Complex silenced itself from initial shock, until it saw Sortino walking back to the dugout under her own power. A gasp could be heard, however, as Sortino passed home plate and moved her hands from her face to reveal a golf ball-sized lump that had formed on the right side of her face within a minute of being struck.

Her arm minimized the damage that was done. No fractures were found when she went to Cooley Dickinson Hospital Saturday after being struck. Bruising was all that resulted from it.

As if being hit in the face with a foul ball once weren't enough, this was the second time it has occurred to Sortino; the first time happened last season when the Minutewomen faced Auburn in the Leadoff Classic in Columbus, Ga.

As Sortino said, she was lucky to get her hand up. But others haven't been so lucky when standing in as a base coach.

In July of 2007, at a Tulsa Drillers game in Arkansas, the AA minor league affiliate of the Colorado Rockies, Mike Coolbaugh, 35, stood in as the first base coach. He had begun the job a month earlier for the simple fact that his young boys, aged three and five – his wife, Amanda Coolbaugh, was pregnant

See SAFETY on page 6

BRIAN TEVLIN/COLLEGIAN

UMass coach Elaine Sortino is expected to be coaching the Minutewomen when they take the field against Dartmouth today after being hit in the face with a foul ball last Saturday.

UM hosts Big Green

Dartmouth hot, won five of last six games

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

Not much could be going better with the Massachusetts softball team. After playing their first 19 games in warmer states such as Florida, Georgia and California, UMass might not enjoy the weather in Amherst so much, but finally playing at home is what matters.

"It's very nice to be at home," Brandice Balschmiter said. "Our fans are amazing, they're always there supporting us and cheering us on. Being at our home venue, the ritual we go through before each game, not having to change the warm-up and not having to live by someone else's clock is great."

This afternoon, the No. 18 Minutewomen take on Dartmouth in a rare one-game series at the UMass Softball Complex at 4 p.m.

UMass (15-6, 4-0 Atlantic 10) will most likely start their ace, Balschmiter, who didn't pitch to her expectations in her last outing this past Saturday. The senior stressed the importance of changing pitch speeds and hitting her spots.

"I'll need to know what I need to do with my pitches – where I need to put them, how to spot the ball and locate it," said Balschmiter.

Dartmouth (8-11, 1-1 Ivy) is riding a hot streak as of late, winning five out of their last six games, most of which were away. Unfortunately for them, UMass is their next opponent. The Minutewomen, though, will have to be on their toes as the Big Green are a much better team than the Atlantic 10 rivals they played this past weekend at St. Bonaventure.

"They're a very scrappy team," Balschmiter said. "They come at us very hard, pretty much like every other team does."

Despite having only one player hitting over .300, the Big Green have four players within reach of the mark. Molly Khalil leads Dartmouth with a .311 average, three homeruns and 15 RBIs.

See SOFTBALL on page 6

Minutewomen head to Chestnut Hill

Injuries plague team, Boney and Ploch will miss match

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

On Wednesday, one team will continue its streak while the other seeks to begin a new one when the struggling Massachusetts and Boston College tennis teams matchup in Chestnut Hill, each bringing a four-match losing streak to the table.

The series between the two teams dates back to 1975, making the rivalry one of the oldest for the Minutewomen.

In their meeting last year, UMass was unable to pull off a victory in any match, falling 7-0 for the second time in the season. With the win, BC improved its all-time record against UMass to a 13-2 advantage.

UMass is currently coming off a tough weekend in Virginia in which it dropped both matches against No. 55 Old Dominion and Richmond.

On Friday, the Minutewomen were handed the 6-1 loss by the Lady Monarchs (14-4), followed by a 7-0 sweep by the Spiders (13-4) on Saturday.

The matches brought the Minutewomen to double-digit losses on the season, placing them at 8-10 on the year and 1-1 in Atlantic 10 play.

After learning last week that Magdalena Ploch will be sidelined with an unspecified injury for the remainder of the season, UMass coach Judy Dixon received even more bad news in the past couple days. Dixon found out that sophomore Candynce Boney will also have to miss time.

"Candynce Boney is also injured at this moment, so we will be going into BC really struggling," Dixon said. "We're going to have to move up players lower down in the lineup who haven't played many matches this season."

Instead of letting Boney play against the Eagles and further

See TENNIS on page 6

Two undefeated in ECAC

Cipriano grabs league honors, Rutgers strong in conference

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

Spring is officially here, and so is lacrosse. Teams have just started conference play in the Eastern College Athletic Conference, and so far, Fairfield leads the pack with a perfect 3-0 record (5-2 overall).

The Stags' success has earned them a top-20 ranking in the national polls. Their perfect record in conference play began with a 5-4 victory over Rutgers on March 7. Save for Colgate, Fairfield has defeated every opponent since then, including the two ECAC opponents of Penn State and Hobart.

ECAC Lacrosse

Against Penn State, the Stags won in overtime, 5-4. Freshman midfielder Brent Adams registered two goals, while fellow midfielder Max Trunz added two assists.

One week later, the Stags traveled to Hobart and won, 9-7. The game showed Fairfield's scoring depth – seven players accounted for the team's nine goals. One of those players managed a hat trick – sophomore midfielder Ryan Mulford.

Freshman goalkeeper Charlie Cipriano was named the ECAC Co-Defensive Player of the Week for his play, which has helped keep Fairfield undefeated in conference play. Mulford's performance was also rewarded, as he was also named to the ECAC Weekly Honor Roll.

Fairfield's next conference matchup will be a road game against Georgetown on April 4.

Massachusetts is also undefeated in conference play thus far, having posted a 2-0 record. In non-conference play, UMass is 3-3. Not spectacular, but the numbers are deceiving. In their three wins, the No. 14 Minutemen have outscored their opponents, 40-15. In their three losses, opponents outscored the Minutemen, 32-27.

In ECAC play, UMass defeated Loyola and Penn State by scores of 8-6 and 9-8, respectively. Against Loyola, senior attack Jim Connolly netted two goals and junior midfielder Bobby Hayes added two goals and an assist.

See ECAC on page 6

SARA CAPRI/COLLEGIAN

Penn State's J.J. Elmer, a junior midfielder, races down the field earlier this season against UMass at Garber field.

THE MORNING WOOD

APATHY & DYING

SERIOUSLY? YOU DON'T KNOW THE DATE?

ARTS@MORNINGWOOD.COM

Diesel, Rock to entertain kids

Entertainment News
Morning Wood Staff

HOLLYWOOD — Disney recently announced they will suspend any and all animation in their films. They will shoot nothing but live-action movies from here on out. But they will not leave out the racists sentiments, sexual jokes, and inappropriate messages hidden in the backgrounds of their films. Now they will just be shot with real people, rather than being drawn.

The first movie will be a remake of "Dumbo" starring Vin Diesel as the elephant with large ears, except Diesel will be a man with huge muscles who joins the circus. The plot will be the same in every other aspect, except the crows will be played by Michael Richards in a large bird costume.

Disney has also announced that from now on they will be known as "The Company that Vin Deisel and The Rock Built, Bitches." From now on either Diesel or Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson will star in their films and bombs will be a must in each film, and Johnson will wield a 2x4 (2 by 4) in each film.

The implementation by the duo is that Jason Alexander will be in each film as some sort of animal, a balding dog or a balding cat. He must have a prominent role as a sidekick who just can't seem to get anywhere in life and who kills his wife by making her lick large quantities of toxic CD cases.

Keith Urban and Kenny Chesney have been hired to score each of the new films with the band members of Metallica. The company wants "All-American music with an edge and drive. Oh, and lots of bad ass guitar solos and 'ohhhhh and ahhhhs.'"

The company's first film will be out the May and will be a story about the begin of the Universe. The beginning of the Universe will be told through the eyes of Diesel and The Rock, the creators of the Universe. The film is being directed by Michael Bay and will also star Kenan Thompson and Kel Mitchell.

Entertainment News can be reached at popculturesucks@peterzhiltonblows.com

Vin Diesel's career is essentially over, so he figured the best thing to do would be to play an elephant. Seriously, what would you do?

Wicked eyebrow.

Area band plays show

By Unbiased Reviewer
Morning Wood Staff

NORTHAMPTON — A local area band, Cry The Beloved Country, performed in Northampton this past Saturday night. The five-piece, all-male ensemble consisted of guitar, bass and drums with a single vocalist. A crowd of 134 patrons were present for the performance varying in age from 17 to 34.

Following a 13-minute sound check the band opened the night by playing a song, utilizing all of their instruments with vocalist Brendan Skylark singing into the microphone. The opening selection, "World's Apart," was in a word, audible.

Band members simultaneously played their respective instruments while moving around the stage. Drummer Pete Hill was mostly stationary, however. The song was the first in a series the audience would hear.

After two or three swigs out of a 12oz bottle of Budweiser, Skylark thanked the local crowd for attending the show. According to Skylark the venue held a special place in the band's heart due to it close geographical proximity to the basement the band practiced in during 2005. After brushing his bangs from his eyes he went on to add that Northampton was the "rockingest" city in America.

The night's second song, "Hummingman," opened with Hill delivering 12 high-hat clicks before Skylark and the crowd screamed the tracks name in unison.

"Humminggggmannnn," they yelled again.

Lead guitarist Brian DiPietro then used the pick held in his right hand to strum the strings on his guitar creating what is often referred to as chords by placing his left hand's fingers on various frets. DiPietro kept this up throughout the song, playing multiple different chords in succession until the track's conclusion. The rest of the band followed suit.

Together the band crafted a song with multiple verses and a chorus that resembled the recorded version of the same song they had released on compact disc 9-months prior to the show.

After playing two newer selections that the band had "worked really hard on" and were "really excited to play live," the band performed their third-most downloaded single off of iTunes, "The Sky is Raining Knives, and All I Have is An Umbrella." The song, sung in first person, presumably tells the story of a girl not wanting to have sex with Skylark, and his inability to cope with such a reality.

"I'd give you the world – if you'd only let me inside yours," sang the frontman through his wireless microphone. "You get me up – just to let me down – and it's going to rain – it's going to rain – and it'll never end."

After some clapping and assorted mumbled sentiments the band fired into what they called "the last song of the set."

Following the 3-minute finale, "To Be Perfectly Anne Frank with You," the band left the stage. With the house lights and music still off, off-time clapping and stopping soon followed.

"One more song, one more song, one more song…" chanted the crowd in an effort to guile the band into performing beyond their originally conceived set of songs.

This clap-and-chanting method of coercion proved effective as Cry The Beloved Country retook the stage to perform its most downloaded song that had yet to been performed. The band played through the 4-minute "Chinua Achebe Was Right" in exactly that amount of time. Amidst onlooker applause they thanked the crowd again before promising to "be back real soon."

"We love you all," concluded Skylark to the crowd of strangers before going backstage with his fellow band members. The audiacave left having experienced an evening of live music.

Unbiased Reviewer can be reached at reviewsarecumberwithbrassballs@yourmom.com

'Octomom' looks to sell extra children

By Eric Tryptophan
Morning Wood Turkey Enthusiast

Nadya Suleman has offered Madonna a chance to take in an unloved and neglected child not from another nation but from her very own clan.

The 'Octomom' recently updated her website and posted an offer for any interested parties in purchasing one or an assortment of her 14 children.

With the help of her agent, Wes Yoder, Suleman has advertised a price of $2 million for one child or 'buy two children for $4 million, the third baby free.'

"The economy is horrible right now, both for normal people and celebrities like myself and Madonna. After all, I have bills stacking up from my invitro treatments, as well as the hospital care hills for all these little premature nugrats," Suleman said. On top of that, she said that she was already out of formula and diapers. "I've had to make diapers out of everything from towels to curtains to soaking wet copies of the newspaper I find out in the neighbors' yards," she added.

Yoder is reportedly in talks with Madonna's agent, Bryan Lourd, in an effort to strike up deal. One source reports the agreement could includes free tickets to every future Madonna concert, as well as special back stage passes that will allow Suleman to briefly visit with her former children for photo-ops and gifts of candy and false hope.

Suleman said she felt the plan was best for the state since adoption by Madonna would take the possible burden of supporting her large family off the taxpayers of California. Recent telephone polls in the state indicate that the general public is fully supportive of this move.

"Children are not only a gift, but they also make wonderful accessories and exemplary fashion statements. But having a child is hard work. The commodities market doesn't really swing in the specific direction of selling children," Yoder said. "I'm really glad that we are all working together for this great cause."

Eric Tryptophan can be reached at turkeyeater@themorningwood.com

Übersetzt aus dem Japanischen, süß

By Google Translator
Morning Wood Correspondent

Robert C HORUBUFURORIDA the first spring break spent five days. Weather almost daily low temperature is high 80s and 70s had reached their sunny. However, since coming to the University of Massachusetts more Holub, chancellor of the job, but his focus has become a common recreation.

In fact, he has worked. In about a week, at the University, he is a part of the trip, I had to relieve the middle of the semester the chance to attend the meeting with the donor.

When Holub, five months before accepting a job, financial crisis - what he called his greatest challenge - to be deployed. Took office as the economy in August was a Sunday, he is the world's

See JAPANISCHEN on page C12

Iditor's Not

Th rently maind "Massachusetts Daily Collgian" has announced that it will nd its longtim us of th fifth ltr of th alphabt to cut its oprating costs in th fac of a delining conomy.

According to businss managr Alx Waszczuk, dropping th long-standing most popular ltr in th alphabt will nt th Collgian somwhr btwn $30,000 and $40,000 a yar. That amount will hlp offst delining rvnus from ad sals, th only source of rvnu for th papr said from classifid ads.

"I understand that popl hav boom accustomd to th ltr ' ' in rcnt yars," said Waszczuk, "but simply put it was a dcision btwn continuing to put th papr out daily at th sam quality or discontinuing som of our vowl us, which has bn somwhat xensivr rcntly in any cas."

Alx Waszczuk delind to commnt on th possibility of othr vowls, or vn consonants, bing cut should th conomic situation continu to worsn.

SGA vigil ends in confusion

By Marty McFly
Morning Wood Staff

Confusion broke out during a scheduled Student Government Association demonstration against the administration's proposed Dining Commons Plate Fee Increase yesterday as people arrived with signs and ready with chants, only to be greeted by a large crowd holding a silent candlelight vigil.

At the beginning of the event, Premier Malcolm "Megaphone" Chu produced a gold plated megaphone and proceeded to chant into it only to be greeted by static, followed by silence. After a short period of confusion, Chu and several other members of the SGA cabinet produced candles and lighters and proceeded to distribute them among the crowd. Unnamed sources deep within the SGA said that someone forgot to place the megaphone back on its charger.

After several depressions of the Staples "Easy Button" little else could be done. SGA officials started circulating flyers pushing a protest against those who forget to charge megaphones, but some said it would just be stupid anyways.

Students who arrived late to the event dropped their picket signs and accepted lit candles. When asked what they were holding a vigil for, one student reported Darfur, another World Peace and another said to save the whales. The SGA could not be reached for comment on the actual purpose of the vigil.

"I thought I was protesting the imprisonment of T.I.," said Amber Foxworthy. "I thought it was strange that MASSPIRG showed, but, I mean, those people are at all these things."

Sophomore and Social Thought and Political Economy major Biff Tannen commented on the event.

"While I came prepared to act out against the administration's actions, when the lack of a megaphone became apparent, I knew that we could think of something else to take a stand for. After all, only two ways exist to make a statement or communicate a view point: protests (con megaphone) or vigils."

Towards the event, t-shirts were sold recognizing the event as "Generic March Vigil." It was reported that proceeds from the t-shirt sales would be used to solve the Indian overpopulation crisis, the Bolivian water incidents, the Swiss chocolate shortage and the Ural Mountain conflict. The t-shirts were reportedly funded by the recently approved SGA bailout.

Speaking about the event's initial technical difficulties, Premier Chu said; "I just don't know what happened. Big Bertha was charging under my desk all night and when I turned her on this morning, nothing came out."

On the change of event programming, "It is important for us to make public demonstrations no matter what the cause. Awareness can only be spread through being very loud or completely silent."

Upon further investigation by The Daily Collegian, it was discovered that a warranty exists for Big Bertha at the Hadley Best Buy. The manager could not be reached for comment.

Marty McFly can be reached on his skateboard at some point in either the past or future.

MARTY MCFLY/MORNING WOOD

Malcolm Chu, SGA president, uses his diaphragm to push air upwards and vibrate his vocal chords, producing sound.

UM to sell-out, students love Fanta

By Antonio Banderas
Morning Wood Staff

Administrators are currently considering a new plan to sell the naming rights of the university to the Coca-Cola Corporation. Under the proposed plan, which is still in the negotiation stage, Coca-Cola would pay an annual sum of about $15,000 in order to have the school's name changed from the University of Massachusetts – Amherst to the "Coca-Cola University of Massachusetts – Amherst."

Other stipulations in the contract include changing the name of the Isenberg School of Management to the "Dasani School of Management," as well as rebranding the Fine Arts Center as the "Sprite Building for Arts and Stuff." Administrators are also considering renaming the Mullins Center, opting instead to call it the "Powerade Sports PowerDome."

The student body has given a generally positive reaction to the idea.

"I love Fanta. And Diet Coke, too. Soda is totally awesome," said UMass sophomore and Southwest resident John DiAtomi. "There's gonna be a ton of machines and crap I bet. This is gonna be really sick."

"I like totally only drink Diet Coke, like umm, the other stuff is really gross like so many calories," said freshman Ashley Summers. "It like um totally gets me like through the day, hehe!"

"For the past 164 years, UMass has been missing out on a valuable source of potential income…its name," said industry analyst Ted Mizigoski. "This is a time of serious cutbacks and layoffs for the university. By not selling its naming rights, UMass is threatening to fall behind other schools that have made the jump already, such as McDonalds University of New Hampshire, Dunkin Donuts University of Vermont and JiffyLube University of Connecticut."

'Easy button' fails to solve problems

By Bstonio Aanderas
Morning Wood Staff

University of Massachusetts Amherst chancellor Robert C. Holub announced today that the administration's purchase of a Staples "Easy Button" has failed to resolve the school's $46 million budget deficit.

"We were hoping to see the Easy Button counteract the adverse effects of the deficits during the next few years, whether that meant hiring freezes, wage freezes or just plain freezing because the school would be cutting back on heating," said Holub, in an e-mail to students and faculty Wednesday. "It appears, however, that this will not be possible."

Holub said the plan to purchase the Easy Button came from the popular advertising campaign for the office supplies company, which according to Holub "made everyone on the Board of Trustees crack up every time they saw it."

"We thought this would be a win-win situation; we could solve the budget deficit really quickly and easily, and then have plenty of time left over to golf in Florida this Spring," said Board of Trustees Chairman Robert J. Manning. "Apparently, it's just not that easy, however. Now we are really scratching our heads for another solution."

Other options that administrators are now considering for bridging the budget deficit now being considered include raindancing, and investing in General Motors stock.

"We will pursue every possible means of reducing this deficit," said Hholub, "whether that means having to pray to God, or even buying a

See EASY in THE MINUTEMAN

THE MORNING WOOD

STICKS AND BALLS

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 1, 2009 SPORTS@MORNINGWOOD.COM

Penis 'pix msg' lands UMass player jail cell

Lewd and lascivious picture offends female students at UM

By Lil Wang
Morning Wood Staff

A member of The Massachusetts football team is a big dick figuratively, certainly not literally.

He was arrested Tuesday for lewd and lascivious behavior after he allegedly took a picture of his penis and sent it to every female on campus.

The girls were, reportedly, not impressed.

"At first, I wasn't sure what it was – I could barely see anything through the shadows and hair," said sophomore Jane Doe. "But then I realized it was his genitalia. I texted him back with 'LOL' and 'LMAO.'"

Unfortunately for the not-so-well endowed player, he was not 'JK.'

Police would not say whether or not his horrendous play on the field played a role on why they didn't just let the transgression slide.

The player was picked up by the Amherst Police Department after an investigation led them to 'Deepthroat,' who had all the evidence on a cell phone.

The arrested player released the following statement from prison.

"I do not recognize anything to be wrong with my actions. As a student athlete, I am busy throughout the semester and do not have enough time to hang out at the Monkey Bar," he said. "I thought the text message was an innovative way to introduce myself to females on an unconventional medium."

The player didn't show up to his court date, but sent the judge a text message pleading his innocence.

Lil Wang can be reached in your pants at smallpenis@morningwood.com.

Note to UMass athletes everywhere: The Morning Wood WILL expose all inappropriate, sleaze-ball moves that you try to pull. A UMass football player was recently caught after a picture of his penis was sent to UMass girls.

Athletic Director John McCutcheon is hoping to get his new Beirut by-laws passed in other schools. Apparently, its not only played at UMass.

Official beirut rules passed

McCutcheon says no to NBA Jam rule, lame 6-cup games

By Bernadette McGlade
Morning Wood Staff

UMass is and has always been a campus with a great deal of pride in all of its school sports. However, one sport has always and shall always reign supreme over all others - Beirut.

Yet, the athletic department has continuously ignored the evidence that the most popular activity on campus should be regulated, instead allowing so-called "house rules" to police the most sacred and competitive sport at UMass.

That is, until today.

Athletic director John McCutcheon announced today that he had appointed a special subcommittee to lay down a universal set of ground rules that all houses in Amherst must abide by.

"It's about damn time somebody addressed this nightmare," said local boozehound Scott Feldman. "It seems like every time I'm at a party the rules are different. I just want to get wasted without arguing semantics."

The first rule that was voted on was a mandatory 10-cup policy. No more six-cup games that end after two turns and allow a player to lose a game without even a possibility of getting drunk.

Someone noted that people played six-cup to allow more games in a night, but this was quickly dismissed.

"If the line gets too long, the house should set up another table!" argued committee member Kevin Eastman. "If they only have one table, they shouldn't be hosting the game."

The second rule established was the two-rack limit. This is the traditional set-up, but some rogue individuals prefer a "rack on six, four, three, two and one." That set-up is far too generous, and eliminates the strategy of when to rack.

The third and most heated debate was on the 'death-cup rule.' Liberals argued that a three-cup penalty was sufficient, while hardcore conservatives demanded an instant knockout. In the end, the conservatives won out.

"Death cup means exactly that… death, game over," Republican Club president Greg Collins said. "You allow two balls in one cup, get off the table. There has to be a harsh punishment for such behavior."

The fourth ruling was far less controversial – players must finish all sank cups immediately. Too often, players simply pull cups away, pour all the beer into one cup and sip it as the game goes on. Some people have taken advantage of this generosity and wound up knocking an opponent out with half a beer in their partner's hand. The committee moved quickly to outlaw this abuse.

"Sipping beer violates the entire spirit of the game and players caught doing so should be banned immediately," UMass senior Jack Stanton said. "Someone makes a shot, you finish your beer, period. If you can't handle that then get off the table."

The final decree was these were the only adjustments needed. No NBA Jam nonsense, no overshoot penalty, no off-the-wall rules or anything else.

"After today, there should be no more arguments or fights over rules. If people disagree, simply look at the standards. If someone protests they are disqualified, simple as that," said freshman Mia Rooney.

Bernadette McGlade is the commissioner of the Atlantic 10. She can be reached at A-10basketballsucks@yahoo.com

Drinking game: no winners

By Jeffrey R. Jarnard
Morning Wood Staff

(Editors note: This story has taken seven months to finally reach print because no clear winner was ever determined. After several months of research, no winner was ever established, just a bunch of losers. This is the story of the greatest Kings game ever played.)

It was a clash of titans, the best of the best, and the most politically incorrect game of Kings ever all located in the tiny living room of an undisclosed Pufflon Village Apartment. It was the most anticipated sporting event of the year: the finals of the Summer King Games at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst.

While the game turned out no clear champion out of the four participants, Moe Jeloni, Sichael Markes, Fryan Reming and Ri Elsenswaike, the end of the game provided the spectators (myself and only myself) the first loser of the night.

"It came down to the end with two cards left and I was the next person to go after Sichael," Elsenswaike said outside the Pufflon apartment. "But Sichale pulled the last king, so I didn't have to drink [the king cup]. It looked like black liquorish which is disgusting."

The king cup was a mix of Guinness draft and the "King of Beers," Budweiser. Reming first pulled a king with the sixth card of the game, pouring his Guiness in. Jeloni followed midway through the game with two more kings, pouring in Bud heavy for each, before Markes pulled the final king with two cards to go.

"Kind of sucked I had the king. It was just miserable," Markes said.

But the real story of the night came each time a jack was pulled and a rule was made. The first rule, a rather boring one was made by Markes, that anytime an even card is pulled Reming and Elsenswaike must do up-downs. Remign opposed the rule, to no avail, saying that no one was creative enough.

It was awhile before another jack was pulled, but Reming made sure to make it worth it.

"The homosexuality will begin," Reming said aloud as he showed the jack to the room.

And it did. With the power to make any rule he pleased, Reming chose that every time a card was pulled Jeloni and Markes had to rub each others' nipples.

"[Jeloni] was very nice with [my nipples] and I was very nice with his nipples as well," Markes said after the game. "We respected each others nipples very well."

Remign would later admit that he and Jeloni had a deal in place – in which Jeloni paid Reming – to make sure Jeloni would get close to Markes in an attempt to break his homophobic habits.

"[Jeloni] said whatever you do, make sure you get me and Markes close together and that I did," Remign said. "[Jeloni] was up for it."

Jeloni pulled the next jack, instating the rule that Reming had to sit on Elsenswaike's lap, which Elsenswaike opposed. Jeloni instead proposed that the Elsenswaike sit on Remings lap.

"Get on the Rem express!" Jeloni exclaimed after making the rule.

"That is a train that needs no conducting," Reming quickly added.

"[Elsenswaike] was sitting on my wallet and it looked like he was enjoying himself," Reming said following the game.

Jeloni and Markes continued to rub one another nipples, with Meloni once exclaiming "This is starting to feel good," as the game went on until the ultimate rule was made.

Reming pulled the final jack, with just a few cards remaining and continued to do just as Jeloni asked him to do. He instituted that Jeloni and Markes spoon after ever other card pulled for the remainder of the game.

"Jeloni and Markes where spooning and Moe enjoyed it," Elsenswaike said. "Moe put his leg around Markes when he didn't even need to. So the loser here is Moe Jeloni."

Jeloni could not refute these facts.

"I enjoyed spooning with Markes. The kid has been so homophobic for so long," Jeloni said. "It was fun to stick my leg between his for a little bit."

"Well we are in the state of Massachusetts that is all I have to say. We were the first state to legalize it for a reason," Jeloni later would say of the relationship between him and Markes. "You draw whatever conclusions you want from that."

In the end, whether by participation or by rule making, it is clear that all players involved enjoy partaking in homosexual activity far too much and by the board of Kings, each has been deducted one man card for the upcoming season.

Jeffrey R. Jarnard can be reached at Ljarnard@drinkinggames.com.

Luke Bonner saves baseball program

By David Stern
Morning Wood Staff

The budget problems are solved, and the UMass baseball program is officially saved.

The Minutemen can thank Luke Bonner for that.

The senior 7-footer on the men's basketball team was promised by the Sacramento Kings, Washington Wizards, Los Angeles Clippers, Memphis Grizzlies and Oklahoma City Thunder – the five-worst teams in the NBA – that they will take him with the No. 1 overall pick (should they win the lottery) in the upcoming 2009 NBA Draft.

Bonner will have to wait a month or so to officially sign the contract and obtain his signing bonus, but in the meantime, he is hitting up his brother (NBA player Matt Bonner) for money to bailout the baseball program.

"I figured since I'm the first 7-footer to ever try to play point guard at UMass that I should give other tall and goofy kids the chance to follow their dreams and be the first 7-footer to bat leadoff and play shortstop at UMass," Bonner said. "Plus, I'm rich now, I can afford it. I'm the most versatile 7-footer in the NBA.

"I can take charges like a champion and I can flat-out shoot from anywhere on the floor. I post the biggest mismatch problem for defenses in the NBA. I make Dirk Nowitzki look like a bitch," he added.

UMass baseball coach Mike Stone was so thrilled and grateful to Bonner for saving the program that he offered Bonner the leadoff spot for the remainder of the 2009 season.

"I haven't won anything or cared about this job for about five years now, so I figured 'What the Hell?'" Stone said. "He can't possibly be as bad as anyone else on this team! I mean really, look around. They look like the Bad News Bears out there."

Athletic Director John McCutcheon said that now that they have enough money to save the program, he "might actually hire a real baseball coach."

David Stern can be reached at lukebonnerisallergictothepaint@ncaa.com

The 7-foot Luke Bonner is allergic to the paint, but that didn't stop him from being projected as the No. 1 overall pick in the NBA Draft.

Notebook: FCS football pointless; Wake Forest has never heard of Gurley

By Jason Yellin
Morning Wood Staff

A lot has happened recently in the UMass athletic department. Here is a brief recap.

UMass football

In response to the rumors of a sport being cut because of budget problems, many UMass students thought that football should be the casualty.

"I have three letters for you: FCS. Seriously, who gives a shit about Division I-AA football?" asked UMass student Tim McCall. "The games are pointless, the players are pointless, the teams are pointless and the stadium is a dump. UMass wasted $1.6 million on those lights for nothing!"

UMass men's basketball

After scoring 22 points in the Atlantic 10 Tournament loss to Duquesne, Anthony Gurley got such a big head that he thought he was good enough to play in the ACC. Say, even Wake Forest.

When Gurley asked Wake Forest coach Dino Gaudio if he could transfer there, Gaudio answered, "Who are you?"

Gaudio had never heard of Gurley, because "we only look at players who actually contribute when on the court. We're not fans of players who can't rebound, can't pass, can't get a block or a steal, and just stand around in the corner launching bad 3-pointers."

In other news, I, REALLY, REALLY miss former UMass coach Travis Ford.

UMass hockey

For the first time all season, the "Mass Attack" didn't blow a late lead. The Minutemen led the UMass women's club ice hockey team, 44-0, after two periods and held on for the 44-43 win.

Coach Don Cahoon was pleased with what he saw.

"For the first time in the last two-plus years we actually showed some heart," he said. "Too bad the game didn't actually count in the standings. But it was nice to see us not choke at the end like we usually do!"

UMass women's basketball

Coach Marnie Dacko was yelled at by athletic director John McCutcheon after another shitty season concluded.

"I'm so mad that I can't fire this woman," McCutcheon told the Morning Wood. "What was the former AD smoking when they hired her? If only this department had some money, I could afford to fire her. Oh well, no one cares about this program, anyway."

UMass men's soccer

Bryan Hogan had a really bad season.

"That's because I didn't try," he said. "I was too busy playing with my hair."

UMass women's soccer

For the 1,355th straight season, star forward Sydney Stoll was injured and didn't play. Coach Jim Rudy is fed up.

"Eventually, I'm not going to be able to find any more eligibility for Sydney," he said. "Same thing happened to the basketball program with Matt Pennie. And you know how much that devastated the program."

Jason Yellin can be reached at umasssportsucks@shittyteams.org.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 70 LOW: 42 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, APRIL 2, 2009

Students missing out on millions in financial aid from FAFSA

By Claire Bronchuk
Collegian Staff

Millions of dollars in financial aid is not being distributed because thousands of Massachusetts college students each year do not file the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA).

The Massachusetts Board of Higher Education recently estimated that Massachusetts students enrolled in community and state colleges or universities are missing out on $59 million dollars of financial aid.

The total amount of state, federal and institutional financial aid during the 2006 academic year was $1.4 billion dollars, distributed to 145,655 Massachusetts residents who filed the FAFSA.

But according to the statistics available from 2006, that number of students could be higher. Nearly 45 percent of undergraduates in Massachusetts did not file the FAFSA in 2006. The Massachusetts Executive Office of Education has estimated that 16,000 of those students were eligible for aid from both the state and federal levels.

According to the Board's report, it is more common for students attending one of the state's public universities to file a FAFSA than it is for students attending state or community colleges.

University of Massachusetts spokesman Ed Blaguszewski said around 75 percent of students at UMass file a FAFSA each year, compared to 55 percent state-wide.

The Board is recommending that the Massachusetts Public Higher Education System reach out earlier in the application process to encourage prospective students to file a FAFSA. The hope is that making students more aware of the FAFSA at an earlier stage in their college explorations will increase the number of students who apply.

Currently UMass tries to inform students by sending e-mails through Student Affairs and Parent Services. The University also discusses the FAFSA at admissions events and participates in College Goal Sunday.

Some students may be made aware of the FAFSA during high school or through various other connections.

"I knew about the FAFSA because my older sister has filed many times," UMass freshman Greg Murphy said. "My high school guidance counselor also told me to fill it out. It was beneficial for me."

Recent research reported in the Daily Hampshire Gazette has shown that there are a number of reasons students may choose not to file the FAFSA. Six percent of students claimed an aversion to the complexity of the application deterred them from completing the form, while 35 percent said they believed they had sufficient funds to finance college privately. An additional 39 percent of students claimed that they believed they would not receive an award.

Some UMass students can easily relate to the difficulty of filing the FAFSA.

"It's not very user friendly; I do it all myself," said Ketiana Basti, a sophomore classics major. "The office of financial aid does not help you."

"I haven't filed yet because it's so complicated," said accounting major Bo Wang. "If it were easier to file I would probably take more time to fill it out."

Still, the FAFSA does not benefit everyone and some students have found its status as an all-encompassing aid form detrimental.

"You shouldn't have to file a FAFSA to get certain scholarships," said freshman Julie Reynolds. "It's a waste of time. Why can't there be a separate form?"

Reynolds was referring to the John and Abigail Adams Scholarship Programs, which grants free tuition to students who perform to specific standards on the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System (MCAS) tests.

According to the Office of Student Financial Assistance, a subdivision of the Board, students who are eligible for the Adams Scholarship must file a FAFSA to receive the award.

While the structure of the FAFSA may deter some students from filing, it is the most direct link to the state and federal financial assistance system.

Claire Bronchuk can be reached at cbronchu@student.umass.edu

RSOs hold rally in support of free speech

Brad DeFlumeri took the microphone yesterday in front of the Student Union at the 'Rally for Free Speech' which was co-sponsored by a number of student groups.

By Kat Manser
Collegian Staff

A number of campus groups co-sponsored a "Rally for Free Speech" Wednesday afternoon, on the steps of the Student Union.

The event was sponsored by the UMass Republican Club, the UMass Democrats, the Silent Majority and the Student Alliance for Israel (SAFI).

The rally was precipitated from the aftermath concerning Don Feder's attempted speech on hate crime, which was sponsored by the Republican Club. The intended speech was cancelled due to interruptions from the crowd, an SAFI event that was disrupted by protesters.

"This is the perfect opportunity for groups with seemingly different interests and politics to come together for a cause that transcends mere partisanship," said Greg Collins, president of the Republican Club.

"I am excited all of these groups are working together to support each other. Everyone should be able to speak their opinions and be heard," said Emma Einhorn, president of the UMass Democrats.

Collins addressed the crowd against a backdrop of signs reading "Suppression of thought is anti-American," and "Freedom rings where opinions clash." One sign cited the famous quotation attributed to French philosopher Voltaire

"I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it."

"When free speech is limited, thought is limited. Hating free speech is the most oppressive form of hate speech," said Collins.

Freshman Elyse Yarmosky, who attended the Feder protest as a member of the UMass Coalition Against Hate, believed a "silent protest would have been more effective."

"There is a line between the free speech that each of us is constitutionally entitled to and slander," said Yarmosky. "We live in a community; UMass is a community. We're all here for the same reasons, which are to get an education and make something out of ourselves. We're not all that different, and I don't understand why anyone would want to harm that community [with hate crimes and speech]."

"The First Amendment is designed to protect people from the government," said former Holyoke Community College political science professor Mark Clinton. "If I don't with agree with you and try to shut you up, I am not a censor."

Matt Cadwallader, vice president of the UMass Democrats, stressed the importance of non-partisanship in targeting issues of free speech.

He also mentioned the 'Don Feder fiasco' by saying that, though he believed Feder to be a "well-spoken fool," he supported Feder's right to the First Amendment because, "without free speech there is no social justice."

Brad DeFlumeri, vice president of the Republican Club, also addressed the crowd, calling the actions of the protesters at Feder's lecture "adolescent tactics."

SAFI member Erika Rothschild and Jay Lincoln of the Republican Club were also among those who spoke at the rally.

See RALLY on page 2

Legislators introduce bill to legalize marijuana in Mass.

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

Two Massachusetts legislators have introduced a bill that would make the sale of marijuana by licensed distributors legal in the state.

House Bill 2929 and Senate Bill 1801, introduced in the statehouse March 23, was sponsored by Amherst Rep. Ellen Story, Northampton state Sen. Stan Rosenberg and petitioned for by Northampton attorney Richard Evans. The bills seek to tax and regulate the cannabis industry, stating that "previous efforts have not succeeded in eliminating or curtailing marijuana use and abuse."

The bills would also create a regulatory board, the Cannabis Control Authority, to supervise the distribution and sale of marijuana in Massachusetts.

Sen. Stan Rosenberg, co-sponsor of a bill to regulate legal marijuana.

Under the new bill, officials would place marijuana into one of three tax classes, depending on quality. The Control Authority would be charged with testing the quality of the marijuana to determine its tax bracket, collecting excise taxes on the sale of marijuana, issuing licenses to farmers, importers and commercial distributors.

Also, the rule would apply to retailers who could potentially sell the marijuana in a store. The law would create tax stamps to issue to these purveyors to verify that the marijuana had been legally obtained. Driving under the influence of marijuana and public consumption would remain a crime.

Marijuana under the new bill would be moved from its origin point to consumers in several stages.

A farmer would hold a cultivation license, which would cost $500 annually, and could sell marijuana to a processor, who could "possess, process, package, box and crate cannabis," into one ounce sealed bags, selling those to someone with a trade license, which would cost $3,000 a year. From there, the processor could sell the marijuana in any form to someone with a retail license, who would essentially be operating a marijuana storefront, selling marijuana to any person over 21 years-old who is not clearly intoxicated.

Rep. Ellen Story from Amherst, Massachusetts.

No one convicted of a felony, except a marijuana-related felony, within the last 10 years would be able to hold a license.

Rep. Story and Sen. Rosenberg cautioned that the bill was likely to be met with incredulousness from lawmakers, but said they hope the bill will open the door to dialogue on the potential benefits of marijuana legalization.

Rosenberg said he hopes the bill will stimulate discussion on the issue of legalizing, though he said he doubts the bill will pass for the present.

"It will take a while to get the legislature and the public's attention on the subject," he said. "It is not likely to move very far in this legislative term."

See BILL on page 3

New orientation at Mt. Holyoke

By Dinah Gorelik
Collegian Staff

This fall, Mount Holyoke College will be offering a new pre-orientation opportunity, called "Promoting Intercultural Dialogue and Creating Inclusion," for white, domestic first-year students.

The program is an optional subset of Mount Holyoke's pre-orientation for all incoming students, designed to give students the skills necessary for communication and leadership.

In previous years, international students were required to go to a specific pre-orientation program while students of color were given an optional pre-orientation. Now, white students will also have the same opportunity.

The voluntary pre-orientation will cover the traditional issues of race and social justice. It will also help foster understanding of other races through workshops and dialogues on an individual basis, and through the program's collaboration with the other pre-orientation groups, which include students of color and international students.

"I think the new pre-orientation program could be a really good thing," said Mount Holyoke freshman Emily McGranachan. "Last year before coming to Mount Holyoke, I remember thinking, I wish there was some program that I qualified to join. A program discussing racism and social justice is important and from my experiences, often eye-opening."

See ORIENTATION on page 2

April Fool's hits SGA meeting

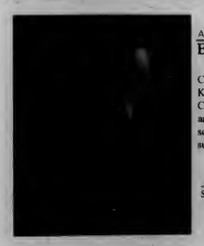
By William McGuinness
Collegian Staff

Shoes flew at the Student Government Association president during the 1568th regular meeting of the SGA, but it was done in light of April Fool's Day rather than malice.



Campus Center room 163C was a mix of nostalgia and excitement as the Undergraduate Student Senate voted to ratify this year's election results, ushering in new officers who will run the student government next year. Former SGA President Malcolm Chu was presented with a bottle of Jamaican rum from former President Shaun Robinson as a second-generation Jamaican who extended the gift in recognition of Chu's work this year.

Robinson acted as SGA president for 21 hours to oversee the transition between former President Chu and Ngozi Mbawuike, who was sworn in as president Wednesday night.

Robinson, with time elapsing on his day lily administration, took the opportunity to appoint two people to positions in a context he described as ironic.

He moved to appoint Michael Fox as Secretary of Public Policy and Relations and Derek Khanna

See SGA on page 3

ARTS & LIVING

EN FRANCAIS

Collegian editor Kevin Koczwara reviews "The Class," a French film about an underprivileged middle school class presented with subtitles.

SEE PAGE 6

SPORTS

RAIN NO ISSUE

Senior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter and the UMass softball team cruised to victory 5-0 over Dartmouth yesterday afternoon, despite a rain-shortened game.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION

COLUMN | SAVE MONEY, CUT SPORTS

Nick Milano considers the option of cutting all sports, at least for some time, in response to the economic crisis

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

VIDEO | FREE SPEECH

The Republican Club, UDems, Silent Majority and SAFI hold First Amendment Rally at Student Union.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 42

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasserzuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Deemer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
COMICS EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Leigh Greaney
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenswaike
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
WEB EDITOR Victor Jaurk
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Koczwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Weliver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCRAG IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1996. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Michael King

COPY EDITOR
Shayna Murphy

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michelle Abbasciano

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

GEO-LOCATE YOUR NEWS

FOLLOW NEWS GEOGRPAHICALLY WITH DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM'S "NEWSGARDEN" APPLICATION ON THE HOMEPAGE.

NEWS

VIDEO | TUESDAY
HIGHLIGHTS FROM FDIC CHAIR SHEILA BAIR'S SPEECH AT THE SCHOOL OF MANAGEMENT ON FRIDAY.

SPORTS

PODCAST
BOSTON HERALD COLUMNIST, WEEI REGULAR AND UMASS ALUM STEVE BUCKLEY TALKS WITH THE COLLEGIAN ABOUT THE FUTURE OF UMASS BASEBALL, EVALUATES MEN'S BASKETBALL COACH DEREK KELLOGG AND REMINISCES ON HIS UMASS GLORY DAYS.

ARTS & LIVING

VIDEO | WEDNESDAY
AN INTERVIEW ARAB-ISRAELI FILMMAKER IBTISAM MARA'ANA,- WHOSE FILM WHOSE FILM "LADY KIL EL-ARAB" WAS SCREENED AT UMASS LAST WEEK AS PART OF THE MULTICULTURAL FILM FESTIVAL.

PODCAST |
DAILY COLLEGIAN FILM CRITICS PETE RIZZO AND SHAYNA MURPHY TAKE A LOOK AT UPCOMING FILMS AND WHETHER THEY'RE WORTHY OF YOUR ATTENTION.

White orientation to increase 'comfort and understanding'

ORIENTATION from page 1

According to Elizabeth Braun, dean of students at Mount Holyoke, the program is intended to address self-understanding and the complexity of other ethnic groups.

"[The program] will get into traditional issues on an individual basis and also involve more cross-cultural dialogue to become aware of the complexity of racial ethnicity," said Braun.

What sparked the idea for such a program was "Intergroup Dialogues," which are discussions held on the Mount Holyoke campus throughout the academic year on the subject of race, inspired in part by the University of Massachusetts' Intergroup Dialogue program.

"The program will allow for a reflection of identity," said Tanya Williams, dean of students and coordinator of multicultural affairs at Mount Holyoke. "And when coming to a diverse college campus, it will hopefully increase [students'] comfort and understanding of friends, faculty and colleagues."

There has been a lot of positive feedback about the program.

"By learning about one's identity and the cultures of outside groups, one will become a better individual, and this will make for a richer community," said Braun.

The program is still in the process of development, and a board of students will be created to look over and evaluate the pre-orientation this fall.

"I'm sure there are a lot of things the program board will be working out, but if executed properly, this could be a great addition to MHC orientation and a way to make white domestic students feel equally valued," said McGranachan.

Dinah Gorelik can be reached at dgorelik@student.umass.edu.

Rally brings together students from different campus groups

RALLY from page 1

"First and foremost, a person is a human," said Rothschild. "Whether or not you agree with them, you have to give them the basic respect you'd give any human."

As the speakers milled about after the rally, protesters voiced their frustrations, with one bystander asking, "Why don't you get someone left of the UMass Democrats up there to speak?"

After a few minutes of chanting, Charles Peterson of the UMass Coalition Against Hate took the steps of the Student Union with a portable microphone proclaiming, "Rule number one of activism. Don't come to a protest without your own mic."

He proclaimed a "Free Speech Speakout," and encouraged anyone to come up and take the microphone.

Several bystanders, Five College students, and even a chaplain took the microphone to proclaim their views on free speech.

"I think the rally was very successful," said Collins. "We showed in a public forum – in a forceful yet civil way – that we will not hesitate to defend our free speech rights. The fact that student groups of different opinions and interests were gracious enough to co-sponsor and voice their support for free speech, regardless of their political viewpoints, showed reasonable UMass students [who] do have the capability to unite for a cause which transcends partisanship."

Kat Manser can be reached at kmanser@student.umass.edu.

A student holds a sign in support of yesterday's free speech rally outside the Student Union.

Sushi chef argues for dangerous fish

By John M. Glionna
Los Angeles Times

TOKYO — Veteran chef Yutaka Sasaki has a plan to remove the fear of eating one of the world's most poisonous fish: He wants to feed it to the emperor.

The blowfish, known here as fugu, carries a deadly neurotoxin with no known antidote. An average-sized fugu is chock-full of the poison tetrodotoxin – in its blood, liver and even its sex organs, Sasaki says.

But he scoffs at the centuries-old ban on the Japanese monarch eating the delicacy, sought after by many Japanese as daring cuisine.

"The prince and other royalty have eaten fugu, so why not the emperor?" he says. "It would set a good example."

After all, he argues, it's only deadly in the wrong hands.

"Someone who tries to prepare meals they know nothing about is stupid," says Sasaki, 61. "If you're a chef and you don't know this fish, you shouldn't even touch it."

Chefs such as Sasaki are campaigning to change fugu's image as Russian roulette on a plate. When prepared by a licensed chef, they say, the meal is as safe as biting into a burger.

In 30 years, Sasaki says, no one has become sick eating his fugu. He has taught countless other chefs, including his son, who works alongside him in the family's Tokyo restaurant, Tairyo, or "good catch."

Japanese are the largest consumers of fugu, eating 10,000 tons a year. An elegant multicourse meal of it can cost a diner $450.

The chef's English-language business card lampoons the image that eating blowfish is the gastronomic equivalent of bungee jumping with a frayed cord. "Try mysterious blow fish taste," it tempts. "One hundred percent guarantee to you stay alive."

But there are problems with that pitch: Some fugu gourmets don't last long enough to order dessert.

Over the past dozen years, Japan has had hundreds of cases of "poison by fugu," as many as 34 of them fatal, Japanese health officials say. Early this year, six men in northern Japan were poisoned when they ate grilled blowfish testicles prepared by an unlicensed chef, now under investigation by police. The men survived.

Lax oversight is another obstacle.

Although there are tens of thousands of Japanese fugu chefs – 80,000 in the Osaka area alone – the industry has no centralized regulation, so it's difficult to know how many are licensed, says Kiichi Kitahama, a chef and owner of a fugu museum in Osaka.

In addition, only 19 of Japan's 47 prefectures require chefs to pass an exam to obtain a fugu license, and those tests vary in their demands. In Tokyo, a chef must serve a three-year apprenticeship and pass a stringent test that involves gutting a fugu under the scrutiny of health officials.

Fugu guts are so poisonous that they must be kept under lock and key and disposed of like some sort of restaurant radioactive waste.

"There's much more work to make fugu legitimate," Kitahama says. "That's why I am still working at age 81."

Kitahama is known as the godfather of fugu research. In 1913, his father opened the Osaka fugu restaurant where Kitahama started working as a chef at 16 – and remains to this day.

In the 1950s, he became alarmed by the high death and injury rate associated with the fish – 400 killed and 31,056 sickened in one year alone, Kitahama says.

In 1975, when a famous Kabuki actor died after eating a blowfish liver, Kitahama began to study the fish in earnest. He collected preserved specimens, skeletons, photos, slides and paintings that are now on display in his museum.

He is a touch arrogant about his craft: I am a chef and I have a license, his tone implies. And he continues to battle stereotypes, such as the one that says a diner's lips turn numb with a good piece of fugu.

"That's a lie," Sasaki says. "If you're eating fugu and your lips turn numb, you're well on your way to being dead."

Blowfish, or fugu as it is known in Japan, is a delicacy that can be deadly if prepared incorrectly.

Study of nun brains a boon for Alzheimer's research

By Emma Carew
Minnesota Daily

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Education is a big part of the mission work done by the School Sisters of Notre Dame, so when then-University of Minnesota neurologist David Snowden approached the sisters in 1986 about entering into a research project that involved the donation of their brains posthumously, they seriously considered it.

"One of the wisdom figures stood up and said, 'we're not going to need our brains when we're dead'," Catherine Bertrand, provincial leader of the Mankato province, said. "They saw themselves as being educators in life, and they would love to continue to be educators in death."

The Nun Study, as it's called, has tracked the cognitive abilities and motor functions of more than 600 nuns over the past two decades and continues to study the donated brains as they've passed on.

The nuns make for a very unique population to study, he said, because of their similar lifestyles.

"They don't smoke, they don't drink, so you can reduce the effects of some of these other environmental factors," Orr said, "and focus in on other factors that might be harder to get your hands around in other population studies."

Orr said the University also proposed taking the Nun Study in a very interdisciplinary direction going forward, incorporating investigators from a range of fields: education, imaging, neuroscience.

Among the study's findings are a relationship between early childhood education and reducing the susceptibility to Alzheimer's disease, he said. They also found a relationship between traumas to the brain, such as strokes, and an increased susceptibility to Alzheimer's.

"We are thrilled," said Michelle Barclay, vice president of programs for the Alzheimer's Association Minnesota-North Dakota. "It gives us information about how people can age successfully, what we might be able to do to prevent or slow down Alzheimer's disease."

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS
FEB. 4TH FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

The job market is global.
Are you?
PEACE CORPS
Teachers,
Engineers,
Health majors,
Math and science majors,
Agriculturalists and foresters,
French and Spanish speakers encouraged to apply.
www.peacecorps.gov/events

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
OPEN LATE NIGHT TILL 4 AM!

New SGA officers inducted

SGA from page 1

as Secretary of Diversity, both in jest.

The April Fool's irony alluded to Fox's alleged practice of misquoting members of the SGA in articles for The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, for whom he covered SGA politics over the past year. Robinson said the appointments were "funny" given both Fox's and Khanna's prior relationships with the SGA.

Khanna, though a senator, was often critical of the ALANA caucus. While running an unsuccessful campaign for the SGA presidency last year, Khanna railed against last year's SGA administration and the ALANA caucus while debating Malcolm Chu.

"The appointment was ironic given the personal conflict between each of their political views and a difference of opinion of how best to represent minorities," Robinson said.

Robinson mitigated the theme of his unconventional appointments with the fact that those appointed would only serve in their positions for 10 minutes. The Senate voted against them, however.

In other SGA business, the Senate passed a motion to allocate $3,987.00 to the Men's Club Ice Hockey Team and moved to accept the Southwest Area Government's new charter.

William McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@dailycollegian.com.

Obama and Medvedev agree to nuclear arsenal negotiations

By Christi Parsons and Megan K. Stack
Los Angeles Times

LONDON — President Barack Obama and Russian President Dmitry Medvedev agreed Wednesday to open negotiations on a treaty that could slash their nuclear arsenals by one-third, part of what they described as a step "to move beyond Cold War mentalities" in relations between the two countries.

The agreement to undertake the most significant arms control talks in more than a decade emerged from the first face-to-face meeting between the two leaders, and included a promise by Obama to visit Moscow this summer to pursue the talks.

"Over the last several years, the relationship between our two countries has been allowed to drift," Obama said. "What I believe we've begun today is a very constructive dialogue that will allow us to work on issues of mutual interest."

The schism has developed over issues such as NATO expansion into countries once part of the Soviet Union and soured even further last summer when Russian troops fought a war with Georgia, a U.S. ally.

Wednesday's consensus on the need for new nuclear weapons talks was the most concrete expression yet of the Obama administration's decision to opt for improved relations with Russia rather than greater confrontation.

In turn, Medvedev said he was prepared to cooperate on non- proliferation, among other issues.

"It is important to note that there are many points on which we can work," he said. "And indeed there are far more points where we can come closer, where we can work, rather than those points on which we have differences."

For Russia, the push for a new nuclear treaty has as much to do with diplomatic clout as with strategic necessity, said Nikolai Zlobin, director of the Russia program at the Center for Defense Information in Washington.

"This is an area where Russia and the United States together can force the rest of the world to accept their view," he said. "It makes Russia a global power again. Russia feels like it's back to old times."

Although hailed by arms control experts, word of the agreement was not seen as a surprising development. Obama is on record saying he favors beginning talks and Russian officials have been eager to forge a new treaty to replace the Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty, which expires in December.

The current treaty, which took effect in 1994, limits the world's two largest nuclear arsenals to between 1,700 and 2,200 nuclear warheads. A new treaty conceivably could cut arsenals to 1,500 warheads.

"This has been been on the radar for quite some time," said Daryl G. Kimball, executive director of the Arms Control Association in Washington. "The fact that they've put it front and center of their bilateral agenda is important."

The two men met with the media after their meeting, laughing at one another's jokes – Obama said he preferred not to visit Russia in the winter – and smiling broadly as they shook hands.

But while the two leaders struck a friendly tone in the meeting, officials acknowledged a series of obstacles to an agreement that could be ready when START expires.

Story, Rosenberg hope to spark discussion

BILL from page 1

Rep. Story said that she would like to see the bill pass and that she feels it could at some point in the future, but that the present political climate in Boston indicates otherwise.

"If there ever was a time that this bill should pass because of the tax revenues this would bring in, this is the time," she said. However, she noted "the legislature will not vote for it because it does not want to be seen as soft on drugs."

Story said lawmakers would probably like to take some time to observe the effects of the recent decriminalization plan.

"People who might even be in favor of this say 'we just decriminalized it, let's wait and see what that does, and then we can consider whether we can just make it altogether legal,' but right now the mood in the legislature is not to do that, legislators are still very nervous about the legalization of currently illegal drugs," said Story.

Though she feels the bill will not pass at this time, she said she is hopeful that this legislation will generate open discussion about legalization and its potential for revenue. She also feels that opinions on all morality issues change over time, as new generations view once shunned behaviors more tolerantly.

"The older generation, for the most part, were the ones who had such trouble with same sex marriage, and the younger generation will come along and find it astonishing that that was ever a controversial issue," she said, "so the same thing may happen with marijuana."

Evans said he took the initiative to introduce this legislation because "no one else was going to do it, somebody has to."

Like the two legislators sponsoring the bill, Evans said he hopes it will create serious discussion about legalization.

"I'm trying to prompt constructive discussion," he said.

Evans said he feels current marijuana legislation is anachronistic and represents government being out of touch with its citizens, adding that marijuana prohibition is no longer financially viable in an economic downturn.

"It's a legacy of past generations," he said of current laws, "we don't need the prohibition laws, we certainly can't afford the luxury of the prohibition laws, we're foolish to deny ourselves the tax revenue we could be generating; it's a question of sensible government."

National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Law (NORML) Director and University of Massachusetts alumnus Allen St. Pierre said the legalization plan would put Massachusetts at the forefront of marijuana reform and would help save taxpayer money and extend civil rights in ways other than merely ceasing the arrest and prosecution of users and dealers.

"It would cease the arrest of approximately 10,000 people a year on cannabis charges," he said. "But worse than that, it would stop the databases the government keeps of the DNA of marijuana users," he explained.

"In most states, if you're caught smoking marijuana you have your DNA swabbed and put in databases, which are expensive to keep, and hand our government our genetic code."

St. Pierre, an Amherst native, said that prohibition has not worked to end the abuse of marijuana and that research suggests an effective way to curtail marijuana use would be to treat it in much the same way tobacco has been dealt with recently.

"We have to use public education that is credible," he said, explaining that the Partnership for a Drug-Free America's anti-marijuana campaign, the largest ever advertising campaign, has not been seen as credible by young people, its target audience.

By making smoking appear less desirable and by using hard statistics showing its dangers authorities have proved that it is an addictive, deadly substance, said St. Pierre.

Further, by raising taxes on it, legislators have been able to create an introductory price which makes tobacco difficult to access for first time smokers, who are presumed to be younger and therefore have less income. If the same plan were to be implemented for marijuana, St. Pierre said, authorities would have a workable recipe for reducing the instances of marijuana use but still not clogging the criminal justice system or persecuting users.

St. Pierre also explained that demography will play a role in shaping marijuana policy as the discussion on how to regulate marijuana continues.

"The baby boom generation, like them or not, their mores and values – which decidedly intersect with marijuana – are essentially leading this nation, and the generation behind them, the 40-year-olds, you can call them, are behind marijuana more, and the people behind them, the 20-year-olds, are even more behind it," he said.

"When this gets vetted around the Communwealth, places like Lowell, parts of Cape Cod and the islands, Cambridge, good parts of the whole Boston area and the suburbs, places in Western Mass. like Williamstown, Amherst – anywhere there's a college – their politicians will be more inclined to support it than the bigger industrial cities like Worcester and Springfield that are more heavily swayed by the archdiocese and the Catholic church," said St. Pierre.

"But there will be a medical marijuana bill on the ballot in 2010 or 2012 and that will likely pass by the same margin as the decriminalization bill, so Massachusetts is going to be in play on the issue of marijuana," he added.

"Prohibition might have lasted had a major economic crisis not have confronted America," he said. "And that is what is on the table now that is making this issue palpable."

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sjb09@hampshire.edu.

CONGRATULATIONS TO WILLIAM MCGUINNESS
FOR BEING ELECTED THE NEW EDITOR IN CHIEF!!
WE LOVE YOU! (LIKE, A LOT)

THE ONLY THING GROWING FASTER THAN OUR GRADUATE PROGRAMS IS OUR REPUTATION.
QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY
Cardiovascular Perfusion
Computer Information Systems
Education – Elementary Education – Secondary
Interactive Communications
Journalism
Law
MBA-CFA® Track (Chartered Financial Analyst)
MBA/HCM (Health Care Management)
MBA/JD (Joint degree in business and law)
Medical Laboratory Sciences/Biomedical Sciences
Molecular & Cell Biology
Nurse Practitioner
Pathologists' Assistant
Physician Assistant
Radiologists' Assistant
Graduate Online Programs
Interactive Communications
Organizational Leadership with focus areas in:
Higher Education
Human Resources
Information Technology
Insurance
Learn more:
www.quinnipiac.edu
QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY

Meet Corporate Chef Lawrence Parks
Tyson Week
at UMASS • 5–9 PM
Tuesday, March 31 ..... Worcester DC
Wednesday, April 1 ..... Franklin DC
Thursday, April 2 ..... Berkshire DC
Friday, April 3 ..... Hampshire DC
SAMPLE ALL NATURAL TYSON DISHES!
Tyson Food Service
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
www.umassdining.com
In partnership with Tyson

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 2, 2009

"FREEDOM OF SPEECH IS OF NO USE TO A MAN WHO HAS NOTHING TO SAY ..." – FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Save money, cut sports

Nick Milano

Last week it was reported in The Boston Globe, The Daily Collegian and other news sources that the University of Massachusetts was considering cutting its baseball team. With a yearly budget of only about $180,000 and a team that offers only two and a half scholarships, it appears that in the larger picture this will not save much money.

With a budget deficit and fears of fee increases, though, any bit of savings is important. But why stop there, why not make the radical decision and eliminate the athletic department altogether?

According to the school's own numbers, for the financial year of 2007, total expenditures on athletics exceeded $21 million.

This number quintuples the amount spent that year on Commonwealth College and is much more than is spent on several other academic schools within UMass.

If the University of Massachusetts is just that, a university, it is first and foremost a place of learning. The preeminent honors college in the UMass system should not be outspent at a rate of 5:1, especially when cuts may be coming harshly to Commonwealth College.

The UMass administration has for some time now focused on trying to get rid of the party image of UMass. Frat row is now just a forlorn field of grass. Steps have been taken with the town of Amherst to prevent large parties. The police run the campus streets like a police state. These measures have been taken, supposedly, to reinvent UMass as a nationally recognized place of learning.

Would not removing the athletics program only further this goal?

By dedicating at least another $21 million to various colleges or schools, the school might be able to attract more top notch professors or encourage research in a new, cutting edge field.

There would be fears that cutting the athletic department might result in a loss of revenue for the school, since it is speculated by some that athletics actually make a profit.

A report from 2004-05 in The Indianapolis Star found that only nine percent of Division I schools' athletic departments could support themselves. Of those public universities that could not support themselves, they had to receive a total of a billion dollars in aid through student fees, school funds or other subsidies.

For the year 2004-05, only three teams made profits of over $10 million. More alarming is that when universities face deficits due to their athletic department, the common reaction to raise student fees, as has happened at several schools in the past few years according to the economist group CFO.

Why not make the radical decision and eliminate the athletic department altogether?

Stripping UMass of its athletics department would allow a better appropriation of the University's limited funds.

Another worry that might prevent cutting the athletic department is the claim that it would remove a valuable way to raise money for the school through donations from alumni.

While I cannot provide numbers as to how many people donate money to the school because of its athletic program (who knows if there is even data on this), I also think that this might be a good thing.

The UMass Alumni Association is one of the most poorly organized alumni associations in the country, at least it was a couple of years ago when The Boston Globe published an article in October 2007 depicting an alumni association with no power.

Just three percent of UMass graduates had joined the association, in sharp contrast to schools like Penn State and the University of Michigan, whose alumni associations boast membership rates of 34 and 25 percent respectively.

To put a real number to the percentage, there were only a little over 6,000 members out of 210,000 living graduates joined.

In a time of spending cuts, if UMass had a powerful alumni organization to lean on to make money, the school might not be feeling the cuts so strongly. Maybe the school is too dependent on raising money from its athletic programs; it is time for the alumni to actually do some work.

My high school, which graduates at most 400 students a year, finished a fundraising campaign in 2003 with almost $37 million in gifts. I can personally attest that Boston Latin School's athletic teams are nothing to brag about.

Will the athletic department actually be cut? No.

Will it even be a good thing if it is? I do not know.

I do know that during this time of spending cuts and budget deficits, the immediate reaction by the chancellor and the government was to raise student fees $1,500. Thanks to the federal stimulus, this might not become a reality, but why is that always the immediate reaction?

I have good friends and former bosses who would lose their jobs if the athletic department was cut. I certainly do not want that, but this is a time to debate new ideas, to think outside the box.

The UMass Alumni Association is much weaker than it should be. Maybe making it harder to raise money without an athletic department to lean on will make the Association develop a new system that actually works. Athletics, even at the top schools, are not always able to support themselves.

The University of Massachusetts has been trying to repackage itself as a top national institution. Maybe, just maybe, it is time to do something different.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano a student.umass.edu.

Do not let the fees increase

Students went to UMass Dartmouth on Feb. 27 demanding the Board of Trustees delay their vote to increase fees until we have more information about the federal stimulus package. The Board of Trustees refused to postpone their vote and hiked our fees by $1,500.

Timothy Sutton

It turns out students were right; there is enough federal money to plug the hole in UMass' budget. As a result, some fees may be rebated, but three years from now, when the stimulus dries up, the fees are still in place. This fee increase was implemented with full knowledge of the coming federal money. Trustees took advantage of the economic crisis to implement the fee increase while they still could.

This fee increase should be eliminated, not rebated. Meanwhile, despite the timely arrival of the stimulus money, which is intended to stave off fee increases and layoffs, part-time lecturers who have already received pink-slips are not getting their jobs back, and the staff unions have been informed that the stimulus will not prevent layoffs.

Massachusetts ranks 46th in the nation for per capita funding for higher education. From 2001-2004 our state legislature reduced funding for higher education by more than any other state. To make up this difference, the University has more than doubled the cost of attending UMass by raising student fees.

This fee increase was implemented with full knowledge of the coming federal money. Trustees took advantage of the economic crisis to implement the fee increase while they still could.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts must reprioritize public higher education and take significant steps toward making quality public higher education available for all. The first step should be to increase state revenue. Hesitant lawmakers might look to the sound defeat of Question 1 on last November's ballot as a clear indication of the voters' will.

The response to national trends in the reduction of state spending on public higher education has been to increase out-of-state enrollment, promote research that brings in large grants, cut staff, privatize services and/or increase fees.

Both curricula and research agendas are determined by the bottom line. This is a narrow range of options that assumes state spending will only ever decrease. It is an accommodation to the neoliberal approach to government that operates by the logic of the market, and privatizes the public wealth.

As President Obama has realized, investing in public higher education now is not just plugging the hole in the budget. It is the solution to the crisis itself. During economic downturns, more people return to college. College graduates often earn higher incomes that are then taxed at higher rates, returning more into the public coffers.

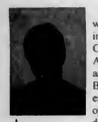
We need to eliminate barriers that prevent people from accessing higher education, not erect more. The high-fee/high-aid model Jack Wilson is implementing is fine for Amherst College, but is irresponsible for a land-grant, public university. Financial aid for the lucky few does nothing to address historic barriers that have kept entire sectors of society from accessing higher education.

How this crisis is met can shift the relationship between the public University and the state, or we can continue to cut the budget and raise fees in accommodation to dwindling state expenditures on public higher education.

How these decisions are made may be equally important as their outcome. The chancellor, the University president and the Board of Trustees have consistently refused to listen to students. "The chancellor's Budget Task Force was a hand-picked group of yes-men. Representatives from SGA and GSS had to demand a seat at the table.

Had a group of union activists not shown up at the Task Force's first meeting demanding an open process, it would have been held behind closed doors.

The solutions coming from our University's administration are the same solutions that brought us into this situation in the first place, i.e. the shedding of the state's responsibility for maintaining the public good.



While it is true that investment in public higher education is the key to economic recovery, the value of education must be acknowledged as a public good in its own right. What is required is a change in political culture that addresses the value of what we hold in common. As one of the locations where culture is produced and reproduced, the public University is where such a shift begins. It is time for the state to recognize this, and fully fund public higher education in Massachusetts.

PHENOM (the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts) along with the Massachusetts Student Action Coalition, a coalition of students from public campuses across the state, are converging on the state house April 8. Following a rally on the Boston Common, students, faculty and staff will be lobbying their legislators, asking them to reprioritize public higher education.

Buses will leave from Haigis Mall at 7:30 a.m. and lunches will be provided. E-mail April8Rally@gmail.com to reserve a seat on the bus.

Timothy Sutton is a Daily Collegian contributor. He can be reached at tsutton@comm.umass.edu.

Crossing Student Bridges with the SGA

Jon Peterson

Most people who are involved in the Student Government Association and the Student Bridges leadership are not opposed to freedom. They simply hold views, and act in ways that aren't compatible with freedom.

Freedom exists when people are allowed to do things that others would not prefer them not to. It exists when people can freely choose to do what they think is good, even if you don't think it's good. This is the freedom that people had in choosing to take part in genocide in Darfur. Even though most may not approve of it, this is what freedom consists of.

Some of the most fundamentally good things that people can do for society are community service and charity. This is why community outreach and public service in the student government have been priorities for many students at the University of Massachusetts through the years.

Students are interested in making their communities better. Organizing as a student group and being funded by the SGA are one of the most reasonable ways of accomplishing these goals as an organization.

The SGA has a budget of nearly two million dollars, which students pay into every year in activity fees. The SGA doles out this money to the different groups, one of which is the Student Bridges organization. The Student Bridges organization, receiving $172,743 this year, takes up nearly 10 percent of these total student fees, and currently has a monopoly on the money allocated to "community service" groups.

And when it comes down to it, community service is one of the tamest sounding phrases that someone could come up with. But it is one of the most difficult things in the world to say what community service truly is.

But the arrogance of committing thousands of students to pay for things which will not affect them is only exceeded at UMass by those in the SGA who impose their notions of what these "community service" is on others.

What certain experiences and knowledge could a group have that makes them able to take away the freedom of others to do what they think is best for a community?

What is it that gives certain groups of people the right, though, to say what is better for a community than others? What certain experiences and knowledge could a group have that makes them able to take away the freedom of others to do what they think is best for a community?

While many consider community service to be selfless acts, like buying food for bums, others think it is a disservice to the community to aid those who choose to rely on others for a living.

Last fall, Northampton had to bring forth laws to their town's legislature to deal with destitute persons who were aggressively panhandling.

The average group on campus receives between $1,000 and $15,000 per year.

If the issue of community service were to come down to selfless acts, many, if not most of these clubs, would cease to exist.

Most RSOs and student agencies exist as a service to the community, but also because of the interest of those who are in the clubs.

The Daily Collegian gives free newspapers to people every day, but not only as a service to the community, but also as an interest of the people who write for it.

The Anime Club puts on anime every week for people to see with no cover charge, but the members do so because it is of interest to them.

And when considering the main goals of Student Bridges, one should wonder what service they do to the UMass community. In the two years that the organization has been around, it received a $50,000 raise in funds after its first year, while most budgets were cut.

Everyone who has applied for money from the SGA knows exactly how difficult and disheartening it is to know exactly how much they will need for a year, and to get half that amount or less, and how far a thousand dollars could go.

Their main programs include tutoring middle school kids in local towns, and bringing them to UMass to make it seem appealing for them to apply to. But while this group has as large a budget as it does, it spends no money or time on compiling statistics on the impact of their activities. Their feeling on the subject is that because they tutor so many middle school students, they can have no way of telling how many of them will eventually go on to contribute to the UMass community.

And while they pay their student interns by the hour for their "community service," the vast majority of the student groups pay their members and student leaders nothing. Student Bridges spent thousands of dollars on food, and thousands on rental cars during the 2008 and 2009.

Their service to the UMass community seems to rest largely on spending the money of the student community that they were purported to better.

In other words, the SGA and the members of this group are telling others that they have the right to impose their view of what is best for the UMass community on others, while they serve only a small amount of students. And while freedom is having the right to do things that others would not approve of, bigotry is refusing others the rights that you would expect to receive for yourself. And bigotry is not compatible with freedom, even if this view is not compatible with the view that the Student Bridges has for themselves.

Jon Petersen is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jpetersen@student.umass.edu.

If you fooled anyone yesterday and are still laughing about it, tell us what you did and we'll tell everyone about tricky you are.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

Save the baseball team and save UMass

During times like these sacrifices must be made. Here at the University of Massachusetts it seems as if those cuts and fee increases keep coming as the University must drop $24 million out of its budget.

Just as students may see fee increases and teachers will see cuts, the athletic programs have no immunity at a time like this either. Currently the University has asked the athletic department to cut 20 percent of its budget, something that is never an easy task.

Rumors have swirled that part of the budget cuts could mean the end to the over 100-year-old baseball team on campus as well as possibly the swimming and diving teams. While just rumors at this point, the end to the baseball team seems to be rather strong, despite no inclination from the athletic department.

Without the budget of the athletic department in front of us, it is difficult to offer any real solutions, but it is our opinion that cutting the baseball program, or any others, is a drastic step and a better solution is out there. Whether it is giving a 20 percent cut to each athletic program to be fair or finding other cuts that can be made across the campus to give the athletic department a little more ease, a better solution is out there.

If the baseball program were to be cut, you would have arguably the most crazed baseball state in the country without a baseball team at its state university. Secondly, once the economy takes a turn for the better and the schools budget finds itself heading north instead of south, immediately, if not even before that, there will be strong pressure to bring the baseball program back.

If the argument for cutting the baseball program was the lack of success of the team, well imagine the number of wins they'll be able to produce when they have to rebuild from scratch.

When you talk about cutting any of the athletic programs, you take something away from the university that makes it unique. For many students, whether an athlete or not, each program gives them choices. When a prospective student is looking at UMass, all the different clubs and sports teams are a draw, saying look at all the things you can do here. With each cut, the University becomes less special, and the place that is suppose to help students discover themselves has nothing to let them discover.

College campuses are not the only places to be affected by such cuts, either. So once college baseball goes, it makes it that much easier for high schools to cut it, and then for towns to cut little league teams.

There is no easy solution, because if there were we wouldn't be writing this. There are so many things to consider such as Title IX, boosters, outside donations as well as the teams and players themselves. Athletic Director John McCutcheon has his hands full with this one, but we just hope every base is covered and all angles are looked at to make sure the best solution possible is chosen.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

COUNTER-POINT

"... – Adlai E. Stevenson

Should UMass quench its thirst with Coke or Pepsi?

Bubbly, cancerous Coke is the beverage of true Americans

Matthew M. Robare

Coca-Cola, for generations the drink of choice for millions of Americans, is the Bud-Light of non-alcoholic drinks. It's tasteless, cheap and loaded with more calories than you can shake a stick at. But, like Bud-Light, Coke epitomizes good old-fashioned American values like hard work, entrepreneurship, racism, ruthless dealings with unions and the attempt to monopolize markets.

It is also the official soft drink of the United States military. Ahhh, I can just taste the red, white and blue patriotic bubbles.

As a staple of American culture, Coke is here to stay. The Coca-Cola Company has done a fine job of exporting America to the world at large, to the point where Coke and America are synonymous.

From hiring paramilitary troops to crack down on unions in Latin America to using water with pesticides in India, Coke is like a mini, private version of the United States government.

High fructose corn syrup, caffeine and phosphoric acid all unite to be tangy on the tongue, a cause of diabetes and increase the heart rate to dangerous levels. God, I love it.

It's killing us with cold, bottled and refreshing happiness. Coca-Cola has bought property in Egypt that was stolen from people because they were Jewish, supported Nazi Germany and fired employees because of their race.

There is no reason to boycott Coke products, or have this university end its contracts with this fine company.

There is no reason to boycott Coke products, or have this university end its contracts with this fine company. We're mostly Americans here, we're all going die someday and everyone's a little bit racist.

We're mostly Americans here, we're all going die someday and everyone's a little bit racist.

Coke isn't just a conglomerate with huge influence and unethical business practices; Coke is a mesocosm of America. It bridges the gap between the individual American and the nation.

In a way, drinking Coke is a kind of communion, where we consume the distilled substance of our nation. Indeed, that could be a new ad campaign: Da Vinci's The Last Supper, but with Coke bottles instead of goblets.

After all, Jesus, as determined by poll, is the greatest American of all time.

But I digress. Coke has earned, or rather spent, its way to the top of American culture.

Cute holiday ads with polar bears and Santa Claus and the tendency of the American press not to cover anything outside of the United States that doesn't happen in western Europe (the Khomeini principle: take the revolution to where the reporters want to go and you'll get world-wide coverage) has meant that Coke's reputation is largely untarnished outside of radical college campuses.

The fizzy, over caffeinated, caramel-colored, carbonated drink is a tasty, guilty pleasure for people all over the world. As a symbol of capitalism, Coke has displaced Pepsi in Russia (because Pepsi was distributed by the Soviet Union) and its southern charm and willingness to be sold in Israel has alienated the Muslim world.

The Coke-Pepsi rivalry is one of the greatest corporate rivalries ever, enriching meaningless conversation and filling television airtime everywhere.

Of other great rivalries, who would chose Coke and who would choose Pepsi?

I think Red Sox for Coke and Yankees for Pepsi; America for Coke and Russia for Pepsi; Germany for Coke and France for Pepsi; Kobe for Coke and Shaq for Pepsi; Lincoln for Coke and Douglas for Pepsi; Coke for St. Thomas Aquinas and Pepsi for St. Augustine; Coke for Aristotle and Pepsi for Plato.

Coke, it is clear, is the drink of winners.

Everybody wants to be a winner, so everyone should drink Coke. The bottle also looks like a rocket ship, making it even better. Cans have a less distinguishable shape. All cans look pretty much the same, but only the Coca-Cola bottle looks so much like a rocket ship. This makes Coke progressive and fearless, because rockets indicate scientific advancement and the triumph of the human spirit over fear.

Never fear, Coca-Cola is here!

With McDonald's, nothing is more decadent. A soda which destroys teeth and health and bone, but is enjoyed with pleasure.

It's like a drug, but it's legal and doesn't get you high, it just refreshes you.

Together with the perversion of food called McDonald's, full of disgusting grease and undercooked meat, we have perfected the great criticism of America: We are the only nation to pass from savagery to barbarism without the intervening stage of civilization.

But that's unfair to barbarians, who usually have redeeming features such as an appreciation of nature and law.

So let's all raise a glass of cold Coca-Cola and celebrate our national greatness. Coke: the drink that's energized an empire! (Drink Moxie.)

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Coke is a joke and no one is laughing at it's blood trail

Ebad Rahman

There's nothing like a nice cold Mountain Dew to quench my thirst – it is just so sweet and delicious. I, along with many other students, cannot have Mountain Dew, or many other drinks, because of Coca-Cola's exclusive selling rights on this campus. Campus businesses are forced to purchase strictly from Coca-Cola, which limits variety and prevents us from having drinks like Mountain Dew.

Selling the rights brings in a lot of money to support sports and other university programs, but working with a company that has a history of human rights abuses is not appropriate for a university that claims to be socially responsible.

Coca-Cola is involved with the assassination of union leaders in Colombia and draining water resources in India. Our long-standing collaboration with Coca-Cola needs to come to an end.

The Solidarity Center reports that since 1991 about 2,000 trade unionists have been murdered in Colombia, and in the past 20 years about 4,000 trade unionists were murdered. In 2006 alone, 78 trade unionists were murdered. It is commonly said that Columbia is a country where union work is like carrying a tombstone on your back.

According to Corporate Campaign, Inc., Coca-Cola was involved in murdering eight union leaders in Colombia. In a lawsuit filed in Miami on July 2001, eyewitness accounts detailed the violence against workers of a Coca-Cola plant in Colombia, and the murder of Isidro Gil, an executive union leader.

Coca-Cola is involved with the assassination of union leaders in Colombia and draining water resources in India. Our long-standing collaboration with Coca-Cola needs to come to an end.

The eyewitnesses explained that Gil was shot 10 times as soon as an armed group of thugs came to the Colombian Coca-Cola plant. Later that day, another union leader was kidnapped and union offices were set on fire. The next day, the armed group told workers to quit the union by 4 p.m. or they would be killed.

In fear, the union members resigned and the union was destroyed. The plant managers had a history working with the paramilitary and replaced workers that fled with cheaper laborers.

Laborrights.org stated, "Multinational corporations operating in Colombia have capitalized on the violent anti-union atmosphere created by armed paramilitary groups for their own profit."

Coca-Cola is responsible for its workers here in the U.S. and abroad. A single plant that threatens their workers makes the corporation as a whole responsible. Instead of denying any wrongdoing, the company needs to redress its wrongs.

The Coca-Cola problem exists in India as well, where Coca-Cola plants are draining water where it is scarce. The plant uses water to bottle their products, while surrounding communities suffer from drought and pollution. According to The Independent, a Plachimada farmer said his irrigation pump "used to run for 12 hours throughout the night; now it runs dry after 30 minutes. Coke managed to acquire all the lowest lying land in the area and after digging a series of deep wells they took all the water. It's downright theft."

The Polaris Institute reported that in June 2005, "the state Water Resources Department found that in 16 wells around the plant water levels dropped significantly in nine of them while one dried up completely between 2002 and 2004. The study also found that between May 2003 and May 2004 ground level dropped in 11 of the 16 wells."

After the local community organized and protested the plant, a court ruled that Plachimada had the right to control their water supply and could halt the plant's water exploitation. There are still plants across India that continue to exploit local water resources.

Coca-Cola plants in India also produce toxic products. The Indian parliament banned Coca-Cola products from its cafeterias after discovering that they were unsafe to drink.

In 2004, the India Resource Center reported that "the ban came as the result of tests, including those by the Indian government, which found high concentrations of pesticides and insecticides, including lindane, DDT, malathion and chlorpyrifos, in the colas, making them unfit for consumption. Some samples tested showed the presence of these toxins to be more than 30 times the standard allowed by the European Union. Tests of samples taken from the US of the same drinks were found to be safe."

Coca-Cola is responsible for human rights violations related to its business practices. Colleges across the nation are kicking Coca-Cola off their campuses, including New York University and Rutgers University, along with our neighbors at Smith College and Hampshire College.

"Smith's relationship with Coca-Cola spans five decades," said Carol T. Christ, president of Smith College. "In serving our ties with the Coca-Cola Corporation, Smith joins other institutions and organizations around the world in urging Coca-Cola to take significant steps toward more responsible business practices across all realms of its operations."

Earthfoods, the People's Market, Greene Sub Shop and the Newman Café are the only places of refuge free from Coca-Cola's reach at UMass. Members of the UMass community need to resist the temptation to buy Coca-Cola products on campus to send a message that we stick by our socially responsible values, and to tell Coca-Cola to take its business elsewhere.

Ebad Rahman is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at erahman@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

DODGING CONSERVATIVE BULLETS

Dear Editor,
RE: "Liberals call the kettle black by calling it provocative;" by Greg Collins, March 31

In his most recent article in The Collegian, Greg Collins all but officially declared war upon those dirty liberals' use of the word "provocative" as a way to describe controversial guest speakers with whom they sometimes find disagreement. I can understand Mr. Collin's concern. I profoundly objected to the behavior of the protesters at the Republican Club speech by conservative mouth-piece and provocateur extraordinaire Don Feder.

It was precisely the least proactive way to deal with a guest speaker preaching a no-holds-barred approach to First Amendment free speech rights. Certainly, his message was despicable and potentially dangerous, but one does not combat such a message with reckless and indiscriminate tantrum-tossing. However, this does not alter the commonly accepted meaning of the word "provocative."

The working definition of the word "provocative" is stated as "serving to provoke, excite, or stimulate." It may also be understood to mean "offensive, insulting, disturbing, annoying, incensing, aggravating" and so on and so forth. Whether Mr. Collins would care to admit it, Don Feder's message was, for all intents and purposes, provocative.

As for the rest of Mr. Collin's usual complaints about UMass, the reason this university does not promote abstinence-only sex education or agendas which "question the notion of man-made climate change" is a simple one. Teaching abstinence-only education to a wide range of legal adults living in constant and close proximity to one another is irresponsible and hazardous to preparing them for the realities of intimate relationships.

Indulging in trying to turn man-made global warming into nothing more than educational urban legend amounts to nothing less than an attempt to reignite the embers of an argument that ended a while ago. At this point, such "education" would be comparable to reconsidering whether or not the world is flat.

No one can stop Mr. Collins from believing that global warming isn't man-made, or that teaching abstinence will really stop pregnancy and the spread of sexually transmitted diseases, or that the world is flat.

What this school can continue to do is make sure that these disproven modes of thought, along with the ever-provocative and abhorrent specter of hate speech, remain relegated to private conversation. Then again, that might not be such a good idea, as the notion of privacy itself has come under fire from Mr. Collin's conservative heroes in Congress and the federal judiciary. It leads one to wonder whether there is anywhere on the map, any abstract concepts, or anything in the classroom or dictionary Mr. Collins' and his party won't declare war on.

Charlie Felder
UMass Student

SECRET BALLOTS STILL EXIST

Dear Editor,
RE: "Unions and deception;" Greg Collins, March 24

I'm surprised that in this day of easy access to information, some people still choose to follow the talking points presented by political pundits in the news. Mr. Collins promotes the completely incorrect view that the Employee Free Choice Act (EFCA) would eliminate the secret ballot to organize a union and replace with a public ballot cards.

This is incorrect. First what must be explained is how a union is formed. In order for a union to be formed the Union organizers must do two things: First they must get public ballot cards from at least 30 percent of the employees (usually they wait until they have 50-60 percent) that are in favor of forming a Union. Second, they must then obtain more than 50 percent of the vote in a secret ballot that occurs sometime after the public cards are collected.

The problem with this system is that in the time between the voting day being set and actually happening employers are able to bring in anti-union propaganda to scare the workers into not voting to unionize. Here is where EFCA comes in. EFCA would allow if the employees want, let me repeat that, if the employees want to forgo the secret ballot election and instead unionize once they achieve the 50-60 percent of the public ballot cards. EFCA would simply add an option not take it away.

It doesn't eliminate the secret ballot option, it merely allows for the employees to unionize after the public ballot approval. EFCA makes it easier for people to unionize not harder, and it certainly doesn't eliminate people's freedoms.

Joe Williams

CONCRETE CARDBOARD COMPLAINT

Dear Editor,

I found myself very upset when I read the Collegian yesterday. I was at work and had a chance to read an edition that one of my employees had brought in. After reading the articles I thought I would lighten up the night with my horoscope. I was very upset when it told me I would stop eating Domino's due to finding out it was made from 35 percent recycled cardboard. The punch line to this unfortunate joke was that I am the Assistant Manager of the establishment aforementioned. I think something that was printed with the intention of being a joke may not have been so funny because it causes a negative reflection on us, and could cause us to lose business. It seems almost slanderous. For the record, we happen to make our pizza with 100% fresh ingredients. I sincerely hope you actually read what is printed, before it is printed, and approved it all as an editor should have.

Jamie Cotter
Hadley resident and Dominos Assistant Manager

BAKER FIRE CODE BREAK INS

Dear Editor,

I'm writing about an incident that happened in Baker Hall on Feb. 26 of this year. Because of a fire safety code violation in a dorm room a pipe broke and flooded a small part of the building. This set off the fire alarm prompting the Amherst Fire Department to respond. After the water was shut off and the students were let back into the building Fire captain William Klause entered the private room of every student and fined many students for different fire code violations.

I am aware of the rights of the fire department under Massachusetts General Law Chapter 148, but even the fire chief (Keith Hoyle) has said he doesn't think the actions of Captain Klause on that day were entirely legal.

He has never given a consistent reason for Captain Klause entering the rooms. He has said a fire had been reported in Baker and they were checking for fire dangers. If this was the case then why did they let all the students back in before they checked the rooms for dangers? If this is the actual reason then the Amherst Fire Department knowingly put UMass students in danger. Another reason the fire chief used was they assumed since two students had been violating fire safety code that everyone else was also. That's like a police officer giving a speeding ticket to everyone in the car instead of just the driver.

After a few days Captain Klause entered the rooms that had violations to make sure the violations had been corrected. He shouldn't have entered rooms whose occupants were not there.

Also, I was told in one of the dorm rooms he was unable to give the violation to one of the students because they weren't there. More than a week after the incident Captain Klause returned with an official from Housing Services and a police officer to deliver the ticket.

The student was not there again but the student's roommate was there sleeping. After knocking once Captain Klause waited a brief time and then entered the room without permission. The student did not answer the door or give permission for them to enter. Captain Klause then left the ticket for the other student on their desk and badgered the sleeping student for not answering the door when they knocked. They then left, but this is not the end. They came back a short time later and entered without knocking because Captain Klause had realized that he had put the wrong name on the ticket.

They had no valid reason to enter without permission, delivering a ticket is definitely not a valid reason, especially since he is supposed to either deliver the ticket to the student in person or mail it to the student's last known address.

Also, Captain Klause issued tickets for $100 to each student. In reality each student should only be fined $50 making the total for each room $100. This is just the fire department trying to swindle students out of their money.

The actions of the Amherst Fire Department during the incident and in the weeks after are questionable. I think every ticket issued that day should be revoked and maybe the town of Amherst should think about finding some fire officials who will respect the power they are given.

–Anonymous

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 2, 2009

"FREEDOM OF SPEECH IS OF NO USE TO A MAN WHO HAS NOTHING TO SAY ..." – FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Save money, cut sports

Nick Milano

Last week it was reported in The Boston Globe, The Daily Collegian and other news sources that the University of Massachusetts was considering cutting its baseball team.

With a yearly budget of only about $180,000 and a team that offers only two and a half scholarships, it appears that in the larger picture this will not save much money.

With a budget deficit and fears of fee increases, though, any bit of savings is important. But why stop there, why not make the radical decision and eliminate the athletic department altogether?

According to the school's own numbers, for the financial year of 2007, total expenditures on athletics exceeded $21 million.

This number quintuples the amount spent that year on Commonwealth College and is much more than is spent on several other academic schools within UMass.

If the University of Massachusetts is just that, a university, it is first and foremost a place of learning. The preeminent honors college in the UMass system should not be outspent at a rate of 5:1, especially when cuts may be coming harshly to Commonwealth College.

The UMass administration has for some time now focused on trying to get rid of the party image of UMass. Frat row is now just a forlorn field of grass. Steps have been taken with the town of Amherst to prevent large parties. The police run the campus streets like a police state. These measures have been taken, supposedly, to reinvent UMass as a nationally recognized place of learning.

Would not removing the athletics program only further this goal?

By dedicating at least another $21 million to various colleges or schools, the school might be able to attract more top notch professors or encourage research in a new, cutting edge field.

There would be fears that cutting the athletic department might result in a loss of revenue for the school, since it is speculated by some that athletics actually make a profit.

A report from 2004-05 in The Indianapolis Star found that only nine percent of Division I schools' athletic departments could support themselves. Of those public universities that could not support themselves, they had to receive a total of a billion dollars in aid through student fees, school funds or other subsidies.

For the year 2004-05, only three teams made profits of over $10 million. More alarming is that when universities face deficits due to their athletic department, the common reaction to raise student fees, as has happened at several schools in the past few years according to the economist group CFO.

Why not make the radical decision and eliminate the athletic department altogether?

Stripping UMass of its athletics department would allow a better appropriation of the University's limited funds.

Another worry that might prevent cutting the athletic department is the claim that it would remove a valuable way to raise money for the school through donations from alumni.

While I cannot provide numbers as to how many people donate money to the school because of its athletic program (who knows if there is even data on this), I also think that this might be a good thing.

The UMass Alumni Association is one of the most poorly organized alumni associations in the country, at least it was a couple of years ago when The Boston Globe published an article in October 2007 depicting an alumni association with no power.

Just three percent of UMass graduates had joined the association, in sharp contrast to schools like Penn State and the University of Michigan, whose alumni associations boast membership rates of 34 and 25 percent respectively.

To put a real number to the percentage, there were only a little over 6,000 members out of 210,000 living graduates joined.

In a time of spending cuts, if UMass had a powerful alumni organization to lean on to make money, the school might not be feeling the cuts so strongly. Maybe the school is too dependent on raising money from its athletic programs; it is time for the alumni to actually do some work.

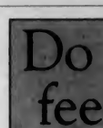
My high school, which graduates at most 400 students a year, finished a fundraising campaign in 2003 with almost $37 million in gifts. I can personally attest that Boston Latin School's athletic teams are nothing to brag about.

Will the athletic department actually be cut? No.

Will it even be a good thing if it is? I do not know.

I do know that during this time of spending cuts and budget deficits, the immediate reaction by the chancellor and the government was to raise student fees $1,500. Thanks to the federal stimulus, this might not become a reality, but why is that always the immediate reaction?

I have good friends and former bosses who would lose their jobs if the athletic department was cut. I certainly do not want that, but this is a time to debate new ideas, to think outside the box.



The UMass Alumni Association is much weaker than it should be. Maybe making it harder to raise money without an athletic department to lean on will make the Association develop a new system that actually works. Athletics, even at the top schools, are not always able to support themselves.

The University of Massachusetts has been trying to repackage itself as a top national institution. Maybe, just maybe, it is time to do something different.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Do not let the fees increase

Students went to UMass Dartmouth on Feb. 27 demanding the Board of Trustees delay their vote to increase fees until we have more information about the federal stimulus package. The Board of Trustees refused to postpone their vote and hiked our fees by $1,500.

Timothy Sutton

It turns out students were right; there is enough federal money to plug the hole in UMass' budget. As a result, some fees may be rebated, but three years from now, when the stimulus dries up, the fees are still in place. This fee increase was implemented with full knowledge of the coming federal money. Trustees took advantage of the economic crisis to implement the fee increase while they still could.

This fee increase should be eliminated, not rebated. Meanwhile, despite the timely arrival of the stimulus money, which is intended to stave off fee increases and layoffs, part-time lecturers who have already received pink-slips are not getting their jobs back, and the staff unions have been informed that the stimulus will not prevent layoffs.

Massachusetts ranks 46th in the nation for per capita funding for higher education. From 2001-2004 our state legislature reduced funding for higher education by more than any other state! To make up this difference, the University has more than doubled the cost of attending UMass by raising student fees.

This fee increase was implemented with full knowledge of the coming federal money. Trustees took advantage of the economic crisis to implement the fee increase while they still could.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts must reprioritize public higher education and take significant steps toward making quality public higher education available for all. The first step should be to increase state revenue. Hesitant lawmakers might look to the sound defeat of Question 1 on last November's ballot as a clear indication of the voters' will.

The response to national trends in the reduction of state spending on public higher education has been to increase out-of-state enrollment, promote research that brings in large grants, cut staff, privatize services and/or increase fees.

Both curricula and research agendas are determined by the bottom line. This is a narrow range of options that assumes state spending will only ever decrease. It is an accommodation to the neoliberal approach to government that operates by the logic of the market, and privatizes the public wealth.

As President Obama has realized, investing in public higher education now is not just plugging the hole in the budget. It is the solution to the crisis itself. During economic downturns, more people return to college. College graduates often earn higher incomes that are then taxed at higher rates, returning more into the public coffers.

We need to eliminate barriers that prevent people from accessing higher education, not erect more. The high-fee/high-aid model Jack Wilson is implementing is fine for Amherst College, but is irresponsible for a land-grant, public university. Financial aid for the lucky few does nothing to address historic barriers that have kept entire sectors of society from accessing higher education.

How this crisis is met can shift the relationship between the public University and the state, or we can continue to cut the budget and raise fees in accommodation to dwindling state expenditures on public higher education.

How these decisions are made may be equally important as their outcome. The chancellor, the University president and the Board of Trustees have consistently refused to listen to students. "The chancellor's Budget Task Force was a hand-picked group of yesmen. Representatives from SGA and GSS had to demand a seat at the table.

Had a group of union activists not shown up at the Task Force's first meeting demanding an open process, it would have been held behind closed doors.

The solutions coming from our University's administration are the same solutions that brought us into this situation in the first place, i.e. the shedding of the state's responsibility for maintaining the public good.

Crossing Student Bridges with the SGA

Jon Peterson

Most people who are involved in the Student Government Association and the Student Bridges leadership are not opposed to freedom. They simply hold views, and act in ways that aren't compatible with freedom.

Freedom exists when people are allowed to do things that others would not prefer them not to. It exists when people can freely choose to do what they think is good, even if you don't think it's good. This is the freedom that people had in choosing to take part in genocide in Darfur. Even though most may not approve of it, this is what freedom consists of.

Some of the most fundamentally good things that people can do for society are community service and charity. This is why community outreach and public service in the student government have been priorities for many students at the University of Massachusetts through the years.

Students are interested in making their communities better. Organizing as a student group and being funded by the SGA are one of the most reasonable ways of accomplishing these goals as an organization.

The SGA has a budget of nearly two million dollars, which students pay into every year in activity fees. The SGA doles out this money to the different groups, one of which is the Student Bridges organization. The Student Bridges organization, receiving $172,743 this year, takes up nearly 10 percent of these total student fees, and currently has a monopoly on the money allocated to "community service" groups.

And when it comes down to it, community service is one of the tamest sounding phrases that someone could come up with. But it is one of the most difficult things in the world to say what community service truly is.

But the arrogance of committing thousands of students to pay for things which will not affect them is only exceeded at UMass by those in the SGA who impose their notions of what these "community service" is on others.

What certain experiences and knowledge could a group have that makes them able to take away the freedom of others to do what they think is best for a community?

What is it that gives certain groups of people the right, though, to say what is better for a community than others? What certain experiences and knowledge could a group have that makes them able to take away the freedom of others to do what they think is best for a community?

While many consider community service to be selfless acts, like buying food for bums, others think it is a disservice to the community to aid those who choose to rely on others for a living.

Last fall, Northampton had to bring forth laws to their town's legislature to deal with destitute persons who were aggressively panhandling.

The average group on campus receives between $1,000 and $15,000 per year.

If the issue of community service were to come down to selfless acts, many, if not most of these clubs, would cease to exist.

Most RSOs and student agencies exist as a service to the community, but also because of the interest of those who are in the clubs.

The Daily Collegian gives free newspapers to people every day, but not only as a service to the community, but also as an interest of the people who write for it.

The Anime Club puts on anime every week for people to see with no cover charge, but the members do so because it is of interest to them.

And when considering the main goals of Student Bridges, one should wonder what service they do to the UMass community. In the two years that the organization has been around, it received a $50,000 raise in funds after its first year, while most budgets were cut.

Everyone who has applied for money from the SGA knows exactly how difficult and disheartening it is to know exactly how much they will need for a year, and to get half that amount or less, and how far a thousand dollars could go.

Their main programs include tutoring middle school kids in local towns, and bringing them to UMass to make it seem appealing for them to apply to. But while this group has as large a budget as it does, it spends no money or time on compiling statistics on the impact of their activities. Their feeling on the subject is that because they tutor so many middle school students, they can have no way of telling how many of them will eventually go on to contribute to the UMass community.

And while they pay their student interns by the hour for their "community service," the vast majority of the student groups pay their members and student leaders nothing. Student Bridges spent thousands of dollars on food, and thousands on rental cars during the 2008 and 2009.

Their service to the UMass community seems to rest largely on spending the money of the student community that they were purported to better.

In other words, the SGA and the members of this group are telling others that they have the right to impose their view of what is best for the UMass community on others, while they serve only a small amount of students. And while freedom is having the right to do things that others would not approve of, bigotry is refusing others the rights that you would expect to receive for yourself. And bigotry is not compatible with freedom, even if this view is not compatible with the view that the Student Bridges has for themselves.

Jon Petersen is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jpetersen@student.umass.edu.

Save the baseball team and save UMass

During times like these sacrifices must be made. Here at the University of Massachusetts it seems as if those cuts and fee increases keep coming as the University must drop $24 million out of its budget.

Just as students may see fee increases and teachers will see cuts, the athletic programs have no immunity at a time like this either. Currently the University has asked the athletic department to cut 20 percent of its budget, something that is never an easy task.

Rumors have swirled that part of the budget cuts could mean the end to the over 100-year-old baseball team on campus as well as possibly the swimming and diving teams. While just rumors at this point, the end to the baseball team seems to be rather strong, despite no inclination from the athletic department.

Without the budget of the athletic department in front of us, it is difficult to offer any real solutions, but it is our opinion that cutting the baseball program, or any others, is a drastic step and a better solution is out there. Whether it is giving a 20 percent cut to each athletic program to be fair or finding other cuts that can be made across the campus to give the athletic department a little more ease, a better solution is out there.

If the baseball program were to be cut, you would have arguably the most crazed baseball state in the country without a baseball team at its state university. Secondly, once the economy takes a turn for the better and the schools budget finds itself heading north instead of south, immediately, if not even before that, there will be strong pressure to bring the baseball program back.

If the argument for cutting the baseball program was the lack of success of the team, well imagine the number of wins they'll be able to produce when they have to rebuild from scratch.

When you talk about cutting any of the athletic programs, you take something away from the university that makes it unique. For many students, whether an athlete or not, each program gives them choices. When a prospective student is looking at UMass, all the different clubs and sports teams are a draw, saying look at all the things you can do here. With each cut, the University becomes less special, and the place that is suppose to help students discover themselves has nothing to let them discover.

College campuses are not the only places to be affected by such cuts, either. So once college baseball goes, it makes it that much easier for high schools to cut it, and then for towns to cut little league teams.

There is no easy solution, because if there were we wouldn't be writing this. There are so many things to consider such as Title IX, hoosters, outside donations as well as the teams and players themselves. Athletic Director John McCutcheon has his hands full with this one, but we just hope every base is covered and all angles are looked at to make sure the best solution possible is chosen.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

If you fooled anyone yesterday and are still laughing about it, tell us what you did and we'll tell everyone about tricky you are.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

COUNTER-POINT

Adlai E. Stevenson

Should UMass quench its thirst with Coke or Pepsi?

Bubbly, cancerous Coke is the beverage of true Americans

Matthew M. Robare

Coca-Cola, for generations the drink of choice for millions of Americans, is the Bud-Light of non-alcoholic drinks. It's tasteless, cheap and loaded with more calories than you can shake a stick at. But, like Bud-Light, Coke epitomizes good old-fashioned American values like hard work, entrepreneurship, racism, ruthless dealings with unions and the attempt to monopolize markets.

It is also the official soft drink of the United States military. Ahhh, I can just taste the red, white and blue patriotic bubbles.

As a staple of American culture, Coke is here to stay. The Coca-Cola Company has done a fine job of exporting America to the world at large, to the point where Coke and America are synonymous.

From hiring paramilitary troops to crack down on unions in Latin America to using water with pesticides in India, Coke is like a mini, private version of the United States government.

There is no reason to boycott Coke products, or have this university end its contracts with this fine company. We're mostly Americans here, we're all going die someday and everyone's a little bit racist.

High fructose corn syrup, caffeine and phosphoric acid all unite to be tangy on the tongue, a cause of diabetes and increase the heart rate to dangerous levels. God, I love it.

It's killing us with cold, buttled and refreshing happiness. Coca-Cola has bought property in Egypt that was stolen from people because they were Jewish, supported Nazi Germany and fired employees because of their race.

There is no reason to boycott Coke products, or have this university end its contracts with this fine company.

We're mostly Americans here, we're all going die someday and everyone's a little bit racist.

Coke isn't just a conglomerate with huge influence and unethical business practices; Coke is a mesocosm of America. It bridges the gap between the individual American and the nation.

In a way, drinking Coke is a kind of communion, where we consume the distilled substance of our nation. Indeed, that could be a new ad campaign: Da Vinci's The Last Supper, but with Coke bottles instead of goblets.

After all, Jesus, as determined by poll, is the greatest American of all time.

But I digress. Coke has earned, or rather spent, its way to the top of American culture.

Cute holiday ads with polar bears and Santa Claus and the tendency of the American press not to cover anything outside of the United States that doesn't happen in western Europe (the Khomeini principle: take the revolution to where the reporters want to go and you'll get world-wide coverage) has meant that Coke's reputation is largely untarnished outside of radical college campuses.

The fizzy, over caffeinated, caramel-colored, carbonated drink is a tasty, guilty pleasure for people all over the world. As a symbol of capitalism, Coke has displaced Pepsi in Russia (because Pepsi was distributed by the Soviet Union) and its southern charm and willingness to be sold in Israel has alienated the Muslim world.

The Coke-Pepsi rivalry is one of the greatest corporate rivalries ever, enriching meaningless conversation and filling television airtime everywhere.

Of other great rivalries, who would chose Coke and who would choose Pepsi?

I think Red Sox for Coke and Yankees for Pepsi; America for Coke and Russia for Pepsi; Germany for Coke and France for Pepsi; Kobe for Coke and Shaq for Pepsi; Lincoln for Coke and Douglas for Pepsi; Coke for St. Thomas Aquinas and Pepsi for St. Augustine; Coke for Aristotle and Pepsi for Plato.

Coke, it is clear, is the drink of winners.

Everybody wants to be a winner, so everyone should drink Coke. The bottle also looks like a rocket ship, making it even better. Cans have a less distinguishable shape. All cans look pretty much the same, but only the Coca-Cola bottle looks so much like a rocket ship. This makes Coke progressive and fearless, because rockets indicate scientific advancement and the triumph of the human spirit over fear.

Never fear, Coca-Cola is here!

With McDonald's, nothing is more decadent. A soda which destroys teeth and health and bone, but is enjoyed with pleasure.

It's like a drug, but it's legal and doesn't get you high, it just refreshes you.

Together with the perversion of food called McDonald's, full of disgusting grease and undercooked meat, we have perfected the great criticism of America: We are the only nation to pass from savagery to barbarism without the intervening stage of civilization.

But that's unfair to barbarians, who usually have redeeming features such as an appreciation of nature and law.

So let's all raise a glass of cold Coca-Cola and celebrate our national greatness. Coke: the drink that's energized an empire! (Drink Moxie.)

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu

Coke is a joke and no one is laughing at it's blood trail

There's nothing like a nice cold Mountain Dew to quench my thirst – it is just so sweet and delicious. I, along with many other students, cannot have Mountain Dew, or many other drinks, because of Coca-Cola's exclusive selling rights on this campus. Campus businesses are forced to purchase strictly from Coca-Cola, which limits variety and prevents us from having drinks like Mountain Dew.

Ebad Rahman

Selling the rights brings in a lot of money to support sports and other university programs, but working with a company that has a history of human rights abuses is not appropriate for a university that claims to be socially responsible.

Coca-Cola is involved with the assassination of union leaders in Colombia and draining water resources in India. Our long-standing collaboration with Coca-Cola needs to come to an end.

The Solidarity Center reports that since 1991 about 2,000 trade unionists have been murdered in Colombia, and in the past 20 years about 4,000 trade unionists were murdered. In 2006 alone, 78 trade unionists were murdered. It is commonly said that Columbia is a country where union work is like carrying a tombstone on your back.

Coca-Cola is involved with the assassination of union leaders in Colombia and draining water resources in India. Our long-standing collaboration with Coca-Cola needs to come to an end.

According to Corporate Campaign, Inc., Coca-Cola was involved in murdering eight union leaders in Colombia. In a lawsuit filed in Miami on July 2001, eyewitness accounts detailed the violence against workers of a Coca-Cola plant in Colombia, and the murder of Isidro Gil, an executive union leader.

The eyewitnesses explained that Gil was shot 10 times as soon as an armed group of thugs came to the Colombian Coca-Cola plant. Later that day, another union leader was kidnapped and union offices were set on fire. The next day, the armed group told workers to quit the union by 4 p.m. or they would be killed.

In fear, the union members resigned and the union was destroyed. The plant managers had a history working with the paramilitary and replaced workers that fled with cheaper laborers.

Laborrights.org stated, "Multinational corporations operating in Colombia have capitalized on the violent anti-union atmosphere created by armed paramilitary groups for their own profit."

Coca-Cola is responsible for its workers here in the U.S. and abroad. A single plant that threatens their workers makes the corporation as a whole responsible. Instead of denying any wrongdoing, the company needs to redress its wrongs.

The Coca-Cola problem exists in India as well, where Coca-Cola plants are draining water where it is scarce. The plant uses water to bottle their products, while surrounding communities suffer from drought and pollution. According to The Independent, a Plachimada farmer said his irrigation pump "used to run for 12 hours throughout the night; now it runs dry after 30 minutes. Coke managed to acquire all the lowest lying land in the area and after digging a series of deep wells they took all the water. It's downright theft."

The Polaris Institute reported that in June 2005, "the state Water Resources Department found that in 16 wells around the plant water levels dropped significantly in nine of them while one dried up completely between 2002 and 2004. The study also found that between May 2003 and May 2004 ground level dropped in 11 of the 16 wells."

After the local community organized and protested the plant, a court ruled that Plachimada had the right to control their water supply and could halt the plant's water exploitation. There are still plants across India that continue to exploit local water resources.

Coca-Cola plants in India also produce toxic products. The Indian parliament banned Coca-Cola products from its cafeterias after discovering that they were unsafe to drink.

In 2004, the India Resource Center reported that "the ban came as the result of tests, including those by the Indian government, which found high concentrations of pesticides and insecticides, including lindane, DDT, malathion and chlorpyrifos, in the colas, making them unfit for consumption. Some samples tested showed the presence of these toxins to be more than 30 times the standard allowed by the European Union. Tests of samples taken from the US of the same drinks were found to be safe."

Coca-Cola is responsible for human rights violations related to its business practices. Colleges across the nation are kicking Coca-Cola off their campuses, including New York University and Rutgers University, along with our neighbors at Smith College and Hampshire College.

"Smith's relationship with Coca-Cola spans some five decades," said Carol T. Christ, president of Smith College. "In severing our ties with the Coca-Cola Corporation, Smith joins other institutions and organizations around the world in urging Coca-Cola to take significant steps toward more responsible business practices across all realms of its operations."

Earthfoods, the People's Market, Greeno Sub Shop and the Newman Café are the only places of refuge free from Coca-Cola's reach at UMass. Members of the UMass community need to resist the temptation to buy Coca-Cola products on campus to send a message that we stick by our socially responsible values, and to tell Coca-Cola to take its business elsewhere.

Ebad Rahman is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at erahman@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

DODGING CONSERVATIVE BULLETS

Dear Editor,

RE: "Liberals call the kettle black by calling it provocative;" by Greg Collins, March 31

In his most recent article in The Collegian, Greg Collins all but officially declared war upon those dirty liberals' use of the word "provocative" as a way to describe controversial guest speakers with whom they sometimes find disagreement. I can understand Mr. Collin's concern. I profoundly objected to the behavior of the protesters at the Republican Club speech by conservative mouth-piece and provocateur extraordinaire Don Feder.

It was precisely the least proactive way to deal with a guest speaker preaching a no-holds-barred approach to First Amendment free speech rights. Certainly, his message was despicable and potentially dangerous, but one does not combat such a message with reckless and indiscriminate tantrum-tossing. However, this does not alter the commonly accepted meaning of the word "provocative."

The working definition of the word "provocative" is stated as "serving to provoke, excite, or stimulate." It may also be understood to mean "offensive, insulting, disturbing, annoying, incensing, aggravating" and so on and so forth. Whether Mr. Collins would care to admit it, Don Feder's message was, for all intents and purposes, provocative.

As for the rest of Mr. Collin's usual complaints about UMass, the reason this university does not promote abstinence-only sex education or agendas which "question the notion of man-made climate change" is a simple one. Teaching abstinence-only education to a wide range of legal adults living in constant and close proximity to one another is irresponsible and hazardous to preparing them for the realities of intimate relationships.

Indulging in trying to turn man-made global warming into nothing more than educational urban legend amounts to nothing less than an attempt to reignite the embers of an argument that ended a while ago. At this point, such "education" would be comparable to reconsidering whether or not the world is flat.

No one can stop Mr. Collins from believing that global warming isn't man-made, or that teaching abstinence will really stop pregnancy and the spread of sexually transmitted diseases, or that the world is flat.

What this school can continue to do is make sure that these disproven modes of thought, along with the ever-provocative and abhorrent specter of hate speech, remain relegated to private conversation. Then again, that might not be such a good idea, as the notion of privacy itself has come under fire from Mr. Collin's conservative heroes in Congress and the federal judiciary. It leads one to wonder whether there is anywhere on the map, any abstract concepts, or anything in the classroom or dictionary Mr. Collins' and his party won't declare war on.

Charlie Felder
UMass Student

SECRET BALLOTS STILL EXIST

Dear Editor,

RE: "Unions and deception;" Greg Collins, March 24

I'm surprised that in this day of easy access to information, some people still choose to follow the talking points presented by political pundits in the news. Mr. Collins promotes the completely incorrect view that the Employee Free Choice Act (EFCA) would eliminate the secret ballot to organize a union and replace with a public ballot cards.

This is incorrect. First what must be explained is how a union is formed. In order for a union to be formed the Union organizers must do two things: First they must get public ballot cards from at least 30 percent of the employees (usually they wait until they have 50-60 percent that are in favor of forming a Union. Second, they must then obtain more than 50 percent of the vote in a secret ballot that occurs sometime after the public cards are collected.

The problem with this system is that in the time between the voting day being set and actually happening employers are able to bring in anti-union propaganda to scare the workers into not voting to unionize. Here is where EFCA comes in. EFCA would allow if the employees want, let me repeat that, if the employees want to forgo the secret ballot election and instead unionize once they achieve the 50-60 percent of the public ballot cards. EFCA would simply add an option not take it away.

It doesn't eliminate the secret ballot option, it merely allows for the employees to unionize after the public ballot approval. EFCA makes it easier for people to unionize not harder, and it certainly doesn't eliminate people's freedoms.

Joe Williams

CONCRETE CARDBOARD COMPLAINT

Dear Editor,

I found myself very upset when I read the Collegian yesterday. I was at work and had a chance to read an edition that one of my employees had brought in. After reading the articles I thought I would lighten up the night with my horoscope. I was very upset when it told me I would stop eating Domino's due to finding out it was made from 35 percent recycled cardboard. The punch line to this unfortunate joke was that I am the Assistant Manager of the establishment aforementioned. I think something that was printed with the intention of being a joke may not have been so funny because it causes a negative reflection on us, and could cause us to lose business. It seems almost slanderous. For the record, we happen to make our pizza with 100% fresh ingredients. I sincerely hope you actually read what is printed, before it is printed, and approved it all as an editor should have.

Jamie Cotter
Hadley resident and Dominos Assistant Manager

BAKER FIRE CODE BREAK INS

Dear Editor,

I'm writing about an incident that happened in Baker Hall on Feb. 26 of this year. Because of a fire safety code violation in a dorm room a pipe broke and flooded a small part of the building. This set off the fire alarm prompting the Amherst Fire Department to respond. After the water was shut off and the students were let back into the building Fire captain William Klause entered the private room of every student and fined many students for different fire code violations.

I am aware of the rights of the fire department under Massachusetts General Law Chapter 148, but even the fire chief (Keith Hoyle) has said he doesn't think the actions of Captain Klause on that day were entirely legal.

He has never given a consistent reason for Captain Klause entering the rooms. He has said a fire had been reported in Baker and they were checking for fire dangers. If this was the case then why did they let all the students back in before they checked the rooms for dangers? If this is the actual reason then the Amherst Fire Department knowingly put UMass students in danger. Another reason the fire chief used was they assumed since two students had been violating fire safety code that everyone else was also. That's like a police officer giving a speeding ticket to everyone in the car instead of just the driver.

After a few days Captain Klause entered the rooms that had violations to make sure the violations had been corrected. He shouldn't have entered rooms whose occupants were not there.

Also, I was told in one of the dorm rooms he was unable to give the violation to one of the students because they weren't there. More than a week after the incident Captain Klause returned with an official from Housing Services and a police officer to deliver the ticket.

The student was not there again but the student's roommate was there sleeping. After knocking once Captain Klause waited a brief time and then entered the room without permission. The student did not answer the door or give permission for them to enter. Captain Klause then left the ticket for the other student on their desk and badgered the sleeping student for not answering the door when they knocked. They then left, but this is not the end. They came back a short time later and entered without knocking because Captain Klause had realized that he had put the wrong name on the ticket.

They had no valid reason to enter without permission, delivering a ticket is definitely not a valid reason, especially since he is supposed to either deliver the ticket to the student in person or mail it to the student's last known address.

Also, Captain Klause issued tickets for $100 to each student. In reality each student should only be fined $50 making the total for each room $100. This is just the fire department trying to swindle students out of their money.

The actions of the Amherst Fire Department during the incident and in the weeks after are questionable. I think every ticket issued that day should be revoked and maybe the town of Amherst should think about finding some fire officials who will respect the power they are given.

–Anonymous

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 2, 2009 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Golden Palm Award at the Cannes Film Festival, the highest honor at the festival, in 2008 went to "The Class." The French film stars the author of the novel, François Bégaudeau, which provided the basis for the film. Bégaudeau also helped write the script. The performances and direction give the film a lifelike feel of an eighth grade classroom, despite the cumbersome subtitles.

Delicacy of the classroom portrayed in film

Begaudeau's novel brought to life with own performance

BY KEVIN KOCZWARA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There have been numerous movies about teachers in underprivileged school systems trying to change the school environment, and by the end, they usually succeed. But how many of these success stories are true? How many times have teachers tried their damndest and failed or just been another stepping stone in a student's life? How many teachers get lost in the shuffle and forgotten by their students?

The latter stories of failure are closer to what happens in "The Class," the 2008 Palm d'Or Winner at the Cannes Film Festival. The movie is based on François Bégaudeau's novel and screenplay. The movie tells the story of an eighth grade French teacher in a lower-income neighborhood of Paris who struggles with one particular class of students.

The class questions him on the importance of the past, the way things are written, why rules are rules and his authority. They push their professor to the brink of madness, causing him to question the nature of what he is doing. The movie revolves around the class room and the interactions between student and teacher, student and student, as well as the inner-workings of the administration at the school.

The tight quarters of the classroom, race tensions and attitudes of the 13 and 14 year-old students present only some of the challenges facing François Marin, the teacher played by François Bégaudeau. The key to the struggles is that the children are realistic. They feel like real students, not actors playing students. They don't just explode in class for no reason, never bringing up the reasons as to why they act the way they do in the class. In fact, they do everything possible to avoid voicing their inner-emotions.

The first and only assignment that is revealed to the audience is a self-portrait by Marin get to know each of them better, and also, so that they can get to know more about themselves. Each student avoids the assignment as best they can. They do the bare minimum work and hide any and all issues from their teacher and each other. But for some odd reason all the hiding and deception creates a compelling tale.

The lack of any direct dialogue or direct scenes helps the film hold onto its authenticity. Characters do not float or explode into scenes that shed light or expose their character. Emotions in life are revealed through our facial ticks, how we stand and our body language, and Bégaudeau displays his struggles truthfully and believably. He never overacts, nor does he make the audience feel like they are watching a movie. The movie feels true to life and this is in part due to Bégaudeau, but also due to the acting done by his students.

They stay in character and exploit stereotypes, but also break them. This helps a movie about school keep its pace and keeps its atmosphere.

The camerawork lends itself to the type of story that is told. The handheld camera gives a feeling of documentary style filmmaking it brings the film to life, without making the screen shake like a "Bourne Ultimatum" or "The Blair Witch Project." The audience is there, with the students in the classroom witnessing these scenes unfold, seeing the struggle both sides put up and have to deal with.

The close-ups allow Marin the chance to express his feelings, but never knowing the camera is there, never looking at it, or showing off or putting on a show for the viewer – he is true to his character through and through.

The camera work and acting compliment the source material and the direction. The movie never moves from the school. Personal lives are left at the door, the baggage the characters carry is too. The direction, acting and screenplay in "The Class" all help create the three-dimensional characters needed and give the film its delicate touch.

Laurent Cantet directs with a delicacy reminiscent of Jean-Pierre and Luc Dardenne ("L'Enfant" and "Rosetta"). But he seems to get lost in the length of the film, which needs a final conflict, and when it finally occurs the movie has already been moving for over an hour. The movie's two hours are paced out well enough, but a sense of dread starts to overcome the viewer and the move slows at points. And reading over two hours of English subtitles can seem daunting to any viewer.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kevinkoczwara@dailycollegian.com

Caine's recognition of a lifetime

Michael Caine's extensive catalog of movie performances was honored by ShoWest. With two Oscars and numerous stand-out performances, many argue that the 76 year-old actor is well overdue for such an honor.

BY SUSAN KING
LOS ANGELES TIMES

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. – It's a long road from the projects of south London to the Peninsula Hotel in Beverly Hills, where Michael Caine is reflecting on his rough-and-tumble roots. "It's called the Elephant Castle," recalls Caine, who retains the Cockney accent – and the lack of pretension – of his childhood home. "It's very, very rough."

The memories are fresh in his mind because the two-time Oscar winner ("Hannah and Her Sisters," "The Cider House Rules") recently completed a movie, "Harry Brown," in his old neighborhood. "It was quite amazing," he says of his return. "There was a mural with me on it and Charlie Chaplin, who is from there as well. It's Charlie Chaplin in 'The Kid' and me with my mum."

He was shocked, though, at how much nastier the area had become. "An English guy was interviewing me and said, 'How different is it now?' I said much tougher. We didn't have drugs. We had alcohol. We used to get (drunk) and pass out. You didn't have to knock down an old lady to get the price of a beer. At least they were knocking these places down."

Caine, who has given indelible performance after indelible performance in the last four decades in such films as "Alfie," "The Man Who Would Be King" and "The Dark Knight," is in town from his home in England to talk about his latest movie, "Is There Anybody There?", which opens April 17. He also was scheduled to receive ShoWest's lifetime achievement award in Las Vegas on Thursday evening.

"It's an extraordinary thing to get," says Caine, trim and fit at 76, of the honor from the movie exhibitors' convention. "They are tough. There is no sentiment there. I have been to ShoWest before. They are not a namby-pamby crowd."

But you'd be hard-pressed to find anybody saying an unkind word about Caine as an actor or as a person.

"He is the actor of actors," says Mitch Neuhauser, co-managing director of ShoWest. "The breadth of his work is just enormous, and there's no genre or type of film that depicts a Michael Caine role. What makes this tribute at ShoWest so appropriate and so meaningful is that over the course of his career he has been responsible for providing hours and hours of entertainment for moviegoers worldwide."

"He always makes it look easy and natural," adds

See CAINE on page 7

Hollywood's system to success

Box-office gold has an illogical equation

BY PATRICK GOLDSTEIN
LOS ANGELES TIMES

HOLLYWOOD — Most people in Hollywood are bad at math, which is probably why actors are so wildly overpaid and movie budgets are always spiraling out of control. But in what other business could you possibly write the following equation: 0 x 0 x 0 x 0 equals $100 million-plus?

Or to make it a word problem: Is it possible to take four actors whose careers are virtually in commercial eclipse, throw them together in the same film and have movie marketers predicting the picture will be a big box-office success?

That's the odd Hollywood math behind "Fast & Furious," which opens this weekend. This is the fourth installment of the franchise, and it features Vin Diesel, Paul Walker, Michelle Rodriguez and Jordana Brewster, the stars of the original 2001 hit, all of whose careers have been skidding in recent years. Since the release of "XXX" in 2002, Diesel has had only one film – the 2005 kiddie comedy "The Pacifier" – that made more than $60 million. His most recent action film, "Babylon A.D.," was a flop.

Although he was a major presence in the successful 2006 dog-sled drama, "Eight Below," Walker has seen his career fade so badly that two of his most recent films, "The Death and Life of Bobby Z" and "The Lazarus Project," never had a U.S. theatrical release. Rodriguez was in the hit film "S.W.A.T." in 2003, but since then she's gotten far more attention for her DUI charges than for her film-TV career – her 2006 film "The Breed" went straight to DVD. Ditto for Brewster, who except for her appearance in the 2006 horror film "Texas Chainsaw Massacre: The Beginning," has been relegated to roles in a host of little-seen films.

So why all the high anticipation surrounding a "Fast & Furious" reunion? Universal Pictures, which has distrihuted the entire series of films, can barely contain its excitement. And even rival marketers are predicting an impressive $40 million-plus opening weekend for the new film. First, the film – which I saw at a recent screening – plays like gangbusters, offering young moviegoers a huge adrenaline rush with a series of high-velocity car races and chase scenes, beginning with a dazzling oil-tanker hijacking sequence that is the epitome of old-school action.

It's crammed with daring stunts without any antiseptic visual-effects trickery. The acting is forgettable, the dialogue is flat and Diesel – who is on a quest to avenge his girlfriend's death – spends most of his time coaxing information out of bad guys either by beating them to a pulp or hanging them by their feet out of a window.

But if I were 16, I'd want to see the movie again tomorrow. In addition to its vivid action sequences, it deftly captures the exotic glamour of the underground car culture – the hot whips are lighted and caressed by the camera as if they were '40s Hollywood femme fatales. After a while, you even warm up to Diesel, who plays a surly, Robert Mitchum-style tough-guy, rarely uttering more than one line of dialogue at a time. When he corners a nasty thug praying at the altar in an ancient Mexican church, before he dispatches him, he sneers: "You ain't forgiven."

Still, how is it possible that Diesel and Co. have such heat in this film and so little buzz everywhere else? Universal marketing and distribution chief Adam Fogelson argues that the new film is a testament to the enduring appeal of a successful brand. "In the last few years, we've seen over and over again the power of movie brands, especially when those brands return to the essence of what made them successful when they started," he says, citing as examples the popularity of such revived film series as "Rocky," "Die Hard" and "Friday the 13th."

Fogelson adds: "People love these actors as these characters. The actors have all gone off in interesting directions, with different career paths, but they have a special appeal playing these roles. It's not so different from seeing Bruce Willis in 'Live Free or Die Hard.' Until that movie, you weren't sure what his box-office power was. But when he was in a film that looked like a worthy successor to the previous 'Die Hard' hits, people got excited again."

Initially, Universal wasn't sure how to handle a fourth film in the series. The first film, released in 2001, had been a surprise hit, making $206 million worldwide. The sequel, made with Walker but without Diesel, made less money in the U.S. but more overseas. However, the third film, "The Fast and the Furious: Tokyo Drift," with an entirely different cast, fell off considerably, making only $62 million in the U.S., with an additional $95 million overseas. Even though profits were down, costs were up, since the first film was budgeted at $40 million, while the sequel cost $90 million and the third in the series came in at

See MOVIES on page 7

'Fast and Furious' sequel displays magic behind branding

MOVIES from page 6

around $85 million.

According to producer Neal Moritz, at the helm of the entire series, the first hint of a renewed interest in a cast reunion came when – as something of a marketing gimmick – Diesel showed up in a cameo at the end of the third film. The reaction was intense. "The audience just levitated," Fogelson says. At first, Moritz says, he had screenwriters working on a "Fast and Furious" spin-off featuring Diesel's Dominic Toretto character.

"But while we were working on that, we got the big idea – what if we got everyone back together, sort of a new model with the original parts," he explains. "It really hadn't been done before with an ensemble film, but we thought it could work because it was something audiences wanted to see, and obviously it gave us a great marketing hook to sell the picture."

Moritz brought in Chris Morgan, who wrote the "Tokyo Drift" installment in the series (he also wrote last summer's action hit "Wanted"). Morgan was forced to work at a breakneck pace, trying to finish the script before the writers strike. "We basically had a start date without a finished script," Moritz recalls. "For almost a month, Chris and the rest of us were cooped up in conference rooms at Universal, often working past midnight almost every night, trying to finish the script before the strike deadline."

Justin Lin, the film's director (who also did "Tokyo Drift"), mapped out the action scenes and car races in the old-fashioned way, starting by steering toy cars around a table top. "Justin would sit there for hours, with these Hot Wheels cars, moving them around on tables with streets and hills drawn on them, working with our storyboard artists, seeing how everything might work," Moritz says. "We'd film the toy car sequences, then we'd storyboard it, then we'd do CGI pre-(visualization) to see what would it look like. Everyone offered comments, we'd revise it, then figure out how to actually shoot it."

The new film isn't cheap – it cost nearly $100 million to make. But it already has the kind of buzz that buoys hit movies. The film's first trailer created a wave of fan interest, using the oil tanker hijacking footage to establish the movie's action bona-fides, then revealing the presence of the original cast. The film originally was slated for release in June, but after a pair of enthusiastic test screenings this year, the studio decided to move up the release to this weekend.

"They saw an opening where they'd be the only action movie in the market over the entire spring break," Moritz says. "Kids are all out of school, so it's a lot like summer, except with a lot less competition, since you don't have to go up against big guns like 'Transformers,' 'Star Trek' or 'Night at the Museum.'"

Filmmakers are often wary about showing too much optimism for their opening weekend these days, but not Moritz, who just returned from a European promotional tour for the film. "We had premieres in Paris, London, Madrid, Moscow and Rome," he says. "We were mobbed everywhere we went. Everybody wants to see these actors in this film again. It's an idea whose time has come."

Caine's lifetime of achievements

CAINE from page 6

film critic-historian Leonard Maltin. "That is the mark of a true artist. He started out as a young stud leading man but then showed he had skills to back up his charisma, so he earned respect to go along with his stardom."

Caine, born Maurice Micklewhite, reinvented himself again as he got older. "He didn't shy away from character parts," says Maltin. He always found a way to bring color and life to any role he played. He's a very skilled craftsman, as he proved in a series of illustrated lectures (on the craft of acting) he did some years ago for the BBC, but he never lets you know the wheels are turning."

In a way, Caine became a role model for younger movie stars by toggling between mainstream fare and smaller indie projects, such as "Is There Anybody There?" In the touching drama directed by John Crowley ("Boy A"), Caine plays Clarence, a grumpy old magician who arrives unwillingly to live in an old-folks' home. It doesn't take long, though, for Clarence to befriend Edward (Bill Milner), the 10-year-old son of the home's owners. As Clarence disappears further into senility, Edward becomes his caretaker.

"One of my closest friends – he was only 68 – just died of Alzheimer's," says Caine softly. "I know of where I speak."

Perhaps it's that deep connection with dementia that allowed Caine to give such a naked performance – Clarence wears his emotions on his sleeve, including crying over the loss of his past life and getting angry when he can't remember who he is.

"Dougie having dementia was a reason I wanted to do it," says Caine. "But also from a purely selfish point of view, it was a hell of a part to do. I'm now looking for things that are different and stretch me. I don't work very much. So a movie sort of has to grab me."

Caine particularly loved the relationship between Clarence and Edward and "how I become responsible for the boy and try to help him and eventually how he became responsible to me."

Caine developed a deep affection for his young costar, who was previously seen in "Son of Rambow."

"He is not a trained actor," says Caine. "So it was easy. We got to know each other very well. People say to me, 'Did you give him advice?' I wouldn't think of giving Billy advice."

Caine hadn't talked to many people who had seen the movie until the previous evening when he participated in a question-and-answer session in Los Angeles after a screening. "They seemed impressed with the movie," he says.

But his wife, Shakira, was a basket case when she saw it.

"She got very upset," says Caine, "because she watched me grow old and die. I said, 'It's a performance. I am not like him. I am not the same person.'"

Michael Caine's versatility as an actor recently earned him recognition by ShoWest. He has played a variety of characters over his long career, including a recent supporting role in "The Dark Knight."

ENJOY MUSIC, MOVIES, FASHION, FOOD, AND GALLLERYS AND EXHIBITS?
COME ON WRITE FOR ARTS & LIVING
ARTS @ DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM PRESENTS
WEEKEND AT THE MOVIES WITH ARTS STAFFERS SHAYNA MURPHY AND PETE RIZZO

DANSKO DAY
Saturday, April 4

dansko ZANNA 14 YEARS TOGETHER!
Enter to win a FREE PAIR OF DANSKO!
ZANNA downtown Amherst
FREE GIFT with ALL Zanna shoe purchases

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
- PRESIDENTIAL APTS
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
- PERRY APTS
- 177 N. PLEASANT ST.
- COLLEGE INN APTS
- LANTERN COURT APTS
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.

55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup

THE ULTIMATE HOT BOOY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
BRING YOUR COLLEGE ID FOR COVER DISCOUNT!!!
SKYPLEX is NOW HIRING:
Doors open at 9 to party until 2 a.m.!
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq. Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

Reeves, Salato supply offense in 5–0 victory

SOFTBALL from page 10

about the same time to fully grasp the game. Their first time around UMass looked flat, striking out looking, barely getting a piece of the ball and giving Balschmiter only a few minutes to take a break in the dugout.

"I think I was able to figure out the strike zone more noticing what [the umpire] was looking for," said Balschmiter. "In the first inning I was throwing at what my strike zone is. I had to adjust to what the umpire wanted."

As the rain started coming down in the fourth inning UMass' game started to pick up.

Leadoff hitter Carly Normandin started the rally with a sharp single to right field, which was followed by Kyllie Magill sending a hot shot to shortstop, which was then misplayed by Kirsten Costello. Whitney Mollica then sent a perfect bunt down the first baseline to move the runners to second and third.

Two batters later Sarah Reeves sent a 1-1 pitch by the pitcher and into center field, driving both runs home. UMass continued to pressure the Big Green (10-12, 3-1 Ivy) the following inning.

Davina Hernandez singled up the middle on the first pitch she saw. She was there for a mere two pitches when Whitney Williams' sacrifice bunt moved her to second. Magill, continuing to increase her offensive presence, doubled to left field bringing around Hernandez to stretch UMass' lead to 3-0.

After Mollica was hit by a pitch, putting runners on first and second, Salato then increased UMass' lead to 5-0 hitting a two-run triple off the right field wall putting the game away.

"Our timing was better," Sortino said of her team's second go-around with Barker. "We just didn't have any sense of rhythm our first time through."

The top of the sixth followed like many of the innings before it – with the Big Green going down in order.

The Minutewomen will play a doubleheader this afternoon against Vermont at the UMass Softball Complex.

GAME NOTES

Balschmiter now has 56 shutouts for her career and 10 this season. After her 13 strikeouts, the senior has now amassed 990 for her career. With 10 more Balschmiter will become only the third active player in the country with 1,000.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com

Junior first baseman Sarah Reeves drove in two runs for the Minutewomen in a 5–0 victory over Dartmouth Wednesday. She ranks second on the team this season with four home runs and 18 runs batted in.

Senior defender Jackie Rosenzweig keeps Northwestern's Danielle Spencer in front of her in a game earlier this season at McGuirk Stadium. UMass lost that game, but has been strong ever since.

Reddy providing leadership

W LACROSSE from page 10

...lp the Minutewomen shoulder scoring responsibilities.

So far, Lyons has done just that, leading the team in goals (21) and assists (eight) to become one of the focal points on an UMass offense that features four players with 20 or more points.

Her emergence has allowed the team to stay competitive against top teams, and gave the team a potent offense threat, despite the departure of Kathleen Typadis, the second-leading goal scorer in school history.

WALKER PLAYS FOR USA

UMass assistant coach Acacia Walker was one of 18 players nationwide to be selected to compete in the women's lacrosse World Cup, which will be held in Prague, Czech Republic this June. During Wednesday's sports luncheon, Walker discussed how privileged she felt to have the opportunity to represent her country.

Though she will not have a chance to practice with the U.S. team until summer, she discussed what a great advantage it is to be a college coach.

"I'm fortunate to be a lacrosse coach because lax allows me to play everyday with the girls. I'm challenged by players like Meg Reddy every single day," Walker said. "She's out there doing draws everyday, she's banging on my door everyday to come have me play with her, and she's making me a better player."

Walker has to balance her commitment to the UMass team along with the USA team, but she noted that 14 of the 18 players are currently college coaches so the team will be able to work around her schedule.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

Reunion in Amherst

M. LACROSSE from page 10

Kutner is a surprise for St. John's. He came in for his rookie season and is currently the third-leading point earner on the team and a leader on attack.

"He has a great ability to get to the goal and feed the ball," Cannella said. "He's really developed in just one year and he's got a great future ahead of him. In just one year he's developed into an all-around good player."

The Minutemen enter the ECAC matchup with a two-game winning streak after defeating Loyola 8-6, on March 21 and Penn State, 9-8, on March 28.

UMass is 13-0 all-time against St. John's, including a 13-8 victory over the Red Storm in New York last season. In the match-up, senior Tim Balise scored six goals for the Minutemen.

"I think Timmy looks forward to every game. I don't think because he scored six last year he's going to score six again," Cannella said. "He'll prepare himself just like he prepared himself like he did for Penn State and Loyola and the rest of our games. He'll go out there and have a good effort."

The Minutemen will look to extend their streak to three games this weekend, but Cannella is worried about the team's balance of confidence and arrogance.

"You are supposed to be a confident group, but you can't be over-confident," said Cannella. "You worry about how the team plays that line. You need to see in practice from day-to-day how they play that line and if they go over that line you've got to knock them back and make sure they understand that if they're not getting ready to play against St. John's or whoever else they play, then that team is going to take it to us."

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com.

Adams–Schneider rivalry born from respect, mutual admiration

GOALKEEPERS from page 10

Facing off against a goalkeeper that good is something that teams hate to have to prepare for.

"When you face a goalie like that you really have to prepare for that goalie. You can't just go into the game and say 'Hey, we gotta shoot it there, or here,'" Cannella said. "You have to say, 'Hey, this is where this guy's great.' And let's try to find out where he's not. And it's really hard to do that with those two."

It was especially difficult for anyone trying to score on either of them in the 2007 meeting. In a game that went to overtime, Adams (20) and Schneider (15) combined for 35 saves as both teams had no answer for the goalkeepers in a 6-5 UMass win.

Both considered that to be perhaps the best game that they've ever played. It usually seems that way when they face off. Schneider relishes watching Adams play every chance he gets.

"It's always fun playing against him, because of the saves going back and forth. Obviously you're in the middle of the game, but some of the saves he makes I'm like, 'How did he even make that?'" Schneider said. "It puts a little pressure on you but it brings out the best in each one of us."

Schneider and Adams have certainly changed the UMass-Penn State rivalry. In the four games, the teams have combined for a total of 52 goals. Before they got to college, the Minutemen and the Nittany Lions combined for 51 goals . . . in just two games and 97 goals in four games while they were still in high school.

In the four meetings Schneider has had a bit of an edge. Never mind the three wins to Adams' one, the UMass leader also has more saves (55 to 51) and fewer goals allowed (25 to 27).

So who's better?

Schneider wouldn't commit one way or the other.

"Any given day, anyone can play," he said. "He's great. He's been awesome."

Adams echoed that sentiment.

"Obviously he's every talented, you can see that he's a huge leader on that team and has been ever since he's been a freshman," Adams said. "That's something I kind of admire. You can tell he has control of his team and his defense. Not only does he lead by example, but he also leads with his character and what he seems to do for his team."

Respect goes all-around for these guys – from the coaches, the goalies and all the players on UMass and Penn State.

They just want these guys to graduate already.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

NEED AN APARTMENT?
PUFFTON VILLAGE
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Gloss Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

The Daily Collegian asks,
"Are you a
SPORTS FAN?"
THEN GO WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN!

MA State Lottery NOW AVAILABLE
FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
WINE SALE 10% OFF 6 BOTTLES OF WINE EVERYDAY!! MIX & MATCH LIQUOR
DON JULIO REAL 750 ml $299.99
JOHNNIE WALKER BLUE LABEL 750 ml $209.99
HENNESSY COGNAC X.O. 750 ml $129.99
GRAND MARNIER 100YR CENTENAIRE 750 ml $120.99
BUSHMILLS 1608 ANNIVERSARY 750 ml $99.99
JOHNNIE WALKER GOLD LABEL 750 ml $74.99
LAGAVULIN 16 YR 750 ml $59.99
OBAN 14 YR 750 ml $54.99
ARDBEG 10 YR 750 ml $54.99
GLENMORANGIE QUINTA RUBAN 750 ml $54.99
DON JULIO ANEJO 750 ml $54.99
HENNESSY COGNAC VS.O.P 1.75 liter $48.99
GRAND MARNIER CORDON ROUGE 750 ml $34.99
BUSHMILLS BLACK BUSH 750 ml $34.99
GLENMORANGIE 10 YR 750 ml $34.99
TANGUERAY GIN 1.75 liter $34.99
CHOPIN POLISH VODKA 750 ml $32.99
HENNESSY COGNAC VS. 750 ml $30.99
BELVEDERE PURE VODKA 750 ml $28.99
CAPTAIN MORGAN SPICED RUM 1.75 liter $27.99
10 CANE RUM 750 ml $26.99
KETEL ONE VODKA 1.0 liter $24.99
KETEL ONE CITREON VODKA 1.0 liter $24.99
BAILEY'S IRISH CREAM 750 ml $22.99
JOSE CUERVO TEQUILLA 1.0 liter $20.99
MYERS PLATINUM RUM 1.75 liter $19.99
CAPTAIN MORGAN PARROT BAY KEY LIME RUM 1.0 liter $17.99
CAPTAIN MORGAN PARROT BAY RUM 750 ml $15.99
SMIRNOFF TWIST FLAVORED VODKA 750 ml $12.99
SMIRNOFF VODKA 80° 750 ml $12.99
SALE 3/26-4/8
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

STUDENT DISCOUNT!
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
A Course for Everyone
cherryhillgolf.org
NOW OPEN
Best 9 Hole Course In Western Mass
Just Minutes from UMASS on Rt. 63
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE Town of Amherst
Walk on anytime! No Tee Times Necessary!
Tele: 413-259-3138 Fax: 413-259-2407

Waa waa waa.

| | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 4 | | 7 | | 8 | | 1 |
| | 7 | | | | 6 | |
| | 2 | 8 | | | 9 | 4 |
| | | 7 | | 8 | | 4 |
| | 5 | | | | | 3 |
| | | 2 | | 5 | | 7 |
| | 9 | 6 | | | 1 | 7 |
| | 4 | | | | | 5 |
| 2 | | | 5 | | 4 | |

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY:
Sundays:
SUNDAY BRUNCH
10AM - 2PM
Monday:
RED SOX OPENING DAY
2:00 PM
Every Wednesday:
LOST
UPSTAIRS AT ABC
Thursday April 2:
DOWNSTAIRS 10PM - 1AM
DJ VID KID
Keep up with us on facebook
24 NORTH PLEASANT ST AMHERST
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

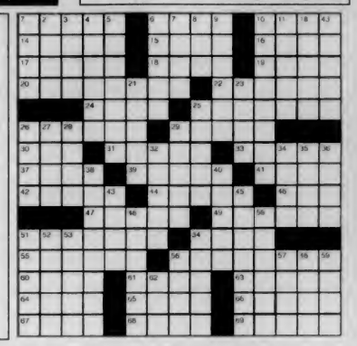
amherst cinema
Fri Apr 3 - Thu Apr 9
sunshine cleaning 2:30 5:00 7:30 10:00 + 12:15pm Sat & Sun
THE CLASS
F, Sa, Tu, W 2:00 4:45 7:15 9:45 Su 11:15am M, Th 1:30 4:15 9:45 +11:30am Sat
twolovers 4:30 9:30 + 11:45am Sat & Sun
HARVARD BEATS YALE 2:15 7:00
FRANCO ZEFFIRELLI Romeo & Juliet
Sun. Apr. 5 @ 2pm Thu. Apr. 9 @ 7pm
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Apr 3 - Thu Apr 9
Adventureland 4:30 7:15 9:45 +2:00 Sat & Sun +10:15am 2:00 Wed
The Great Buck Howard 4:15 7:00 9:30 + 1:45 Sat & Sun + 10:00am 1:45 Wed
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5848

ACROSS
1 Agile
6 Soft drink
10 Pope
14 Nastase's namesakes
15 Fratricide victim
16 Actor's award
17 Manners
18 Single
19 Swindle
20 Item on the bottom of a boat
22 Bowl-shaped depression
24 Pro votes
25 Archaic word meaning "actors"
26 Passed by
29 Adhesive
30 2/3 and 3/9
31 One of the Wayans
33 Not smooth
37 Crucifix inscription
39 Noosed rope
41 Name for a Swedish boy
42 Ear's detection
44 Dandruff source
46 Onassis
47 Passing
49 Worked the soil
51 Undersized
54 Realtor's delight
55 At once
56 Detract
60 Em or Bee, for example
61 Spanish love
63 Spud
64 Poet's contraction
65 Groom's article
66 Jackets
67 Reed for a weaver
68 Amount to take
69 Slow to understand

DOWN
1 Branch
2 Hobbones
3 Row
4 Red dyes
5 Tried
6 Summons
7 Woodwind
8 Mr. Berry
9 Puts into office
10 Rich widows
11 Diminish
12 Menu peruser
13 Visionaries
21 Furniture wood
23 Assess
25 Elves' supervisor
26 "Daily Planet" reporter
27 Part of A.D.
28 Part of South America
29 Cook in water
32 Indistinct
34 Ice skating rink
35 Parched
36 City in Oklahoma
38 Business
40 Crunch feature
43 Obligation
45 Flew
48 On the train
50 Envoy
51 Stretches across
52 Mean
53 Actress Zellweger
54 Coat material
56 Adams and Johnson
57 Like ___ of bricks
58 Dos and diez
59 Scots Gaelic
62 'O Sole

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

T Shirts & Sweatshirts in 1-3 Days!
sunraise printing
Custom Printed Tees
Student Discounts
586-7133
sunraiseprinting.com
Hadley, MA 01035



INTERESTED IN GETTING BUSINESS EXPERIENCE?
THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS A NEW BUSINESS MANAGER FOR 2009-2010.
APPLICATIONS ARE AVAILABLE AT 113 CAMPUS CENTER, DUE WEDNESDAY APRIL 8TH, BY 5 PM.

Comics Mail Bag

Dear Comics Guy:
You may have heard about an alleged incident involving me and a prostitute. Supposedly, things got a little out of hand, she bit me, and I punched her in the face. In my defense, she was German, and since the Germans make such good stuff, I figured their women were tougher. My criminal record now has employer's saying, "what a Sham-Shame.." Please help me restore me image!
— The Sham-Wow Guy

Dear Sham-Wow Guy:
Domestic violence is no joking matter, and neither are Germans. The Brawny paper towel man is gonna kick your ass unless you can pull off a serious rebranding of your image. Try wearing more horizontal stripes; I hear they have a thinning effect.
— The Comics Ed.

Email your comics and things to: comics@dailycollegian.com

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"There is no reciprocity. Men love women, women love children, children love hamsters."

— Alice Thomas Ellis

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Investing in sandbags was probably the wrong approach to fixing your clogged toilet.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Getting an ambulence driver who's on a whole handful of speed will have its positive and its negative aspects.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Awkwardness is the glue that holds your life together in the uncomfortable way it's built.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
After getting a hotel room for just you and a special friend, you two can finally comfortably spread out your Pokemon card game.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Holding a clipboard and trying to look important isn't going to save you this time.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Putting a video of yourself on YouTube was probably a bad idea, especially since it was filmed on cult property.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
While cutting the onions you will cry, but it will be more due to the terrorist pointing an AK-47 in your face the whole time.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
After finally giving boxer briefs a try this week, you'll be pleasantly surprised at the level of air circulation.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You're a star in the Czech Republic, and you don't even know it yet.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Now that the ducks and geese are back on the pond, remember that there are lines between man and fowl not to be crossed.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
No one is going to want to publish your collection of Tom Brady-themed poetry.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You never know: Maybe that bathroom stall will turn out to have been the perfect place to meet new people.

TRICK BAG BY ANNIE KEITHLINE

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELL

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums
Walk to Campus!
Hurry, Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

ANNOUNCEMENT

You're not alone! Stressed? Panicking? Grieving? Wondering what comes after college? Mental Health Services support groups can help. Call (413) 545-2337

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblowout.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

FOR RENT

Amherst: FREE Wii and entry to win a FREE flat-screen TV! $500 off security! (When you apply before April 15th for lease starting June 1st- Sept. 1st) 2,3,4 BR apts with 2 full baths, AC, dishwasher and FREE HEAT! Bus to UMass. Going Fast! call 253-7377 or go to www.MillValleyApts.com

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincoln-realty.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

FOR RENT

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

FOUND

Bike near C.C. Call 230-3593 to identify.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 2, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Raining Ks

Balschmiter fans 13 in 56th career shutout

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It appears as if the nothing deters the Massachusetts softball team. The Minutewomen can win in the sun, home, away, with their coach absent and unfortunately for Dartmouth, in the rain.

Late Wednesday afternoon, UMass defeated Dartmouth, 5-0, in a shortened 5-1/2 inning game due to heavy rain. The precipitation, though, held off for the most part until the later innings where the Minutewomen (16-6, 4-0 Atlantic 10) seemed to play at their best.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 5 |
| Dartmouth | 0 |

"I thought we started off, like, confused or something," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "I can't really put my finger on it but it definitely got better. We did a better job of handling [Dartmouth pitcher Hillary Barker], but quite frankly I think it took us too many batters to adjust to the pitcher."

Again, UMass was led by senior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter on the mound. The senior struck out 13 of the 19 batters she faced en route to a one-hit performance. Similar to her last appearance Friday against St. Bonaventure, the senior had a bit of trouble hitting her spots early on and took the first couple innings to loosen her arm. But nevertheless, she tallied strikeout after strikeout.

"I thought I did better today," Balschmiter said. "I focused on staying on the mound so I wasn't called for those pesky illegal pitches. So, overall I think I did a better job of that."

It took the rest of the Minutewomen

See SOFTBALL on page 8

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior ace Brandice Balschmiter pitched a 1-hit shutout Wednesday in a 5-0 win over Dartmouth. She struck out 13 batters in the game, giving her 990 in her career as a Minutewoman.

Familiar names set to return

Coach Miller, assistants set for reunion with No. 13 UM

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Saturday will be another reunion for the St. John's coaching staff.

The No. 13 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team will host two UMass alumni and a former assistant coach when its plays St. John's on Saturday at 1 p.m. at Garber Field.

Jason Miller, who worked under UMass coach Greg Cannella from 2003-2006, took over as St. John's head coach three years ago. Currently under Miller are two former UMass players serving as assistant coaches – Dan Paccione and Brian Jacovina. Paccione played with the Minutemen from 1999-2002, while Jacovina graduated in 2007.

"[Miller] can talk about his experiences here and what we did, what we do and how we get ready for games," Cannella said.

St. John's has lost its last two games, while UMass (5-3, 2-0 Eastern College Athletic Conference) has won two straight. The Red Storm (5-3, 1-2 ECAC) lost to Lehigh, 10-9, in overtime on March 21 and 14-10 against Rutgers on March 28.

But, the Red Storm has won big games this season. They upset then-No. 5 Georgetown with a 10-9 victory on Feb. 28, in what Cannella considered to have been "probably one of St. John's biggest victories in program history."

"[St. John's is] a very athletic team. They are playing with a sense of togetherness," Cannella said. "They play hard and don't care who they're playing. They are going to come out with an attitude and you attribute that to [Miller] and the rest of the staff. It's a really great staff and they've done a good job with their players."

Leading St. John's in points are senior attack Drew Schanen (18 goals, four assists), senior attack Trevor Michaelsen (14 goals, five assists) and freshman attack Harry Kutner (11 goals, eight assists).

Schanen was predominantly an extra-man player last year and now is the leading point earner for St. John's. Schanen plays with confidence and has a strong shot.

"They look for him a ton. He has a great release on his shot," said Cannella. "He's got some nifty quick moves for a big guy, but he can bring it."

Michaelsen is a fifth-year senior who transferred from Rutgers. He has been a strong midfielder and plays an even stronger attack. The Minutemen will have to watch out for Michaelsen because he is known to have a strong shot from the outside.

See M. LACROSSE on page 8

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Goalkeeper Doc Schneider and the No. 13 Minutemen will face off against ECAC rival St. John's Saturday at Garber Field. UMass enters the game with a two-game winning streak in conference play.

Clash of elite GKs a special, friendly rivalry

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

They are never within 100 yards from each other on the lacrosse field. But that hasn't stopped goalkeepers Doc Schneider and Drew Adams from engaging in a highly-entertaining one-on-one battle for each of the last four years.

It's a friendly rivalry that has produced four brutally-frustrating games for offenses, countless acrobatic saves, 106 denied shots and has seen two young goalkeepers develop into two of the premier stoppers in the country.

Every time UMass' Doc Schneider and Penn State's Drew Adams line up across from each other, a game of can-you-top-this ensues. And you can tell that both savor the opportunity when the Minutemen and Nittany Lions face off in the yearly ECAC battle.

The two don't really know each other personally, but they are certainly familiar with the other's skill sets, and it's a rivalry ,built upon pure respect and admiration.

"I think Doc is actually a little underrated – he should be getting more publicity than he does," Adams said of his counterpart. "I think he's the best goalie that I've played against in college. There are a lot of things I admire about him in the way that he plays."

Schneider recalls having a great respect for Adams before he came to Amherst, before Adams had even heard of Doc.

"It's fun because he came in as a highly-recruited kid and I was kind of under the radar, so I kind of always looked up to him," Schneider said. "It's obviously made me step up, because I know every time he's on the field, he's going to make a bunch of saves."

Isn't that the truth? In four career meetings, the dueling duo has produced seven double-digit save efforts, 50-plus saves apiece, an epic overtime encounter, four close and riveting games and never let the opposing offense score in double-figures.

Yeah, they're pretty good.

"Two of the best goalies in the country in my opinion – no doubt about it," said UMass coach Greg Cannella on Saturday, following Schneider's third-career win over Adams. "And both of them have been very consistent throughout their entire careers and that's what makes a great goalie in my mind."

Penn State coach Glenn Thiel couldn't help but smile when asked what it's been like to see those two guys go at it.

"They're two of the best," he said. "They're competitors and I think they rise to the challenge a little bit."

Saturday's 9-8 final was the highest-scoring affair in the rivalry. They've certainly frustrated more than a few offenses in their careers.

See GOALKEEPERS on page 8

Cook ends stellar freshman campaign

BY HOLLY J. GALVIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Amidst campus rumors about cuts in the athletic department, the reigning Atlantic 10 Most Outstanding Diver was too busy becoming the first-ever Massachusetts diver to compete at nationals to worry.

Freshman Jason Cook, an Amherst native, established his reputation as one of premier freshman divers in the country, placing in the Top 30 overall in both events at last week's NCAA Diving Championships. The freshman placed 28th overall in the one-meter dive, scoring 284.15. Similarly, Cook's score of 306.80 was good for 27th overall in the three-meter.

Last Thursday's national championship meet, held on the campus of Texas A&M in College Station, Texas, marked the first-ever appearance by a UMass diver at the NCAA finals level.

As a freshman recruit pulled in from just down the street at Amherst Regional High School, Cook didn't waste much time earning his place as one of the most acclaimed UMass divers of all-time. Undefeated all-year in the three-meter dive up until Zone A Regionals, Cook set a school record in the three-mater dive 359.63 at his very first collegiate meet in November's Terrier Invitational at Boston University.

The rookie notched 16 overall first-place finishes this season, highlighting a year when the Minutemen won their eighth conference championship of this decade.

Much of Cook's success can be attributed to UMass diving coach Mandy Hixon, who has molded the freshman's skills from a young age, and according to head men's swimming coach Russ Yarworth, was instrumental in the recruiting process.

Hixon, a veteran swimming and diving staffer who also coaches the Minutewomen divers, knows what it's like to receive recognition on the elite national level. The former Amherst College coach was named NCAA Diving Coach of the Year in 1990, immediately before receiving her master's degree in sports management program from UMass in 1991. Hixon has coached multiple A-10 champion divers in the past, including recent Most Outstanding Diver recipients R.J. Rappe (2008) and Karen Upperco (2009).

As for Cook, his final national's scores were preceded by a second-place finish out of a field of 57 competitors at the Zone A Diving Regionals, where he landed a score of 641.25 on March 13.

The rookie's record-breaking season didn't just include school records, however, as Cook topped multiple all-time categories at February's A-10 Championships. He now holds both first place A-10 records with scores of 636.85 in the one-meter and 680.75 in the three meter, respectively.

Prior to his record-breaking freshman campaign, Cook was a three-time high school All-American, where he captured virtually every school and state record.

Holly J. Galvin can be reached at hgalvin@student.umass.edu.

Reddy, Lyons leading young UMass roster

Draw controls, offense solid for Minutewomen in 2009

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Senior midfielder Meghan Reddy of the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team was named the UMass Co-Athlete of the Week for her performance in the Minutewomen's two victories last weekend.

In those games, a 17-2 win over La Salle last Friday and a 10-8 victory against Saint Joseph's Sunday, Reddy combined for three goals and one assist – but her true contribution was her ability on face-offs.

UMass Lacrosse

Reddy had 15 draw controls in those two games, including 12 against the Explorers – third-most in the NCAA in a single game this season.

In a sport where winning the draw is crucial to having a strong offense, Reddy's play has been a major asset to the team.

"This year she has really been a dominant force on the draw. In our sport the face-off is very crucial to possession in our game," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said at the UMass weekly sports luncheon. "Meg had 12 draw controls last Friday, so she gave us 12 opportunities for our team to score and that was crucial."

Venechanos is very proud of the improvement that Reddy has made in her senior year. After totaling nine points last season, Reddy has become an offensive force, notching 20 points, including 16 goals with at least five games still remaining.

"Meg has really stepped up her senior year; it has been an honor to coach her the last two years," Venechanos said. "Each year she has gotten better in a lot of different areas."

In addition, her leadership has been invaluable to a team that has a great deal of youth. As one of three seniors on the team, she is a source of veteran experience her teammates can draw from.

"She really put the team on her back this weekend," Venechanos said.

Venechanos credited Reddy's success to her assistant coaches, who have been working with her before practice on her draws and overall technique.

HOMECOMING

After playing eight of their first 11 games on the road this season, the Minutewomen had been looking forward to a return to their home stadium.

That wait is over, as UMass will enjoy a four-game home-stand over the next two weeks. Even better for the team, the stretch comes during the heart of conference schedule.

UMass comes into this weekend with a 2-0 conference record, both wins coming on the road. Coincidentally, both teams the Minutewomen will host this weekend, Richmond and George Washington, also have 2-0 conference records.

If the Minutewomen can beat both teams, they will be in a great position to claim the Atlantic 10 regular season title.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophomore attack Jackie Lyons leads UMass with 21 goals and 29 points this season. She had nine goals and 13 points in 2008.

LYONS PRIDE

Coming off a freshman season that saw Jackie Lyons earn a slot on the A-10 All-Rookie Team, Venechanos had high hopes that Lyons could be a player that could

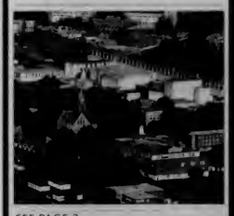
See W. LACROSSE on page 8

the daily collegian

THE STATE'S OLDEST DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM APRIL 3, 2009

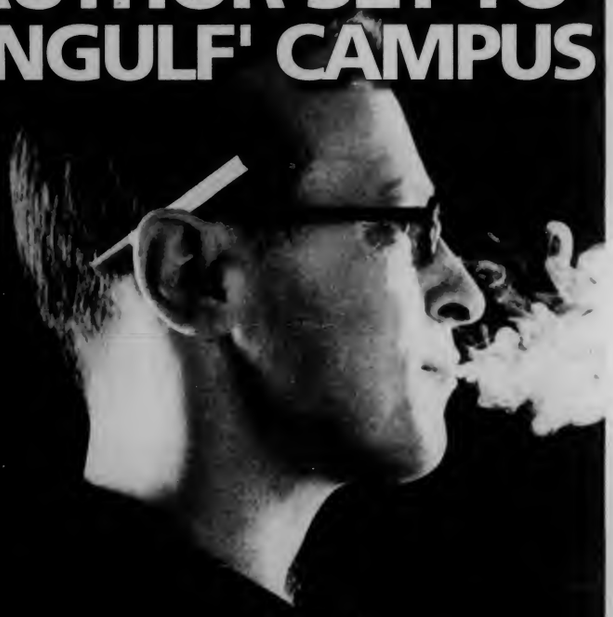
inside this issue:

SPORTS



SEE PAGE 10

ARTS&LIVING



SEE PAGE 8

NEWS

SEE PAGE 2

AUTHOR SET TO 'ENGULF' CAMPUS

DAVID SEDARIS TO SPEAK AT THE FINE ARTS CENTER

Page 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIX
ISSUE 43

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Waszczuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Leigh Greaney
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenswaike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolneirz
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Koczwara
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Turtinen
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Larnard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo P.J. Stanley
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Weliver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED. OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE 7TH-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. SULLIVAN
COPY EDITOR
MICHELLE FREDETTE
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHAEL SARKES

Economy hits admissions

5-college area sees fluctuations

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The economic crisis in America is directly affecting universities across the country and prospective students are looking to get into these institutions before there are no more spots available.

University of Massachusetts Director of News and Information Ed Blaguszewski noted that he doesn't believe that there is a negative spike in the admissions rate at UMass.

"I don't know that there is a trend connected to the early admissions numbers [of the past]," Blaguszewski said.

"In 2008 we had 8,045 applicants and that's a record for UMass. However, when all is said and done in terms of total admissions, we are pretty close to even in terms of the last year."

UMass saw 6,222 applications of early admission in the fall of 2008, nearly 2,000 more than in 2007. According to the University of Massachusetts Office of Institutional Research, the University accepted 80 percent of those early applicants, 1percent higher than the previous year's total.

UMass is an outher in the Five Colleges because its rate of acceptance of early applications last year was at least 20 percent higher than three of the four other colleges.

While the acceptance rate of UMass was quite high, the yield was low in 2008. This means that, of the number of students who were accepted to UMass, only a small number of them actually enrolled at the University. This number has been on a steady decline since the fall of 2001.

In the fall of 2008, only 4,144 of the 18,602 accepted applications were enrolled in the University.

Smith College is a significantly smaller institution. An all women's college, Smith's student body consists of just 2,596 students. Smith had the second-highest acceptance rate, accepting 64-percent of its early enrollment applications. According to the Smith office of admissions, in the fall of 2008, Smith saw a 6-percent increase over last year's numbers in overall applications.

It would seem that the economic crisis has made people act quicker to ensure admission to their institution of choice. The admissions office at Smith produced 20 percent more accepted early decision applications than it did in the fall of 2007.

Smith College Director of Admissions Debra Shaver has noticed the positive trend in acceptance rates.

"We are delighted with the increases, especially in light of all that's happening with the economy," said Shaver. "For Smith I think the real question is how the economy will affect the yield for our regular decision students. Given the state of the economy I think the decisions students and families will make this [coming] year will be driven a great deal by finances."

Mt. Holyoke has a 53 percent general admission acceptance rate and a comparable 52 percent early admission acceptance rate.

However, getting there is only half the battle; total fees are another story. According to the Mt. Holyoke website, the curriculum comes at a price: $48,000. About one third of the applicants this past fall actually made it into Mt. Holyoke and these students have impressive résumés.

Approximately 36 percent of the class of 2012 was in the top 5 percent of their respective high school class and another 25 percent were in the second 5 percent.

The total of accepted students into the class of 2012 at Mt. Holyoke was 1,645 – 71 percent of the school's entire student body. If the economy continues to be unstable, this number could drop considering Mt. Holyoke's high price tag.

Amherst College has one of the lowest early acceptance rates of the Five Colleges at 34 percent, and is also one of the most costly. According to the Amherst College website, as of the fall of 2008, tuition and room and board alone cost $46,760. An estimation of the total costs including books and other student fees totals out to at least $51,000.

The decline of the economy has played a role in the declining acceptance rate at Amherst College. Among the applicants for the class of 2012, 404 students applied under early decision and just 138 students enrolled. The college hasn't had above a 40 percent enrollment rate since 2003 and with a 1,600 student total.

With a student population of 1,350, Hampshire College is the smallest of the Five Colleges. Hampshire differs from other schools in that it has no concrete years or majors. Hampshire accepted 1,628 students for the fall of 2008. Of these, 244 were early decision students, according to the 2008 entering class profile.

Hampshire accepted only 15 percent of its early decision applicants and 50 percent of its general applicants. However as second-year student Taylor McNeilly explains, Hampshire doesn't really have strict application requirements.

"I think the nature of [Hampshire] makes it less likely that there will be an early decision," McNeilly said. "I don't know how big early decision is a most schools but most people apply [general application] to Hampshire. The fact that it's a private school makes people feel as though that they shouldn't apply because they can't afford it."

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

The economy...could be worse

Ben Williams

So the economy sucks, I know. For the past six months it seems The Collegian has run a story every other day explaining in great detail just how much the economy sucks.

And it does, at the beginning of April I am excited to see the headline "Dow passes 8,000," unemployment is almost as high as 1983 levels and people are having more and more difficulty finding fewer and fewer jobs.

But we are the lucky ones.

The unemployment rate of 8.9 percent recorded in the United States Department of Labor annual report is an average of some 16 different unemployment rates for different industries.

The industries with scary unemployment rates are those like mining, quarrying and oil and gas extraction, which has an unemployment rate that has more than tripled from 2.2 percent last year to 7.6 percent this year. Other hard-hit areas are agriculture, which rose from 10.9 to 18.8 percent and manufacturing, which has nearly doubled to 21.4 percent.

Now here's the question: How many people here were deciding to go into farming, manufacturing, or mining? I'm sorry to those of you who are.

But the industries where many students are planning on going into are actually not faring too badly.

The three lowest unemployment rates outside of government employees and self-employment are in the information industry (7.1 percent), financial activities (6.7 percent), and education and health services (4.1 percent).

"Things are down, no question we don't have as many listings as in the past," said Ginger Goldsbury, associate director of Career Services at the University of Massachusetts. "We have one company interviewing here today – usually we would have many more.

"[But] the truth is companies are hiring, they need to keep their pool of people active," she continued. "I was at a meeting this week with people from Millipore, and they're trying to increase the number of people at the entry level. Because they're interested in having new blood, companies have to do that. They will hire, just not as many. You just have to be confident no matter how bad you feel."

Companies have to hire, for many of the same reasons they have always had to hire: other employees leave, get fired, die, retire, whatever.

Most companies just aren't growing, so they only have a few positions open, and you'll need a leg up to get one. Good thing you have one: a college degree.

Not to toot UMass' horn, but we have a relatively respectable school here, not to mention a career services department whose job it is to get you a job, and make your résumé look pretty.

There is always the problem of experience (employers want people with experience, but you can't get experience unless you get hired, etc.) but that's when it's time to swallow your pride and work for nothing.

Go get a job at McDonalds, live in your parent's basement and volunteer your time at some place that will give you relevant experience. If you're persistent, few places are going to turn down free labor from a motivated person with a bachelor's degree.

"Do[ing] whatever [you] can do to keep active and [keeping your] minds active is very important," said Goldsbury. "Also temp jobs, they're not usually fun and you don't get paid that much, but you can find a job that way. You can't count on it, but it will give you a few dollars and health insurance."

The economy is bad, no doubt about it. It may be hard to find a job doing what you want to do, but employers are hiring, and they're looking to hire people cheap. So take a crappy entry level position or work for nothing, and you will probably make it out alive.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliams@dailycollegian.com.

Salmonella in pistachios leads to FDA recall

By Mary MacVean
Los Angeles Times

Consumers could be forgiven for feeling a little weary about this week's recall of pistachio nuts that could be contaminated with salmonella.

It comes just weeks after thousands of products containing peanuts were voluntarily recalled in a salmonella outbreak that made nearly 700 people sick and follows food-borne disease outbreaks connected to peppers and spinach. "As consumers, we all have that reaction, 'Here we go again,'" said Jeff Levi, executive director of the Trust for America's Health, a Washington-based nonprofit organization that has been advocating for reform of the food safety system.

But the string of alerts keeps food safety on the minds of Americans and ultimately could lead to legislative reform.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration told consumers Monday to stop eating anything containing pistachios – a broad effort to keep people from getting sick while investigators looked for the source and extent of problems. The government was tipped off by Kraft Foods on March 24, after the company found salmonella in routine testing and recalled some trail mix.

The pistachio recall "is the latest reminder of how vulnerable our food safety system is," Levi said. "It is encouraging that this response was so quick, but we need to move to a system that focuses on prevention through the entire food production process."

Notices of potentially contaminated foods containing pistachios and peanuts could continue for weeks, in part because both products are used as ingredients in other foods. As of Thursday afternoon, several dozen products were on the FDA's recall list.

But the two recalls are not related, federal officials said. And there are marked differences between them.

In January, the FDA traced the source of a nationwide salmonella outbreak to a Peanut Corp. of America plant in Georgia after several reports of illnesses. Nine deaths have been linked to the outbreak, and the FDA has alleged that the company knowingly shipped products after lab tests detected salmonella.

The pistachio recall, by Setton Pistachio of Terra Bella Inc., was not triggered by illness, but the FDA said Thursday that several reported illnesses have been reported that might be associated with the nuts. And, unlike in the peanut recalls, the companies involved moved quickly.

Once Kraft learned of the salmonella test by a company in its supply chain, it began its own investigation, sending auditors to Setton, said Laurie Guzzinati, a spokeswoman for Kraft Foods. The auditor "observed raw and roasted pistachios not properly segregated," she said.

Setton, the country's second-largest producer of pistachios, voluntarily recalled 2 million pounds of pistachios from its 2008 crop. The nuts had gone to 36 companies, either for repackaging for sale to consumers or for use as ingredients in other foods, such as ice cream or cake mixes, said David Acheson, the FDA's assistant commissioner for food safety. All 36 companies have been contacted, he added.

Campus hair day

William McGuinness/Collegian

Students get their hair styled at the Garnier Fructis promotion that took over most of the Campus Center concourse yesterday.

Accused Nazi camp guard deported to stand trial

By Craig Whitlock
The Washington Post

BERLIN — An accused Nazi concentration camp guard living in Ohio will be deported Sunday to stand trial on murder charges in Munich, according to the German Justice Ministry.

John Demjanjuk, a native of Ukraine who emigrated to the United States in 1952, is scheduled to arrive in Munich on a commercial flight Monday morning, said Guenther Maull, a defense lawyer representing him in Germany.

After a long investigation, a Munich court issued an arrest warrant last month for Demjanjuk, considered by Nazi hunters to be one of their most important remaining targets from World War II. He is wanted on 29,000 counts of accessory to murder for his actions as a prison guard at the Sobibor death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland in 1943.

Demjanjuk, who turns 89 on Friday, will be imprisoned immediately in Munich and will undergo medical examinations to determine whether he is fit to stand trial, Maull said. He said Demjanjuk suffers from early-stage leukemia, kidney problems and rheumatism.

"He's an old man, a very sick and old man," Maull said in a telephone interview.

Demjanjuk's family has said he is too frail to make the trip to Germany, let alone endure a lengthy murder trial. But the U.S. Department of Justice turned down a request to allow him to remain in the United States on humanitarian grounds, his lawyer said. Demjanjuk will be accompanied on the flight to Munich by a doctor, a nurse and a U.S. law enforcement official, Maull said.

New nanotechnology promises better medicine

By Paolo Esquivel
The Daily Princetonian

PRINCETON, N.J. — In just a few years, people may be able to get their complete genetic codes as well as medical treatments tailored specifically to their needs for only $100 – or so promises an up-and-coming technology developed by Princeton faculty and researchers.

The new technology, called nanofluidics, was recently named one of the "most exciting" and influential Ten Emerging Technologies of 2009 by MIT's Technology Review magazine.

Jointly developed by physics professor Robert Austin and engineering professor Stephen Chou, nanofluidics analyzes genetic material in several potentially useful ways using intricate metal chips with long, smooth, extremely narrow branching channels.

Austin explained that balls of stringy DNA isolated from single cells can then be threaded through the channels and are gently stretched out into one strand in the process.

"You slowly suck [the genetic material] into the tubes," he said. "It's like threading string through the eye of a needle. It's difficult."

With the molecule in this more readable form, Austin explained, scientists may get a chance to observe a single cell's genes more easily.

According to Technology Review, this could mean that for "less than the cost of a chest x-ray," physicians will soon be able to treat individual cancer cases better by looking at the genetic material of tumors. "The doctor could determine the particular genetic changes in the tumor cells and order the chemotherapy best suited to that variant," the article explained.

This technology, which Chou said may usher in an era of personalized medicine, has been licensed since 2003 by the Philadelphia-based company BioNanomatrix, founded by Han Cao, a biologist in Chou's lab.

Cao, the chief scientific officer of BioNanomatrix, said nanofluidics will eventually replace the dominant technique used to read information encoded in DNA, explaining that "inherently, it's expensive and it's inaccurate" to continue using today's strategies.

Modern strategies for reading genes, he added, have produced a sequence of the human genome so incomplete and inaccurate that it has had to be revised 36 times since 2003. "But even in the 36th version [of the human genome], there are still many gaps and errors," Cao said.

The promise of nanofluidics to keep genetic material intact while reading it is more useful now that "genetic analysis is not just about reading the bases" – the individual letters in the DNA's instructions for building a person – anymore, he explained.

Instead, Cao said the new technology will emphasize major changes in the genome, including how many copies of a gene a person has or whether sections of the molecule have been accidentally inverted.

"Its application will most likely be looking at large scale genomic rearrangement," Cao explained.

"The use of [nanofluidics] will not be sequencing per se," Austin explained. Unlike current ways of looking at DNA, the techniques they have developed will not be "ignoring the forest for the trees."

The technology's advantages stem from the fact that nanofluidics does not shred the genetic material into tens of thousands of pieces before reading it, said Edward Cox '68, a molecular biology professor who contributed to the initial development of nanofluidics.

Since today's sequencing techniques can only read small chunks of DNA, they must fragment the genetic material being analyzed. Those pieces then have to be joined together again, a process that is very error-prone.

Tearing genes apart in this process makes it difficult to determine how many copies of them an individual possesses or whether the genes have been erroneously duplicated – factors that influence people's susceptibility to many diseases.

Because nanofluidics conserves genetic material more effectively, it will be particularly useful for figuring out which genes come from which parents, Cox added.

The development of nanofluidics took off 10 years ago, when Austin first teamed up with Chou, then a newcomer to Princeton.

But Cox said he is unsure how soon the readout system will be ready or if it will be finished at all. "There can be magic somewhere out there, but I don't know where it is," he said.

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF." - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Primary care: more special than specialized

The U.S. is flowing within a sea of crises – including economic meltdown, two wars abroad and global warming. Now, we have a crisis within a crisis – the shortage of primary care physicians in the failing U.S. health care system.

A primary care physician is someone who links their patients to the world of health care. They learn everything about their patients, from their personal relationships to their diabetes.

Rachel Gotbaum, in a National Public Radio documentary, said, "at the turn of the 20th century, these were family doctors who worked in their community, handling patients' day-to-day medical needs, including surgery. By the end of World War II, the country had recognized the value of medical specialists."

Ebad Rahman

Since then, doctors have been entering specialist fields at an alarming rate, leaving primary care in shambles. They are pursuing fields like anesthesiology, cardiology or pulmonology. A specialist-based system is devastating our health care and it stands in the way toward reaching a universalized health care system.

Primary care works because it allows doctors insight into the patient as a whole. This allows them to see the patient's family situation, work life and other personal factors, while in turn allows the patient to create a trusting relationship with their doctor.

In the specialist-based system, care is focused on one ailment or disease. In the primary care method, patients are given continuous treatment that focuses on their particular human circumstance.

With a holistic understanding of patients and through strong doctor-patient relationships, doctors cannot only cure patients, but prevent future ailments. A hospital in Alaska decided to switch to a person-based health system, by connecting every individual and family to a specific staff member.

The increased resources spent on catering to the individual was more than compensated soon after the reorganization when visits to the emergency room dropped 50 percent and referrals to specialists by 30 percent. Waiting times were also reduced significantly.

Robert L. Dickman, a professor at Tufts Medical School, wrote in The Boston Globe, "Increased quality and decreased costs can be directly correlated to the number of primary care physicians in relation to specialists. Many Western healthcare systems have … worked to achieve a ratio close to 50-50. In the United States, it is more like 30-70. Today fewer than 10 percent of U.S. medical students have expressed an interest in the primary care disciplines."

> In the primary care method, patients are given continuous treatment that focuses on their particular human circumstance.

In Massachusetts General Hospital, patients cannot even gain access to a primary care provider. All the primary care providers are booked, and people are left without a guide through the health care system.

Gotbaum said, "At Massachusetts General Hospital twenty-five percent of the patients who come to the E.R. don't have a primary care physician. Others are here because they couldn't get in to see their doctor. It's an expensive way to practice medicine: the costs to be treated here are three to five times higher than in a doctor's office."

The World Health Organization recognizes the need for primary health care in our globalized world. In the "World Health Report 2008," it stated, "people are increasingly impatient with the inability of health services to deliver levels of national coverage that meet stated demands and changing needs – few would disagree that health systems need to respond better and faster – to the challenges of a changing world. PHC can do that."

The work of a primary care physician is tough. The high demands put on these physicians through long work hours and poor pay actually makes one of the biggest joys of medicine – caring for patients – less appealing. A survey of primary care physicians across the nation showed that most would not pursue primary care if given another chance.

Vishal Joshi, a doctor at the Burgdorf Health Center in Farmington, Connecticut, in the NPR interview said, "in Canada, the primary care physician is more respected, is given the tools and given support he requires to do his job in a fulfilling manner, not only for him but for his patients. Here in the United States, one feels he's more successful if he was to have a specialty, rather than staying in primary care. Primary care has been relegated towards the backwaters, almost, of the American health care model. The system is almost fighting against the primary care physician which is very unfortunate."

Primary care lacks the pizzazz of cutting-edge technology or the thrill of saving someone who is facing almost certain death. The difference in salary is also significant.

Primary care physicians can expect to start off at a salary of about $135,000 and a specialized physician can expect to make $200,000 plus.

With the desperation of paying off medical school debt, the choice of specializing is a no-brainer.

President Barack Obama has recognized the need for more primary care physicians in our nation. These physicians will need to get higher salaries, more support from medical schools and greater recognition for the work they do.

The field needs to be reinvigorated to restore it to its proper place and to win back our place as one of the healthiest nations in the world.

Ebad Rahman is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at erahman@student.umass.edu.

Marriage is made out of love, not slamming gavels

Matthew Robare

Next week the Vermont House of Representatives will likely pass the most anti-climactic piece of legislation in the 21st century so far. Vermont looks to become the third state allowing same-sex marriage, despite the fact that the law creating civil unions guarantees same-sex couples the exact same benefits of civil marriage. The bill passed in the state Senate by a large margin – 26-4 – and with a Democratic supermajority in the House, will likely pass easily.

Governor Jim Douglas, on the other hand, has already promised to veto the bill. His only reason? He agrees with President Obama that marriage is between a man and a woman.

Now, his veto threat makes him look like a tool – though not, as some have said "like the George Wallace of New England" – and is bringing on a storm of negative criticism. He seems to have forgotten that in Vermont, gubernatorial terms last two years instead of four, and the veto will be remembered next November.

Governor Douglas has also said that the General Assembly ought to focus on balancing the budget and that same-sex marriage is a distraction. But by threatening to veto the bill and encouraging a huge outpouring of emotion, he has made it a distraction.

Way to put your foot in your mouth, Mr. Governor.

Now, I would just like to say that I agree entirely with this end – the more perfect extension of natural rights to all (for it is surely a right to do with one's property and sexuality as one pleases, without infringing upon the rights of others) – but I cannot agree with the means. More power to the state, another government intervention.

Why does government always find ways to insert itself into every facet of human existence? Is there some perverse, voyeuristic pleasure had by bureaucrats and legislators who pass and enforce laws concerning what is and isn't permissible in the bedroom?

> Is there some perverse, voyeuristic pleasure had by bureaucrats and legislators who pass and enforce laws concerning what is and isn't permissible in the bedroom?

The government simply should not be between the sheets with you and your partner(s). The government has no more right to be involved with homosexual, interracial or polygamous/polyamorous marriages/relationships than it does with heterosexual. No group of people has – because of their membership in one particular group – more rights than any other.

Rights are individual, not collective. Any time rights are attributed to the members of a group by the government because of their membership in that group. This is wrong.

Consequently, legalizing same-sex marriage in Vermont is not a victory against an immemorial oppression, but instead creates new oppression.

I say do not pass laws controlling sexuality, repeal the laws that made same-sex marriage illegal in the first place. It's got to be as easy as making new laws. While they're at it, they can repeal laws making polygamy illegal.

All of us need to realize that marriage, when viewed secularly, is an agreement between people to share their own property (and at various times the virtual enslavement of women).

There's no need for government involvement at all, simply the recognition by us individuals of our rights and the willingness to defend them when threatened. One of the great things about the Vermont bill is the care which went into phrasing it to prevent it from being used against religious organizations which do not support same-sex marriage.

The right of an organization to determine its membership – or rather the right of a person to decide whom she socializes with (free association) – is just as inalienable as the right to determine one's own sexuality. However, I emphasize the point that individual rights are absolute only so far as they do not infringe upon the rights of others. This is something we tend to forget, I think, in questions over civil and human rights.

For instance, a clenc ought to no more be forced to do something (as be required by law to perform a marriage which their church views at the least as unsacramental and at the most as sinful) against their religion or personal conscience than the morality of the particular religion can be forced upon the populace.

Unfortunately, the history of the entire world is nothing less than individual rights being infringed upon for the benefit of some other group. In this country, wealthy white Protestants used legislation and tradition to unjustly gain privileges out of well, everyone else – the middle class, the poor, women, blacks, Catholics and immigrants.

The privileges have withstood the test of time, but the fact of the injustice remains. As St. Thomas Aquinas said, "An unjust law is no law." No doubt he would have also said that it's better to do the right thing later than to never do it all.

Matthew M Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached att mrobare@student.umass.edu.

On the railway of life, there are allies and enemies

Rachel Dougherty

I took a train ride to Virginia a couple of weeks ago. I like the train. It's nice to be able to watch the cities pass by at fewer than 30 thousand feet. A couple of hours into the trip, the train got crowded and this guy climbed into the seat next to me. He was in his mid-twenties, wearing a sort of cowboy hat and carrying a long canvas pack. He told me his name was Roy. He spoke with a heavy accent, and for a while I couldn't tell whether he'd said he was from Israel or Brazil.

Eventually, I made out that he was from Israel, but had just flown in from Brazil. Roy had just been released from military service in Israel and was doing a sort of world tour before he went back to school. He'd spent the past month traveling across Brazil and Argentina. He showed me pictures from his trip, talking in broken but enthusiastic English about the beauty of those countries and the people he'd met. At one point in the conversation, he turned to me, and asked,

"Have you ever seen the b*tches of Brazil?"

I just stared at him, slightly mortified, as he started to pull out his camera.

"My god," he said, "the b*tches of Brazil are the most beautiful in the world! I laid on those b*tches for hours! Beautiful, Beautiful. I will show you pictures!"

It was a couple of minutes before I realized that what he was trying to say was "beaches."

The beaches really were beautiful. He showed me pictures of Sao Paulo and Buenos Aires, and I told him what to expect when he got to his cousin's house in Washington D.C. Roy was excited to see White House and the Capitol building and the usual tourist spots, but most of all he wanted to see what he called "the prehistoric animal that is living in Washington D.C."

> It was then that it occurred to me that this adorable guy who was so excited to see the beaches of Brazil and the squirrels of Washington DC could have been involved in the invasion of the Gaza strip that occurred.

I didn't know of any prehistoric animal living in Washington D.C., and, laughing, I asked him what he was talking about.

"The one in the American movie, the Ice Age," he said.

"Oh, you mean woolly mammoths! Like at the Smithsonian?"

"No, no, it is small, this animal, and supposed to be everywhere in D.C. Very cute, this animal, with the big furry tail, and so funny in the movie!" I thought for a moment, then said,

"You mean squirrels?"

"Yes! This is the word! Oh, when I see this animal, I will take so many pictures!"

Roy was a great train companion. At the end of the ride, he made me promise I would visit Israel someday. It is not so dangerous, he said, as people seem to think. Just the one small part. Roy had spent two years in a parachuting division in the Israeli military, fulfilling the mandatory service required of Israeli citizens.

"The majority of the fighting is not against another country," he said. "It is inside, the fighting is within Israel itself."

"Gaza?" I asked.

"Yes. Gaza."

It was then that it occurred to me that this adorable guy who was so excited to see the beaches of Brazil and the squirrels of Washington D.C. could have been involved in the invasion of the Gaza strip that occurred.

The Israeli military invasion of Gaza, codenamed Operation Cast Lead, began on Dec. 27, 2008, when the Israeli Air Force bombed over 170 targets over Gaza, killing 230 Palestinians and injuring at least 700. The invasion marked the end of the six-month cease-fire that had maintained an imperfect peace in the Gaza region since June 2008.

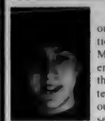
That peace had rapidly disintegrated in the weeks leading up to Operation Cast Lead; once the cease-fire expired on Dec. 19, escalating violence on both sides drew Gaza back into a state of war.

Actual statistics on the death tolls vary depending on whether the source is Israeli or Palestinian. Last Thursday, the Israeli military issued its first casualty count from the invasion, in which it claimed that 1,166 people had been killed, 295 noncombatants, 709 labeled 'Hamas terror operatives," and 162 left unidentified. The Palestinian Center for Human Rights in Gaza estimates the death toll at 1,417, with just 236 combatants, 926 civilians, and the rest unidentified.

The numbers are almost a perfect inverse, depending on which side you take in the conflict.

The invasion came to a unilateral ceasefire on Jan. 17 under intense international pressure. The 2008-2009 invasion of Gaza has been termed the Gaza Massacre by many in the Arab world, due to the large number of civilian casualties. Israel denies accusations of war crimes in the conflict.

As the train pulled out of D.C., I wondered how much of the violence Roy had really seen in his time in the military. How much he might have taken part in. He was 24 years old, just a guy who wanted to lie on the beach and send pictures of squirrels back to his mom. It seemed insane that just three months earlier, his division might have been bombing Hamas in the Gaza strip.



The U.S. has always supported the Israelis in the conflict in Gaza. But there is no good in this fight. There is no right side, just two overcrowded peoples killing each other.

In the end, are we enemies? Allies?

Or just two people talking on a southbound train.

Rachel Dougherty is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at rdougher@student.umass.edu.

Benching expensive sports

Eli Gottlieb

Recently, we've found out that the administration of the University of Massachusetts was considering cutting funding for the UMass men's baseball team. And while many came out against the measure – seemingly defeating it for the time being – I have to ask: Why do we support the baseball team with money that comes from student fees and the Massachusetts taxpayers?

From what I've heard, the baseball team requires nearly $500,000 a year to function. This is spent on training trips to warm climates in the early wintry months of the spring semester that house student athletes in fine hotels. More popular sports, such as football and basketball, take up even more resources.

What I want to know is – why them? What makes non-profitable athletic programs so important that they deserve hundreds of thousands of dollars during a fiscal crisis unlike any since the Great Depression? Moreover, what makes some non-profitable athletic programs, like baseball, more worthy than others, like Shotokan Karate? In other words, where do I get some of that?

To speak seriously, I am not aware of any academic organization inside my department or college that receives such large-scale funding from the general public budget for such recreational expenses as travel. Nor do I know of any athletic club or student group practicing a sport (that does not fall under the official purview of UMass Athletics) receiving such money.

> Quite frankly, in this economic recession we ought to strike a strong blow for the "nerds" by cutting the brand-name sports, increasing funding for non-brand-name sports, or increasing funding for academic clubs.

The actual reasons for this are, of course, old culture and custom. The dichotomy between subsidized official athletics that complain when their extravagant budgets receive cuts and mere clubs or Registered Student Organizations that have to charge fees and jockey with bureaucrats just to get space for practices comes from one of the oldest rivalries in any university: jocks versus nerds.

Here, "jocks" encompass those students who participate in official, subsidized sports under the UMass brand name. UMass actually provides excellent exercise and sports facilities for all of its students, but these get to play and travel under the Minuteman name. Apparently, some of them even have such pride in their sports, they'd be willing to discard that prestigious name and transfer to another university should their sport receive budget cuts.

"Nerds," in contrast, refers here to those students who tend to place academics at the top of their priority list and/or participate in nontraditional sports without the UMass brand name.

The Parkour Club, various martial arts groups, Ultimate Frisbee and the Ski and Board Club all fall under this group, despite their being very real sports that involve training, strength, discipline and competition. Those bastions of non-sporting "nerd" activity such as the mathematics department, the Mass Games Club (sponsor of Humans vs. Zombies) and Commonwealth College, for some reason, continually receive only scant funds compared to even the less profitable, less prestigious Minutemen teams – such as the baseball team.

Jocks are cool – people like them and understand their achievements.

Nerds are lame – their achievements lie in esoteric endeavors interesting only to the nerds and the people who benefit immensely once history verifies a particular nerd activity as an advancement of human civilization. Lack of understanding begets a lack of interest, and a lack of interest begets derision for the practitioners.

Quite frankly, in this economic recession we ought to strike a strong blow for the "nerds" by cutting the brand-name sports, increasing funding for non-brand-name sports, or increasing funding for academic clubs.

The Parkour club may look like a bunch of crazy kids trying to mimic movie stunts, and the precise subtleties of Shotokan muscle-control may elude the uninitiated spectators, but I don't see any reason why these sports have less intrinsic worth to UMass than baseball or volleyball.

I can understand football's and basketball's official sponsorship and funding – ticket sales from these games actually generate profit for the University. However, I don't understand why a sport that makes no money and carries no real prestige for this university should receive large sums of money just because a national league shown on television also plays that sport while equally enjoyable sports that also enhance human life have to scrounge for pennies.

The purposes of sports are to entertain an audience, to allow the players to enjoy themselves and to allow the players to better themselves mentally and physically.

Despite my argument in favor of cutting funding to certain sports – such as baseball – that seem a bit too big for their britches at the moment, I actually favor the provision of as wide a multitude as possible of sporting opportunities for UMass students.

I just think that we should take the economic climate into account. At the moment, we really can't afford to give any sport that can't sustain itself more than starvation wages. Let's bring the university to financial sustainability before giving all sports the money they need to go warm happy places in the winter.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu

arts&living

YOUR WEEKEND GUIDE TO ART, MUSIC, FILM & CULTURE — ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sedaris to engulf UMass

Acclaimed author to speak at FAC

By Alex Butler
Collegian Staff

DAVID SEDARIS
FINE ARTS CENTER
AMHERST, MA
SUNDAY, APRIL 5
8:30 PM / $30 - $60

On Sunday night, David Sedaris will be featured at the UMass Amherst Fine Arts Center. The renowned writer will be reading selections from his various collections of memoirs, essays and short stories centering on his family life.

Sedaris' first began his writing career, ironically enough, in the radio broadcasting industry. He appeared on National Public Radio's "This American Life," and remained a frequent guest for some time. His breakthrough piece "Santaland Diaries," which depicts his part time job as a Christmas elf named Crumpet at Macy's — was an instant success and prompted his move to The New Yorker magazine and Esquire, where he remains a frequent contributor. January Magazine said Sedaris' 2001 collection, "Me Talk Pretty One Day," was "published to practically unanimous rave reviews."

His entire bibliography consists of seven collections of essays and memoirs. One collection, "Children Playing Before a Statue of Hercules," was edited by Sedaris and is a mix of some of Sedaris' favorite stories by different authors. Sedaris has also been releasing audio book components to each of his works. One audio book, "Dress Your Family in Corduroy and Denim," was nominated for a Grammy Award for Best Spoken Word Album in 2004. Several tracks even feature audience members breaking into hysterics. His high-pitched, nasally voice complements his satirical tone to give the autobiography a strange twist. It's self-deprecating humor at its best.

His stories range from childhood right up to present day, and readers get a big view into Sedaris' personal life. In Sedaris' stories, he addresses subjects which range from the troubles of smoking, to the awkward transitions of life in France, hitchhiking across the U.S. with a handicapped friend, trying to make coffee with no water, buying drugs in North Carolina and working as an apartment cleaner in New York City.

His collections have no bounds, but nothing can top the stories in which he gives accounts of his own family. Though many critics claim the stories are "intentionally exaggerated," readers are able to experience much of the author's North Carolina upbringing. The family, coming from New York, was seemingly doomed from the start. Sedaris has four sisters and one brother: Lisa, Gretchen, Tiffany, Amy, and Paul. All are subject to his dry wit and sarcasm, but at the forefront are Sedaris' eccentric mother and father. Lou and Sharon are the brut of the most biting stories, but, still, there is an endearing element that never fades.

"To me," Sedaris explained in one story, "the greatest mystery of science continues to be that a man could father six children who shared absolutely none of his interests."

But, as it turns out, talent runs in the family as well. Together with his sister Amy, Sedaris wrote several plays under the pseudonym, "The Talent Family." Amy also starred in the Comedy Central original series, "Strangers with Candy," which follows 46-year-old heroin addict Jerri Blank as she returns to high school. She recently produced a film adaption of the show, featuring comedian Stephan Colbert and actor Justin Theroux.

Sedaris' most recent collection, "When You Are Engulfed in Flames," was published last year and received glowing reviews. One of the most interesting pieces details the author's attempt to quit smoking cigarettes. After years of trying to stop smoking, Sedaris resolved to move to Japan in order to successfully quit. Since the book's release, he has been featured on "The Daily Show with Jon Stewart" and read from the book on "The Late Show with David Letterman."

But above all, Sedaris' live performances are hailed as equally entertaining as the books themselves. Publishers Weekly commented, "his expert timing, mimicry and droll asides are never more polished than during live performances in front of an audience ...[when] listeners can hear Sedaris' energy increase from the roaring, rolling laughter."

Sedaris' book tour stretches until mid-May and will take him all across the country, but Sunday's show will be one to remember.

There will be a special Student Rush Discount on Sunday night. Students who arrive with a valid student I.D. one hour prior to the show will be able to receive half-off on two tickets. Tickets are available now at www.fineartscenter.com, by calling 413-545-2511 or 800-999-UMAS, or in person at the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

Alex Butler can be reached at ajbutler@student.umass.edu.

(MCT)

Author David Sedaris will be speaking at the Fine Arts Center Sunday night. Sedaris is touring in support of his latest work "When You Are Engulfed in Flames."

the source
PLANNING YOUR WEEKEND SO YOU DON'T HAVE TO.
SAVE THE DATE

JIMMY FALLON

JIMMY FALLON , NEW HOST OF NBC'S "LATE NIGHT," AND FORMER CO-ANCHOR OF WEEKEND UPDATE WITH TINA FEY, WILL BRING HIS STAND UP ROUTINE TO THE CALVIN THEATRE IN NORTHAMPTON ON SATURDAY APRIL 18. TICKETS ARE NOW AVAILABLE FOR PURCHASE THROUGH THE NORTHAMPTON BOX OFFICE

VENUE: THE CALVIN THEATRE
DATE: SATURDAY, APRIL 18
DOORS: 8:00 PM
PRICE: $32.50

Unraveling the urban legends

Laxatives and 'Scooby Doo' among campus folklore

Maggie Frelend & Joe Stahl

Do these four characters look familiar? According to legend, the characters of "Scooby Doo" are caricatures of stereotypical students from each of the Five Colleges. UMass is said to be Scooby himself.

Everyone knows the story of the Bermuda Triangle. For over a half a century, ships and planes have been known to mysteriously disappear within the Triangle's perimeters. But the University of Massachusetts also has an urban legend that pertains to a geometric shape: a circle. It is the urban legend of the Grade Circle.

Have you ever gone into a test thinking you did well only to find out you failed miserably? Blame it all on the Grade Circle, located between Curry Hicks (The Cage) and Munson. This white, concreted area half-surrounded by benches is rumored to be a zone detrimental to your grades. If one walks through the Circle the morning before a big exam, you are more likely to do worse.

"I don't buy into it, but I constantly see people avoid it," UMass student Gillian Ball said. However, while she is not a believer it is evident many other people are.

"One time I stepped in the circle and my friend physically picked me up and told me about the story. The whole way back to Southwest he lectured me about why you can't step in it," said Maia McDermott, UMass student. "I'll never step in it again."

UMass' urban legends don't stop there, however.

It'll go right through you

Everyone has his or her favorite dining common. Whether you like Worcester for its Oak Room or Berkshire for its cleanliness, one thing is for certain: The food definitely isn't your mama's cooking.

Talking about your bowel movements is not usually the most appropriate thing to do, but if you have ever left the DC running for the bathroom, this one is for you.

Students from every region of campus gripe about the food and its aftereffects. It isn't anything new; DC cooking is known to be treacherous. But really, do the cooks actually put laxatives in the food?

This urban legend, claimed to be fact by many students, comes from the school's students' fear of food poisoning.

Because the food is cooked in mass quantities to feed over 10,000 students a day it is not unlikely to think that some food may be undercooked. Thus, laxatives are supposedly added in order to relieve the students of the food before food poisoning sets in.

According to Ken Toong of UMass Dining Services, "This is not true at all." Toong said the myth originated over 20 years ago when his generation attended college. Back then the food was not of the standard it is now, he said. There were preservatives and many additives to keep the food fresh. Toong explains this is where the term "mystery meat" comes from, and makes and assurance that the UMass DC food is not mystery meat at all.

"Never would we put any preservatives or chemicals in the food. The food had to be good. In fact we are proud of our food. At UMass we focus on all natural and fresh food," said Toong. "We are concerned that the food has to be healthy to support the variety of people who eat at the DCs."

Toong went into depth about the

See LEGENDS on page 9

READ ARTS DAILY
ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
OPEN LATE NIGHT TILL 4 AM!

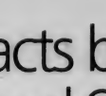
COURTESY EPIC RECORDS

The unusually-named Margot and the Nuclear So and So's will perform next Monday at Northampton's Pearl Street Clubroom.

CINEMARK®
The Best Seat In Town
Advance tickets & showtimes available online at cinemark.com
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. • 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp 1118#
EARLY BIRD SPECIAL M-F, 1ST MATINEE SHOWTIME $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)
$5 Tuesdays are back!! All shows all day are $5!!

◆ FAST AND FURIOUS [PG13] 120 230 355 510 630 750 910 1025
◆ ADVENTURELAND [R] 140 435 730 1020
◆ MONSTERS VS ALIENS - 3D [PG] (1200- only 4/3 - 4/5) 220 440 700 920
◆ MONSTERS VS ALIENS [PG] 110 330 550 810 1030
◆ THE HAUNTING IN CONNECTICUT [PG13] 145 445 740 1000
◆ 12 ROUNDS [PG13] 135 410 705 955
◆ DUPLICITY [PG13] 105 400 715 1005
◆ I LOVE YOU, MAN [R] 125 440 745 1015
◆ KNOWING [PG13] 115 415 725 1010
◆ RACE TO WITCH MOUNTAIN [PG] 130 420 710 935
◆ WATCHMEN [R] 100 430 800

Friday Night Rewind 4/3/09
SWINGERS - Midnight



Senior Show 10am

CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Eccentric acts bring show to Pearl Street

Margot, Cloud Cult to visit NoHo

By Angela Stasiowski
Collegian Staff

MARGOT & THE NUCLEAR SO & SO'S
PEARL STREET NIGHTCLUB
NORTHAMPTON, MA
MONDAY, APRIL 6
7:00 PM / $15

Modern trends have encouraged bands with pretentious names and equally pretentious sounds to flood the independent music scene. Few of these artists are able to live up to the creative complexities of their moniker, but Indianapolis's Margot and the Nuclear So and So's remain a shining exception to the rule.

The band makes Northampton's Pearl Street Clubroom their destination on Monday, April 6, spreading their orchestral pop to the Pioneer Valley.

Margot, a hodgepodge of singers and musicians who share a love of haunting melodies and full sound, is fronted by the exceedingly talented Richard Edwards.

Before finding success with his current bandmates, Edwards had performed in several defunct acts, including Archer Avenue and Joey Hamilton.

At last, Edwards founded Margot in 2004, releasing a debut album the following year, entitled "The Dust of Retreat." The album was later re-released on Artemis Records in 2006, propelling the band into the awareness of the public and media alike.

This freshman effort featured the stunner "Skeleton Key," which caught the attention of high profile music magazines Paste, Spin and Marquee. The song's melancholy strings paired with Edwards' nonchalance created a highly individualistic style, the likes of which are uncommon from an up-and-coming band.

As for the curious name, there is no shortage of rumors circulating about its exact origin. One explanation cites Edward's non-existent daughter "Margot" in conjunction with his fondness for George W. Bush's infamous mispronunciation of the word "nuclear" as the inspiration, but the band has admitted that this is pure speculation.

Another source suggests that the name is derived from Gwyneth Paltrow's portrayal of Margot in Wes Anderson's "The Royal Tenenbaums."

Neither the logic of the handle nor its origin is nearly as difficult to pinpoint as the band's influences. Combining standard electric guitar and keyboard with everything from synth and melodica to banjo and glockenspiel, the band creates dynamically striking tunes that explore every angle of modern music.

In addition to being unconventional, everything about the band is fiercely individual. In the early stages of its career, the entire 8-piece band shared a home in Indianapolis.

Margot's latest album was actually released as two separate records, "Animal" and "Not Animal." After recording around 20 songs for the album, there was a dispute between band and label as to which songs would be included on the new record.

As a result, "Animal" is the album as Margot intended, while the latter is Epic Record's vision. Both were released late last year, but "Animal" is only available on vinyl or by download.

Despite several overlapping tracks, including "A Children's Crusade on Acid" and "As Tall as Cliffs," the albums are completely separate entities.

Many of the songs on "Not Animal" were previously recorded as demos during their "Dust of Retreat" era tour. Songs like "The Ocean (Is Bleeding Salt)" had been well received by Margot fans, and thus found their way to the next studio release.

Keeping with the standard set in place by "The Dust of Retreat," the new material features Edwards' heart-soaked vocals that cradle his songwriting amidst acoustic guitar and keyboard compliments. Occasionally, the ensemble swells into tidal walls of sound that parade the band's individuality via assorted instrumentation.

"I just want it to be loud and have a lot of weird harmonies," said Edwards of the latest album in an interview with Cincinnati's CityBeat Magazine.

Several members of the band maintain other side projects in addition to Margot, with four of its members making up the indie rock outfit Pravada.

Also featured on Monday's Pearl Street bill is Cloud Cult, which falls on the more experimental side of indie rock. The band approaches every

See MARGOT on page 9

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Dining habits, not Commons to blame

LEGENDS from page 7

quality of the food at dining commons, explaining that they go as far as to ask suppliers to reduce the sodium levels in the menu items for health purposes. If such demands are not met, Dining Services changes suppliers or makes the product from scratch themselves. Therefore, with UMass Dining Services so concerned with the quality and health of the food, the likelihood of laxatives being added to the food appears slim.

So we can only speculate as to why DC food sends you running for the bathroom.

The first factor that may be responsible for the unfortunate bowl movement myth, other than laxatives, is the buffet style of the dining commons. Unlike Emerson College and many others, the university doesn't mandate how much one student can consume in one sitting. For obvious reasons, simply overeating may be the root of your personal problem.

The type of food you are choosing to stuff your face with may also be a contributing factor. The main culprit: insoluble fiber. This type of fiber, commonly found in vegetables and nuts, assists in the elimination of waste from the body. According to Jane Williams at UMass Dining Services, there are over 30 different vegetables always available at all DCs. Now that's a lot of vegetables.

A second natural laxative that is immensely consumed by college students is coffee. If you are a java fanatic, beware that it is a stimulant containing antioxidants, which generally helps to facilitate release in your back door region. According to Williams, UMass purchases roughly 10,000 pounds of coffee each year that is 420,000 6 oz. cups of coffee.

"Zoikes!" UMass inspires Saturday morning cartoon

Around campus, it is generally recognized that UMass Amherst has the reputation of a party school. Known as "ZooMass," the university has a history of being wild and crazy even back in '69, the year when the cartoon series "Scooby Doo, Where Are You!" was first aired. No wonder UMass is called the "Shaggy" of Scooby Doo.

Legend has it that the Saturday morning cartoon, "Scooby Doo, Where Are You!" was created based on the Five College stereotypes. The tale has Velma representing Smith College, Daphne as Mount Holyoke, Fred representing Amherst College, Shaggy as Hampshire College, and Scooby as UMass. "It's cool to think it may be true … it makes sense," said Nick Hally, 19, a political science major at UMass.

However, while people continue to maintain this legend around the Five College area, it was actually revealed to be an uncanny coincidence. According to Hally's friend, James DiMaio, 20, a business major, this can be done with any show consisting of five characters with different personalities. "It's typical. It can be done with anything, like The Ninja Turtles. There are five of them, including Splinter, and one is definitely known as the party guy."

Yes folks, the college stereotypes may fit the characters in the show but "Scooby Doo, Where Are You!" was actually created in 1969, a year before Hampshire College opened in 1970. In the past the creators, the production company and CBS have been asked if this legend is true and they all responded that it is false. Unfortunately, because the show is so old, none of the creators are available for comment because they are too far underground to pick up a phone.

Whether they are composed of facts, speculation or a combination of the two, make what you will of these UMass urban legends. And no matter their validity they will always be in the back of our minds.

COURTESY UMASS DINING SERVICES

According to Ken Toong, UMass Dining Services have improved the quality of food provided to students greatly over the last twenty years.

Nudear So & So's in NoHo

MARGOT from page 8

genre from folk to chamber pop without settling into any sort of classifiable sound.

For those music fans who are environmentally conscious, Cloud Cult has found the most earth-friendly way to produce and distribute their music.

The band tours in a biodiesal van and frontman Craig Minowa owns his own green recording company, Earthology Records. The label uses only recycled plastic and donates all of their profits to charities that work to better the environment.

Most notable about the earth-conscious crusaders' live shows are the original paintings they create during each show. The painting is then auctioned off to an audience member at the end of the performance.

The band isn't just about showy displays of artistic prowess, however. Cloud Cult crafts the sort of catchy alternative rock eccentricity that likens them to such acts as Bishop Allen and the Mountain Goats.

Both Cloud Cult and Margot produce what has become know as "scarf rock," a term accidentally coined by Edwards to describe the style of "The Dust of Retreat."

Margot & the Nuclear So and So's are an exemplary case of chamber pop at its finest, incorporating orchestral arrangements with sharp pop lyrics to create a sound that is all its own.

The band prides itself in accurately translating the rich textures and soundscapes of its recorded work onto the stage. The band's live performances are so intense the members have even been known to smash a cello or two in the process.

Allowing these two musical eccentrics to meet on the stage is bound to create some tuneful fission.

Margot and the Nuclear So and So's will perform at Pearl Street Clubroom in Northampton at 7 p.m. on Monday, April 6.

Angela Stasiowski can be reached at astasiow@student.umass.edu

COURTESY EPIC RECORDS

Margot and the Nuclear So and So's are currently touring in support of two albums.

Ski programs cut by McCutcheon

As part of $850,000 athletic budget reduction, both ski teams dropped

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

Over the past week, the University of Massachusetts baseball program was the rumored casualty of the $850,000 budget reduction of the athletic department.

Instead, the men's and women's ski teams took the brunt of the damage on Thursday when UMass athletic director John McCutcheon announced both programs would be dropped as varsity sports.

The baseball program, as well as the other 18 teams at UMass, appears to be safe – at least for now.

"This is an extremely difficult decision," said McCutcheon in a prepared statement released Thursday. "The skiing programs have been a big part of the athletic history at UMass. We want to recognize the contributions that those associated with the programs both past and present have made to the University.

"Additionally it is our intent to support a transition to club sport status for both teams. It is our sincere hope that current and future skiers will have an opportunity to have a positive experience at the club level."

Skip Fox, who coaches both the men's and women's teams, did not immediately return a message seeking comment.

According to the release, the athletic department will also "make administrative reductions, across the board operating cuts and use non-base funding to fill the remaining gap," to reach the $850,000 budget reduction.

Amy Gifford, a member of the women's team, told The Daily Collegian that members of the team received e-mails at 9:30 a.m. Thursday morning requesting their attendance for a meeting at 11:30 a.m. with McCutcheon.

That's when McCutcheon explained to the teams that the athletic department had decided to cut the skiing programs.

"A lot of us came to UMass so we could come to ski, none of us expected that this would happen," she said. "I'm disappointed and frankly shocked even though I knew our school was having a lot of budget issues."

Gifford said a team meeting was held Wednesday night discussing the possibility that this might happen.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

UMass athletic director John McCutcheon announced Thursday that the men's and women's skiing teams would no longer be varsity sports next year.

"We had heard the baseball team might get cut, so we thought we might have a chance since we're such a small team and have such a low budget anyway – as opposed to the baseball team which has such a large budget," she said. "But, I think some of us were questioning whether they'd actually cut the baseball team."

UMass baseball coach Mike Stone reacted to the news Thursday afternoon.

"It's too bad when any sport gets cut," Stone said. "We're reenergized and excited about not having to deal with the rumors and the distraction of that situation."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

FOREVER 21

FOREVER 21 • FORLOVE • GADZOOKS
XXI • HERITAGE1981

Forever 21 is one of the most dynamic and rapidly growing retailers in the fashion industry.

We are pleased to announce our new store expansion opening in:
Holyoke Mall • Holyoke, MA

NOW HIRING ALL RETAIL POSITIONS
SALES, CASHIERS, VISUALS, MANAGERS, STOCK AND HOUSEKEEPING

Please join us at our job fair in the HOLYOKE MALL
April 9th: 12pm-8pm • April 10th: 9am-5pm
Open interviews in front of the new XXI Barricade, lower level

For a great opportunity and career growth, apply now!
Please send all inquiries to Vincent.d@forever21.com

Tennis team drops match to BC, streak extends to 5

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

After a frustrating trip down South, the Massachusetts tennis team returned to the Bay State in the hopes of righting their recent struggles.

But the change of scenery didn't help much, as the Minutewomen fell to Boston College, 5-0 on Wednesday night.

The loss dropped UMass to 8-11 on the season extending its current losing streak to five. The Minutewomen, unable to establish a set order for their players, had sophomore Kaitlyn Carpenter slotted in the No. 1 singles spot against BC freshman Katarina Gajic. Carpenter went on to lose the match, 6-2, 6-3.

UMass sophomore Tanisha Hodgson had an even tougher time at No. 2 singles, suffering a 6-0, 6-0 decision against BC's Katharine Atwell. The No. 3 match was the closest of the day, as UMass junior Maude Lecluyse's effort sent the second set into a tiebreak. She would go on to lose the match, however, 6-3, 7-6(3) after dropping the tiebreaker. At No. 4, UMass senior Lauren MacKay lost to Jackie Mabatah, 6-1, 6-3.

Doubles play was not much better for the Minutewomen, as they dropped each of their matches by considerable margins.

At No. 1 doubles, Hodgson and Carpenter faced BC's Dasha Cherkasov and Lauren Cash in an 8-2 loss. UMass' strongest doubles tandem this season, Laura Danai and Leclyuse – who carried an undefeated record for a large part of the season – were defeated by Alina Sullivan and Brittany Delaney, 8-4, in No. 2 doubles. At No. 3, UMass' Lauren MacKay and Gabriella Jannotta were defeated, 8-0.

The Minutewomen's current losing streak is the worst they've had all season, topping their previous mark of three in a row back in late February.

UMass will next travel to Hamden, Conn., for a match against Quinnipiac on Sunday.

Quinnipiac, which has lost its last two games, is 5-8 on the season. Before its match against UMass, Quinnipiac will face both Sacred Heart and Farleigh Dickinson.

Unlike UMass, which has battled some injury problems, Quinnipiac has a set order for its players coming into matches. The team's No. 1 player, Mary Wilson, is 12-10 in singles play, and shares an 8-11 record with doubles partner, Adrienne Markison. Markison is the No. 2 singles player, and holds a 9-12 singles record on the year.

UMass coach Judy Dixon is trying to shake things up a bit with the order, switching the lineup around frequently throughout the second half of the year.

Dixon is trying to find the right fit before the Atlantic 10 Championships that begin on April 17.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Crucial A-10 games on tap for UMass

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

The last time the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team faced Richmond, the ending couldn't have been more dramatic: a game-tying goal with one second left in regulation, and an overtime goal to send UMass to the Atlantic 10 Tournament finals.

Besides a fond memory, that game no longer means anything to the Minutewomen come Friday.

"We have a completely different team, they have a completely different team and it's going to be a completely different game," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We played them twice last year and both of those games are in the past."

FILE PHOTO | COLLEGIAN

Sophomore midfielder Haley Smith crashes the net in a game earlier this season. The Minutewomen have won two straight conference games and have two more big tests this weekend.

Her players said almost the exact same thing.

"We're a new team, they are a new team, so we look at their key players, but we try to focus on us," senior captain Jackie Rosenzweig said.

UMass (5-6, 2-0 A-10) and Richmond (2-9, 2-0 A-10) will battle for the division lead in the first meeting since the Minutewomen's 10-9 overtime victory in the 2008 A-10 Tournament.

While it will be a different game, the teams aren't completely different. Richmond has 11 players returning from last year and UMass has seven. And though players change, rivalries don't.

"I think our intensity will carry over [from last year], because they've been rivals to us for years," senior Meghan Reddy said. "Everyone's pumped up for this because this is such a big game. I think everyone will look back at that game because a lot of people remember that game."

Friday's game has two teams that are very similar facing off for control of the division. Both teams have strong offenses, a rebuilding defense and a misleading record because of extremely tough schedules.

UMass has faced five teams ranked in the Top 15 in the nation; Richmond has faced five in the Top 20. The Minutewomen have done better against that competition and they feel the out-of-conference experience will help them in this key matchup.

"Those are out of conferences games, but you learn so much because those are top teams and you can learn from your mistakes," Reddy said.

On offense, UMass has displayed a very balanced scoring attack, as four players on the Minutewomen have at least 20 points. Sophomore standout Jackie Lyons leads the team in goals (21), assists (eight) and total points with 29.

UMass matches up well with the Spiders' defense, which has surrendered over 15 goals per game. The Minutewomen worked on offensive set drills throughout practice this week and they plan to show how far they have come against Richmond.

Defensively, UMass is young – with the exception of Rosenzweig, a senior who will be the anchor in the backfield. The Spiders boast two players on the team with more than 40 points, Mandy Friend and Allison Furstenburg.

Richmond also has Lexie Marrocco, who scored six of Richmond's nine goals the last time these teams met.

"They are a very potent attack, they have been scoring double digits most of the year," Venechanos said. "We are going to do the best we can defensively and try to make it a long game."

After the matchup on Friday, the Minutewomen will host George Washington which also heads into this weekend at 2-0 in conference play.

This weekend is a major turning point for UMass. Two wins and a tournament berth are all but assured, but a slump this weekend could have UMass chasing teams in the standings.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

ANNOUNCING A SPECIAL 1/2 OFF STUDENT RUSH DISCOUNT*!

AN EVENING WITH
DAVID SEDARIS

SUNDAY, APRIL 5TH 8:30 PM
AMHERST, MA
FINE ARTS CENTER

TICKETS: FINE ARTS CENTER BOX OFFICE
413/545-2511 OR VISIT WWW.UMASS.EDU/FAC

Illustration copyright 2008 michael schwab studio

*Available 1 hour prior to show at box office only. Must present Student ID. Limit two tickets per ID

New life: Baseball program saved by UM

With rumors quelled, Minutemen head home for first time in 2009

MICHAEL PHILLIS/COLLEGIAN

UMass second baseman Adam Tempesta slides home safely in a game against Xavier last season. The Minutemen will play their home opener this weekend against Temple.

By Adam McGillen
Collegian Staff

After an announcement from the University of Massachusetts on Thursday that the baseball program would have another season, the Massachusetts baseball team enters the weekend on a five-game skid to take on Temple in a three-game home-opening series.

The Minutemen (6-14, 1-5 Atlantic 10) will host the Owls at Earl Lorden Field in Amherst Friday-Sunday.

The announcement comes as a relief to a team approaching the halfway point of its season.

"It's too bad when any sport gets cut," said UMass coach Mike Stone on Thursday, also noting that the news lifted pressure from the team. "We're reenergized and excited about not having to deal with the rumors and the distraction of that situation."

After playing 20 games on the road to start the season, this weekend's series marks the return of the Minutemen to Amherst. A return sweetened by the news that the program would not be cut as a result of the paring back of athletics to satisfy a shrinking budget at UMass.

Faced with imminent cuts across the board, John McCutcheon, UMass' athletic director, has been careful in releasing any information about which varsity teams may get the axe. Many of the rumors surrounding the need for cuts pointed to baseball as a likely candidate for removal.

On Thursday UMass announced the discontinuation of skiing as a varsity sport for both men and women, sparing a baseball program that has played at UMass since the 19th century.

Road woes have plagued the Minutemen, including a record of just 3-9 in one-run games. Playing conference-foe Fordham in a three-game set last weekend, UMass dropped all three games by a one-run margin – including a 10-inning loss in the second of two games last Saturday.

Jared Freni (0-1, 4.50 earned-run average) will start on the hill Friday, Mitchell Clegg (1-1, 5.46 ERA) will get the call Saturday and Mike DiCato (2-2, 5.97 ERA) will be on the mound in the series finale on Sunday.

After losing to Connecticut on Monday, the Minutemen took a 5-1 lead into the seventh at Holy Cross on Wednesday, but gave up five unanswered runs to drop another game by a single run.

"We're on the verge. For the last week and a half we've played pretty well. We just never finish very well and put it all together," Stone said.

This weekend's opponent, Temple (11-12, 6-0 A-10), is currently tied with Dayton atop the A-10 with a perfect 6-0 mark in the conference. All of Temple's conference victories came in weekend sweeps of the two worst teams in the conference, Duquesne (4-22, 0-5 A-10) and La Salle (9-14, 0-6 A-10).

In last weekend's sweep of La Salle, Temple outscored the Explorers 25-14 overall before dropping a non-conference game to Villanova on Tuesday.

Temple struggled earlier this season, losing eight straight games. But the Owls have since turned things around, winning nine of their last 12, due in large part to the offensive efforts of senior second baseman Carmen Del Mastro.

Named A-10 Player of the Week on Monday, Del Mastro leads the Owls with a .441 average, 28 runs scored and 12 stolen bases. He leads the conference in hits (41) and stolen bases, and his average is third in the A-10.

UMass senior second baseman Adam Tempesta and junior outfielder Brian Baudinet lead the Minuteman offense going into the Temple series. Baudinet is batting .345 and has scored 16 runs for UMass. Tempesta has a .338 average and three home runs on the season, leading the team with 17 runs batted in. Sophomore Peter Copa also has 17 RBIs for the Minutemen.

Temple has also struggled on the road, with a record of 2-6, but the Owls have had plenty of opportunities to play at home, where they are 8-5.

Adam McGillen can be reached at amcgille@student.umass.edu.

The 13th Annual "Traumedy" Jam

FREE COMEDY

Bartlett 65 7-11pm

Friday April 3rd & Satudray April 4th

It's good for you. Trust us...we're doctors.

www.studentvalleyproductions.com

Student Valley Productions 's Comedy Jam is generously sponsored by the Alumni Association, the Arts Council & Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund

INTERESTED IN WRITING FOR SPORTS?

CONTACT ELI ROSENSWAIKE @

sports@dailycollegian.com

UMass junior center fielder Carly Normandin went 5-for-6, including a home run, in Thursday's doubleheader sweep over Vermont at the UMass Softball Complex.

Senior ace Brandice Balschmiter became the second pitcher in school history to surpass 1,000 career strikeouts. She joined Danielle Henderson, who taught her how to pitch growing up.

Minutewomen sweep DH

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

There were plenty of bright spots to Thursday's doubleheader for the Massachusetts softball team against Vermont.

UMass pitcher Brandice Balschmiter became the second pitcher in school history to reach 1,000 career strikeouts, Carly Normandin went 5-for-6, Samantha Salato hit two home runs and the Minutewomen (18-6, 4-0 Atlantic 10) won both games handily over the Catamounts (3-23).

Still, there were flaws in UMass' efforts that concerned UMass coach Elaine Sortino.

"I thought we were very sloppy," Sortino said after UMass won Game 1, 6-0, and Game 2, 8-2. "I thought we were almost complacent or pressing at the plate. Every now and then we would come up with a pretty good at-bat … I just didn't think we had consistency in anything we did."

Despite Balschmiter's shutout performance, she wasn't hitting her spots – hitters were getting too much of the ball and she threw a lot of pitches early on.

"I didn't think she pitched a great game, honestly, I didn't," said Sortino. "She put too many balls on the plate and I didn't think that [Vermont] should handle the ball and put it on play the way they did. She's better than that."

Balschmiter, too, acknowledged her coach's assessment.

"I personally did not pitch well today," Balschmiter said. "I had a horrible day on the mound. I got lucky a lot of times on the mound, which isn't good."

Still, it wasn't all negative for the senior. Balschmiter became just the third active player in the nation to total 1,000 strikeouts.

"I knew it was within reach," Balschmiter said. "I was hoping that I would get to it considering the amounts I've had in the past couple years."

"I think obviously it's a remarkable accomplishment over a long period of time and I'm happy for her," Sortino said.

The record is one thing, but Balschmiter knows that the overall team success is far more important.

"It feels pretty good. I think it feels better to get the wins today," she said .

Balschmiter's accomplishment wasn't the only positive aspect of the games.

Normandin provided her team with an opportunity to either extend UMass' lead or gain the lead every time she came to bat.

The junior went 5-for-6 with two RBIs and a walk, not to mention two extra-base hits, including a home run.

"[Sortino] has just been talking about me being a good tone setter – me trying to get one base, to get good timing and so people can just pick up from my momentum," Normandin said.

In Wednesday's win against Dartmouth, it took the Minutewomen a couple of innings to fully grasp the release point of pitcher Hillary Barker. Sortino talked to her players before Thursday's games about making adjustments quicker.

Whatever Sortino said, worked.

The Minutewomen found their hitting stride almost immediately against the Catamounts. UMass hit five home runs including two by Salato – one of which was part of back-to-back homers with Sarah Reeves in Game 2.

Picking up two wins was another positive for the Minutewomen. The doubleheader sweep extended UMass' win streak to seven. The Minutewomen's last loss came against Florida Gulf Coast on March 15.

Then, there were the negatives. Despite sweeping the day's series, Sortino didn't take any pleasure in the way her team won both games. She holds her team to a very high standard and that standard was not met in her mind.

Sara Plourde, the starter in Game 2, also wasn't at her best. The freshman struck out 11, walked one and only gave up one earned run, but Sortino expects much more from her.

"Terrible. I thought it was probably her worst outing of the year," Sortino said. "She wasn't hitting the glove; she didn't have great control of her pitches … That's why [Vermont] had a couple of doubles. She's better than that and she knows it."

The Minutewomen will have another chance to sharpen their skills when they play Saint Louis in a doubleheader on Sunday at the UMass Softball Complex.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

Balschmiter racks up 1,000 career K

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Instead of looking up to Danielle Henderson, Brandice Balschmiter is now right beside her.

"I've known Danielle since I was 11 years old watching her play," Balschmiter said Thursday after she joined Henderson as the second Massachusetts softball pitcher to reach 1,000 career strikeouts. "I grew up working with her and learning to pitch with her."

Henderson, who toed the mound for the University of Massachusetts from 1996-99 and later for the U.S. Olympic team, previously had been the only Minutewoman to ever strike out 1,000 batters in her career. But in the fifth inning of the first game in Thursday's doubleheader against Vermont, Henderson's teaching took that honor away.

After striking out the previous four batters, Balschmiter faced Vermont's Margaret Hilton with her career strikeout total at 999. On the third pitch of the at-bat, Balschmiter fooled Hilton to strike her out looking.

The strikeout gave Balschmiter her 1,000th punch-out, becoming just the third active player in the country to reach the benchmark.

"It is great to be up there with [Henderson] and hold that honor," Balschmiter said.

Balschmiter struck out two more in her start as she racked up her 13th win of the season. The senior went six innings in the outing, giving up three hits while striking out 12, bringing her career total to 1,002 strikeouts.

"Obviously it is a remarkable accomplishment over a long period of time," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "I'm happy for her because that is a pretty great goal."

Balschmiter knew the record was near, and has known since the beginning of the season, but she was more pleased the team got two wins on the day than reaching an individual milestone.

"I knew it was in reach. I was hoping that I would get to it considering the amount I've had in the past couple of years," Balschmiter said. "It feels good, but I think it feels better to get the wins today."

While Balschmiter has no chance of breaking Henderson's career strikeout record (1,343) by the end of the season, other UMass records are in reach for the senior. She currently ranks second behind Henderson in career appearances (153), innings pitched (925), wins (105), complete games (118) and shutouts (57) and can realistically reach all of those marks this year – except for career shutouts.

With nine more appearances, 39.2 more innings pitched, four more wins and 14 more complete games, Balschmiter would pass the UMass legend who taught her and become the record holder in each of those categories.

Henderson is also the career earned-run average leader (0.70) at UMass, but she will likely be holding onto that crown for a while. Balschmiter (1.04) currently ranks third all-time behind Henderson and Lynn Stockley (0.81).

In 2009, the ace of UMass' staff ranks among the nations best pitchers. Balschmiter's nine shutouts rank sixth in the country and her 1.34 ERA in 2009 is 42nd lowest in the country.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

comics

JOURNALISM AT ITS FINEST

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office. $11.00/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 17th.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ATTENTION ALL JUNIORS AND SENIORS! FALL 2009 INTERNSHIP APPLICATIONS ARE NOW AVAILABLE AT THE STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE. GET HANDS ON EXPERIENCE IN THE FIELD WORKING WITH ATTORNEYS AND CLIENTS. EARN UP TO 12 UNDERGRADUATE CREDITS, NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY, WE'LL PROVIDE TRAINING. APPLICATION DEADLINE IS APRIL 13th. CONTACT OUR OFFICE AT 545-1995 OR STOP BY AT 922 CAMPUS CENTER.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Worship at Dwight Chapel on Sunday mornings at 9 or 11. For rides and information please call us at 256-8059 or visit www.dwightchapel.org

FOR RENT

Amherst: 2,3, & 4 bedroom apartments, $1200-$2250. FREE HEAT! Great Specials! www.MillValleyApts.com or 413-253-7377

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

ACROSS

1 Inquires
5 British titles
10 Dollop
14 Facial feature
15 Group founded by Jakob Ammann
16 Easy gait
17 President of a nation, who died in 1980
18 Coarse blanket
19 Guy with a mean brother
20 Site of Grand Canyon University
23 Part of a hammer
24 Author of "The Purloined Letter"
25 Rely
28 Small appliances
33 Label maker
34 Coeur d' ID
35 Swimmer's distance
36 Acne
37 Blue-black fruits
38 Horse's feature
39 Summer at the Sorbonne
40 Bilbao figure
41 Dog's problem
42 Developing location
44 Alit
45 Suffix for cloud or chill
46 Eve's boy
47 Site of the Socrates' school
54 Medley
55 Foil cousins
56 Classrooms for science majors
58 Mr. Martin
59 Girl's name
60 Magazine title
61 Unaided
62 Ayr residents
63 One-dish meal

DOWN

1 Behave
2 Vessel
3 Thanksgiving invitees
4 Nosy people
5 Condemned
6 Speedily
7 Saucy miss
8 "¿Cómo ...?"
9 Hones
10 Burned brightly
11 Wolf
12 Frank
13 Bartok or Lugosi
21 ... meercy
22 Actress Skye
25 Stunned
26 Hit Broadway play
27 Pumpkin eater
28 Flower
29 Sickening look
30 Animal with twisted horns
31 Extent
32 Quickness
34 Singing voice
37 Disdainful ones
38 Sewer workers' entrances
40 Width x length
41 School subj.
43 Loose garment
44 Lets
46 Weather condition
47 Signals assent
48 Product sold cold
49 100 dinars
50 Petroleum assn.
51 Casino activity
52 Drink
53 Skilled
57 Mend

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

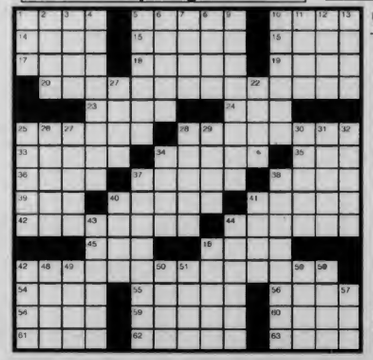
www.dailycollegian.com

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst Outreach



Online or On Campus

Plan now for the summer

Session 1: June 1- July 9
Session 2: July 14- August 19

Registration Ongoing

Check our classes at Spire or UMassULearn.net

follow the breadcrumbs

TRICK BAG BY ANNIE KEITHLINE

Scandihoovians
SCANDINAVIAN DESIGN FOR LIVING A BEAUTIFUL LIFESTYLE

27 Strong Avenue Northampton, MA (413) 584-0002
25 S. Pleasant Street Amherst, MA (413) 254-0004
SCANDIHOOVIANS.COM

I'll give you "business experience," Baby.

| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | 4 | 8 | | | 6 | 9 |
| | | | 2 | | 5 | | |
| 9 | | | 5 | | | 3 | |
| 5 | 7 | | | | | 1 | |
| | 3 | | 2 | | 7 | 5 | |
| | 9 | | | | | 8 | 2 |
| | 4 | | | 1 | | | 5 |
| | | 5 | | 8 | | | |
| 8 | 1 | | | | 6 | 3 | |

INTERESTED IN GETTING BUSINESS EXPERIENCE?

THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS A NEW BUSINESS MANAGER FOR 2009-2010.

APPLICATIONS ARE AVAILABLE AT 113 CAMPUS CENTER, DUE WEDNESDAY APRIL 8TH, BY 5 PM.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Surprise your professor when he walks into his office today by waiting naked on his desk. A-plus for effort.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Your idea to ride a magic carpet to Bonnaroo with the Genie from Aladdin will sadly fail to ever happen.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
When Michael Vick comes to your house and asks for a loan, explain that there's nothing you can do to help.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You're destined to pull together lasting world peace today. If for some reason that doesn't occur, it will have been your fault.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
The landlord will not be pleased when you attempt to pay your rent in rolls of nickels and dimes.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Be careful if you attend the performance of Beauty and the Beast. They may ask you to fill in as the candle guy.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
The serial killer won't find the rubber gag knife you give him as a birthday gift quite as hilarious, but he will find it useful.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
It is about time you asked yourself this question: "Where, exactly, have all the cowboys gone?"

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
If this were a game of RISK, at this point your New Guinea would be getting ransacked by Genghis Khan.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Go to the Mohegan Sun roulette tables tonight, and put everything you own on black. The gods are with you.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Sagittarius is brought to you by JOHNSON'S "NO MORE TEARS" BABY SHAMPOO - CHOICE OF CHAMPIONS

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
I know the mourning process is long and difficult, but it's time to get over the death of your dog "Sparky" in 1995.

STUDENT DISCOUNT

Beauty & the Beast," a tale of true love and transformation at the Academy of Music in Northampton, April 4th at 1pm & 4:30pm, April 5th at 1pm. Discounts for students (h.s. & college) at the door of the performance. "Rush" seats are $15 and available 1/2 hr prior to each show.

QUOTE OF THE WEEKEND

"Illegal aliens have always been a problem in the United States. Ask any Indian."

— Robert Orben

CHEAP CITY BY MICHAEL CAPOZZOLA

Baseball program safe; ski teams out at UMass

Page 10

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

SOFTBALL

Senior Brandice Balschmiter became the second pitcher in school history to record 1,000 career strikeouts on Thursday. The Minutewomen took both games of a doubleheader with Vermont Thursday afternoon.

SEE PAGE 13

SKIING

Despite rumors that the baseball program was going to get cut, it was actually the men's and women's ski teams that felt the sting of the budget cuts in the athletic department at UMass.

SEE PAGE 10

ISSUE MISDATED

ISSUE DATED

---

SHOULD BE

---

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

RAIN | HIGH: 52 LOW: 40 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, APRIL 5, 2009

Rewriting Dean's Book

Students' dissatisfaction leads to course's restructuring

By Chris Shores
Collegian Staff

The Dean's Book course, one of Commonwealth College's most unpopular requirements, will take a new form starting this coming fall.

For eight years, the Dean's Book has been one of the most notable requirements for the Commonwealth College at the University of Massachusetts. It involved three, one-credit courses in which students met once a week, for seven weeks in two hour blocks. In these classes, students read a book chosen by a committee of Commonwealth College students. Students would then use the book as a starting point toward developing topics, learning research strategies and creating and observing student presentations.

Monique and the Mango Rains was this year's Dean's Book selection. Students said they preferred more talk on the books chosen.

The goal of the Dean's Book class was to teach students research tools that they could use in the remainder of their college careers. At the same time, it brought students from different backgrounds and disciplines together, which could teach collaboration and increase and expand the overall understanding of the individual.

Students did not only dislike the requirement, some absolutely hated it.

As a response to student feedback both through student evaluation forms and through informal discussions with faculty and advisors, Commonwealth College has decided to reshape the requirement. The newly named Honors Seminar Series is an "evolution of the Dean's Book course," said its director, Alex Phillips.

"Basically, we see it as the next step," he said. "It's a way to accommodate students' interests and also to teach the same kind of skills we were trying to teach in the Dean's Book course. Hopefully this will be done in a way that will be exciting and will be timed properly in terms of students' academic careers."

One of the main problems with the Dean's Book course was that the two hour time block made it logistically difficult to schedule, Phillips said. Students would put off the class until their junior or senior years, at which time the research tools they learn in the class wouldn't be useful to them.

To fix this, the Commonwealth Honors Seminar will be a two-credit class combining the first two sections of the Dean's Book program. While this option was briefly offered to Commonwealth College students in recent years, the class still had the same logistical issues of the individual Dean's Book classes. Starting next fall, the Commonwealth Honors Seminar will meet twice a week in regular scheduling blocks. More importantly for Phillips, it will be a first-year requirement for all incoming freshmen.

Those who transfer into Commonwealth College, either externally or internally, will take a modified class to 291G upon their admittance to the honors college.

The other problem students had with the Dean's Book course is the fact that it put little emphasis on the book and too much emphasis on research strategies and assignments.

"There was no focus," said Dan Glaun, a freshman political science major who took the 291G class last fall. "It seemed entirely up to the individual professor for what direction they wanted to

See DEANS BOOK on page 2

Richard Clarke, a former member of the Bush administration, speaks to students following his lecture on the Middle East, Iraq and cyberspace.

Clarke speaks on newest war

By Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano
Collegian Staff

It was one of those days when students just started to enjoy spring, but they, along with faculty, still crammed into a stuffy lecture hall in the Engineering Lab on Thursday to see guest lecturer Richard Clarke, a national security advisor with the Bush administration.

The lecture, titled "The Missing Pieces of the Three 21st Century Wars: Iraq, Afghanistan and Cyberspace," was part of the Sidney Topol lecture series. The event was originally scheduled for October but had to be rescheduled because Clarke, who left the Bush administration in 2003, had his hands full as a member of the Obama transition team, helping the administration sculpt its security policies.

In a series of guest lectures dating back to November 1997, Clarke is arguably the most prestigious name to date. He was appointed by President Clinton as the first coordinator for security and counterterrorism in May 1998 and continued the position with George W. Bush. He is known for his sharp criticism of the Bush Administration's approach to counterterrorism prior to the Sept. 11 attacks, as well as the decision to go to war in Iraq which he claims "is going to get worse

See CLARK on page 2

Storming past St. John's

UMass' Joe Reale battles St John's Dom DeNapoli on the face-off in Saturday's Eastern College Athletic Conference matchup at Garber Field in Amherst. The No. 13 Minutemen dominated early en route to a 12-6 victory to improve to a perfect 3-0 in the ECAC.

No. 13 UMass tops SJU, claims sole possession of first place

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

With Doc Schneider and Diogo Godoi anchoring one of the nation's best defenses, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team didn't need Tim Balise to run wild over St. John's again.

But he did it anyway for good measure.

The senior attack scored four goals against the Red Storm – he tallied six in last year's meeting – as the No. 13 Minutemen dominated the first half en route to a 12-6 victory over St. John's at Garber Field Saturday afternoon.

With Balise, Jim Connolly (three goals) and a stifling defensive effort, UMass (6-3, 3-0 ECAC) entered halftime with an 8-1 lead and cruised to victory to extend its winning streak to three games and overtake sole possession of first place in the ECAC.

"To be the team we want to be in May, we talked about how we have to go on runs and be able to string a couple of games together," said Schneider, who made nine saves in the victory. "And to do that in the ECAC is a very tough thing."

UMass remains the only undefeated team in the conference. Loyola (6-4, 3-1 ECAC) and Fairfield (6-3, 3-1 ECAC) pose as the biggest threats to UMass for the conference's automatic qualifier into the NCAA Tournament. But the Minutemen have a tie-breaker advantage over Loyola, having defeated the Greyhounds, 8-6, on March 21. UMass plays at Fairfield on April 21.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 12 |
| St. John's | 6 |

But with the way UMass has been playing, both teams may be hard-pressed to make up ground in the standings. No team has been able to shut down Connolly (25 goals) or Balise (18) this season, while Schneider, Godoi and Brennan Mack have consistently stymied opposing offenses.

SJU's starting attack of Drew Schanen, Bobby Fitton and Harry Kutner, who entered the game with a combined 31 goals and 12 assists, didn't register a single point.

"It has a lot to do with preparation during the week in practice. Those

See MEN'S LAX on page 6

Site offers new look for fall's schedules

By Jessica Kemp
Collegian Staff

With registration for fall classes beginning today, University of Massachusetts students can sort out various class options and conflicting course times on a new website aimed at simplifying the scheduling process.

Schedr, pronounced "skeder," is a new visual class scheduling website, which allows students to browse through classes and place them in a schedule all in one step.

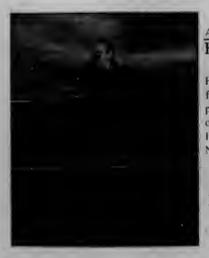
The website was first created in 2006 by UMass student Tom Petr, currently a junior and a computer systems engineering major.

"I had just finished signing up for my spring 2007 classes and was frustrated by how time consuming and confusing it was to use SPIRE," said Petr. "At the same time, I was looking for a fun programming project to do in my spare time, so I decided to try to write my own version of SPIRE."

After what he said took a lot of hard work, along with a tremendous amount of support, advice, and motivation from his friends, Petr completed the website. By fall 2007 the site resembled the Schedr recognized today.

Schedr contains features designed to facilitate a student's scheduling process. The main feature of the website is that it eliminates the need to hand draw up a list of classes. Using Schedr students can use a "drag and drop" interface that allows them to visualize how the classes all fit together.

Students also have the ability to search for courses by department, gen-ed category and course number. When a class is added, the student can then get a visual of the various times the class is offered and see which options are compatible in their schedule.



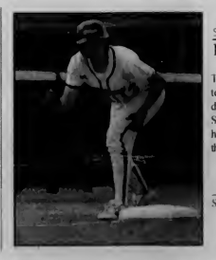
After the classes have been added, students are able to view the time of the class, location and professor's name.

Students are automatically able to see ratings from RateMyProfessor.com next to their professor's name if the rating is available.

Another aspect of Schedr allows users to print color-coded weekly schedules with class time and locations. Printable color-coded schedules for finals week are available as well.

Schedr also gives its users

See SCHEDR on page 2



ARTS & LIVING

HAY TO PERFORM

Former Men at Work frontman Colin Hay will perform with Janet Rohin on Wednesday at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton.

SEE PAGE 4

SPORTS

RUNNING AWAY

The Massachusetts softball team won both games of its doubleheader Sunday against Saint Louis. The Minutewomen have won 44 straight games in the Atlantic 10.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORAL & OPINION

COLUMN| NO FREE SPEECH FELONS

After seeing students organize rallies to promote free speech on campus, Niek O'Malley has realized that there is no culprit for infringing upon Free Speech.

SEE PAGE 3

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

BLOG | EDITOR'S NOTE

Contribute to local investigative reporting. Collegian News Editor Will McGuinness moderates a new blog on which news tips are fielded and expanded upon by other readers on Editor's Note.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 44

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasserzuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkas
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Dettmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
COMICS EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Leigh Greaney
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenswaike
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Koczwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Melissa Tortimen
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Weliver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kate Olesin

COPY EDITOR
David Humphreys

PRODUCTION TEAM
Brandon Silvia

Profs. set to fix Dean's Book

DEANS BOOK from page 1

take the class. We read the book, but there was no discussion on it. We talked about research methods for the entire class. I got the impression that the book didn't matter."

Other students agreed, many saying they had thought the class was going to be more literary analysis then a class solely based upon research methods. Phillips found this to be case in students' evaluations of the class as well. Those surveyed wanted more discussion of the book, and in most Dean's Book classes, only one week was allotted for this to happen.

"The first year of college is about figuring out what it means to be in college. Having a chance in class to talk about a text with people who are also freshman and who are encountering it for the first time in the college environment is really much more valuable than we'd been giving it credit," said Phillips.

The new Commonwealth Honors Seminar will allow for about three weeks of discussion on the book. Phillips hopes that out of this discussion, research topics will emerge "organically" and that the process will no longer seemed forced or rushed.

The second part of the series, Advanced Honors Seminar: 391D, is something completely new. Earlier this year, Commonwealth College asked departmental faculty on campus to submit applications to teach their "dream course," said Phillips.

These classes will count for one-credit and will meet once a week for 50 minutes for the entire semester. They vary in subject matter, but none require previous knowledge of the subject. Many of the classes focus on topics not found in other classes on campus. One class being offered next fall, for example, is called "Through the Lens of a Cup: A Look at the World through the Culture of Tea."

The motivation behind this Advanced Honors Seminar course is three-fold, said Phillips. First, it offers the chance for departmental faculty to interact more and on a personal level with Commonwealth College students – something professors desired but were unable to do. Secondly, it allows Commonwealth College students the opportunity to be exposed to departmental faculty's knowledge and expertise. Third, it will "stimulate academic curiosity," according to Phillips. Even if a student is not interested in the subject matter, the fact that the professor is so passionate about the subject may lead the student to carry that same passion toward his or her own academic endeavors.

While some students are excited about the change, others are frustrated.

Junior, art history major Nicole Fletcher already completed the first two parts of the old Dean's Book requirement. She's aggravated younger students now have a new option that she didn't have.

Still others believe that the changes being made by Commonwealth College are not enough and that the course should be removed as a requirement or eliminated completely.

Kathleen Doherty, a freshman Spanish major, said that the tools she learned in Dean's Book are not applicable to her future academic career.

"[The class] is good if you are going to be a scholar and need to learn those tools," she said. "These people are going to be in the world of academia and need to learn how to read and write papers. But if you're not [going to be a scholar], the class can be boring.

"I already know how to write a research paper," she continued. "I did learn how to create and use a research log, but [the Dean's Book class] is the only class I have ever needed to use that for."

Brendan O'Brien, a freshman English major, said the class would be worthwhile if it was the "the ideal education experience that it could be." But he doesn't see this happening.

"I think that in theory it is a good idea: bringing together different disciplines and different thought processes that people have," he said. "But it's also frustrating when someone analyzing a book puts words in the author's mouth. It's hard to stay in a classroom like that for two hours.

"The projects are things I've done in high school, and others have done them too. Who hasn't researched in their academic career? Who hasn't done a poster project? It's ambitious to think it's going to be this great learning experience where everyone learns from each other as well as learning how to become a better student," he said.

Fletcher also made the comment that the classes are a lot of work for one or two credits. This is something that Phillips plans on examining in the future.

"Work in classes should be appropriate to the number of credits its students are getting," Phillips said. "But that's very hard to regulate and oversee. [The current plan] is the most logistically sound way ... that we can make a change to address people's interests right now."

Students who take 291G, Commonwealth Honors Seminar, next fall will read "Ten Little Indians" by Sherman Alexie. Those who take it in Spring 2010 will read "In Persuasion Nation" by George Saunders.

Commonwealth College students received an e-mail on March 6 notifying them of the changes in the program and asking them to fill out a survey about their future plans in fulfilling this requirement. Because students currently enrolled in Commonwealth College may have already started the Dean's Book requirement, the college has allowed these students the option to either complete the requirement by following the new system or by instead taking another honors class.

Those students who have completed 291D or 291G can take the Advanced Honors Seminar (391D). Students who have only taken 191D can fulfill the requirement by taking a transition class, 391G, which incorporates half a semester of research strategies and half a semester of the new Advanced Honors seminar.

The entire list of classes for the Advanced Honors Seminar, can be found at the Honors Seminar Series' website, www.comcol.umass.edu/honorsseminar.

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores2012@student.umass.edu.

Richard Clarke signs an autograph following his lecture. He said America's reliance on the Internet makes it especially vulnerable to hackers.

Clarke waxes on wars, America and the web

CLARK from page 1

before it gets better."

After an animated introduction, Clarke delved into his first topic: the war in Iraq. He spoke of a "creeping revisionism" that has led us to become complacent with the situation because casualties are low. He again expressed the same anger and distrust that led to his widely publicized resignation from the Bush administration in 2003.

"George Bush lied to us," Clarke declared emphatically. "Don't let people say it was a good idea."

Clarke went on to address pundits who claim that withdrawing from Iraq will negate all the progress that has been made in the area and the over 4,000 soldiers that have lost their lives will have died in vain.

"Having more Americans die there is no way to honor the Americans that have already died," he said.

He also rejected claims that the United States still has a vested interest in Iraq and should remain there until we are able to establish a democracy.

"Our interest in Iraq is getting the hell out of Iraq," Clarke said, concluding his views on the issue as defiantly as he had began.

Clarke then shifted the lecture towards the war in Afghanistan, emphasizing the need cooperate with the governments of Afghanistan and Pakistan in the effort to weed out terrorist organizations. He praised President Obama for walking away from what he called stubborn ideologies of past administrations by saying he is willing to talk to elements of the Taliban in an effort to make peace.

"Don't stick to a policy when you know it's a failure," Clarke told the crowd. After concluding his insights on the dilemmas the country is facing in the Middle East, his words of caution were clear: "If in the end of the day it doesn't work, we need to walk away from it."

In the third and final section of the lecture, Clarke changed course to discuss the daunting potential of America's next war. The said the enemy is more deadly, elusive and harder to identify than the Taliban or Al-Qaeda. He said it will be in cyberspace. Clarke explained that the United States' overdependence on the Internet has made them the most vulnerable country in the World to a cyber attack. He metaphorically described the country's Internet addiction, like "a drug addict is addicted to crack."

Clarke called the surge in Web dependency the "I.T. revolution," comparing to the industrial revolution of the early 1900s. Nowadays, everything from medical records to military intelligence reports is digitalized and susceptible to hackers in the United States and around the globe. Despite all the assurances that networks are protected, any network can be penetrated and toyed with – no matter how many billions of dollars a year is spent trying to protect them.

He said more than any other country in the world, the United States has embraced the "blessed anarchy" of the Web and has become reliant on it for practically everything. Clarke cautioned that a certain level of regulation is needed to protect the country from a harmful and virtually untraceable security breech. Clarke has expressed his concerns to government officials on the matter and suggests that sensitive information such as power grids and pentagon files should be taken out of cyberspace entirely.

Speaking in the computer science wing of the engineering lab, Clarke ended his lecture by telling students that the solution to the problem will be in their hands.

"For those of you studying computer science, you have continued employment for the rest of the 21st century," he said, followed immediately by a strong round of applause.

After he was finishing speaking, Clarke fielded 15 minutes of questions from an eager audience and said that he was honored and a bit surprised that his message was more important than sitting out in the sun.

Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano can be reached at steinber@student.umass.edu.

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEWS

BLOG | EDITOR'S NOTE
NEWS EDITOR WILL MCGUINNESS DEBUTS THE MDC'S NEW BLOG THAT WANTS YOUR NEWS TIPS AND MUCK. TAKE PART IN INVESTIGATING THE EVENTS AND OFFICIALS OF YOUR AREA.

VIDEO |
DIDN'T SEE THAT FREE SPEECH RALLY EVERYONE'S TALKING ABOUT? IT'S FINE. WE'VE GOT IT ON TAPE FOR YOU.

VIDEO |
REPORTER GISEL SAILLANT PROVIDES A SPRING BREAK RETROSPECTIVE YOU CAN WATCH WITHOUT DELETING YOUR INTERNET HISTORY RIGHT AFTER.

ARTS & LIVING

PODCAST |
THE COLLEGIAN'S OLIVER SCOTT SNURE INTERVIEWS PRODUCER AND MUSICIAN JOHN VANDERSLICE

PODCAST|
DAILY COLLEGIAN FILM CRITICS KEVIN KOCZWARA AND SHAYNA MURPHY TAKE A LOOK AT UPCOMING FILMS AND ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA EDITOR PETE RIZZO ADMITS HE'S NEVER SEEN A WOODY ALLEN MOVIE.

GET YOUR POKE ON!

LIKE US AS MUCH AS WE LIKE YOU? BECOME FRIENDS WITH THE COLLEGIAN ON FACEBOOK TO GET DAILY NEWS UPDATES SPRINKLED INTO YOUR FRIENDS' CONSTANT NEWSFEED CONFESSIONS.

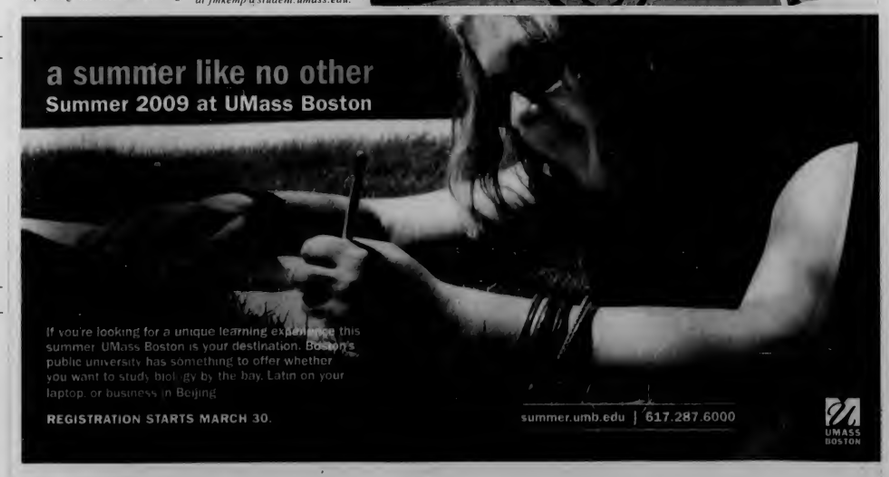
Schedr arrives in time for fall registration

SCHEDR from page 2

the ability to import their schedule into programs such as Google Calendar, iCalendar, and Microsoft Outlook Calendar. Students who have already picked their classes through SPIRE are able to import them into Schedr.

Currently, Schedr only supports UMass-Amherst and Northwestern University. However, it can work with any school if the time is taken to load the course data from each school onto the website.

"The plan is to add about one new school a week in the coming months," said Petr. "Right now, UMass is by far the most active school, so I am focusing my efforts on UMass students."



The Schedr team is always open for new suggestions on improving the site and adding new features, he said. Many of the features the website has now were derived from students and Schedr users.

In the near future, Schedr will be updated and will give users the ability to compare their schedules side-by-side with their friends' schedules. The team also plans to create a new Facebook application so students can share and compare their class lineups.

"Schedr is a total change to the way UMass students are used to picking out their classes. It literally takes about one-fifth the amount of time to pick out classes," said Andy Cook, UMass junior and operations management major. "It would really benefit students to read about Schedr before class selection begins in the next couple weeks."

Jessica Kemp can be reached at jmkemp@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
MONDAY, APRIL 6 2009
"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself" Sir Salman Rushdie
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Free speech is just fine

Nick O'Malley

There is no one against Free Speech. Yet, there are still rallies for it. Why is this even an issue?

When the Don Feder speech became the Don Feder debacle, there was a sudden impression that there was a crusade against the concept of Free Speech, which has since become an issue of capital letter importance. We are now inundated with Free Speech rallies, counter-rallies, and double-secret-rallies in response to recent events. This is great. But what is everyone rallying against?

Yes, there was a mob scene at the event that resulted in Feder leaving the stage, but no one stopped him from speaking, he left the stage under his own will. If, as Feder put it, hate crimes are covered under the idea of Free Speech, doesn't lashing back in an outlandish manner fall under it as well?

There has been no censorship here. Each party that has had something the say has acquired a venue to do so and was not interrupted by the powers that be. Everyone here is using their right to Free Speech. It's merely unfortunate that one man with a microphone can't speak over a mob.

Much has been said about how the First Amendment has been infringed upon. The truth is, it hasn't really come into play at all.

Let's review.

According to that Constitution thing: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof" and so on.

So while the Constitution prohibits Congress from restricting one's ability to speak out, there is no mention of anything along the lines of liberal college students annoying a speaker until he leaves the stage.

There was absolutely no action taken by a governing body, whether it came in the form of the University of Massachusetts administration, the police or Dick Cheney, to stop anyone from speaking. The First Amendment is alive and well, yet, college students are taking to the streets as if it was stabbed to death last month in the Cape Cod Lounge.

Much has been said about how the First Amendment has been infringed upon. The truth is, it hasn't really come into play at all.

If the majority of the audience at an event doesn't like the person with the microphone, the ensuing mob is going to let that person know it. People get booed off of stages all of the time. However, when Don Feder was, essentially, booed off stage everyone got all uppity because he was making a speech about Free Speech.

What's the difference?

If Don Feder came to UMass to talk about how it's alright to kill puppies, he probably would've gotten a similar response from the crowd. And if Feder, in response to an uber-liberal puppy-loving crowd calling him a monster, said that the audience was a bunch of Nazis, there really wouldn't be an issue right now.

However, we are still stuck with the same issue: a bunch of college students jumping at shadows as part of the fight for Free Speech.

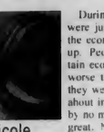
Feder's gone, everyone wants Free Speech and there was never an infringement upon anyone's first amendment rights. OK, show's over, everyone go home.

It's not going to be that easy, however, as the Free Speech war has snowballed into something that is beyond anyone's control. People are going to either keep this up for a couple more weeks or find a scapegoat for the campaign. Judging by the actions angry mobs have taken in the past at UMass, the latter is much more likely.

So who takes the fall for this? Feder was made out to be a victim because people interrupted him. The administration has been hush-hush on the issue and has wisely never gotten involved. Gargano's gone. In the end, it's going to fall on one of three party's lap: the students at the events for going insane, the UMass Republican Club or Chancellor Robert Holub.

It's unfortunate because no one is really deserving of the blame for tampering with free speech rights. The students, who have received the bulk of the blame but are impossible to isolate, never violated any constitutional right. The Republican Club, despite claims that they brought in Feder to incite such a response, has done nothing more than put on a legitimate event. Finally, Holub, who isn't even involved in the affair, might get blamed because of that very reason.

Part of the student population feels that they have been wronged and no one has been punished. So it may end up as the administration's problem because there really isn't a problem.



It's nothing new at this school. Something's wrong and there's no one convenient to blame? Blame the administration. They hate the students anyway.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reach at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Got Something to say?
Can you say it in 550 words or less?

If so, send your letters to editorial@dailycollegian.com or go to Dailycollegian.com.

Unemployment a key public factor

Nicole Sobel

During the past week, people were just beginning to think that the economy was starting to look up. People were expecting certain economical issues to be a lot worse than expected, and though they weren't as harrowing to read about in the past week, they were by no means anywhere near good great. Now reality is settling in for the American people with the recent news concerning the current unemployment rate, which is now currently at 8.5 percent, a 25-year high.

Recent government reports showed that employers had recently shed more than 663,000 more jobs in March. It is an appalling number to look at compared with the unemployment and layoff rate in previous years. Nearly two million jobs have vanished this year – 5.1 million since the recession began in December 2007.

The ranks of the unemployed now stand at 13.2 million, a staggering and distressing number for people currently in the workforce to face. The feeling now shared among people in the workforce is one of fear – and for good reason. Fear of losing a job is becoming a much more realistic concern right now to people in the workforce.

"My parents come home everyday with this sullen look on their faces," said University of Massachusetts student Stephanie Coelho. "When I ask them what's wrong they say – well I know I could lose my job any day now, with this economy. It's scary to think I won't be able to provide for my family if that happens."

Many students have witnessed this stressful, apprehensive disposition in one or both of their parents recently, and it's not a reassuring or comforting sight at all.

More Americans seem to know the unemployment rate than the daily weather forecast these days. Unemployment today is the public's main measure of the economy.

The question on everyone's worried minds now is how much longer will this recession be, and how much worse will it get? Judging by the labor market, the answer to both of those questions is "a lot." The reason is simply because employers are going to continue to feel the need to cut jobs, as long as the economy stays where it is, in its current weak position. The only way less jobs will be cut – and hiring will resume in full swing – is if employers feel confident a recovery is under way. And economic rebounds do not look like they're going to be much helpful right now either.

More Americans seem to know the unemployment rate than the daily weather forecast these days. Unemployment today is the public's main measure of the economy. Those Americans who do not experience it firsthand know a neighbor, friend or family member who has. They notice it in the lack of pay raises and in the hiring freezes at work. All of this is a very dismal realization for students at UMass to face, and for their parents to face, as well.

As students, we will be heading into the workforce soon and since we're working so hard now to get the training we need to get well-paying jobs, it's scary to think we're entering a work field that's filled with uncertainty and expendability attached to it, instead of prosperity and bright futures.

In terms of economic rebounds, the housing market is unlikely to spark.

Recovery, housing prices and sales will not begin to turn up appreciably until possibly next year, or later. In the House Stimulus Bill passed in February, the Obama administration got off to a good start in attempting to combat unemployment, mainly by supporting people with unemployment benefits and health care coverage for the jobless.

However, even though the bill embodied good intention, it's clear the law's potential to create or save a few million jobs will not be enough to combat the current scale of unemployment. More fiscal decisions will be needed in order to fix this unemployment problem with any success. Goals like stronger unions will not change the quality of workers' economic lives overnight. But hopefully within the next few months, we will see a positive change, even a modicum of a change in the economy so people will not have to suffer as much in the workplace, and employers will be able to afford less lay-offs, and hire more.

We have to be realistic. Nothing amazing is going to happen immediately concerning the ravages of unemployment. However, moving towards those economic goals will help to renew the hope that proved to be so transient this past week.

Nicole Sobel is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at nsobel@student.umass.edu

Sky rockets in flight, afternoon delight -Ed/op

Remember the lessons of self–government

Eric Magazu

Self-government is a major principle by which the United States and many other nations yearn to live and to be judged. This principle does not mean people necessarily deny there may be another source of law not simply comprised of what is voted upon by the majority, only that we tend to believe people combined together in their local communities ought to have a right to determine their own method of governance.

There has been much debate within the United States about the meaning of this fundamental principle.

It's the major ideal seperating political parties and philosophies of government. Depending on how a person views the nature of self-government, so follows many of his positions on the major political issues of the day. The issue carries wide social, political and moral implications in our nation and throughout the world.

"That all men are created equal" is the universally, well-known assertion of the Declaration of Independence. Many people will quickly affirm its veracity, but its equitable implementation has varied throughout the ages. It has served as a rallying cry for many political movements, including the civil rights movement, where it was skillfully embraced by orators such as the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

The debate over self-government was the pivotal aspect that tore apart the nation during the Civil War. Stephen Douglas and Abraham Lincoln debated the issue in 1854. Douglas drew from the popular sovereignty of the people to determine that laws shall be as they are approved by a majority of the citizens in their local communities.

The evident nature of this maxim should not to be lost on us today.

If local communities and individual states ever lose the right to establish the laws by which they shall be governed, even in the name of a set of noble ideas, it will effectively disenfranchise the local population. Freedom is strongly contained in the idea that we individually have a say in how we are governed.

We desire to see international standards for human rights ... But, few of us are as eager to forgo the sovereignty and self-determination of individual nations.

Douglas's view is effectively summarized by the Tenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which reads, "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

The counterclaim made by Abraham Lincoln is that self-government itself depends upon certain rights being expressly guaranteed to all people. These are certain rights that can not be infringed upon by majority vote. Likewise, we know without such protection the whole basis of self-government becomes faulty.

Lincoln made the case strongly that selfishness is permanently engrained in the nature of man and stands in contrast to our knowledge of justice and fairness.

"Slavery is founded in the selfishness of man's nature – opposition to it, is his love of justice. These principles are an eternal antagonism," Lincoln said in his debate with Douglas. "Repeal all past history, you still can not repeal human nature. It still will be the abundance of man's heart that slavery extension is wrong; and out of the abundance of his heart, his mouth will continue to speak."

As human beings, we have the notion of justice in our hearts, but it is not always quickly evident. After the bitter struggle of the Civil War, the Fourteenth Amendment emerged to state effectively that, "[No State shall] deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

These principles clashed hotly in the bloody conflict of the Civil War, where the lives of too many Americans were sacrificed to defend them. They continue to have broad policy implications from the most mundane affairs of government to the most controversial of idealogical flashpoints.

We see this play out when politicians seek to balance equity in educational opportunities for all students versus the ability of parents to have the maximum say in how their children are educated. It can be found in the debate over the availability of legal abortion, which poses serious questions over the rights of both the mother and the child, along with the sovereignty of cities and states.

Even discussing international affairs, arguments are often made that appeal to the higher notions of justice centered on precisely along the same themes. We desire to see international standards for human rights. We profess them in international treaties and we occasionally place the guardianship of these ideals into the hands of international institutions such as the United Nations. But, few of us are as eager to forgo the sovereignty and self-determination of individual nations.

The survival of liberty requires the steadfast and precise balancing of the two competing principles as understood by Douglas and Lincoln, exemplified by the Tenth and Fourteenth Amendments. While there is much professed piety when we dedicate ourselves exclusively to one of these ends, it is actually more difficult to balance these ideals in a just and compassionate mean. The ideal to be sought is to maintain unequivocally that certain inalienable rights belong to every individual, while placing ultimate sovereignty in the direct hands of the people.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 6, 2009 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Band aims to stand out

Brian Jonestown Massacre lacks audience interaction

BY LEE TAYLOR
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Those who have seen the documentary "DIG!" tend to discredit the Brian Jonestown Massacre for their great music when its expected that a fight will ensue between singer Anton Newcombe and his band or the crowd. For the sake of the music, the band learned how to play together no matter what's being thrown its way – which was quite a lot at Pearl Street on Saturday night.

The Asteroid #4 played a loud and fantastic opening set. A psychedelic backdrop projection played well with the group's sound – sometimes atonal, but always making sense.

The floor filled up by the time the Brian Jonestown Massacre took the stage. There were the usual guys egging on Newcombe. The singer looked caged or restrained in his spot in the corner of the stage. He talked to the crowd very little, sitting down on his amplifier between songs. Newcombe knows how to restrain himself, if only the crowd could do the same.

The Brian Jonestown Massacre aims to stand out.

The band and even its instruments are oddly shaped pawn shop-quality guitars. Their song titles are sometimes so offensive it's funny. But ironically, no matter what the approach is to stand out, the music is wholeheartedly rooted in the 1960s, only the band plays so hard it feels like you're seeing the music for the first time.

The band members played hard and you could see it with the stern look on their faces in between songs, especially that of the hard-hitting drummer.

No one in the band cracked as much as the smallest smile at the applause.

Joel Gion stood center stage and played the tambourine and maracas looking as if he were trying his best not to make eye contact with anyone in the crowd. But the withdrawn persona is something fans need to take with a grain of salt since the band backs it up with a solid performance.

The band interacted very little with the crowd and, when they did, it was inaudible. Newcombe's only fit of anger was directed to the sound technician. The singer put down his guitar during one song and went to the side of the stage to yell at him. This is hardly noteworthy, but the crowd took notice.

Newcombe left the stage for a few minutes at one point while the band kept on jamming, but

See NEWCOMBE on page 5

The Brian Jonestown Massacre performed Saturday at Pearl Street to a crowd looking for a fight between singer Anton Newcombe and anyone willing to take a stand against him.

Recession is healthy benefit

Financial pressures urge habits sales, disposable income dip

BY MEREDITH COHN
THE BALTIMORE SUN

It took a moment to make the connection, but Jake Sawyers says the recession has been good for him, or at least for his health.

"I smoke when I drink, and I drink when I go out and I've been doing less of that," said Sawyers, 30, a Canton, Md., resident who was buying a pack of cigarettes at a neighborhood convenience store. "I am also exercising more. Maybe I have more energy because I'm not drinking and smoking as much."

Sawyers isn't alone.

Data show that many people are turning their vices rather than drowning their sorrows these days – behavior that national researchers say is consistent with past recessions.

The desire to drink and smoke may grow with financial pressures, but sales of some alcohol and cigarettes are dipping, along with disposable income.

"It's a complete myth that people drink more during recessions. In fact, just the opposite is true," said David Ozgo, the Distilled Spirits Council's chief economist, who has studied recessions since the 1970s.

Liquor sales nationally started slowing in 2007 and dropped 5 percent to 10 percent in the fourth quarter of 2008.

The evidence is not conclusive because other studies and informal polls show that many people are still indulging. Some even more. But the findings, particularly those compiled since the economy began sliding in fall 2008, indicate that the U.S. might end up a bit healthier for its troubles.

Nine percent of U.S. consumers have cut down on smoking and 14 percent have cut down on drinking alcohol or bought cheaper brands, according to a February Nielsen Co. report.

Consumers were eating out and drinking less in the fourth quarter of 2008 compared with 2007. Also, more wine was sold by the glass than by the bottle, according to a report from the National Restaurant Association. The Beer Institute, a trade group representing brewers, reported that beer sales dropped about 2 percent in restaurants and bars in 2008, though less expensive store sales of beer rose about 1 percent.

Tax revenue from cigarette sales plummeted almost 29 percent in the second half of 2008 in Maryland, for instance, with an extra dollar-a-pack tax

See HEALTH on page 5

Hay has vast audience

Former Men at Work frontman plays NoHo

BY ANGELA STASIOWSKI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It is quite a feat to capture the hearts of angsty Zach Braff fans and middle-aged housewives alike, but former Men at Work frontman Colin Hay has found a way to do just that.

Hay will be performing his alternative folk routine at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton this Wednesday at 7 p.m.

No newcomer to NoHo's music scene, Hay has been well received by local fans on countless occasions. In fact, he began his career playing the sort of underground hotspots that Northampton is famous for.

Originally from Scotland, Hay moved to Australia with his family when he was 14-years-old. Not long after, he formed the notorious Men at Work with a few talented friends from Australia in 1978. The band took up musical residence in local pubs, playing whatever odd gigs came their way.

The band remained unnamed for quite some time, until they desperately needed something to put on the performance bill. Finally, keyboardist Greg Haim suggested "Men at Work" after seeing the message on a road sign.

The band's first single, "Who Could it Be Now" was released in 1981 on Columbia records, and was met with wide critical acclaim.

As frontman of the notorious Aussie group, Hay and his band were the first and only artists to have a number one song on both American and United Kingdom charts at the same time with "Down Under."

The 1982 gem caught fire, propelling the album "Business as Usual" to number one on both charts as well. The following year, the band took home the Grammy for "Best New Artist."

After the instant stardom that "Business as Usual" provided, the band could not recreate the magic that had once been Men at Work and eventually disbanded in 1986. However, they gave it another brief go between 1996 and 2001 to no tremendous success.

The split provided Hay the opportunity to polish his solo chops, displaying an entirely new side of the artist. Shedding his electric skin for some softly stirring acoustic tunes, Hay was able to reach a whole new audience.

Hay's acoustic spirit matches that of Nick Drake, leaning only on his guitar and lyrical prowess without the safety net of broad accompaniment.

As a solo artist, Hay is perhaps best known for his inclusion in Zach Braff's "Garden State" soundtrack in 2003. Braff himself hand-selected the song "I Just Don't Think I'll Ever Get Over You" to be included in the film.

Originally, the song was featured on "Transcendental Highway," making it one of his best selling records. The song is stripped of the showiness of Men at Work, leaving only Hay's quiet, raspy vocals and acoustic guitar.

Braff is such a fan of Hay's work that he also featured the song "Overkill" on his sitcom "Scrubs."

"Are You Looking At Me," Hay's first studio athum after a five year hiatus, was released in early 2007. The lack of new material was not for lack of effort on Hay's part, however.

"Since my last album.... I've either been on the radio or in the studio. When I'm not on the road, I'm working on songs and trying to make them as good as possible," explains Hay on his website.

Hay's latest has peaked the interest of curious fans from all demographics. The patronage of die-hard Men at Work fans and "Garden State" loving hipsters alike made the athum a tremendous success.

The album features a more production-heavy sound, with the inclusion of drums, electric guitar and supporting vocals. The single "Pure Love" includes harmonies from Hay's wife Cecelia Noel, who has provided backing vocal on several of his albums.

Of course, being the prolific musician he is, Hay has been hard at work on new material for the past few years. A new record is rumored to be in the works for late this year.

Former Men at Work frontman Colin Hay will perform at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton on Wednesday. Hay appeals to a wide audience from Zach Braff fans to middle-aged housewives.

In addition to his solo success, Hay has also managed to create his own record label, Lazy Eye Records.

Opening for Hay this Wednesday is Janet Robin, a singer/songwriter/guitarist from Los Angeles. Her style matches that of such artists as Melissa Etheridge and Tom Petty, though she clearly maintains her singularity.

In the past, she has performed with musical legends like Fleetwood Mac's Lindsey Buckingham, as well as Hay himself.

Hay's live performances are known for being acoustically striking works of folk sincerity.

Most importantly, Hay's creations are timeless. No matter who is listening, there is always something to connect with in his music.

Colin Hay and Janet Robin will be performing at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton Wednesday, April 8 at 7 p.m. Tickets are $28.50 in advance or $31 at the door.

Angela Stasiowski can be reached at astasiow@student.umass.edu.

Madonna, along with other celebrities, have turned to foreign adoption, but the public believes there may be an ulterior motive in certain celebrities' reasons to adopt.

An ulterior motive?

Public distrusts celebrities intentions in foreign adoption

BY ROBIN GIVHAN
THE WASHINGTON POST

In the celebrity vortex, all good deeds are suspect.

While it is admirable for a star to use her popularity to draw attention to a worthy cause, there's no ignoring the fact that she is also luxuriating in the spotlight and enhancing her personal brand. When that celebrity is named Madonna, a significant amount of manipulative, narcissistic intent is assumed. Throw in photos of her in sunglasses, camouflage cargo pants and layered T-shirts against the backdrop of an impoverished Malawi as she searches for an orphan to adopt, and the stench of self-aggrandizement is nearly overwhelming. This is an image we do not trust.

Madonna recently returned to Malawi to adopt a culturally kindred sibling for her youngest child, David, whose adoption from that country was finalized last year after the pop star was practically accused of stealing the boy from his father. Madonna now plans to adopt a 4-year-old girl and will once again stir the wrath of the masses.

The singer may have nothing but the best of intentions. She might currently be a single mom, but with a career that evolved from boy toy and virgin to "Evita" to Sticky & Sweet, she will not be struggling to make ends meet. She has starred in a documentary about the country's travails and established the children's charity Raising Malawi. (Whether foreign adoptions in general are good or bad is a question we'll leave for ethicists, psychologists and sociologists to argue over.)

But the combination of particular celebrities and their embrace of children from underdeveloped countries can make us queasy. It's not that celebrities can't adopt a child purely out of love and the desire to add to their family. Folks didn't work themselves into a tizzy when Steven Spielberg, Tom Cruise and Nicole Kidman, and Sheryl Crow adopted their kids.

But certain celebrities are so associated with self-indulgent behavior – and with self-conscious and provocative antics – that it becomes impossible to believe they do anything without an ulterior motive.

We begin with Josephine Baker. In the 1950s, Baker adopted what she called a "Rainbow Tribe" of children from around the world. Although she was an expatriate living in France, Baker's multicultural family was her personal protest against racism as well as a show of support for the American civil rights movement. Her family was a political statement, an act of defiance by a woman who understood it began to take its toll on the enamored crowd.

See ADOPTION on page 5

Newcombe shows tension

NEWCOMBE from page 4

The singer returned and kicked down the doors again with "Open Heart Surgery." The song is actually a mid-tempo drag, but nonetheless a beautiful song.

It was nice to see many of the longtime members back in the band. Matt Hollywood was a primary songwriter since the band's inception and the songs he brings add a lot to the band's set. After the show, Hollywood was outside the club admitting his excitement to be back playing the songs he wrote once again.

There were more than three guitars on the three chord assault, "Satellite," that shook down the crowd during the final portion of the lengthy set without an encore.

Lee Taylor can be reached at leetaylor@student.umass.edu

The Brian Jonestown Massacre's singer, Anton Newcombe, proved there is tension between the group during Saturday night's performance.

Issue is price

HEALTH from page 4

added in January 2009, as well as an indoor smoking ban, likely suppressing demand, according to the comptroller's office.

Smoking in general has been trending downward. About 20 percent of Americans smoked in 2007, according to the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. That's down from about 23 percent in 1998.

However, Dana Lefko, manager of mission services and advocacy for the American Lung Association of Maryland, said cost has definitely become an issue. She's been fielding calls from people seeking help quitting because "they can't afford to smoke anymore."

As for alcohol, habits are also changing. "We have just as many people come to wine tastings, but they won't buy a case. They'll buy a bottle," said Ian Stalfort of The Wine Source in Hampden, Md. "We're definitely selling more cheaper wine."

Justin and Darcie O'Connor, puffing on cigarettes while visiting Maryland from Colorado, said beer at the stores and bars has become too expensive. They've begun brewing their own and drinking at home. And if cigarette prices rise more, they'll probably stop or roll their own.

"Thirsty Thursdays are no more," Justin said about their favorite happy hour. "The recession definitely got us thinking."

Christopher J. Ruhm, an economist at the University of North Carolina, Greensboro, said he found the "income effect" had people turning from heavier consumption of cigarettes and alcohol to lighter consumption, not to abstinence. They also sought cheaper alternatives.

That describes Ryan Graham, 32, who bought a "kegerator," a converted refrigerator that holds a keg of beer. He, his friends and bandmates can now drink their favorite microbrews for far less at his home in Baltimore.

The current recession is bringing down the sales of alcohol and cigarettes because the habits are too expensive for some customers.

"I have band practice over at my house. In return for not having to deal with the hassle of loading up my gear and driving somewhere else to practice, I let my bandmates drink as much as they want from the kegerator," he said.

"But if I started struggling for money or if the cost of beer increased much more, I'd definitely start making them bring their own beer."

Celebrities attempt to improve image

ADOPTION from page 4

the power of image.

When Angelina Jolie began creating her own UNICEF advertisement with the help of Brad Pitt, there was the sense that the adoptions were evidence of her interest in world affairs. She had used her celebrity to draw cameras into refugee camps and poor villages in places such as Afghanistan. And after working in Cambodia filming "Lara Croft: Tomb Raider," she adopted her son Maddox.

For all the love she undoubtedly lavished on him, one still had the unnerving feeling that the adoption of this child – and later of Pax and Zahara – seemed like a celebrity bringing home exotic souvenirs from abroad. She had done good work with the United Nations, but it was hard to forget her eccentric and provocative past: the Billy Bob Thornton blood vial necklace, the award show canoodling with her sibling, the Jennifer Aniston home wrecker scandal. We see such hyper-exposed celebrities through a hall of mirrors. There are so many piecemeal views and perspectives that it's impossible to get a true picture. It's hard to believe our own eyes.

For similar reasons, it's tough believing Madonna just wants to save the children in our global community. Too much of her public persona is wrapped up in self-creation, self-involvement and image control. We interpret every public moment as being in service to the Madonna brand, even when she's offering up nothing but silence to reporters shouting questions at her.

At a certain point, celebrity trumps everything else. The spotlight becomes immovable. No matter how hard some celebrities might try to shift the attention toward their cause or charity, every eye remains riveted on them. All the work they'd done to craft a public persona and to capture the popular imagination has paid off. But it has also left them trapped and distrusted. And their celebrity becomes a punishment.

Angelina Jolie, with Brad Pitt, has adopted three children from other countries, but people are skeptical about her reasons to adopt.

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?

KAMINS

SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS

- PRESIDENTIAL APTS
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
- PERRY APTS
- 177 N. PLEASANT ST.
- COLLEGE INN APTS
- LANTERN COURT APTS
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.

55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST

LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Are you looking for a job for next semester?

The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is looking to hire employees for advertising production in 2009 - 2010!

- Flexible work schedule
- Hourly salary
- Awesome people

Little to no experience in graphic design necessary! Looking for undergrads with good computer skills, strong motivation, the ability to learn, and a keen eye.

Contact Max Detmer at Advertising@DailyCollegian.com for more information, or stop by The Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

U. S. Air Force ROTC Scholarships = Careers of a Lifetime!

Computer Engineering ● Electrical Engineering
Environmental Engineering ● Nursing
Foreign Language

...tion, fees, $900 per year for ...thly stipend of $300 - $500 ...ive Scholarships are ...ble in ALL majors!

...ting Colleges of Greater Springfield ...student, except Hampshire College

...ss: ● UMass - 9 April 2009

...mass.edu

...Begins Here!

...ROTC Get $70

Not just 2-man show for UM

Kell providing offense in support of Balise, Connolly

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

After extending its winning streak to three games, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team thanked its senior class once again.

Tim Balise, Jim Connolly and Doc Schneider led the way as they have all season in No. 13 UMass' 12-6 victory over St. John's on Saturday afternoon. Balise tallied four goals and one assist, while Connolly earned his 11th career hat trick and an assist. Schneider made nine saves on 11 shots for his a career-low two goals allowed.

Balise (18 goals, five assists) and Connolly (25 goals, four assists) currently lead the team in points, but younger players are still contributing greatly on attack.

Freshman Art Kell (eight goals, three assists) has started all nine games with Balise and Connolly this season. He scored two goals on Saturday, after scoring exactly one goal in UMass' previous six games.

"The best thing about Art right now is that he's playing with confidence and he's one of those guys that is able to handle the pressure," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "He's not a real worrier so when he goes out there he can handle the ball well because of his size, he can score it, he can dodge.

"But obviously there are still parts of his game that he can improve," Cannella continued.

Cannella is looking for the younger players like Kell, Ryan Marcus and Ryan Hantverk to start playing a bigger role on offense.

"We need the other guys, not the Connollys and the Balises to step up for us if we're going to be a better offensive team now," Cannella said. "We can't just rely on [Connolly and Balise] because there's people, really good people, out there defensively that are going to kind of shut those guys down at times. We need those other guys to step up."

UMass' offense is already producing more goal-scorers than last season. So far this season 14 players have tallied at least one goal, while in all 14 games last season only 13 players had goals.

Shutting down the best

The UMass defense has held team's top-scorers to a minimum all season. With experience in the back with redshirt junior Diogu Godoi, seniors Brennan Mack and Schneider, UMass has allowed few points from opponents starting attackers.

On Saturday afternoon, St. John's starting three attackmen were held scoreless. Drew Schanen leads the Red Storm with 18 goals, but didn't tally a single point in the Minutemen's 12-6 win. Schanen and fellow attacker Bobby Litton were limited to two shots, one on goal, apiece in the matchup.

In other games, UMass has shutdown three of the nation's top 12 point earners. Andrew Feinberg (No. 5 in scoring nationally) didn't tally a point in UMass' 9-8 loss to Brown on March 14. The Minutemen held No. 12 Shane Koppens of Loyola to no points in their 8-6 win. On March 10, in UMass 12-10 loss to Albany, No. 8 leading scorer Corey Small scored only one goal in the matchup.

"Godoi and Brennan are playing awesome. They are shutting the top two guys down almost every game," Balise said. "And if those guys are getting any shots Doc is playing great in the cage."

Cannella attributes the defense's success to the preparation they get during practices going up against strong scorers like Balise, Connolly and Kell everyday.

Second half struggles

For the second consecutive week the Minutemen let down in the third quarter. On Saturday, UMass went into the second half leading 8-1, but seemed to lose focus. The Minutemen took less shots (four compared to the 19 in the first half), scored fewer goals (one) and had eight turnovers; compared to the four that UMass had in the entire first half.

In UMass' 9-8 win over Penn State on March 28, it seemed to give up during the third quarter. The Minutemen led 6-4 going into the second half and scored only one goal in the third quarter. They also allowed two goals, took six shots (21 shots in the first half) and had seven turnovers (eight turnovers in the first half).

"We come out flying and we talk about playing a 60 minute game. You are never going to play a perfect 60-minute game, but you go for that perfection and if you come close to it you are doing alright," Schneider said. "We've got to keep playing all four quarters and it's just pretty much playing all 60 minutes."

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com.

Tim Balise embraces a teammate after scoring one of his four goals Saturday in a 12-6 win over St. John's at Garber Field.

Defense stifles SJU in convincing win

MEN'S LAX from page 1

said UMass coach Greg Cannella on what's enabled his defense to be so dominant. "[The offense] is a formidable group, so they're preparing [the defenders] for battles each and every week."

That competition in practice has allowed both sides to excel. The Minutemen lead the conference in goals per game (10.67) and rank second in goals-against average (7.45).

St. John's (5-4, 1-3 ECAC) saw UMass' balance first-hand Saturday – particularly in the first half. Before the Red Storm got anything going, Balise needed just 15 minutes, 13 seconds to record a hat trick to give the Minutemen a 5-0 lead. Schneider didn't even have to make a save in the first quarter, as UMass dominated possession and kept SJU away from the net.

"Xs and Os wise, they were very prepared for our big-little offense. [Godoi and Mack] are just tremendous physical presences," said St. John's coach Jason Miller, who was Cannella's assistant at UMass from 2003-06. "Offensively we just weren't good early. We didn't handle the ball well. And when we dodged, we didn't dodge to score and we started to fling the ball all over the place."

Starting in the third quarter, it was UMass that looked poor offensively. They turned it over consistently (eight times), took only four shots (19 in the first half) and didn't play with any sense of urgency.

"We talk about playing a 60-minute game. You're never going to play a perfect 60 minute game, but you go for that perfection," Schneider said. "If you come close to it, you're doing alright. We gotta keep playing all four quarters."

Cannella was pleased with the performance, but wanted to see a more consistent effort.

"It was a good effort all-around, but we'd like to have a better effort and focus in the third quarter and I think our guys know that. You go up 8-1, but you can't expect to win 16-2 against St. John's – they're a really good team," Cannella said. "You have to be happy with the win and the effort; you just hope at those times, when the choppiness occurs, the leaders on the field step up and settle things down."

Despite the third-quarter struggles, UMass maintained its seven-goal lead – as both teams scored once in the period. The Minutemen responded well in the final quarter, scoring the first three goals to extend the lead to 12-2.

After backup goalkeeper Mael Walkowiak was inserted into the game for the final 5:30, the Red Storm scored four goals in a span of three-and-a-half minutes to reach a final score of 12-6.

St. John's was happy to see someone other than Schneider, who allowed a career-low two goals, in the cage.

"You try to find a flaw when your watching film and you think he's going to flop on the ground so you can beat him up-high, but you can't," Miller said. "Then he's jumping up high to stop the high ones, then you can beat him down low – and you can't. He's a good as we'll see all year and one of the best in the country."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Doubleheader drama

BASEBALL from page 8

UMass had a chance in the bottom of the inning with a runner on first and one out. But pinch hitter Mike Gedman hit into a double play to end the game.

"I've got a lot more confidence in our team then we exhibited because we shouldn't make it as difficult for ourselves as we did," Stone said.

But to UMass' credit, it battled back and took Game 2, 7-6. The Minutemen once again held a three-run lead entering the final inning and barely held on.

With the bases loaded and two outs, down by one run, Temple's Rafael Cordero grounded out to pitcher Mike Gedman to end the nightmare for UMass in a gut-wrenching victory.

"We should've had two wins today and three this weekend, but you have to finish," Stone said.

In Friday's game, every starting player for the Minutemen drove in one run on the day to help get UMass out of an early 6-0 deficit. But the Owls stormed back once again to claim the 11-9 victory – thanks to a three-run ninth inning off of Gedman.

The Minutemen would've loved to have swept the conference-leading Owls, but believe that the one victory Sunday will give them something to build on moving forward. UMass hosts Connecticut on Monday and hits the road Wednesday against Boston College in the Beanpot Tournament.

"We should have won every game this weekend, but there's nothing we can do now. But [the Game 2 win] definitely gives us momentum going into the week and the weekend to go out and get conference wins," Copa said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

UMass sweeps Saint Louis

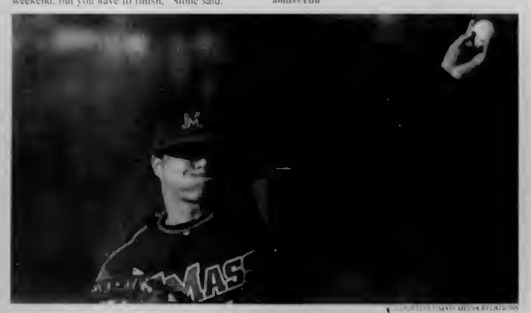
SOFTBALL from page 8

few starts, but was still effective.

"I thought she had a little bit more control and she finally came with that change-up as the game was going on," Sortino said. "That is really going to help her."

Balschmiter got the win in Game 1, striking out 12 and giving up just two hits in the shortened five-inning game. She struck out the side in the each of the final three innings, while allowing just one hit in the fifth inning.

"I though she was really able to get ahead early in the count and that is what set up her strikeouts," Sortino said. "She really had them guessing, had a lot of alternate pitches this time and I thought her rise'ball was great."



"I pretty much had everything going full force today the rise, the drop, the changeup and of course the fastball," Balschmiter added after the game. "So I think I was able to move the ball around a lot."

In Game 2, the second inning was when UMass got hot at the plate. After a leadoff walk by Libby (Jordan Storro pinch ran for her) and another walk by Hernandez two batters later, leadoff hitter Carly Normandin took the first pitch of her plate appearance to straight-away center field.

Normandin led the Minutewomen at the plate on the day going a combined 5-for-7 (three doubles and a home run) with two runs and three runs batted in.

Jessica Serio would add another run in the third inning on a solo home run and also drove in the final run of the game in the fifth inning. After a double by Libby to lead off the inning, Serio doubled her in to give the Minutewomen the walk-off victory by way of the run-rule.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Reliever Nick Serino pitched 3-2/3 innings, giving up two earned runs while striking out six, in Sunday's 7-6 Game 2 victory over Temple. After blowing a ninth-inning lead in Game 1, UMass held on in the rematch.

Plourde's changeup improving

NORMANDIN from page 8

One-two punch

On the days when UMass plays just one game you'll almost be sure to see Brandice Balschmiter. On the days when the Minutewomen play a doubleheader you'll see Balschmiter and Sara Plourde.

UMass has played its last seven games at home after starting off the season away for the first 19. Since playing at the UMass Softball Complex, the Minutewomen have seen some solid outings by the two pitchers but nothing truly capivating. Their performances have been flat, they've missed their targets but they've still managed to get around 10 strikeouts per game.

Sunday, though, the two pitchers brought a little more to the table. Both noticeably threw with more velocity and hit their spots with more frequency.

"For Brandice I thought she was able to get ahead earlier in the count and that's what set up her strikeouts," Sortino said. "She really had them guessing, had a lot of alternate pitches this time. I mean 12 strikeouts in 15 outs ... I think that's a nice day.

"For [Plourde] I thought she had a little bit more control and she finally came with that changeup as the game was going on," Sortino added.

Balschmiter struck out 12, only allowed one hit and frequently forced batters to turn around and walk back into their dugout after blowing them away with her overwhelming fastball.

Plourde, on the other hand, didn't strike out as many as she's accustomed to (four). She struggled early on giving up a double to the first batter she faced and walked a batter later on in the first inning. Plourde, though, got out of it. In the fourth inning she got into trouble again giving up consecutive base hits. After recording two outs, Plourde walked Kerri Dockins to load up the bases.

Relatively inexperienced in the collegiate game, Plourde settled down and got the big out – forcing Rachel O'Connell to ground out to third baseman Whitney Mollica.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

Minutewomen move to 4-0 in A-10

WOMEN'S LAX from page 8

up and running hard," Smith said. "If someone gets a fast break we always preach 'run with them,' we never want to get caught standing around."

Friday's game against Richmond was a totally different atmosphere. The last time UMass faced Richmond was in the 2008 A-10 Tournament, when UMass tied the game with one second left and won in overtime. With a possible first-place tie on the line Friday, the Spiders had plenty of motivation.

Adding to the intensity was a 15-mph-wind and rain that steadily picked up as the game went on. It made for a cold wet day, but some of the players actually enjoyed it.

"I love playing in the rain it makes it feel so intense," Reddy said. "It's such an advantage if you enjoy playing in it."

Behind Reddy's play, UMass took an 11-5 lead into halftime. The Minutewomen tried to milk the clock and wound up with a 13-8 lead with nine minutes left – when things got interesting.

By this point, there was a full-on downpour and thunder could be heard intermittently. So with 8 minutes, 23 seconds left, the referees stopped the game after seeing lightning. After a brief meeting, the game restarted and Richmond scored a quick goal to cut the lead to 13-9.

Then another bolt of lightning came and the referee's were forced to delay the game for 30 more minutes.

The stoppage sapped much of UMass' momentum as Richmond scored three unanswered goals, including two within 10 seconds of each other, to cut the lead to 13-12.

UMass gained possession with a minute remaining in the game, but a bad pass gave the Spiders a final opportunity to score with 16 seconds left.

Richmond started its attack and it looked like a scene taken right from last year's game – only this time it was the Spiders who needed the game-tying goal. They almost got it, but Allison Furstenberg's shot from 12-feet away went wide with one second left and the Minutewomen earned the victory.

"It's always a battle with Richmond, they are a very strong team and we had to play our best to get the win," Venechanos said. "I'm very proud of our team; proud of how they started and proud of how they finished."

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Need An Apartment?
Puffton Village
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.puffonvillage.com

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S
Auto & Truck Rental
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Mumble Monday.

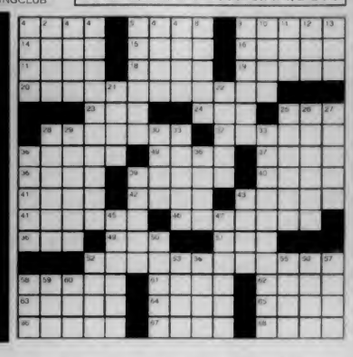
| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 8 | | 3 | 7 | | 5 | | |
| | | | | | | | 6 |
| | | | | | | 8 | 1 | 7 |
| | | 2 | 9 | 1 | | 6 | | |
| | | 8 | 2 | | 3 | 9 | | |
| | | 1 | | 4 | 8 | 2 | | |
| 7 | 3 | 9 | | | | | | |
| 1 | | | | | | | | |
| | | | 4 | | 1 | 3 | | 5 |

Continuing & Professional Education
Online or On Campus
Plan now for the summer
Session 1: June 1- July 9
Session 2: July 14- August 19
Registration Ongoing
Check our classes at Spire or UMassULearn.net

UMOC
Meetings in the Campus Center Mondays at 7 p.m.
www.umass.edu/rso/outingclub

ACROSS
1 Scorch
5 Clean
9 Oliver Twist, for one
14 Broad
15 First name in folk music
16 Speak publicly
17 Gershwin and others
18 Foreign money
19 ... shall never see a poem lovely as ...
20 Dispositions
23 Gold or silver
24 Spot
25 Public transport
26 Wacky
32 Become merciful
34 Diver's danger
35 Sail
37 "Laugh-In" regular
38 Of ... recently
39 Relocates
40 Stuck-up
41 Late tyrant
42 Beverage container
43 Abhors
44 Division
46 Spurred a horse
48 Bradley and namesakes
49 Free
51 Sushi bar item
52 People overly concerned with wealth
58 Beamsrich
61 Life stories, for short
62 Fincher's article
63 Go back and forth
64 Old man Gar
65 Irritate
66 "Beetle Bailey" character
67 Actual
68 Formerly

DOWN
1 One of the stars of TV's "M*A*S*H"
2 "Land of Saints and Scholars"
3 First of zillions
4 One who answers
5 Woodrow's successor
6 Cantata air
7 Bridge term
8 Pits
9 Vanity
10 Part of M.A.
11 Deface
12 Ending for graph or lavor
13 Originally
21 Times
22 Unpopular kids
25 Chew out
26 Loosened
27 British guns
28 Shore
29 Pranks
30 State boldly
31 Cut
33 Pendant
34 Nonchalant
36 Pianist Peter
39 Earn
43 Part of the foot
45 Juice source
47 One who goes "Pop!"
50 Exclude
52 Chinese dynasty
53 Vex
54 Small amount
55 Ship's pole
56 ... Harper
57 Part of a yr.
58 Draft board letters
59 Defunct airline
60 Lung contents



Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Interested in getting Business Experience?
The Collegian needs a new Business Manager for 2009-2010.
Applications are available at 113 Campus Center,
Due Wednesday April 8th, by 5 pm.

you don't mess with comics
comics messes with YOU
comics@dailycollegian.com

Quote of the Day

"I'm never going to be famous. My name will never be writ large on the roster of Those Who Do Things. I don't do any thing. Not one single thing. I used to bite my nails, but I don't even do that anymore."

— Dorothy Parker

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your new bonfire-scented cologne, "Sparkooox," has failed to win you a suitable mate.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't feel so guilty about your friend getting stuck by lightning. He was asking for it by walking around in socks on carpet so much.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Pwned (adj.): Used to describe someone after they finish this horoscope. Ex: "I had sex with your mom. It was great."

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Continue to fight the American Idol bailout, even if it seems unstoppable.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Flaunting your wealth is not nice. Stop skipping Blackberries across the pond for fun.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
There's nothing you love more than the smell of burning toast in the morning, you sicko.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will watch a duck marriage fall apart today near the pond, but there will be nothing you can do. They are drifting apart.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Wrestlemania will extend itself to your bedroom tonight, to your delight.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Not all lawyers are snakes.
Some are crocodiles, and others are sharks. Others still are unicorns, ferocious unicorns.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You should really consider expanding your first aid kit beyond the roll of tape and flask of Jack Daniels.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Remember that a wink is not consent in the legal sense.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Freezing your socks in the refrigerator may in fact kill the bacteria, but it does not get them clean.

Dayley by Annie Keithline

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! by Tim Rickard

Classifieds

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office. $11.00/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 17th.

Announcement

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Announcement

ATTENTION ALL JUNIORS AND SENIORS! FALL 2009 INTERNSHIP APPLICATIONS ARE NOW AVAILABLE AT THE STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE. GET HANDS ON EXPERIENCE IN THE FIELD WORKING WITH ATTORNEYS AND CLIENTS. EARN UP TO 12 UNDERGRADUATE CREDITS, NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY, WE'LL PROVIDE TRAINING. APPLICATION DEADLINE IS APRIL 13th. CONTACT OUR OFFICE AT 545-1995 OR STOP BY AT 922 CAMPUS CENTER.

For Rent

Amherst: 2,3, & 4 bedroom apartments, $1200-$2250. FREE HEAT! Great Specials! www.MillValleyApts.com or 413-253-7377

For Rent

Looking for summer housing? 3 bedroom apt. in Rolling Green looking to sub-let. Clean, convenient, and quiet. Call Kate at 978-257-2549

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

28 Stockbridge St: 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room eat in kitchen, pantry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 miles to campus! www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

For Sale

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 6, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sweep extends streak to 44

Minutewomen claim 2 from SLU, continue A-10 control

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After lackluster victories during the week by the Massachusetts softball team, a sweep Sunday over Saint Louis showed the teams progression.

At the windy UMass Softball Complex, No. 18 UMass (20-6, 6-0 Atlantic 10) took over first place in the conference standings with its 8-0 victory in Game 1 and 3-1 win in Game 2 over the Billikens. Saint Louis (13-21, 6-2 A-10) had previously been undefeated in the conference and winners of its last five.

Junior center fielder Carly Normandin was on the baspaths quite frequently against Saint Louis Sunday afternoon. She went a combined 5-for-7 in UMass' doubleheader sweep over the Billikens.

"I thought we played a lot better than we played during the weekdays," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said after the doubleheader sweep. "I thought we were better at the plate and I thought we got a great effort from our outfielders."

SLU's Katie Johns opened up Game 2 with a solo home run deep to center field in the second inning off of pitcher Sarah Plourde – the first homer the freshman hurler has allowed this season.

The 1-0 lead was short-lived. With two outs in the bottom of the inning, UMass' Davina Hernandez took an 0-2 pitch down the left field line for a double. Shortstop Whitney Williams stepped into the right side of the batters box next after a prep talk from Michelle Libby.

"I was really prepared for the at-bat," Williams said. "Michelle Libby actually gave me a lot of advice from when she was just up."

After two balls, Williams took Libby's advice as she turned on an inside fastball.

"Libby said to me, 'Just wait off on it because her motion is slow,'" Williams said. "So I just waited, waited, waited and just exploded through the pitch."

Williams sent the pitch over the right-center field wall to give UMass a 2-1 lead, one that would stand for the rest of the game. The Minutewomen would add an insurance run in the third inning when Sarah Reeves singled to drive in Whitney Mullica from second.

Ace Brandice Balschmiter came in to relieve Plourde in the seventh inning to earn the save, the first of the season for the senior. Plourde, who got the win, (six inning pitched, four hits, one earned run, three walks, four strikeouts) was not the strikeout pitcher she has been in her past

See SOFTBALL on page 6

Normandin setting tone at leadoff spot

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It was surely a team effort. No single player really stuck out. The Massachusetts softball team played as a cohesive unit, every play for the benefit of the team, not for oneself.

There were sacrifices – bunting to move a runner into scoring position, standing ground to 'take one for the team' and to the knee – twice. There was hard work and hustle displayed; gritty, heads-up base running and concentration on fly balls with the wind changing the ball's course once hit in the air.

UMass Softball

"I thought we played a lot better than we've played during the weekday's [games]," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said after UMass' 8-0 and 3-1 victories Sunday afternoon against Saint Louis. "I thought we were better at the plate, we got a great effort from our outfielders with those fly balls – they almost made them look easy."

Center fielder Carly Normandin made everything look easy Sunday.

The junior captain went 5-for-7 with a home run, three doubles and a single in UMass' two games. Normandin has the lead-off role down to perfection lately. Coming into Sunday's games the junior was batting .410 and owned a .459 on-base percentage – but now both numbers are on the rise.

"I felt like I had a pretty good day," said the modest Normandin. "I was just trying to be consistent with my at-bats and regardless of what I had for results [I'm just trying to] have good at-bats."

Normandin now paces the Minutewomen with a .435 batting average and leads the team with 37 hits – 10 more than her closest teammate. Normandin's .478 OBP is just another asset that she provides to her team. When on base, the junior has stolen nine out of 10 bases successfully, adding to her value.

See NORMANDIN on page 6

Wild doubleheader concludes with win

After fateful Game 1, UM claims rematch

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Peter Copa was ted up.

The sophomore first baseman for the Massachusetts baseball team was mad about the seven straight losses. He was mad about their 10th loss of the season by one-run, suffered in the first game of the doubleheader. He was also mad that, when he took a big cut on a pitch by the opposing pitcher, the visitor's bench erupted in taunts and jeers – leading the unipires to warn both sides after Copa responded to the heckling.

So, the sophomore took his frustrations out on the baseball.

Copa hit a solo home run in the bottom of the seventh inning, catalyzing a three-run inning for the Minutemen (17-16, 2-7 Atlantic 10), leading the team to a 7-6 victory over Temple Sunday evening in the second game of a doubleheader.

"I was obviously mad at what happened," Copa said, regarding the incident between him and the Temple bench. "I was going to apologize, but Jan (owl player) said something stupid to me and I got fired up. He just left the change-up up in the strike zone and I just hit it well."

UMass dropped first game of the series, 11-9, on Saturday in the 2009 home opener. But that tough loss pailed in comparison to Sunday's Game 1 loss.

With a three-run lead going into the ninth inning, it looked as if UMass would have enough run support to get its first home victory of 2009 – along with some momentum going into the second game of the doubleheader.

After back-to-back errors by UMass freshman shortstop Brent Hopkins loaded the bases in the top of the ninth with two outs, Jamie Abercrombie made pitcher Bryan Leigh pay.

Abercrumbie launched a grand slam to right field to give The Owls (13-13, 8-1 A-10) the 8-7 lead in dramatic fashion.

"You make four errors, you really shouldn't have much of a chance to win and that's pretty much what happened," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "I feel badly for [Hopkins], he's a great kid who works hard and is a better player than he showed in the last inning."

See BASEBALL on page 6

COURTESY OF MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Left-hander Mitchell Clegg was the starting pitcher in the disastrous Game 1 loss to Temple in Sunday's doubleheader at Earl Lorden Field. The Minutemen bounced back with a narrow victory in Game 2.

Another transfer: Correia the latest

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Not only is Travis Ford a thing of the past for the Massachusetts men's basketball team, but so is the majority of the recruiting class he signed in 2006.

Add Gary Correia to the list of departed signees from that class, signed by former coach Ford. According to multiple reports, the sophomore point guard will transfer. This comes just weeks after the news that Matt Glass will also leave UMass.

Glass is looking at schools in the Ivy and Patriot Leagues. Correia's possible destination is not yet known.

Correia's decision to depart brings the total to seven out of the eight in Ford's 2006 class that won't be with the team next season. Five have transferred – Correia, Glass, Papa Lo (Bryant), Max Groebe (Cornell), Travon Wilcher (Maine) – another never enrolled at UMass (Marcus Matthews), and Trey Lang left Division 1 college basketball altogether.

The only player remaining is Matt Hill, who missed virtually all of the 2008-09 season with a torn Achilles tendon – his second major injury in his two years in Amherst. His return next season is still a question mark.

None of Ford's signees in 2006 played a big role for the Minutemen in their brief tenures in Amherst.

Hill, the only remaining player at UMass of the 8-player recruiting class, has only played in eight career games in two seasons. He's scored three points in his career.

Correia began the season as point guard Chris Lowe's primary backup. But as the season progressed, the athleticism and scoring ability off the bench by freshman David Gibbs cut significantly into Correia's playing time.

He finished the season with 11 minutes 2.2 points per game in 29 contests.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@dailycollegian.com.

DEPARTED 2006 RECRUITING CLASS

MATT GLASS: 63 games (0 starts), 2.8 PTS & 0.8 MPG
GARY CORREIA: 65 games (0 starts), 1.8 PTS & 11 MPG
TRAVON WILCHER: 6 games (0 starts), 0.7 PTS & 2.8 MPG
MAX GROEBE: 10 games (0 starts), 2.1 PTS & 5.5 MPG
PAPA LO: 22 games (0 starts), 0.3 PTS & 4 MPG
TREY LANG: 5 games (0 starts), 0.0 PTS & 1.8 MPG

UMass atop standings with pair of Ws

Reddy, Lyons shine in victories over rivals Richmond, GW

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

One game featured pouring rain, bolts of lightning and a last-second stand. The other was played on a cloudless day, with bright sunshine and was a cumplete rout before the first half even ended.

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team's games this weekend were very different, but both were wins over teams previously undefeated in the Atlantic 10.

The Minutewomen (7-6, 4-0 A-10) took control of their postseason destiny with a 13-12 win over Richmond (2-11, 2-2 A-10) on Friday and a dominating performance on Sunday over George Washington (4-9, 3-1 A-10), winning 18-5. The victory Sunday gave UMass its first winning record of the season.

"It was a great effort all around, our attack played great, our defense played great, everything just [came together]," sophomore attack Jackie Lyons said following the win over the Colonials.

Sunday couldn't have been a more perfect day for UMass. It controlled GW from start-to-finish in a victory that essentially clinched a playoff berth. UMass' defense stifled any comeback attempt and the team showed signs that the offensive attack is really beginning to gel.

Lyons and senior attack Meghan Reddy had outstanding weekends, putting up huge numbers on the stat sheet. Both Reddy and Lyons scored 12 points over the weekend. Lyons had seven points Friday and five Sunday, Reddy had five Friday (all goals) and seven points Sunday. Both set career highs against the Spiders: Reddy in goals, Lyons in assists (four).

Reddy tallied a total of eight goals over the weekend, but perhaps even more impressive was her dominance on the draw. Reddy won nine draw controls in two games, giving her 49 on the season – a new UMass single-season record.

"It is so important when we win a draw, we can score without them touching the ball," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "Reddy has been working with the coaches on draws and she's really stepping up."

This was evident against GW where scoring was spread all over the board. Haley Smith led the team with four goals, while Reddy and freshman Dayna Defiese each had a hat trick. Eight players had at least one goal.

The game against George Washington was close early on, with UMass taking a 3-1 lead, but UMass' defense and the performance of freshman goalkeeper Katie Florence led to offensive chances that turned the game into a rout.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 18 |
| GW | 5 |
| UMass | 13 |
| Richmond | 12 |

A key moment came with 24 minutes left in the first half. George Washington had the ball in UMass' zone for nearly three minutes, but couldn't score, as UMass forced a turnover that led to a fast-break goal by Reddy.

With about 15 minutes left in the half and UMass up 5-1, Florence made a huge save on a point-blank shot that seemed to deflate the Colonials and energize the Minutewomen.

"It's so great having [Florence] back there because we always know she will be in the right place," Smith said. "She makes the game easier."

From that point on, UMass seemed unstoppable on offense. The Minutewomen rang up 13 goals in the first half and had George Washington's backup goalie warming up with six minutes left in the first half.

"We always talk about never letting

See WOMEN'S LAX on page 6

COURTESY OF MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos guided her team to two wins this weekend. The Minutewomen lead the Atlantic 10 with a 4-0 record.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

RAIN | HIGH: 48 LOW: 31 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, APRIL 7, 2009

US gov. selects a 'new brand'

BY DINAH GORELIK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

USAID, a governmental organization, has decided to switch from an American condom supplier to several foreign suppliers in Asia. This decision has caused some controversy, as it comes at a time of recession.

In the midst of a national recession, the United States government has decided to end its contract with an American-based condom manufacturer and switch to a foreign supplier.

Though the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) previously had an agreement with Alatech Healthcare Products, a company that produces condoms, USAID has decided not to renew the contract and, instead, move to foreign condom manufacturing. Qingdao Butterfly Group of China, Unidus Inc. of South Korea, and Karex Industries of Malaysia will become the condom manufacturers for USAID.

Larry Povlacs, president and CEO of Alatech Healthcare, said the USAID's decision will significantly hurt his company.

"This decision ... means that I will be forced to tell employees whom I have worked with in some cases for over 30 years that they will no longer have a job. This is a town that has a very high unemployment rate and few options," said Povlacs.

While USAID said the reasons for the switch include quality and reliability, others point to saving money as the reason for the change.

With a cost of about 2 cents per condom from the foreign manufacturers, USAID will save a lot of money compared to what it spent on condoms produced by Alatech.

Yet, some find it wrong that during a recession, the government has chosen to hire people from foreign countries while American citizens lose jobs and continue to suffer.

Furthermore, the Buy American Act, which was passed in 1993, requires the U.S. gov-

See CONDOMS on page 2

Bylaw limits housemates

No more than four unrelated may live together, says town

BY WILLIAM MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Amherst recently started enforcing a town bylaw that may leave many University of Massachusetts students scratching their heads come time to sign leases for off-campus housing.

The zoning bylaw restricts the occupancy of a dwelling unit to four unrelated residents, but real estate websites featuring units throughout Amherst advertise four- and five-bedroom homes to student audiences, listing their proximity to the University.

Students and officials from both the town and University said that landlords' awareness of the bylaw is a problem, especially as students start searching for housing next semester.

UMass senior English major Andre Dumas signed a lease last year with her four roommates on a five-bedroom home on E. Pleasant Street completely unaware of the town's bylaw until an Amherst police officer came to her home early this year to notify them that neighbors were complaining about the number of cars in her driveway.

In March, her neighbor Kerry Strayer provided the town's select board with photographs of the driveway, suggesting to authorities that Dumas and her roommates were violating the zoning bylaws.

Upon inspection, the group of girls had to drop one from their number. Roommate Kylee Youmans volunteered to move in with friends in Colonial Village as she planned to move there for graduate school when the lease was done, according to Dumas. She added that if it were a house filled with seniors who were not returning, the girls would have nowhere to go.

Stephanie J. O'Keeffe, a member of the Amherst Select Board, said the town's awareness of these violations is dependent upon complaints from residents and that all town bylaws are subject to enforcement at any time. She added that awareness of the violations is especially piqued in a situation in which there are a relatively high number of automobiles parked consistently outside of a residence.

Upon hearing of the eviction from The Collegian, Student Government Association Commuter Senator Derek Khanna said in a statement, "Many students are signing leases in the coming months, and we need this bylaw overturned or at least not enforced. This bylaw has been on the books for years without enforcement, the arbitrary enforcement of this bylaw this year and specifically upon UMass students seems like a targeted campaign. The enforcement of this bylaw will unfairly hurt UMass commuter students who often have no legal vote in the matter."

Khanna added that he is meeting with O'Keeffe to discuss the matter next week and plans to speak at the next select board meeting. For now, he called for the forming of an emergency SGA committee on the issue.

O'Keeffe acknowledged that informing both landlords and students about the bylaw has been problematic.

"It's a big issue, and it will come up, especially as this gets more attention," she said. O'Keeffe added these are frequent and unfortunate issues common to college towns.

She said the town will look to balance the quality of life for both student residents and non-student residents.

Town Manager Laurence Shaffer said awareness of the zoning bylaws should be a shared burden of tenants, landlords and the town. He added that the issue comes down to public health and aesthetics. Shaffer said crammed quarters often create nontraditional bedroom situations that can become dangerous in emergency situations. A high population of student cars, he said, creates an aesthetic issue in lots that cannot support them.

"We'll ask students and landlords to comply with the law because it makes sense to do so," Shaffer said.

Meanwhile, Dumas said, "If it's a major bylaw, people should know about it. It's crazy and too bad."

– William McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@student.umass.edu.

The Minuteman throws the 'FIRE' at UMass, citing rights

BY MATT ROCHELEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Minuteman newspaper is submitting a complaint through the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE) to the University of Massachusetts and the UMass Police Department (UMPD) asking them to hold students who allegedly stole extra copies of their newspaper last week.

During the "Rally for Free Speech" hosted by the Republican Club outside the Student Union on Wednesday, around 100 copies of The Minuteman were reportedly taken from a newspaper distributor's hands and torn up by students protesting the rally.

Brad DeFlumeri, co-managing editor of The Minuteman, a monthly, student-run conservative newspaper printed by a group called The Silent Majority, said obstructing the circulation or distribution of a newspaper is a violation of First Amendment rights.

"Apparently the University told The Minuteman that since the papers are free, people can take as many as they like and do with them what they like," said director of FIRE's Individual Rights Defense Program, Adam Kissel who described the protesters' actions as theft.

On the top of the The Minuteman's front page was printed, "first copy, free; each additional copy, $3.00." This was done to prevent copies from being removed from the stands by potential protesters, including members of the UMass Coalition Against Hate (CAH), said DeFlumeri.

However, Charles T. Peterson, a member of CAH and the UMass International Socialist Organization (ISO), said, "they [The Minuteman staff] put out big stacks of the newspapers rather haphazardly, and they don't say anywhere that they're selling them."

University spokesman Ed Blaguszewski said a police report was filed and officials are looking into the incident.

The Minuteman distributes more than 10,000 copies each month, and the latest issue raised claims of libel, which DeFlumeri said are unfounded.

According to DeFlumeri, the controversy is centered around financial information the newspaper printed in its April edition about a group called Student Bridges, a creation of the Student Government Association (SGA). DeFlumeri said the information in question was obtained through the Freedom of Information Act.

Student Bridges declined to comment on the matter, said group member Ben Thompson.

UMPD Detective Lisa Kidwell was reportedly at the scene, but she was not available for comment prior to publication.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

UMass students protest The Minuteman newspaper at a free speech rally last week, where The Minuteman claims students tore up copies of their paper.

The Minuteman's complaint filed through FIRE comes less than one month after the UMass Republican Club filed a similar First Amendment-related grievance seeking reimbursement from the campus' administration for a speech canceled several weeks ago due to disruptive protests.

With the help of the FIRE, the club sent a letter to Chancellor Robert Holub on March 24, requesting that UMass return the $444.52 the club was charged by the University for three additional police officers, who were called due to a large number of protesters at the event.

See MINUTEMAN on page 2

Costly conference held under scrutiny

BY SAM BUTTERFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts sent 29 employees to the Higher Education User Group (HEUG) conference in Anaheim, Calif., March 22 through 25, in preparation for an upgrade to the campus student information software system.

The conference brought together nearly 5,000 participants from Oracle software using colleges and networks around the country.

UMass has sent a similar number of employees to the conference in the past, but this year's delegation and $50,000 price tag have come under fire, as UMass is in a difficult financial position, attempting to obtain millions in federal stimulus money to avoid layoffs and cutting programs.

The University said that sending the 29 employees in one trip saved thousands of dollars by training them as a group, instead of individually, and that the arrangements for the conference were made in the fall, before the University realized the extent of its fiscal worries.

Ed Blaguszewski, executive director of news and media relations for UMass Amherst, said that the student information software system is vital to the functioning of the campus and that sending the staff to the HEUG conference is vastly cheaper than bringing Oracle consultants to campus for training.

"By sending 29 employees from many offices on campus to one location that offers 450 distinct training sessions, UMass Amherst will actually save tens of thousands of dollars for the fall 2009 upgrade, compared to bringing consultants to campus," he said.

Blaguszewski said UMass' information technology staff feels that the new upgrade will be worth the cost, yielding "faster financial aid awards, enhanced advising tools, better management of classroom space and course selections for students, and tighter system security."

The headquarters of Oracle are located in Anaheim, Calif., above. Its software was taught to UMass employees at the HEUG conference.

John Dubach, UMass' chief information officer, said in a statement that the software is critical in managing University information and that the conference allowed IT and student services employees to learn the new material by being around colleagues and Oracle experts.

"Training our internal IT [information technology] and student services team and learning from other universities around the country allows us to implement, support, and maintain this crucial IT infrastructure without depending on outside consultants," he said. "It would cost us tens of thousands more to implement this upgrade if we chose other methods of training."

Dubach also said in the statement that the trip was arranged before the University instituted travel restrictions and that canceling the trip would have cost more than the trip itself.

"The University is very cognizant of the need to restrict spending," he said.

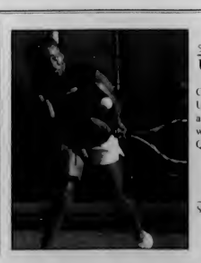
Holly Fitzpatrick, the associate registrar for systems in the office of the registrar, said the changes to the Oracle system, or SPIRE, as UMass students know it, are not so major that they will make the system difficult to operate, but sweeping enough to necessitate the trip.

"A lot of it is adding additional functionality, keeping things up to date with government regulations," Fitzpatrick said of the changes.

"The look and feel of the navigation feel ... the same, they look a bit different, it's not going to be that someone who's worked with one is going to have to be completely retrained, but it's enough to make it worth it," she said of the spending.

Fitzpatrick said the conference provided the Oracle user group opportunities to see how other networks were handling the changes and to see how they made use of the new features, which she said is

See CONFERENCE on page 3



ARTS & LIVING

GZA on GAME

GZA has shown that he's still on top of his game with his new album, "Pro Tools," and his critique of mainstream hip-hop music.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

UM downs Bobcats

Candynce Boney and the UMass tennis team ended a five-game losing streak with a 5-2 victory over Quinnipiac.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORAL & OPINION

No, I won't shut up, Mr. Feder

Subhan Tariq has bad news for Don Feder and his hate speech masked as free speech, and no – he won't shut up about it

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

VIDEO|

Reporter Gisel Saillant provides a spring break retrospective you can watch without deleting your internet history right after.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIX
Issue 45

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Wasenczuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Harley
Advertising Production Max Detzner
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Leigh Greaney
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenwaike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
Web Editor Victor Jaeck
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnier
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Emily Stapleton
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Kocziwara
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Tuttimen
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Lamard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo P.J. Stanley
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillemeister
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Webber

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College World in 1902, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Will McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION TEAM
Dan Centola

your week ahead on Daily Collegian

NEWS

Blog | Editor's Note
News Editor Will McGuinness debuts the MDC's new blog that wants your news tips and muck. Take part in investigating the events and officials of your area.

Video |
Didn't see that free speech rally everyone's talking about? It's fine. We've got it on tape for you.

Video |
Reporter Gisel Saillant provides a spring break retrospective you can watch without deleting your Internet history right after.

ARTS & LIVING

Podcast |
The Collegian's Oliver Scott Snure interviews producer and musician John Vanderslice

Podcast|
Daily Collegian film critics Kevin Koczwara and Shayna Murphy take a look at upcoming films and Assistant MultiMedia Editor Pete Ruzo admits he's never seen a Woody Allen movie.

GET YOUR POKE ON!

Like us as much as we like you? Become friends with The Collegian on Facebook to get daily news updates sprinkled into your friends' constant newsfeed confessions.

Campus Perspectives
What is your opinion on this matter?

Do you think that there should be a law limiting a certain number of students living together in Amherst?

By Alyssa Creamer and Lisa DeBenedictis, Collegian Staff

"It probably just has to do with partying, and my initial thought was that it has to do with controlling the prices of apartments as well. But, people are going to party if they are going to party."

junior
Architecture major

- Ben Otto

"I would have to say that I am completely against it, because it undermines Greek life and society, and they have already done that by getting rid of Frat Row, and Greek life is the only way younger students can live off campus. It is part of an effort to get more people living on campus in overpriced housing."

junior
Psychology major

- Dustin Cheng

"I wouldn't want there to be restrictions because I live off campus myself. But I can understand how a school or town would be in favor of limiting the number of students because it would reduce partying. But, I also feel that partying will happen regardless."

sophomore
Communications major

- Ellen Trapp

"No, because I don't understand why that would matter. I don't think anyone actually follows those rules, because I just dealt with a realtor, and they don't follow them."

sophomore
Finance major

- Sam Smith

Minuteman, Rep. club call upon UM

MINUTEMAN from page 1

On March 11, conservative pundit Don Feder, a former columnist for the Boston Herald and editorial director of sports radio WEEI, was scheduled to give a lecture – hosted by the Republican Club on hate crime legislation. However, Feder's speech, which was supposed to last about an hour and a half, was ended early after he was constantly interrupted during the first 15 minutes of his talk.

Kissel said the University's decision to charge the club after the speech was disrupted by protesters and subsequently canceled is a violation of First Amendment rights and that charging the club for extra security is unconstitutional.

"It could be that the administration didn't know [they were violating the club's rights] or it could be they did and took advantage of the Republican Club," he said.

Peterson, who protested with other members of CAH at Feder's speech, said the Republican Club should not be reimbursed.

"Don Feder put down his microphone and decided not to continue his speech," said Peterson. "It seems to me that [the Republican Club] went out of their way to get a lot of people there, and they succeeded. So they should be held responsible."

A letter sent from FIRE to the chancellor gives UMass until April 14 to respond.

"We have received that letter, and we're in process of reviewing the matter," said Blaguszewski.

After the April 14 deadline, DeFlumeri, who is also the vice president of the Republican Club, said that if the group has not heard from the University, they are prepared to file a federal lawsuit against UMass for the event's entire cost of around $3,500.

For now, Kissel said, the club and FIRE are being patient and, "want the University to do the right thing."

Later this week, DeFlumeri said the club will meet with the dean of students to go over the student code of conduct and ensure that future guest lectures are not disrupted by protesters again.

Reporting for this story was done in conjunction with The Daily Hampshire Gazette, where Matt Rocheleau is a contributing writer.

He can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com.

Need An Apartment?
Pufftonville Village
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

USAID switches to Asian condom supplier

CONDOMS from page 1

Ashley Lesperance/Collegian

Free condoms are left outside the door of a Resident Assistant's room in a dormitory, above, for University of Massachusetts students to use.

ernment to prefer American-made products in its purchases. However, a bill that was passed recently did not include condoms as a Buy-American provision.

According to ABC News, USAID spokeswoman Tara Rigler said that "Alatech began having major quality and reliability problems in 2005, when it was 237 million orders short, unable to keep up with the growing demand.

In 2006, Alatech was 36 million orders short. Twelve countries representing 38 percent of USAID programs requested the U.S. government stop sending them Alatech-manufactured condoms.

Alatech was unable to meet their USAID contract delivery schedule because of quality control and manufacturing problems."

USAID is a leader of HIV prevention through the distribution of condoms to developing countries such as Senegal, Cambodia, and other Third World nations.

According to the USAID website, "Condom promotion is an approach that uses private sector advertising and commercial distribution to make condoms more accessible. These programs distribute high-quality condoms at affordable prices through traditional outlets such as health clinics and pharmacies, and through non-traditional outlets such as bars, hotels and brothels."

"USAID projects also assist governments and organizations in logistics management, including purchase, storage and distribution, in order to ensure an adequate supply and efficient distribution of condoms," the website stated.

Alatech was established in 1999 and makes 1 billion condoms annually. It was the "exclusive American supplier to USAID."

According to Alatech's website, the company has "people with over 30 years of experience in the production of condoms. We understand the very unique requirements needed to supply condoms to programs that often have vastly different requirements and still have the need for superior quality."

Povlacs also mentioned that "we believe that we make the highest quality condoms of any country. The many stories about poor quality of products produced off shore speak for itself."

Though USAID inspects condoms before they are distributed, Povlacs is still hesitant because of past problems with products made in China.

"Consider that an American worker earning only a little more than minimum wage 'costs' its American employer 10 to 15 times as much as a Chinese worker. We [Alatech] do provide all of our workers benefits, including hospitalization. Consider for a moment being a Chinese worker and needing hospital care. You will end up in a government-run institutions with very poor services. That is if you live long enough to get in, as the waiting list can be very long," said Povlacs.

"When you go into Wal-Mart and buy something that was made in China, remember for a moment that what you are buying was touched by a worker who worked under conditions that no American would tolerate," he continued.

Many American workers in Alatech are expected to lose their jobs, and the company might go out of business.

At the University of Massachusetts, Health Services offers condoms at discount prices from the UHS Pharmacy, and they are given out by resident assistants, peer health programs and at the Every Women's Center.

"Condoms, when used consistently and correctly, are a highly effective means of reducing one's risk of becoming infected with HIV and other STDs and of reducing the risk of unintended pregnancy. Public health professionals are generally supportive of their wide availability to sexually active individuals, and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention encourage their use," said William J. Bartosch, assistant professor of public policy and management in the UMass Department of Public Health.

Dinah Gorelik can be reached at dgorelik@student.umass.edu

Dividing boys, girls in school gains favor

By Valerie Schremp Hahn
St. Louis Post-Dispatch

In some public schools across the country, boys and girls are being separated into different classrooms in hopes that they will perform better academically.

ST. LOUIS — As they worked, they channeled their inner Hannah Montanas: "It's the beeest of both worlds," their little voices sang.

Next door, in Sylvia Bronner's class, the group of only boys teetered on stools at their tables, if they sat at all. They blurted possible answers in a raucous numbers guessing game. "A billion?" Bronner responded to one boy's guess. "It needs to be lower than a billion."

"One hundred sixty-two!" another boy blurted out.

An experiment in single-sex classrooms that started two years ago at Carman Trails school in the Parkway School District in the St. Louis area is winning over parents, students and teachers. And even though the school doesn't have test data to prove its success, the program is growing.

Last year, the school limited the same-sex classrooms to first grade. This year, it started them in second grade. And just last week, after meeting with enthusiastic parents, the teachers and principal Chris Racker decided to offer the option in third grade.

Private schools in St. Louis have offered single-sex education for decades. But more public schools are giving it a try and liking the results. A charter school in St. Louis, the Imagine Academy of Academic Successes, and the high school and middle schools in East St. Louis are among the 500 or so public schools across the nation to try single-sex classrooms.

The U.S. Department of Education noted in 2005 that the jury was still out on the effectiveness of same-gender classrooms, due to "a dearth of quality studies" on the topic.

But a lack of data hasn't slowed the popularity of the approach, which has been triggered by recent research that suggests the brains of boys and girls develop differently at young ages.

Raeker turned to single-sex classrooms while trying to figure out why younger boys were getting lower test scores and getting sent to the office more frequently. The boys were also going to the nurse's office more often, not coming to school as often and not participating in clubs as much as girls.

"There were so many different indicators that said we need to look at these guys and see what's going on," she said.

School leaders sought advice from Leonard Sax, founder of the National Association for Single Sex Public Education. When the group started in 2002, it counted 11 public schools that offered single-sex classes. Today, it counts at least 518.

Groups like the American Civil Liberties Union and the National Organization for Women have spoken out against separating boys and girls in schools, saying such classrooms are illegal and discriminatory. Others say the approach promotes gender stereotypes and fails to prepare students for a world where both sexes work together.

Raeker is familiar with those arguments.

"We are absolutely committed to just the opposite, to letting girls know there's nothing they can't do," she said. She points out that parents get to choose whether to send their child to a mixed or single-gender classroom.

Sax said there are advantages to continuing to offer single-sex classes to students as they get older. As girls mature, he said, some show less interest in subjects like computer science, though fourth-grade girls actually outperform fourth-grade boys in math.

As boys get older, for some it becomes "cool" to not like school and to disrespect the teacher, Sax said. "It's great to start in the younger years, as Carman Trails has done, so you can create a different culture where boys think it's cool to be smart," he said.

UM defends HEUG

CONFERENCE from page 1

indispensable in better learning to use the software for UMass.

"There's a couple of reasons why you do it," she said of making the trip "One is networking, you meet people from other schools, in these sessions you see what other schools are doing, which is always interesting, and you see Oracle's vision of the future."

Though the University said the trip was a necessity, others are unconvinced of the need to send staff to a conference with a $650 registration fee and ESPN's Rick Reilly as its keynote speaker, in addition to amenities like rooms at Disneyland, a Marriott and a Hilton between $174 and $189 a night, an optional golf tournament, $40 daily meal vouchers and a concert called "An Evening At the Hotel California," featuring former Eagles' guitarist Don Felder.

Lindsay McCluskey, a student on the University's board of trustees, told The Springfield Republican that the heavy spending amidst a slew of otherwise grave budgetary news reflects poorly on the University's spending habits.

"It highlights a broader issue about how the University spends its money and the University's spending priorities," she said. Calls made to McCluskey for this story were unreturned.

UMass is not alone in sending a large delegation to the conference, which Blaguszewski said offers "high-quality, cost-effective training for Oracle software products in the higher education sector."

The California State University System sent 229 staff, the University of Oklahoma and its Health Sciences Center sent 47, Indiana University sent 48, the University of Colorado sent 43, the University of Michigan sent 37, Case Western Reserve University sent 33, and the University of North Texas sent 30, among others.

Of the University of Massachusetts delegates, 26 were from the Amherst campus, two were from Boston, and one was from Dartmouth.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sjbutterfield@gmail.com

San Jose says 'ReadySat Go'

By Justin Perry
Spartan Daily, San Jose State U.

Members of CubeSat Team SJSU reach for the skies as they continue to build "ReadySat Go," a small cube-shaped satellite that will one day be launched into orbit.

ReadySat Go, which will be about the size of a small Kleenex box, is a communications satellite.

"The quickest way to say it is, it's an answering machine in space," said Eric Stackpole, a senior mechanical engineering major and the club president. "You send a message up and it records that message. Then when it flies over a different part of the Earth, it can send that message back down."

According to the official CubeSat Web site, the project was originally started by Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo, and was designed to give educational institutions "practical, reliable, and cost-effective launch opportunities for small satellites and their payloads."

The San Jose State University team is taking this idea to a higher level with their satellite. Stackpole said in addition to saving money by using older space-grade solar cells, which were donated to them, they are employing creative construction techniques that make the project more practical and cost effective.

"A lot of CubeSats are built using really fancy tools in machine shops," Stackpole said. "What we're trying to do is build a satellite in a new way using sheet metal and it's riveted together which makes it lighter weight and makes it so you can build it in a common shop."

CubeSats are attached to larger commercial satellites in a device called a poly picosatellite orbital deployer, known as a P-POD, which can hold up to three satellites.

Once the commercial satellite is in orbit, the smaller satellites are released.

Therefore these satellites are more cost effective to launch because they don't require their own rocket.

The team, which is made up of SJSU students and alumni, has been working on the project for more than a year now. The project is also completely extracurricular.

"It's so driven by passion and pure interest," said Faith Chihil, a junior advertising major and the team's public relations representative. "None of this is done for a grade."

The SJSU team is a combination of students from various majors, including computer science, engineering and advertising.

They are also collaborating with other organizations on campus, including the Amateur Radio Club. Chihil said the diversity of the team is a major benefit.

"The biggest thing we're learning about this club is about being inclusive instead of exclusive," she said. "Many other CubeSat satellite teams are composed of maybe all one major, like all aerospace or all mechanical."

Chihil said she and other members of the team are learning new skills that they wouldn't learn in their regular classes.

"I'm also learning about how to speak technical jargon," she said. "I'm an advertising student, but I'm learning how to speak at a technical level, learning how to work with different organizations besides, you know, shampoo."

Kristian Klibo, an SJSU computer science alumnus and software engineer for the project, said he is getting the opportunity to do something he wouldn't be able to do elsewhere.

"Stackpole sold me on a dream of satellite constellations," he said. "So I said, 'I want to program a space computer, so I'm down,' and that's why I'm here."

Visiting College Chef Series
Welcome Senior Executive Chef Peter Rosenberg
Texas A & M

Taste of Texas
• Grilled Marinated Garlic Chili Flank Steak with Southwest Cole Slaw
• Seared Red Snapper with Ginger Mango Relish
• Stir Fried Southwest Vegetables with Chayote Squash and Black Beans
• And more...
Texas A&M University
Department of Dining Services
Wednesday, April 8
Berkshire DC from 5–9pm
Restaurants & Institutions Ivy Awards
Dining Services UMassAmherst
www.umassdining.com

American Produce Week

April 6–10 • Lunch & Dinner
Enter to win a fruit & vegetable tote filled with treats!
Worcester, Franklin & Hampshire DCs fruits & veggies more matters
Hass Avocado Board
Restaurants & Institutions Ivy Awards
Dining Services UMassAmherst
www.umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 7, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Speech's lofty price

Fools can be found in all seasons, but only the most moronic in the dunce corps are celebrated on their April holiday. This year's winners are the UMass Republican Club members, and I could tell because they were bleating on the front page of the April 1st issue of The Collegian. Yes, the real Collegian, not The Morning Wood.

Chris Amorosi

As we're all painfully aware by now, petty reactionary columnist and potential mafia boss Don Feder came to campus the week before spring break. Despite paying GOP dollar, the Republican Club laid a Nazi-ridden trap for Feder in the hopes of triggering exactly what happened. Feder escaped this Indiana Jonesian situation by aborting his demagoguery and swinging on a bullwhip from Amherst back to Boston in one night. I will not discuss him much more.

It apparently cost Feder $1,000 to get here, so he must have made quite a few U-turns in his Hummer H3 on the Mass Pike.

I will instead discuss what I read in the Collegian: The Republican Club seeks reimbursement for some or all of the event costs. The Collegian article broke down costs thusly.

It apparently cost Feder $1,000 to get here, so he must have made quite a few U-turns in his Hummer H3 on the Mass Pike. The Club spent another $956.91 on advertising in the Collegian.

What the Club is after specifically are costs related to police presence at the event. The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education, or FIRE, requested that at least $444.52 of the $725 paid to the UMass Police Department be refunded. The ordinary police presence at such an event is two cops, but according to FIRE, the UMPD strongly urged the Republican Club to ask for more, which the Club did.

The Club and FIRE cite the additional police, and the money paid for them, to be a violation of First Amendment rights.

Let us first examine the text of the First Amendment, which reads "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

The First Amendment does not give us carte blanche to start a brouhaha or require the government to subsidize such an event.

It certainly does not protect us from our responsibility for poor decisions.

The Republican Club chose to pay Don Feder in exchange for a speech at UMass. If its business agreement with Mr. Feder did not account for event disruptions, than it was its own lack of judgment that cost it the $1956.91 for speech fees and advertising.

It's ironic for the party of Big Bad Business to fail themselves so thoroughly, but then again, look at the state of the economy.

The Republican Club chose to ask for more police. The UMPD urged, but did not demand, for more police at the event, thus leaving responsibility with the Club.

The fact that the Club requested more police is essentially an admission that they did not expect people to peaceably assemble at an event of their own creation.

Shall we pay damages to those who scream "fire" in a movie theater?

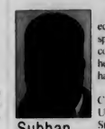
Don Feder chose to flee the event. Feder, who declares that "candor and courage has never been more desperately needed" on his website, is the one who should reimburse the Republican Club.

His petulant name-calling and cowardly retreat was a gross misuse of their funds, and I sympathize with those wanting money returned. But it should not come from my pocket.

Let me take you, my audience, on a brief aside to Afghanistan. Recently an Afghani journalism student named Sayed Perwez Kambashkh was sentenced to 20 years in prison for "insulting Islam."

The sentence was a result of a court's leniency, as his original sentence was death. The Hindu Kush, a mountain range in eastern and central Afghanistan, northwestern Pakistan and northwestern India, has not been fertile ground for liberal democracy and the NATO civilizing mission has ultimately failed the Afghans and our hopes.

Yet, there are those with "candor and courage" in Afghanistan risking their lives to express themselves in dire situations.



Here in the United States we must endure the sullen whining of privileged students who, like so many Americans these past years, have lost thousands of dollars in flawed business agreements.

But unlike Americans who lost their homes and their livelihood, I have zero inclination to have my school fees subsidizing fools who managed to buy a weak Parthian shot from some slippery Cicero.

These utter fools think it is acceptable to ask for sorely needed money from our University because ideology prohibits them from even considering that Feder didn't perform his contracted speech on his own volition. They certainly deserved front page coverage on April 1st.

Chris Amorosi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at camorosi@student.umass.edu

I will not shut up, Mr. Feder

Subhan Tariq

The United States was founded on the principles of free speech: the principle that one could speak out against his or her own government and not have to fear its wrath.

Recently, the Republican Club, in conjunction with the University Democrats, the Student Alliance for Israel and the Silent Majority (which is neither silent nor the majority), had a First Amendment rally on the steps of the Student Union. They talked about the events that led to Don Feder not continuing his speech at UMass and criticized the political left for infringing on their free speech.

The First Amendment of the United States Constitution states, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

It seems as if the Republican Club, and the other RSOs involved in the rally, have some ground to complain about, right? Wrong.

The First Amendment says "Congress shall make no law … " That means that the First Amendment refers to the government and how the government cannot infringe upon one's right to free speech. You are free to speak, but so is the left. If you are annoyed by it, find a louder microphone or a more open space, because technically your free speech was not infringed upon.

Now people will say, "Well, Don Feder was intimidated." This is false.

Before he even began his speech, Don Feder egged on the crowd by saying, "If you continue to protest, you will have won, and I will not deliver my speech." Essentially, Feder gave people the fire needed to shut down his speech and then blamed them for using it.

He ended by calling everyone "goddamned Nazis," comparing people's use of free speech versus Nazi Germany's extermination of people.

There are, of course, exceptions to free speech, and that is covered by the Supreme Court in the "fighting words" doctrine, something that the vice president of the University Democrats, Matt Cadwallader, was quick to point out.

The fighting words doctrine is defined as "insulting or 'fighting words,' those that by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace." It seems pretty simple, that one can say anything as long as they don't incite violence.

Essentially, Feder gave people the fire needed to shut down his speech and then blamed them for using it.

Now, let's take a look at a quote that was published in a recent newspaper. The Republican Club's vice president, Brad DeFlumeri said, "Anyone who peacefully tolerates a homosexual in the same room as him is, himself, a homosexual."

I don't know about you, but to me, those sound like some fightin' words.

The mere thought that one should not "peacefully" co-exist with homosexuals is calling for violence toward them. The idea that one should not peacefully tolerate people who are different from themselves is truly troubling.

When approached and asked about his comment, Mr. DeFlumeri not only took responsibility for the comments but was also proud of them.

The intolerance needed to call for violence or profiling against another people simply for being different is something that is against the principles upon which the United States was founded.

Let's take a closer look at some of the things Don Feder has said about Islam and other groups. He states: "When a young Muslim becomes more involved with his religion, his thoughts often stray to suicide bombing."

As someone who considers himself pretty religious, I take extreme offense to this.

Basically, he is saying there is something wrong with practicing my religion because the more I become religious, the more I would want to blow myself up.

I was present at the Don Feder speech and thought to myself, "Why is everyone trying to shut him up?"

I had heard about some of the things he had said about women and blacks but wanted to give him the benefit of the doubt. I even went up and introduced myself afterward and had an interesting conversation with him. It wasn't until I got back to my room that I decided to do some research on the guy.

His comments about minorities and women sound as if they are coming from Hitler himself.

The Republican Club would have you believe that Mr. Feder's free speech rights were infringed upon during the event. The fact of the matter is, however, that Mr. Feder uses the excuse of free speech to mask his hate speech.

It is not protected under the First Amendment because it's not the University or the government that is trying to shut up Don Feder – it is the people who believe in equality and are expressing their First Amendment rights to tell Mr. Feder he's not welcome.

I'm sorry Mr. Feder, you can't shut us up.

Subhan Tariq is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at stariq@student.umass.edu.

Obama's nonrealistic diplomacy plans

Greg Collins

Is President Barack Obama getting mugged by reality? His recent transatlantic visit to Europe, coupled with his appeal to Iranians via a video message broadcast on Iranian television, may clearly illuminate an ugly question the president will have to face sooner or later: What if people just don't want to listen to you?

The question during the 2008 presidential campaign trail in relation to foreign policy was whether Obama or Sen. John McCain would meet with our enemies, ostensibly hostile to the United States, like Iran.

The answer provided by Obama, in contrast to McCain, was yes, he would indeed be willing to meet with our enemies. He would indeed talk directly to Iran to soothe relations, gain support from President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, and – most importantly – assuage its government to lower the country's nuclear ambitions.

But the follow-up question should have been asked more consistently: What if Iran rejects such pleas? What if Ahmadinejad laughs in the face of such diplomacy? What if Iran's ayatollah tells Obama that the only nuclear deal will be one made on Iran's terms?

What if reality sets in, and Iran just doesn't want to listen to America?

This reality should be clear by now to anyone who has studied American foreign policy the past decade or so, during which both the United States and Europe have repeatedly and systematically tried to use diplomacy to halt Iran's nuclear programs, but have consistently failed.

European diplomats met with Iranian negotiators consistently to try to establish a civilian nuclear deal and suspension of uranium enrichment.

This failed.

President Bush offered at least two separate civilian nuclear deals to Iran in 2006, both of which Iran rejected.

This failed.

The UN Security Council has passed at least four resolutions attempting to impose sanctions on Iran and halt its nuclear ambitions.

This failed.

Unfortunately, America does not have enough time to play nice, considering Iran's continued pursuit of uranium and development of weapons technology and facilities.

The International Atomic Energy Agency, the UN's nuclear watchdog, has attempted to check Iran by exposing its covert nuclear program, secret uranium enrichment and flouting of international law.

This failed.

Diplomatic efforts have been tried before, and they have consistently yielded the exact same result. Today, Obama's current standing policy – Iran can have access to nuclear technology for peaceful purposes (whatever that means), or risk facing more sanctions and condemnation – is strikingly similar to that of former President George W. Bush.

But what about other famous cases Obama has cited as examples of successful diplomatic efforts in American history?

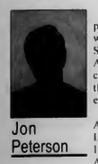
For instance, what about Richard Nixon's visit to China's leader Mao Zedong in 1972, when the Soviet Union was spreading its influence over Eastern Europe and Southeast Asia?

This meeting did not occur out of the blue, and China did not magically and immediately decide to talk with America without any preconditions or preliminary talks. Henry Kissinger led tireless and countless efforts before and Mao talked with one another did by no means solve the larger geopolitical issues of the day. They hardly spent any time discussing the Vietnam War, Taiwan or the Korean peninsula, because they knew that doing so would highlight the deep divisions between the two parties, and could subsequently derail any future negotiations.

Unfortunately, America does not have enough time to play nice, considering Iran's continued pursuit of uranium and development of weapons technology and facilities.

Unfortunately, America cannot afford to assume that Iran will not threaten to destabilize the region, considering its overt public hostility of America and Israel as well as its rivalries with the two American-backed countries surrounding it, Iraq and Afghanistan.

And, unfortunately, the possibility that the United States may talk to Iran directly in no way suggests that Iran will curtail its nuclear its nuclear program.



The point is not that any idea of negotiations and diplomacy with Iran should be rejected by the Obama administration. Rather, it is that Obama should take a deep look at the past attempts by America and non-American allies, like France, to talk with Iran with the intention of halting its nuclear ambitions.

It should take a deep look at what, essentially, the message Iran has conveyed back to them: We will not listen to you.

And finally, in light of Iran's continued pursuit of nukes, it should recognize what Iran is doing, and has been doing, to Europe, the United Nations, America and other members of the international community: Mugging them by reality.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Allocating funds to the people who are allocating the funds

Jon Peterson

Nothing can more painfully demonstrate what is wrong with the Student Government Association than the current voting system that elects its members every year.

Over the years, the ALANA (African, Latino, Asian/Pacific Islander & Native American) Caucus has consistently nominated the presidential candidate who has gone to win the seat. This group, which received upward of $180,000, until its funding was cut several years ago, now forms the ALANA Caucus, which organizes different ethnic minority groups around campus to participate, among other things, in the SGA elections.

Their unprecedented organizing not only ensures that they have retained SGA leadership, but they have also been ensured representation with control over 13 percent of the Student Senate.

Among the people who run the SGA are leaders of other programs that receive well above normal funding, such as the Student Bridges group, the spending of which I outlined in a previous column.

This group – which takes in more funding than any group except the Student Legal Services Office and has several licensed legal professionals on staff – has multiple members in the SGA, including at least three senators and a commuter area governor. The money allocated to it now pays many of its student members, who are in a direct position to influence how student money is being allocated.

While groups such as the UMass American Red Cross have had their funding cut in recent years and now receive nothing, groups and people that are directly in position to say where the money goes get preference.

The potential conflict of interest is immense, and it is just one sign of the ways in which our SGA has been stacked over the years. One confidential source, who is involved with the SGA, told me that whenever the subject of the Student Bridges group is brought up in meetings, they are immediately shot down.

The informant feels that this is due in large part to this conflict of interest.

At the same time, voter turnout at the SGA elections is consistently low. While candidate after candidate has promised to attempt to increase student participation, the percentage of voters has stayed roughly the same.

This decision to not spend on existing groups that have histories of service at UMass and to fund a startup with $120,000 is absurd.

2007 showed a 12.6 percent voter turnout, and 2009 saw a "roughly 13 percent" turnout, according to The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

In an interview with SGA official Shaun Robinson, I was told that the Student Bridges organization was founded after ALANA stopped being funded.

This was because of a "gap" in spending that came with the groups' dissolving, and to take the place of some of the things people who were interested in ALANA might be interested in another group. Instead of giving the money to other, preexisting groups, the money was used to create Student Bridges. The goal in creating it was to more actively ensure that students were able to have access to community service. The year that Student Bridges came into organization, consequently, was the year that the Red Cross stopped receiving funding from the SGA.

This decision to not spend on existing groups that have histories of service at UMass and to fund a startup with $120,000 is absurd. Such an action is similar to a person talking about a particularly ineffective policy, saying, "But what do you think would be better if it were to be done away with?"

A person doesn't put out a fire and then ask what it can be replaced with.

And while a lack of student voting only prolongs the problem, the lack of noticeable effort by the SGA can only be seen as an approval. SGA officials make few public statements, and are possibly best known for taking up large scale issues such as proposed divestment from Israel.

As a result of all these pre-existing problems, it remains an authoritarian, one-party system, which is essentially unanswerable to the people it is meant to serve. It now appears to serve itself largely, while also perpetuating the power that certain groups have over it.

I am all for students running, being supported by organizations and being elected, and think that people who don't vote are just as responsible for the perpetuation of these groups as they are themselves. But, that doesn't make it any more reasonable that the people being paid are the ones responsible for the appropriation of money.

I urge everyone who feels that this conflict of interest is inappropriate to speak to their campus senator, Trustee Lindsay McCluskey, or President Malcolm Chu, or talk to the Center for Student Development, and ask that they don't approve funding for groups that are influencing the allocating of funds.

Jon Petersen is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jpeterse@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 7, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

GZA is still 'The Genius'

Grice to perform with Vain at Pearl Street Ballroom

IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's been more than 15 years since Gary Grice took a leadership role as The Genius, or GZA, in arguably the most influential hip-hop outfit of all time, the Wu Tang Clan.

With longevity and high lyrical quality, Grice has proven that the appellation "Genius" has not worn at all since 1993's seminal "Enter the Wu-Tang (36 Chambers)," having released his latest record "Pro Tools" last summer to critical acclaim. He will bring an entire career's worth of material to The Pearl Street Ballroom on Wednesday night with San Francisco rockers, Vain.

In an interview interlude on "36 Chambers," Clan member Method Man reveals that GZA really acts as the collective's backbone, bringing together all nine members and associates. "He the head; let's put it that way," Method Man said. "We form like Voltron, and GZA happens to be the head."

It's no wonder GZA is so prolific. The title "head of Wu Tang" carries a lot of weight in any hip-hop respecting community.

His 1995 record "Liquid Swords" is highly recognized as a masterpiece, molding together samples of violence from 1980s samurai films such as the jidaigeki ("period drama") film "Shogun Assassin" (1980) and scenes of modern urban violence with ominous beats, incorporating pleasant piano lines, horns and real drum sounds to bring these extremes to life.

This concept of samurai film sampling was introduced to the album by producer and fellow Clan member RZA, much like he introduced "Shaolin and Wu Tang" (1981) samples to the first Wu Tang LP.

This is not the only similarity

See GZA on page 6

Gary Grice took the leadership role in one of the most influential hip-hop outfits of all time, the Wu Tang Clan, as The Genius or GZA. Grice will perform with Vain at the Pearl Street Ballroom on Wednesday night in Northampton.

Hazards of the concept album

The Decemberists' newest album falls short of previous

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Traditionally a polarizing rock 'n' roll staple, the concept album has served to vault bands to prominence (The Who's "Tommy"), alienate old fans (Green Day's "American Idiot,") and at best tends to leave fans and critics in constant debate. To add even more complexity to the issue, even the most well conceived border on being indecipherable, longwinded and overindulgent.

With their newest entry, "The Hazards of Love," The Decemberists' lead songwriter Colin Meloy throws his hat into this venerable fray by attempting to construct an entire rock album out of material that was supposedly written for an abandoned stage play.

While the Decemberists' Capitol Records debut, "The Crane Wife," labeled them as consept storytellers, it was at best loosely based on its source material centering on an old Japanese folk tale concerning a crane that comes between a married couple.

But with this act, the Oregon outfit makes the big leap to full-blown concept album complete with narrative arcs, musical reprisals and even different character vocals as the album offers a few notable guest stars including Becky Stark (Lavender Diamond), Shara Worden (My Brightest Diamond) and Jim James (My Morning Jacket), among others.

The good news for fans is that while the band loses some of its authenticity in the transition, "The Hazards of Love" dregs up the bands eccentricities. The longer narrative arc ensures that the album feels like a bit of a flat line devoid of the standout tracks "Sons & Daughters" and "The Crane Wife 3," which characterized 2006's "The Crane Wife."

But this single-minded devotion to the story forces the band to dig deep as musicians, and for the most part they respond fleshing out Meloy's nonsensical concept about shape-shifting creatures, the ghosts of murdered children and star-crossed lovers by adding emotive details where the lyrics fail to provide anything truly substantive.

Not only does the focus shift from the song to the album as a whole, but the band also goes back on their traditional folk leanings by incorporating elements of progressive rock and even heavy metal into their established mix. While this sounds shocking, it should come as no surprise to those who saw guitarist Chris Funk shred in perhaps his most notable appearance, a guitar duel with Peter Frampton on Comedy Central's "The Colbert Report."

In fact, the album works best when The Decemberists step into uncharteted territory and crank up the wattage. Meaty moments come with "The Wanting Comes in Waves/ Repaid," a six-minute epic that ranges from whistling verses to riffs ripped straight off an old Black Sabbath LP. During this fiery dirge, Meloy trades lines with the story's fiery heroine about loss and betrayal.

"The Rake's Song" rings with a similar fury and perhaps the albums most notable chorus, an understated "alright, alright, alright." This may sound cliché, but Meloy sings it with a throughthe-teeth fury that buoys simple narrative lines like "I had entered into a marriage / in the summer of three on the Billboard rankings.

See DECEMBERISTS on page 6

The Decemberists newest album, "The Hazards of Love," falls short of 2006's "The Crane Wife," but still is an excellent example of its genre.

The album featured "You are the Best Thing," a catchy love song that has been a mainstay on alternative radio stations across the country for a number of weeks.

He returns to more of a happy sound reminiscent of his first album, but again this album is lighter then even "Trouble."

LaMontagne's singles have been featured on a number of commercials, television shows and films and have even been covered on American Idol.

What sets LaMontagne apart are his poetic lyrics that display a range of different emotions and experiences. All three of his albums are vastly different, but are incredibly deep.

LaMontagne, who was born in Nashua, N.H., and currently resides in Maine, will return to his New England roots tonight before a sold out crowd at Northampton's Calvin Theater to support his third studio album, "Gossip in the Grain."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

LaMontagne to perform in NoHo

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ray LaMontagne is pretty good with his hands.

It turns out that he is also pretty good with a guitar and a raspy yet powerful voice that is part soul, part folk and reminds many of a young Van Morrison.

Working at a shoe factory in Lewiston, Maine, out of high school, LaMontagne decided that the workforce was not for him.

After hearing a Steven Stills song, "Treetop Flyer," he decided that he was finished working 65 hours a week and shifts that ended at 4 a.m., He wanted to produce something that wasn't tangible: music.

Unlike most musicians, LaMontagne had no musical background and hardly was exposed to music before his epiphany of sorts.

During his first tour in 1999, he worked as a carpenter part-time to help pay for a 10-track demo that found its way into the hands of Chrysalis Publishing Group.

The London-based group was impressed with the demo and helped LaMontagne record the critically-acclaimed debut, "Trouble," which went on to sell a quarter of a million copies in 2004.

The album sold 400,000 worldwide, and was a hit in the United Kingdom, with "Trouble" becoming a Top 40 hit, while the album went to No. 5 in the United Kingdom.

Ironically, the album features Stills' daughter, Jennifer, on a song and Nickel Creek's violinist, Sara Watkins, on two tracks.

"Forever My Friend" and "Hold You in My Arms" are too upbeat acoustic love songs that really showcase LaMontagne's vocal talent.

LaMontagne's second studio album, "Till the Sun Turns Black," was released in the summer of 2006, and was darker and more instrumental than his first album.

It peaked at No. 28 on the Billboard 200, selling 28,000 copies in the first week of its release. The album is extremely calm, with songs like "Barfly" with horns and strings intertwined throughout the disc, like "Three More Days."

But with LaMontagne's first two studio albums reaching notoriety abroad, it wasn't until 2008's "Gossip in the Grain" that LaMontagne's talent was heard at home, while reaching number

Ray LaMontange will perform at Northampton's Calvin Theater to support his third album, "Gossip in the Grain."

Metric releases versatile record

JOE STAIB
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Metric is back in full force with "Fantasies," a versatile new effort packed with ethereal loveliness, introspective lyrics and other magical things that make up Metric.

"Fantasies" is Metric's fourth full-length album and was recorded in the band's hometown of Toronto. But before any music was laid down, Emily Haines, the mastermind and voice of Metric, went South of the equator in hopes of finding some inspiration for the new album.

After spending a few months in Buenos Aires, Argentina, Haines said her writing was inspired by the city's beautiful architecture. It seems pretty lofty and pretentious to be inspired by buildings, but whatever did the trick for "Fantasies" success, we'll accept it.

After Metric's glass shattering and raw album, "Live It Out," the band took a breather while Haines went the solo route. Her 2006 solo album, "Knives Don't Have Your Back" has sinister appeal like previous Metric albums, but it's nothing Metric would ever claim as its own.

Unlike Haines' bare and minor chord-heavy solo material, "Fantasies" offers more than a guitar and a girl with sad thoughts. It is a splendor of courageous dance tunes and haunting futuristic synthesizers wrapped up in raw human emotion.

Since its birth, Metric has been notorious for its catchy hooks and melodies backed up by saccharine harmonies. "Fantasies" is no different from the rest. A while back, the band reported in an interview that they often use the Apple Inc. software, GarageBand as a starting point when they create music.

"Fantasies" is sugar-coated pop at its best, but that doesn't mean there are no sharp edges to cut you deep. "Stadium Love" is crammed with epic reverb and male falsetto-backup vocalizations in the song's chorus. It's high-energy, intense, dance-provoking music that screams for you to run around the house in drug-fueled euphoria.

Pervading throughout the album is an abundance of high-running emotions that is often best when fantasizing. "Waves (Is Safe)" is an earthy-yet electronic up-tempo number that is joyously powerful. Haines knows what she wants and knows what to do to get it.

Keyboards have always been the band's backbone for cultivating its sound. The experimental use of the instrument has been a trend in indie dance music for some time now. "Fantasies" is the epitome of the ongoing trend as the band relies heavily on Haines beloved keyboard to supply its thumping cosmic beats and melodies.

In between tough-guy attitudes and know-it-all lyrics that deal with the troubles of our youth ("Sick Muse"), the band doesn't mind asking for some "Sympathy" on two versions of the album's already third single. "Gimme Sympathy." The first version of the track is in the same vein as the majority of the dance-friendly album and the other is more stripped down and acoustic. Metric does this two version recording for another song on the album.

"Fantasies" could do without the acoustic tracks, but Haines obviously found it hard to separate her solo career from Metric.

Joe Staib can be reached at jstaib@student.umass.edu.

Emily Haines, above, and Metric released their fourth album, "Fantasies." Haines got her inspiration from architecture.

'Pro Tools' mocks rap

GZA from page 5

between "36 Chambers" and "Liquid Swords." The same hard urban imagery and traditional Japanese countryside themes persist, as do the steady, jazzy spans of beats and collective lyricism, as GZA called on each member of the Clan to provide verses on nearly every track.

The only difference between "Liquid Swords" and a Wu Tang album is GZA out in front in full form as opposed to hanging back, calculating every move. Many tracks stand out, including "Cold World," which samples both Stevie Wonder and Frank Zappa's Mothers of Invention, and "Shadowboxin'."

Thirteen years and three albums later, one finds GZA releasing "Pro Tools," a record not as ripe with guest verses as much as guest producers like Black Milk and Arabian Knight in addition to former full-timer RZA.

The album's name is simple but requires at least a bit of speculation. GZA has been known to say it was basically a random name to make the label happy, drawn from the music-making program, but knowledge of the 50 Cent diss-track buried deep in the album begs the question of whether "Pro Tools" could be a jab at today's flood of low-quality mainstream rappers, since anyone can make a rap song if they're provided a computer with Pro Tools, a finger to click with and a mouth that talks.

The feud track, "Paper Plates," suggests 50 Cent is weak and disposable, as are corners of rap obsessed with the same themes (cars, for example), repeated over and over again. In a September interview with AllHipHop.com, GZA addressed this issue as well as today's general "regression," as he calls it, of hip-hop.

In a way, he gloated of his experience and maturity, urging the interviewer to "ask the average MC to write a rhyme but set it in the 17th century."

"What?" he said mockingly. "'I can't talk about my Maybach?! I can't speak about rims and bitches?!' They're stuck. That's how you test them and see their real lyrical abilities."

RZA produced "Paper Plate" as well as "Life Is a Movie" (which contains a sample of Gary Numan's "Films"), which is a bit more exciting than "Paper Plate." The sample hums as drums pound out a steady rhythm, GZA trading off small verses with the deep-voiced Irfane Khan-Acito as synthesizer lines pulsate and rise when the sample's chorus chimes, "Sometimes I feel like my life is a movie – I don't like the film."

GZA's son Justice Kareem is even featured on two tracks, "Groundbreaking" and "Cinema." Though time was short to record his vocals, in an interview with Vibe.com last summer, GZA claimed he's going to recycle the technique and use it again on other projects. On "Groundbreaking," Justice Kareem finishes and starts verses, weaving his voice in and out of his father's, while "Cinema" sees him whispering eerily on the chorus.

GZA is still on top of his game, evidenced by the new record and his accurate diagnosis on the stasis of mainstream hip-hop. He's proof that the younger generation has to get together and step up in order to reach anywhere near the caliber of the greats. Don't expect The Genius to regress anytime soon.

GZA will perform with Vaun at the Pearl Street Night Club's Ballroom on Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are available in advance through the Northampton Box Office for $20 or at the door for $23. The Pearl Street Night Club is located on 10 Pearl St. in Northampton.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

GZA's newest album, "Pro Tools," and his accurate description of mainstream hip-hop proves that the artist is still on top of his game. He will perform Wednesday at Pearl Street in Northampton.

Cyrus's album falls short

The Disney Channel star's fans aren't ready for the new Miley

By Todd Martens
Los Angeles Times

A new album from "Hannah Montana" star Miley Cyrus fell short of No. 1 on the U.S. pop charts in its first week of release, raising the question: Are the tween star's fans ready for her to go a little hit country?

Only a year ago, Cyrus' 3-D concert film set records, and scalpers were charging thousands for tickets to her live concerts. Her past three major releases debuted at the top of the charts. But the new record's sales were a fraction of her previous studio albums' first-week sales.

The album is the soundtrack to the singer-actress' "Hannah Montana: The Movie," which opens April 10 and takes the Disney Channel series' character from her home in Malibu to her family's roots in Tennessee. The accompanying album draws from the movie's setting, showcasing Cyrus as more of a country performer alongside songs by country stars Rascal Flatts and Taylor Swift.

Walt Disney Records' senior vice president and general manager, Jim Weatherson, said the soundtrack was in line with projections, considering that it was released two weeks before the movie will hit theaters.

"The movie promotion didn't start in earnest until essentially this past weekend," he said. "We felt that with the success that 'The Climb' was having at radio, we had an opportunity to sell records in front."

Cyrus performed at the recent Grammy Awards with Swift, and it is perhaps Swift's career that is serving as a model for Cyrus' move beyond tween pop. Other young female country singers, including Carrie Underwood and Kellie Pickler, are some of the genre's fastest-rising stars.

Cyrus, whose father, Billy Ray Cyrus, is a country music singer as well as an actor who plays her father on the Disney series, is scheduled to appear Sunday on the Academy of Country Music Awards to sing her country-pop single "The Climb."

"The Climb" may indicate that Cyrus could see some success as a country artist. The song has sold 583,000 digital downloads since its release in early March. It's her first solo single to breach the top 50 on Billboard's country songs chart, and it has given Cyrus her highest position on the U.S. pop chart, where it debuted at No. 6 and rests at No. 11.

Repositioning Cyrus as a country singer is not Disney's intention, Weatherson said.

"I think Miley has a heck of a car eer right now, whichever direction she wants to take it," he said. "All of her stuff to date, including this song, are pop-driven. I think you'll see that moving forward. This is just one of those songs everyone can relate to, and country radio gravitated toward it."

Outpacing the soundtrack to "Hanna Montana: The Movie" was the 30th volume in the compilation series "NOW That's What I Call Music! 30," which opened with 146,000 copies sold, according to Nielsen SoundScan. Cyrus' record landed at No. 2, with 139,000 copies.

She sold 371,000 copies during the first week of release of her summer 2008 album "Breakout," the first album she released under her name instead of "Hannah Montana." The soundtrack's sales results also reverse the upward trend of the previous albums under the "Hannah Montana" name. A 2006 soundtrack to the Disney Channel series sold 281,000 copies in its first week, and a double-disc effort in 2007 bowed with 326,000 copies.

Disney Channel star and tween phenomenon Miley Cyrus's newest album fell short of the No. 1 spot in U.S. pop charts in its first week. Her prior three releases debut at the top of the charts.

Scrambled storyline weakens release

DECEMBERISTS from page 5

my twenty-first year."

The song's story quickly spirals headlong into a plodding acoustic guitar line that sparks with such tension that when his character starts complaining of his wife "spitting out babies" and of being "shamefully saddled with three little pests" it is hardly a surprise.

But despite the album's climactic songs, it doesn't stray from the concept of traditional pitfalls. Starting off predictably with the fluttery "Prelude," a 3-minute-plus rising of mostly inaudible sound, the album contains a lot of repetition. Four songs named "The Hazards of Love" all contain similar variations on the album's main melody and chorus while fillers like the 1-minute, 40-second "An Interlude" merely stem the tide between some of the album's better tracks.

To make matters worse, the storyline is as scrambled as a ball of rubber bands. There are characters that drift in and out, an evil queen, a heroine named Margaret, a "humble narrator" and child that seems to be in a state of flux between characters.

However, for all its faults, "The Hazards of Love" comes out as an excellent example of its genre.

The sheer ambition of the album serves to successfully separate The Decemberists from their indie rock peers, a shrewd move that comes at a time when their home state is pumping out buzz bands with exceeding velocity. Once more, "The Hazards of Love" provides the band with the serious stadium fodder they'll need this summer for larger venues and festival dates, while simultaneously ensuring that there will be new fans in attendance.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu

The Decemberists released "The Hazards of Love," a concept album, on March 24 with Capital Records.

Are you looking for a job for next semester?

The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is looking to hire employees for advertising production in 2009 - 2010!

- Flexible work schedule
- Hourly salary
- Awesome people

Little to no experience in graphic design necessary! Looking for undergrads with good computer skills, strong motivation, the ability to learn, and a keen eye.

Contact Max Detmer at
Advertising@DailyCollegian.com
for more information, or stop by The Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

Domino's Pizza
2X Tuesday
Buy any large pizza, get second one FREE
413-256-8911

UNC crowned champs, rout MSU

Tar Heels' stars shine brightly in NCAA championship game win

By Joe Juliano
(MCT)

DETROIT – In a game that matched two teams on a mission, North Carolina found itself fulfilling the wishes of four players who returned after a disappointing Final Four last year to cut down the nets at Ford Field.

The Tar Heels built a lead that grew to as many as 24 in the first half, then used it as a cushion to repel any attempts by Michigan State to come back, gaining an 89-72 victory over the Spartans to win the national championship before a record crowd of 72,922.

Carolina (34-4) finished an impressive NCAA run that saw it defeat six opponents, including Villanova, by an average of 20.2 points, winning no game by fewer than 12. It marked the Tar Heels' fifth national championship, tying Indiana for third all-time, and enabled Roy Williams to become the 13th head coach to win more than one.

Junior Wayne Ellington scored 17 of his 19 points in the first half when the Tar Heels built their sizable advantage and set a championship game record with 55 points.

Junior point guard Ty Lawson scored 21 points, dished out six assists and set a title game record with eight steals. Senior Tyler Hansbrough added 18 points.

Those three players, along with senior Danny Green, all resolved to return to the team and not test the NBA waters after losing in the national semifinals last year. Their plan paid off in a big way.

The Spartans (31-7), who said they wanted to win to give economically depressed Detroit area something to smile about, committed 14 turnovers in falling behind by 21 points at the break.

They couldn't muster a comeback of any significance early in the second half even though the Tar Heels made only three of their first 16 shots from the field in the opening 10-plus minutes.

The best they could do during this time was close to 68-53 on a free throw by Draymond Green with 9 minutes, 32 seconds left.

The Spartans, who sank only one of their first 10 three-point attempts in the second half, kept grinding. Carolina failed to convert a pair of one-and-one opportunities. Michigan State got a three-ball from Goran Suton and six free throws, including a pair by Kalin Lucas with 4:47 to play that closed the gap to 76-63.

But the Tar Heels got a nifty drive from Lawson, who went behind the back and split two defenders. He later nailed two free throws and Bobby Frasor got a layup off a turnover, and Carolina was home free at 84-65 with 2:30 to play.

Suton led the Spartans with 17 points and Lucas added 14.

Amid all the excitement and noise generated by the tens of thousands of Michigan State fans, the first half simply became a matter of the Tar Heels picking up where had they left off Dec. 3, when they outscored the Spartans by 21 in the second half.

And what do you know? When the buzzer sounded to end last night's opening 20 minutes, North Carolina held a 55-34 advantage _ 21 points.

The Tar Heels opened 6 for 7 from the field and finished the first half shooting nearly 53 percent. The Spartans made 44.4 percent of their field-goal attempts but committed 14 turnovers, with Lawson accounting for seven steals.

Ellington went 3 for 3 from beyond the arc and 7 of 9 overall to lead Carolina with 17 points at the break; Hansbrough added 11. Lawson made 1 of 5 shots, but with his steals and three assists, probably no one from the Tar Heels worried in the least.

Suton, who did not play in the first Carolina-State matchup because of a knee injury, led the Spartans with nine points in the first half.

North Carolina led by 10 before the game was 4½ minutes old. The Tar Heels had 24 points with about 13½ minutes to play _ a 72-point pace for the half _ and led by 34-11 when Hansbrough converted both ends of a one-and-one with 9:44 remaining.

The Carolina defense held the Spartans to one field goal over 6½ minutes, a stretch that ended after Hansbrough's free throws. Michigan State coughed up five turnovers during that time.

The Tar Heels got fine performances from inside players not named Hansbrough in the first half. Deon Thompson, a 6-foot-8 junior, scored nine points before the period was half over. Ed Davis, a 6-10 freshman, scored back-to-back baskets on a couple of nifty moves around the hoop.

Ellington sank a short jumper and a three-ball on consecutive possessions to restore Carolina's 23-point advantage. After Suton drained a hook shot, Ellington knocked down another trey, and Carolina had its biggest margin of the half, 46-22, with 4:46 to play.

Try as they might, the green-clad Michigan State faithful could not convert the cheers into points. Fans roared late in the half when the Spartans cut the deficit to 18, but Carolina managed to get the advantage back to 20 and more.

The same thing happened in the opening minutes of the second half. Michigan State got to within 18 three times in the first 6½ minutes, but the Tar Heels always had an answer.

One answer came on a play in which Spartans coach Tom Izzo felt Lawson had stepped on the out-of-bounds line saving a loose ball. Davis took advantage of the save and scored to make it a 20-point game once again.

North Carolina coach Roy Williams (center) and the Tar Heels defeated Michigan State 89-72 last night to win the national championship. It is the fifth NCAA title in UNC's history.

Phillies feel pressure

By Sam Donnellon
McClatchy Newspapers

PHILADELPHIA — OK, so Charlie Manuel had a little trouble hosting the championship flag.

OK, so everybody, fans and players, then left the on-field pre-game ceremony – and forgot about good ol' Charlie.

OK, so the first of four guys to parachute down landed a little off the mark in Parking Lot S.

OK, so Brett Myers pitched for the cycle in his first two innings of 2009, surrendering home runs to right, left and centerfield.

OK, so it took exactly 17 minutes of the season before the first boos cascaded down.

On Myers, specifically.

The Phillies gave each of the 44,532 fans in attendance a World Series pennant Sunday night. Myers tried to give them a ball, too.

At least some lucky ones in the bleachers.

Well, so what? We're not going to fall into that trap of negativity that we're so often accused of falling into, are we? Not this early, with so much baseball, so much fanfare left.

Right?

So four hits and a 4-1 loss to the Braves was not the electric night everyone anticipated. So the pre-game ceremony – which, like the Phillies, looked so good on paper – ended in a sort of disorganized scrum. About 150 fans, chosen randomly from the stands, entered the outfield grass from Section 141 and formed a long receiving line. One by one, beginning with Jamie Moyer and ending with Jimmy Rollins, Phillies players high-fived their way through the stands, down a makeshift stairwell and through the on-field tunnel of humanity.

All that went great. But then Charlie had a little trouble with the flag, and by the time he started down the stands, the fans were leaving the field. "And they pulled the ladder on me," said the manager. Halfway down Section 141, Charlie and a dark-suited Phillies employee retreated back up, leaving the golf-cart driver who was supposed to return Manuel to the dugout to practice K-turns instead.

Well, that's what it looked like anyway.

But think of the positives: At least the parachutist didn't land on your car.

He didn't, right?

Anyway, remember the new vibe? Remember the leeway you promised, some of you for an entire season? You promised patience. You promised understanding. You promised nothing but love for a team that brought you to tears last October, a team that inspired an entire generation of boys named Chase, Cole, Ryan, Brad and Jimmy.

"We really got to see when it goes good," Cole Hamels was saying before the game. "And I think a lot of other ballplayers got to see that, too. You can tell when you talk to other guys on other teams and they're like, 'Wow, that must have been fun. And you're like, 'Yep. Wanna come over here some time?'

"There have been times in the past when that question would have been asked with eye-rolling sarcasm. Some of that was due to losing, but a lot had to do with a disconnect. Players came, saw, were booed, and departed. Even in 1993, there was more of an us-against-them attitude than there seems to be now.

"I think we really do understand them," Hamels said. "I think because a lot of us were drafted by the Phillies. You know what you're coming into. You hear stories and you say to yourself, 'I'm not going to let that affect me. I'm going to be better than that. I'm going to give them something they've been wanting to see.'

"I think we have all those guys who are capable of doing that and understand that. You build teams through free agents, or you build teams through trades, that's a little harder. Because the players don't understand. We understand what we're getting ourselves into. And we want to take it."

Even Myers, as star-crossed as his career here has been, is that way. He now has been the starter for the Phillies' last three Opening Days, all losses. He has been booed in each of them. He has been in legal trouble, pitched at times with too much weight on him and too little fastball, but he has always been there to take the heat, and this night was no exception.

He also is a guy who has been willing to take the ball, no matter what. He started the opener because Hamels had arm trouble this spring. Do not forget what the man did in 2007, jumping into the bullpen when Tom Gordon went down for the season. Or what he did in 2008, grudgingly going back to the starting rotation.

Do not forget what the man meant to the stretch run last season, when the Phillies won 24 of their last 35 games and forged that bond.

Derek Lowe's pitching performance in Philadelphia spoiled opening night for the defending champions. Lowe pitched eight shutout innings, allowing two hits and no walks in the Atlanta Braves' 4–1 win.

Thirty years later, Bird-Magic duel still greatest title game ever

By Ray Buck
McClatchy Newspapers

Magic Johnson won the game, but Larry Bird had the premonition.

Their matchup in the 1979 NCAA championship game, played 30 years ago, truly elevated the Final Four in terms of becoming a major spectator event in the American sports psyche.

But several hours before the country stopped to watch, several hours before Johnson's Michigan State Spartans held off Bird's previously unbeaten Indiana State Sycamores, 75-64, in Salt Lake City, a private three-sentence exchange between teammates spoke volumes.

Bird and his roommate, Bob Heaton, were getting their ankles taped in the Indiana State training room. The exchange went like this:

"You ready?" Bird asked.

"Yeah."

"I hope so," Bird replied, "because I ain't feeling it."

This was Ted Williams having self doubts about hitting a baseball, Secretariat feeling the Belmont Stakes might just be a tad too long, Muhammad Ali in his prime thinking maybe he really isn't the greatest.

"For somebody as cocky as Larry Bird on a basketball court to say before a game that he's 'not feeling it' seemed remarkable to me," said Seth Davis, who dug up this tidbit for his new book, "When March Went Mad: The Game That Transformed Basketball" (Henry Holt & Company, $26).

Although totally uncharacteristic, Bird had cause and effect.

"From everybody I talked to, Bird was physically and emotionally drained by that point in the season," said Davis, a CBS studio analyst for college basketball. "It had been a very long year, a very long tournament, a very long weekend. And he knew, probably better than anybody, what they were up against."

Opposites do attract

Monday night, March 26, 1979.

Earvin "Magic" Johnson vs. the future "Larry Legend." The country was amped for this heavyweight fight in short pants. Only thing missing was a Michael Buffer.

Johnson, 6-foot-9 point guard, a sophomore about to embark on the NBA, a rare talent in the open court, an effervescent personality whose Michigan State team began the season 5-4 but now had won 20 of its last 22 games.

Bird, a 6-9 senior center, painfully introverted and private in his thoughts, a relentless shooter/rebounder/defender whose little ol' team from the Missouri Valley Conference was now one game away from doing what Bob Knight's Indiana Hoosiers did three years earlier: Go undefeated.

"This one game kicked off college basketball's growth in this country. It was Ali-Frazier," said Dick Vitale, longtime ESPN college basketball analyst who was coaching the Detroit Pistons at the time.

Vitale was home after his Pistons lost, 116-107, to the Washington Bullets on the road the night before. He was parked in front of his TV set.

"Hey, I mean, the drama was there," said Vitale, slipping into Dickie V mode. "It was so unique to have a player named 'Magic' with all that he could do on a basketball court going up against a kid from French Lick, Ind., who carried a team undefeated into that last game."

Then he said it: "It may never happen again."

"I don't think you'll ever again have the mega names of a Bird and a Magic meeting in an NCAA championship game," Vitale said. "Kids today are leaving college early. And by the time a young man can become this level of player . . . he's already in the NBA."

The hype, the game

Two out of every five Americans tuned into NBC to watch one-on-one basketball, "Magic vs. Bird". It was a game that lived up to its hype.

Dick Enberg handled the play-by-play. Al McGuire and Billy Packer served as co-analysts. Bryant Gumbel was a 30-year-old courtside reporter.

A sellout crowd of 15,410 jammed the Special Events Center on the University of Utah campus. Long hair and wide lapels were everywhere.

Enberg and Packer worked in matching disco red jackets. McGuire wore fluorescent blue.

At halftime, the network presented a musical film tribute to the game's two superstars. Slo-motion. Stop-action. But nobody was mentioning Bird's unflattering nickname: "The Hick from French Lick."

"I think one of the most poignant moments in the book," Davis said of "WMWM", "was when Larry was a junior, coming out of a press conference and walking across the court, and quietly asking (assistant coach) Stan Evans, 'Did I sound stupid in there?' Larry was worried that people would think he was some backward hick."

Bird wasn't an honor student. He never applied himself in the classroom. But there may never have been a more intuitive player on a basketball court.

At one point in the telecast, McGuire marveled, "Bird shoots his shot the same way every time" – no matter if he was open on the wing or falling away to avoid a defender in his face.

But a major difference between Bird and Johnson in 1979 (keep in mind, they both wore No. 33) was how each man handled "Magic vs. Bird."

Bird hated the hype. Magic embraced it.

Competitor-competitor. Superstar-superstar. But they were different.

Magic played with a toothy grin. Bird wore a poker face.

"The last person that was going to understand the fascination with this matchup was going to be Larry Bird," said Davis.

Just before tipoff, McGuire told NBC viewers, "(Michigan State forward Greg) Kelser is the third man in the ring, and that might be the difference in this game."

Indiana State was its own worst enemy at the free-throw line. The Sycamores shot 45 percent (10 of 22) and could never catch up after falling behind in the opening minutes.

Magic 24, Bird 19

The game was barely a minute old when Johnson swept the boards and went coast to coast to give Michigan State a 5-2 lead on a hard drive to the basket. Magic banked his shot, drew the foul, celebrated with a fist pump . . . then made it a 3-point play.

This is what had Bird worried.

Packer said of Johnson: "He never has to make the outlet pass because he 'is' the outlet pass."

Bird, playing with a bandage on his broken left thumb, later beat Magic along the baseline, banging home his own missed shot with his left hand. Bird never flinched.

The game was less than perfect, but the intensity was wicked. Both halves. Both teams.

And while Bird and Magic didn't guard each other, they competed against each other. Johnson ended up with 24 points, seven rebounds and five assists.

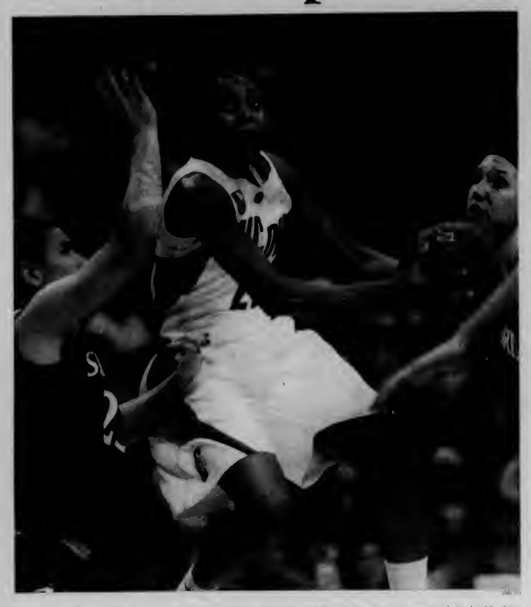
Bird, true to his gut feeling, turned in a poor shooting night (7 of 21) to finish with 19 points, 13 rebounds and two assists.

The NBC telecast received a then-record 24.1 rating for a college basketball game.

Now this wasn't exactly RCA's David Sarnoff at the 1939 New York World's Fair, but TV in '79 was still rather primitive in its coverage of college basketball on the national stage.

There wasn't the 24/7 media coverage of today. Not even a widely-anticipated epic matchup between two great players from diverse backgrounds – black/white, urban/rural – could change overnight how things were covered.

Media exposure was so hit-or-miss that some viewers, believe it or not, weren't aware that Bird was white until they watched the March 26, 1979, telecast.



Heaton tells the story. He played basketball at the University of Denver before transferring to Indiana State . . . and "had friends in Denver who thought Larry was black," Davis wrote in his book.

Epilogue

CBS broadcaster Jim Nantz has called the '79 national championship game "still a stand-alone event even 30 years later."

Although separated by two years, eight months in age, Bird and Magic are forever linked.

UConn's perfect season continues

UConn's Renee Montgomery attacks the hoop in the Huskies' 83-64 victory over Stanford. If the Huskies can defeat Louisville tonight, they will cap another undefeated season.

By Stu Durando
McClatchy Newspapers

ST. LOUIS — By comparing his players to gladiators, Connecticut coach Geno Auriemma might have created the most bizarre analogy yet of the Huskies' ability to brutalize one opponent after another.

"You know who is going to slaughter who," he said on the eve of the Final Four. "But you go there, and the only way it's going to be a big story is if we were to lose somehow, some way."

Maybe no way.

Poised to complete the program's third undefeated season, UConn went about mauling Stanford quickly Sunday night in a rematch of last year's national semifinals and didn't let up in an 83-64 win at the Scottrade Center.

The Huskies (38-0) can add to the program's mystique Tuesday when they face upstart Louisville (34-4) for the national championship. Might it be, in Auriemma's words, another slaughter?

UConn has defeated Louisville twice, 93-65 during the regular season in Storrs, Conn., and 75-36 less than a month ago in the Big East tournament championship game. Regardless of the opponent, Auriemma said his team is locked into its mission.

"When you know the person sitting next to you has invested the same amount and will be there for you, it's a real comfort level," he said. "It's something all great teams share. . . . They're just really intertwined and connected right now and have been since December."

The 19-point margin of victory actually matched the closest game the Huskies have played in the NCAA Tournament, where they have won by an average of 25.8 points.

Stanford had taken care of its first four opponents by an almost identical margin, but UConn exposed the difference in talent level.

"One of the disappointments I had when I looked at the bracket is that I feel we can compete with the other two teams that are here," Stanford coach Tara VanDerveer said. "But Connecticut was head and shoulders above us tonight."

Renee Montgomery scored 26 points and Maya Moore added 24 for Connecticut, which shot 49 percent. The loss ended a 20-game winning streak for Stanford, which ousted the Huskies from the championship chase in a surprise win last season.

"As a whole, our team is better," Moore said, "and we were more prepared to compete against Stanford."

The Connecticut aura was present at Scottrade, starting with the throng of fans who made the trek and drowned out the shouting of the Stanford faithful.

Auriemma was an unmistakable presence on the sideline, standing and pacing most of the game, with arms folded or hands on hips, while VanDerveer did much of her coaching and pleading from her seat.

Stanford center Jayne Appel did her best to damage UConn's poise by starting the game fast. She scored 10 of her team's first 14 points, and the Cardinal clung to a one-point lead with nearly 10 minutes gone.

"I was very nervous how we'd be able to guard Jayne Appel and how we'd defend Stanford in general," Auriemma said. "I wasn't that concerned about how many points we'd score."

When Appel's shots stopped falling, Stanford didn't have enough offensive options. Throw in 11 first-half turnovers and the Cardinal weren't nearly as precise as needed to keep things interesting. UConn needed less than five minutes to execute an 18-4 run that staggered Stanford.

When the teams met in last year's Final Four, Montgomery made four of 18 shots. But she came out sharp Sunday, scoring 15 points in the first half to boost her team to a 37-24 lead.

Auriemma said he reminded his players at halftime that Oklahoma had blown a 12-point halftime lead in the previous game.

Moore, who has won multiple national player-of-the-year awards, didn't do much in the first half but scored 11 points in the first 10 minutes of the second half.

UConn opened the halt by scoring the first 13 points and had Stanford more than doubled. The lead reached 30 points with more than 12 minutes remaining and peaked at 31.

And this was supposed to be the Huskies' tough game.

"They don't make a lot of mistakes," VanDerveer said. "They don't take bad shots. They play within the flow of the game, and they play with a purpose."

Offense leading UM

LACROSSE from page 10

16 points and tallied 24 draw controls in UMass' four conference games. Her 49 draw controls on the season is a UMass single season record, and her 12 draw controls against La Salle ranks third all time in the National Collegiate Athletic Association for a single game.

She has been named UMass Co-Athlete of the Week two weeks in a row for her outstanding play.

"Meg Reddy continues to really step up her senior year. She's put a ton of work in; her teammates are responding to her; and she's been able to execute at a high level," Venechanos said. "It's great for her to see the results of working so hard."

Reddy has scored 24 goals this season. She had scored 31 goals in her last three seasons combined.

"She's always all over the place," goalkeeper Katie Florence said. "She can feed, she can draw, and she can score. She can do it all."

Freshmen impact

For most of the season, UMass has depended on its veteran players to provide the bulk of the scoring. But a few freshmen made their presence felt last Sunday against George Washington.

Dayna Deffiese led the underclassmen with three goals for her first career hat trick. Three other freshmen, Danielle Pelletier (2), Nina Sarcona (1) and Ali Houlis also found the back of the net.

Venechanos was pleased with all of her freshmen, but praised Deffiese's performance particularly.

"Dayna does a lot of good things behind the scenes; she's always in the right place; and it was nice to see her rewarded with a few goals," Venechanos said.

Offense in Rhythm

At the beginning of the season, Venechanos talked about how she was attempting to diversify the team's offense. She wanted UMass to start more plays from behind the net, saying the more their opponents had to account for, the tougher they would be to defend.

Last weekend, the team showed off what it has learned this season, as they racked up 31 goals in two games.

Typically, the Minutewomen's plan was to get the ball behind the net, and send attackers running across the goal. The player with the ball can pass to a cutting attacker for a quick shot, swing the ball to the sidelines and give an attacker a chance to drive the net, or just sneak around and try for a wraparound goal.

"Our [passing] connections have improved, and it's really been contagious. It's opened up our offense," Venechanos said.

The Minutewomen boast a .532 shooting percentage in their conference games, tops in the A-10.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

UMass' Haley Smith capitalizes on a point-blank shot earlier this year against Stony Brook. The Minutewomen have converted over 50 percent of their shots against Atlantic 10 opposition.

apply
For Loans ONLINE
Now you can apply for all of these great loans online. It's faster and easier!
Auto
Consumer
Mortgage
Home Equity
Home Improvement
SPF 30
EBOnline
Anytime Banking
bankesb.com
Easthampton Savings Bank | 413.527.4111
Member FDIC
Member DIF

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Eleanor Bateman Alumni Scholar in Residence
Brian Silva '735, '79
Golf Courses
From Stockbridge to Success
Wednesday, April 8 • 4:00 - 5:00 p.m.
Memorial Hall - Complimentary Refreshments
ALL ARE WELCOME
For more information, visit UMassAlumni.com or call 800.4546.UMASS (8627)

Scandihoovians
Scandinavian Design for Living. A Beautiful Lifestyle
Friend us on Facebook!
22 Strong Avenue
Northampton, MA
(413) 586-0002
25 S. Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA
(413) 256-0004
scandihoovians.com

Almighty diety.

| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 3 | | | 8 | 4 | | |
| 9 | | | 2 | | | | 7 |
| 4 | | 2 | 9 | | | 6 | |
| | 4 | | 1 | | | | |
| | 5 | | 6 | 7 | | 9 | |
| | | | | 2 | | 8 | |
| | 8 | | | 4 | 1 | | 3 |
| 3 | | | 7 | | | | 2 |
| | | 1 | 3 | | | 4 | |

Quote of the Day

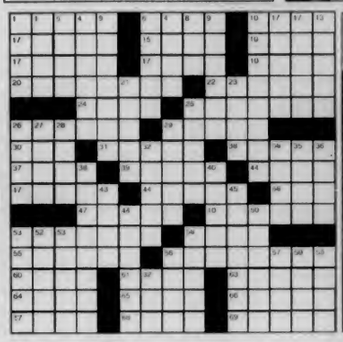
"Democracy is a process by which the people are free to choose the man who will get the blame."

- Laurence J. Peter

Welcome to Falling Rock National Park by Josh Shalek

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! by Tim Rickard

Labrat by Richard Martell



Interested in getting Business Experience?
The Collegian needs a new Business Manager for 2009-2010.
Applications are available at 113 Campus Center,
Due Wednesday April 8th, by 5 pm.

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Living off of canned goods was never your goal, but sometimes nuclear Armeggedon steps in and makes your plans for you.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
The only "trickle-down" economics you understand have to do with what's running down your leg at the moment.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You are the captain of the U.S.S. Bedroom, but sadly your vessel is a lowly kayak.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Aggravated (adj.): Used to describe someone after they finish this horoscope. Ex: "This horoscope wasn't funny at all."

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You are going to be the best grain silo elevator operator this town has ever seen.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Everything will make more sense when you realize during the final episode of ER that it doesn't stand for "Endoplasmic Reticulum."

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Did You Know??? #345: Unrecycled recycling bins account for 3.43% of all trash in American landfills.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Outsource your own job to India without telling your boss, and then sit back, relax and watch the cash roll in.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Blessed and possessed of liberal dispositions and celestial regions, the field of battle looks.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Write a press release about the release of a press release regarding the release of a press release summarizing the release of a...

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Did You Know??? #1,272: There is no such thing as the female orgasm. It's a modern myth!

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You're "The People's Champ." Or at least you will be, once The People realize it.

Classifieds

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office. $11.00/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 17th.

Announcement

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Announcement

ATTENTION ALL JUNIORS AND SENIORS! FALL 2009 INTERNSHIP APPLICATIONS ARE NOW AVAILABLE AT THE STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE. GET HANDS ON EXPERIENCE IN THE FIELD WORKING WITH ATTORNEYS AND CLIENTS. EARN UP TO 12 UNDERGRADUATE CREDITS, NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY, WE'LL PROVIDE TRAINING. APPLICATION DEADLINE IS APRIL 13th. CONTACT OUR OFFICE AT 545-1995 OR STOP BY AT 922 CAMPUS CENTER.

For Rent

Amherst: 2,3, & 4 bedroom apartments, $1200-$2250. FREE HEAT! Great Specials! www.MillValleyApts.com or 413-253-7377

Petrichor

For Rent

Looking for summer housing? 3 bedroom apt. in Rolling Green looking to sub-let. Clean, convenient, and quiet. Call Kate at 978-257-2549

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincoln-realty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

For Sale

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 7, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass beats Bobcats, snaps losing streak

Lecluyse, Danai's performances key to victory over Quinnipiac

BY JAY ASSER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts tennis team picked up a much-needed victory against Quinnipiac University this weekend, ending a five-match losing streak.

Before Sunday's victory, UMass had been in a downward spiral in which they dropped five consecutive matches after traveling to Florida for their spring trip in mid-April.

UMass 5
Quinnipiac 2

The losing streak marked the longest for the Minutewomen since last season when they lost five in a row beginning in mid-February and ending in early March.

On Sunday, it was a different story as UMass was able to trounce Quinnipiac (6-9). The Minutewomen (9-11) were able to claim two of three doubles matches and four of six singles matches to earn the 5-2 victory.

UMass coach Judy Dixon was pleased with her team's performance, especially considering the circumstances.

"We went out and beat up on Quinnipiac and played pretty well considering the weather was windy, and we've only been outdoors in Virginia for two matches," Dixon said.

The Minutewomen earned the first point of the match with wins at Nos. 2 and 3 doubles.

At the No. 2 spot, the duo of Maude Lecluyse and Laura Danai dropped one game en route to defeating Lisanne Steinert and Shawna Sarson, 8-1.

Following the first win of the day for UMass, the No. 3 pair of Candyce Honey and Lauren MacKay topped Kasey Rosenberger and Nicole Adams, 8-6.

In singles play, Carpenter earned a victory at No. 2, beating opponent Natalie Duckor, 6-2, 6-4.

At No. 4 singles, Lecluyse won 6-1, 6-3 against Rosenberger. Right behind her, Danai followed with a 6-0, 6-2 victory against Sarson, dropping two games.

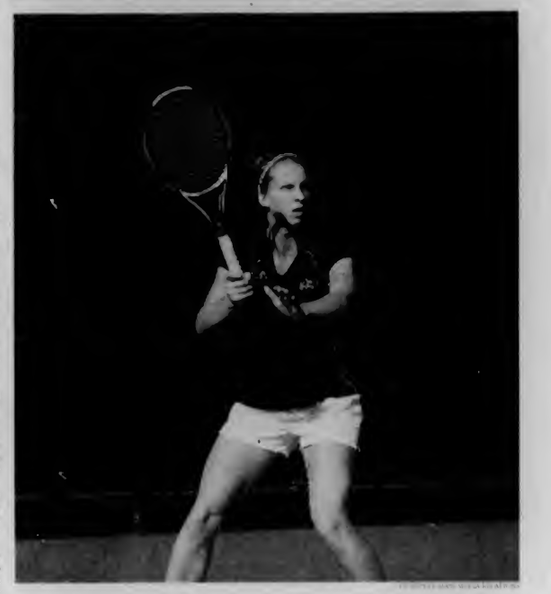
In the last match of the day, MacKay put away Adams, 6-3, 6-1, finishing off the Minutewomen's strong performance.

Dixon was delighted by her team's response to the struggles they faced in their last match.

"I feel we played extremely well and got wins where we needed them. It was a good all-around effort, and it wasn't any one special individual performance but a really good team effort," Dixon said. "After getting drubbed by BC, this was a good turnaround."

Entering the final two regular-season matches, Dixon had a talk with her team on finishing the year strong.

"We had a talk Sunday morning in which we spoke about how we were in the last part of the year," Dixon said. "I've asked them to put their losing days in the past with last part of the season upon them, and there isn't a match we can't win now."



Regardless of the win-loss record, Dixon feels her team has stepped up while playing through a roller coaster ride of a season.

"We've had a tough year, and we're without our No. 1 player [Ploch], which makes it very difficult in tennis," Dixon said. "Yet, this team has never backed down and never stopped fighting and has been the hardest working team I've ever coached."

With Sunday's victory, Dixon moves closer to reaching 200 wins for her coaching career at UMass. At 198, she is only two wins away from reaching the milestone.

Dixon's next two opportunities come as the Minutewomen wrap up their regular season schedule when they host Rhode Island and Temple on Thursday and Friday, respectively.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu

Maude Lecluyse's play helped pick up two key points for the Minutewomen. Lecluyse teamed up with Laura Danai to score an 8-1 victory in the doubles portion. She then won her singles match 6-2, 6-4.

Minutewomen peaking at the right time

Experience from early losses crucial to Atlantic 10 success

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's always gratifying for a coach to see a plan work perfectly.

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos' plan to get her team ready for conference play was to have the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team face the toughest competition possible.

Women's Lacrosse

UMass faced five teams in the top 15 and went 1-4 in those games, including a 22-5 loss to No.1 ranked Northwestern in the team's final non-conference game. The Minutewomen entered their first conference game against La Salle with a 3-6 record.

Two weeks and four straight conference wins later, Venechanos' strategy looks brilliant. UMass (7-6, 4-0 A-10) is the lone team with an unbeaten conference record and has dominated its Atlantic 10 opposition, outscoring them 58-27.

"We're happy where we are right now; we played a very competitive non conference schedule; and we are ready for anything," Venachanos said before last weekend's games.

The 4-0 record ties the squad's best start since UMass joined the Atlantic 10 in 1999.

The next three opponents UMass will face are last year's A-10 Tournament champion, Temple, followed by Duquesne and St. Bonaventure.

All three of those teams are 1-3 in the conference and have a combined record of 10-24. Although the schedule looks favorable, Venechanos will not let her team relax.

"No matter who we face we go into every game in the Atlantic 10 expecting a battle," Venechanos said. "We know that this league is so competitive, and records don't matter in the games."

READY FOR PRIMETIME

As one of three seniors left on the Minutewomen, Meghan Reddy was being counted on before the season to step up and become a force on the team.

She has done just that.

Since scoring a hat trick against No. 1 Northwestern, Reddy has been on a tear offensively. She has scored

See LACROSSE on page 8

Meghan Reddy, (shown against Stony Brook) has been on a torrid pace offensively. Last Friday, she scored five goals against Richmond then followed that up with a three-goal, four-assist performance against George Washington on Sunday.

Crew cruises past Quinnipiac

BY ADAM MCGILLEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With the Connecticut River flooding, the Massachusetts women's rowing team took to the calmer waters of Lake Quinsigamond in Worcester, Mass., where it overwhelmed Holy Cross, winning every race on Sunday.

The regatta had been scheduled to take place on the Connecticut River, where the Minutewomen typically race, but the rainy weather that has recently plagued the New England area forced the move to the more favorable conditions on Lake Quinsigamond.

The Minutewomen crew was unfazed.

The varsity-8 won the first race of the day by a slim margin, finishing with a time of 6 minutes, 56 seconds. Holy Cross finished two seconds behind.

In the bow seat of the first boat was senior Erin Kelly, who was honored with the Senior Leadership Award on Wednesday. Kelly helped row the team to two Atlantic 10 Championships in her first two seasons and earned National Scholar-Athlete recognition from the Collegiate Rowers Coaches Association as a sophomore and again as a junior.

The Crusaders kept the first race close but could not catch the Minutewomen.

UMass extended its margin of victory in every race after that, taking the second varsity-8 race by five seconds and the third varsity-8 race by 26.70 seconds. The novice eight matched the second varsity's time of 7:09 in their race, dominating the novice Holy Cross rowers who finished in 7:57.

Senior Haley Fitzgerald replaced freshman Julia Richter in the first varsity boat for the event. Richter injured her knee while training over the week.

A team marked by youth, with two freshmen in the first varsity-8 boat, UMass coach Jim Dietz emphasized the importance of consistent victories.

"Every weekend you get another race, they get a little bit more confident as to what they're doing," Dietz said.

"We're going to train hard and race hard right through the Knecht Cup this coming weekend, in hopes of tapering just before the A-10s to get up to speed," Dietz said.

The Knecht Cup takes place next weekend in Camden, N.J. The UMass women will face off against more than 30 teams in a series of events on Friday and Saturday.

"Everybody who goes down to Camden will be racing at least three to four times," Dietz said. "That's a heavy load, but we tend to learn a lot from that."

Despite their youth, UMass boasts a roster with great depth. The ability to adjust the roster and remain competitive allowed the Minutewomen to complete their sweep of Holy Cross. Entering the heart of their season, depth will prove pivotal for the team as it advances through two weekends of tough competition.

After winning 12 consecutive A-10 championships, UMass finished second to Rhode Island last year. The Minutewomen defeated the Rams last weekend by one point to take the Yankee Cup.

UMass will compete against Rhode Island again next weekend for the Knecht Cup.

Adam McGillen can be reached at amcgille@student.umass.edu

Rain may have forced the Minutewomen to relocate, but the change of scenery had no effect on the outcome as UMass swept Holy Cross.

Aguguo's triple jump highlights opener

BY JEFFREY ENGMANN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Stephanie Aguguo did her best to help the Massachusetts women's track team place third out of six this Saturday at the UConn Invitational. In the process, she just happened to make history.

Aguguo, a sophomore from Shrewsbury, Mass., recorded the second-highest triple jump in school history, with a distance of 38-07.00. Almost as impressive was the distance between her and her nearest competition. The unheralded jump was more than a foot farther than that of second-place finisher Shanon Stone of Brown University.

The feat has earned Aguguo UMass/Dinn Bros. Co-Athlete of the Week honors and was crucial in propelling the Minutewomen to a top-three finish. However, Aguguo was just one of several Minutewomen who was able to get her season off on the right foot.

Ida Okkonen displayed her versatility by making key contributions in several different events. The sophomore transfer from Kupuio, Finland, recorded a first-place finish in the long jump, with a distance of 17-11.50.

Okkonen also participated in the 4x100 relay team that recorded a second-place finish, as well as earning a fifth-place finish in the triple jump.

Redshirt senior Kristen Bakanowski also helped elevate her team with a first-place finish in the pole vault. She cleared a height of 11-11.75.

The Minutemen competed hard on Saturday as well – this time to a no team score. The Minutemen received several strong performances, especially in the 5,000-meter. Junior Andrew Mulvaney placed second with a time of 14:54.56. Not far behind Mulvaney were twins Kevin and David Johnson, whose hard running earned them third and fourth place, respectively.

In his first outdoor event as a Minuteman, freshman Daniel Wu wasted no time in making his presence felt. Wu finished third in the long jump with a mark of 21-09.00.

Both teams will look to improve on their performances in their first home meet of the season this Saturday, in the UMass Six-Way event.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

MOSTLY CLOUDY HIGH: 49 LOW: 29 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8, 2009

State aid may 'buy' time

Despite receiving $82 million, UM officials are wary of future

BY LISA DEBENEDICTIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Despite Gov. Deval Patrick's recent decision to allocate roughly $82 million to the University of Massachusetts system, many on campus, including Chancellor Robert C. Holub himself, argue that the only thing it may "buy" UMass is time.

"We are thankful for and supportive of Gov. Patrick's leadership in securing federal stimulus funding for higher education and the campus. At the same time the reality of the situation is that we will not know precisely how much funding will be coming to campus until we have a legislative budget later this summer," said Holub in a campus-wide e-mail last Thursday.

"Everyone in state government ... has cautioned us not to count on the federal stimulus money as a solution to our current financial crisis, and has urged us to proceed with the cuts needed to reduce our budgets to a level supportable by the Commonwealth," Holub continued in his e-mail.

Holub also discussed the importance of parent and alumni advocacy in his e-mail, and encouraged students to do so as well.

Although the student fee increase of $1,500 was approved by the trustees in February, the funds received should be able to allow the University to only raise them to allow for the cost of inflation, which is $400.

However, many have raised concern for what will happen to student fee prices after the stimulus money runs out in two years, and whether they will be raised then rather than now.

Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM) Coordinator Ferd Wulkan agrees that it is possible that student fees may have to increase, but argues that if this time is used wisely, the legislature can come up with a solution to give more funding to higher education in Massachusetts.

"I think it really depends on what happens now, both with the economy and the legislature, and what they do about it. I don't think we should assume that in two years our budget will be slashed again, I think we should take this time to use it to change," said Wulkan.

Wulkan also echoed Holub in his uncertainty about the legislature's budget plans for the stimulus money.

"What the government announced is great, but it is still possible that the legislature could undermine that and so we are being very vigilant to make sure they integrate the stimulus fund appropriately," Wulkan added.

To further advocate for this, PHENOM is holding a rally and Lobby Day Wednesday in Boston in support of public higher education. Students who wish to attend Lobby Day can take a bus with the organization, leaving from Haigis Mall at 7:30 a.m. and returning to Amherst around 5 p.m.

"We are hoping to accomplish a few things [from the rally]. Now more than ever is the time to invest in higher education. This is a critical time to invest in funding for the operating budgets of campus and increasing need based financial aid. We expect a lot of people to be there all over the state," said Wulkan.

When asked whether or not students will see a fee increase in years to come, University spokesman Patrick Callahan explained that it is too soon to tell.

"We are still working on what this year's stimulus money will do. In terms of what will happen two years down the road, there are too many unanswered questions ... it's not knowable at this time," said Callahan.

Libby DeVecchi, a spokesperson for UMass President Jack M. Wilson gave a similar outlook, but expressed optimism for increased federal and state funding through advocacy, as well.

"For the previous five years, President Wilson and the Board of Trustees have been able to kept tuition and fee increases at the University below inflation, thanks in large part to relatively stable state funding," said DeVecchi. "This is an important time for all of the University's constituencies to continue to advocate for funding that protects quality and affordability. Once the Commonwealth's budget for Fiscal 2010 is finalized, the Recent stimulus money given to UMass may rebate a next semester's $1,500 fee increase. However, the chancellor and state officials are cautious to speculate the money's impact until it is finalized by the state.

See BUDGET on page 2

Monster.com CEO, alumnus visits University

BY KATE OLESIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The man who epitomizes his own definition of entrepreneurship spoke at the University of Massachusetts Tuesday night to a group of young, aspiring business owners.

"My definition of an entrepreneur is when everybody around you thinks you're crazy and you go ahead and do it," said Jeff Taylor, UMass alumnus and founder and former CEO of Monster.com, a billion dollar job search website.

Taylor was invited as a guest speaker at a group called the Entrepreneurship Initiative (EI) which partners with Commonwealth College to have its members create ideas and teach them the critical skills to get started, according to its website.

"Jeff is the quintessential example of what a UMass student can do," said Isenberg School of Management professor and Taylor's longtime friend, Tom O'Brien.

Taylor, who described himself as "a student of life," started his talk with his activities at UMass and how they shaped his entrepreneurial career.

In one of his first business initiatives, he got the names and addresses of the incoming freshman class from a "friend at Whitmore" and sent home letters advertising for a "freshman survival kit."

Taylor made $3,000 his sophomore year from the sales of the kits which he stuffed with Snickers bars and other knick-knacks he felt freshmen might benefit from – making a grand total of $7,000 the three years he sold the packages.

"You have to come up with the ideas," Taylor said. "And sometimes answer to the challenges."

One of those business challenges came at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Taylor worked at the newspaper during his first years at UMass – which had been losing money for over three decades. First, he joined as an advertising representative, where he sold ads in nearby Northampton. The following year, he became the advertising manager and then the next year, the business manager, where he felt he made a lasting impression as a businessman.

"I helped turn The Collegian profitable – it had been losing money for 36 years," Taylor said.

In addition to working at The Collegian, being on the council of UMass' Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, Taylor worked as a tour guide doing the "bullhorn" tour at 8 a.m. Saturday. He then went on to head the tour guide program.

However, Taylor felt the academic sting from being so involved on campus.

"I did all this shit and forgot to go to class," he joked.

Taylor spent five-and-a-half years at UMass, from 1978 to 1983 before leaving without his degree to launch his career with his ultimate risk – Monster.com.

"I had this dream, a big idea – a monster idea," he said.

Monster.com really came in the form of a dream. The idea came while he was half asleep thinking of ideas, like "The Monsterboard," essentially a big bulletin board of job postings. Once the idea came, he spent 10 years marketing the company so, like today, 9 out of 10 people would know what the website was.

Jeff Taylor is a UMass alumnus and CEO of Monster.com.

To put Monster on the map, Taylor and his team created a Super Bowl advertisement in 1999. In addition, he hired a team to create a crop circle featuring the "Trumposaurus" or the website's mascot, right on the flight path into Chicago's O'Hare airport. Monster was a sponsor for the 2002 Winter Olympic Games, where the company fronted $15 million dollars for permission to be on the ground at the Olympics and the use of the Olympic rings in their commercials. Taylor and his team had people dressed as "trumposauruses" at the games, gave away thousands of free, Monster.com snowboarding hats and created a snowmaze.

Taylor's snowmaze almost cost him. He hired a sand castle builder to construct it for him for the price of $90,000 with 10-foot walls. Unfortunately for the Monster.com team it was one of the warmest winters for a Winter Olympics and the walls melted until you could almost see over them. But a maze that turned out to be melting into puddles suddenly became free publicity for the company when Katie Couric and The Today Show gave the maze a five minute spot – what Taylor estimates to be worth about $5 million dollars.

Taylor charismatically told a number of stories, bursting out into the song "Roxanne" while pretending to think of his best ideas in the shower and imitating playing the bass guitar, but he had three main pieces of advice to give students.

"Pick a big market," he said, "and change is happening, you can be apart of that change. And don't let anyone tell you how long to take a shower. In the shower, you start solving problems."

Taylor eventually returned to UMass to complete his undergraduate degree through the University Without Walls program and spoke at his own commencement.

Although Taylor left Monster.com in 2005, he is still taking on big initiatives, like Eons.com – a social networking site for baby boomers 55-years-old and older. In addition, he recently started Tributes.com in 2008, a site for obituaries resources. Taylor also has his own show on Sirius XM radio called Jeff Tale in which he plays his favorite kind of music – indie dance, house and tribal music.

But even with the money, fame and success of his business, Taylor – whose academic career was like "a gnarly ass line going all over" said he hasn't quite found that feeling of ultimate achievement.

"I haven't found success," he said. "I'm still trying to figure it out."

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@dailycollegian.com

Du Bois collection to digitize

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The W.E.B. Du Bois Library at the University of Massachusetts announced over the weekend that it will digitize about 100,000 items from its Du Bois collection.

The library is able to finance this project thanks to a $200,000 grant UMass' library received from the Verizon Foundation, a philanthropic arm of Verizon Communications.

The digitization will make available for the first time online the original diaries, letters, photographs and other materials related to the prominent African-American figure.

Du Bois wrote more than 4,000 articles, essays and books, most of which are currently out-of-print or difficult to find.

Robert Cox, the director of special collections at the library who has worked there since November 2004, said the project will provide the public with extraordinary access to Du Bois' papers. He said the project is slated to start in July and will take approximately two years to finish.

"If you go and put [the items] online, researchers anywhere at any time can get access to the material. They can read it at three in the morning in Zimbabwe and do whatever they want," said Cox. "But they can also gain the ability to search through the collection by keywords and things like that, which is much, much harder to do now."

Cox said the materials consist of typed and handwritten documents, both of which require different scanning and cataloging processes. He said typed materials will be put through optical character recognition, or OCR, in which a computer scans the text and makes it visible to a reader. For the handwritten documents and some of the typed ones that will not go through OCR with much efficiency or accuracy, workers for special collections will have to describe each item with notes.

"It is a very labor-intensive process, where we say, 'This is who wrote the letter,' 'This is who received the letter,' 'This is where it was written,'" Cox said, adding that they will also include some basic content information.

"If someone was interested in the Pan-African Congresses, they can go through and do a search across the whole collection and find any letter that we thought mentioned something about the Pan-African Congresses," he said.

The Pan-African Congresses were a series of five meetings that were intended to address

See DU BOIS on page 2

Located on the 25th floor of the University's library is its Special Collections section, where students can find original writings by W.E.B. Du Bois.

ARTS & LIVING

PASSOVER IN AMHERST

A rabbi at UMass is hosting a passover event in Amherst Common, rain or shine, for all students to learn about the holiday.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

BEANPOT BOUND

Jim Macdonald's two-run home run lifted the UMass baseball team over Boston College, 5-2, in the first round of the Beanpot yesterday in Brockton, Mass.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORAL & OPINION

COLUMN| UMASS, IT'S TIME TO SELL OUT

Ben Moriarty believes that UMass could augment its overall revenues by selling naming rights to different campus buildings. Some call it selling out, he just calls it smart.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

BLOG | EDITOR'S NOTE

Contribute to local investigative reporting. Collegian News Editor Will McGuinness moderates a new blog on which news tips are fielded and expanded upon by other readers on Editor's Note.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 46

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wanczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING, PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
COPY EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Leigh Greaney
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenwaike
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacob
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kuenwa
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Melissa Tiertimen
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey B. Leonard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillemeister
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Welser

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1916. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Joe Meloni

COPY EDITOR
Shayna Murphy

PRODUCTION TEAM
Brandon Sylvia

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEWS

BLOG | EDITOR'S NOTE
NEWS EDITOR WILL MCGUINNESS DEBUTS THE MDC'S NEW BLOG THAT WANTS YOUR NEWS TIPS AND MUCK. TAKE PART IN INVESTIGATING THE EVENTS AND OFFICIALS OF YOUR AREA.

VIDEO |
DIDN'T SEE THAT FREE SPEECH RALLY EVERYONE'S TALKING ABOUT? IT'S FINE. WE'VE GOT IT ON TAPE FOR YOU.

VIDEO |
REPORTER GISEL SAILLANT PROVIDES A SPRING BREAK RETROSPECTIVE YOU CAN WATCH WITHOUT DELETING YOUR INTERNET HISTORY RIGHT AFTER.

ARTS & LIVING

PODCAST |
THE COLLEGIAN'S OLIVER SCOTT SNURE INTERVIEWS PRODUCER AND MUSICIAN JOHN VANDERSLICE

PODCAST |
DAILY COLLEGIAN FILM CRITICS KEVIN KOCZWARA AND SHAYNA MURPHY TAKE A LOOK AT UPCOMING FILMS AND ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA EDITOR PETE RIZZO ADMITS HE'S NEVER SEEN A WOODY ALLEN MOVIE.

GET YOUR POKE ON!

LIKE US AS MUCH AS WE LIKE YOU? BECOME FRIENDS WITH THE COLLEGIAN ON FACEBOOK TO GET DAILY NEWS UPDATES SPRINKLED INTO YOUR FRIENDS' CONSTANT NEWSFEED CONFESSIONS.

State officials advise UMass

BUDGET from page 1

president and chancellors hope to be able to rebate some or even most of the recently approved student fee increase."

"In regards to future academic years, federal and state leaders have said that the Federal Stimulus Funding is not a panacea," added DeVechhi. "President Wilson supports the reorganization and efficiencies that Chancellor Holub has proposed for UMass-Amherst and the president and chancellors will continue to work hard to seek maximum funding for the University from all sources, including state and federal government and private donors."

Angela Halliday, a UMass sophomore and communication major, stated that although fee increases are very difficult for students at a public university, it may just have to be something students must deal with.

"I definitely think that it is inevitable, especially with the school is becoming more and more academically competitive. The University is already cutting back so much, like sports teams, to make sure that they aren't cutting back on academics. But these things won't last forever, and they may have to raise fees."

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebenedictis@dailycollegian.com

Google CEO appeals to AP

BY JOHN LETZING
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

SAN FRANCISCO — Google Inc. Chief Executive Eric Schmidt sought to allay newspaper industry executives' concerns on Tuesday, telling them they need to work together with the Internet giant while downplaying recent indications of growing friction between Google and the Associated Press.

Schmidt's remarks came shortly after AP executives expressed concern publicly about the growing ability of Internet services such as Google to control access to the news without properly compensating the organizations that produce it.

Schmidt told an audience at the Newspaper Association of America's annual convention in San Diego that the notion that Google is now at odds with the AP is overblown. The CEO pointed to a licensing agreement Google currently has with the powerful news organization.

"We have a very, very successful deal with the AP and hopefully that will continue for many years," Schmidt said.

And while Schmidt offered praise for the way newspapers initially embraced the Internet in the 1990s, he offered a less favorable impression of how they've sought to avoid having the distribution of their content pulled out from under their control since then.

"There wasn't an act after that," Schmidt said. "You guys did superb job, and the act after that is a harder question."

However, Schmidt acknowledged the role of Internet services such as Google in altering the business of delivering news to their own financial benefit. And he underlined a fundamental disagreement between Google and many of its detractors over what constitutes the legal use of copyrighted material.

Schmidt took issue with a question about the impending "erosion" of intellectual property rights for news publishers thanks to the Internet, while allowing that his understanding of the "fair use" of copyrighted material differs on the Web from that of many in the legal profession.

"All of these partially thought-through legal systems are being challenged by the ubiquity of the Internet," Schmidt said.

Google has been sued for copyright infringement by media companies including Viacom Inc., book publishers and others.

Schmidt also addressed questions about Google's ability to sift through news content and selectively present it alongside advertising without input from news organizations. Google uses an algorithm to present news stories that is indecipherable outside of the company, and is constantly being tweaked.

While Schmidt assured the news executives that content from their publications would "float to the top in our search ranking," he said the company also seeks to provide a platform for lesser-known, quality publications. "We've not come up with a way algorithmically to handle that in a coherent way," Schmidt said.

The CEO also offered up some frank criticism of the technical capability Internet sites built by newspaper publishers.

"I think the sites are slow," Schmidt said. "They're actually slower than reading the paper, and that's something that can be worked on, on a technical basis."

Crime Log: Mar. 30 – April 5

MONDAY

Eun Ho Shin, of 15 Holton St. Medford, Mass., was arrested in North Building B at 11:38 p.m. and charged with a warrant.

TUESDAY

Jonathan A. Mendez, of 99 Shore Ave. Quincy, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on Sunset Avenue at 9:25 p.m. and charged with operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license, miscellaneous motor vehicle equipment violation and not having a license in his possession.

THURSDAY

Andre C. Paquette, of 10 Faxon Green Newport, R.I., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on Massachusetts Avenue and charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Nicholas S. Maribett, of 269 Elm St. Kingston, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on University Drive at 10:20 p.m. and charged with marked lanes violation and operating a motor vehicle with a license restriction.

FRIDAY

Bradley S. DeFlumeri, of 215 Ferry St. 2 Everett, Mass., was arrested after a traffic stop on Hicks Way at 4:13 p.m. and charged with violating an abuse prevention order.

SATURDAY

Richard Foulkes, of 11 Keel Lane Nantucket, Mass., was arrested as a result of an alleged disturbance at Van Meter dormitory at 7:05 a.m. and charged with disorderly conduct.

SUNDAY

David Raygorodsky, of 51 Parker Terrace Newton, Mass., was arrested after a suspicious person/activity call to Lot 32 E at 12:08 a.m. and charged with disorderly conduct.

Jonathan M. Salvaggio, of 8 Joyce Dr. Plymouth, Mass. was arrested after a traffic stop on the South West Mall at 2:05 a.m. and charged with OUI liquor and a sidewalk violation.

– Adam P. Coulter, Collegian Staff. He can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu

Grant uploads library writings

DU BOIS from page 1

issues that Africa faced due to European colonization.

Cox said those handling the materials must be very carefui because the paper used by Du Bois and others at that time was very acidic and can be easily damaged.

All the items will be slightly affected by the light and heat of the scanning process but the damage shouldn't be significant, he said.

According to a statement, once the materials are scanned and catalogued, the library will work with Verizon to identify each document to include on Thinkfinity.org, the Verizon Foundation's free educational website that provides resources to increase teacher effectiveness and improve student achievement.

The statement said the Verizon Foundation works to support the advancement of literacy and K-12 education through Thinkfinity.org, which is produced in partnership with 11 of the country's leading educational organizations.

"The Verizon Foundation has long been a supporter of organizations that use technology in a learning environment. And this is a perfect example of how the technology and the need for further research for significant Americans come together," said Verizon spokesman Philip Santoro. "We see this as a perfect blend of education and technology coming together for a terrific purpose."

Santoro said Verizon is providing the funds required to digitize the Du Bois material and will assist in ensuring that all of the project's technological needs are met.

"At this point, it's really just starting to get off the ground now," he said. "We've offered our assistance. It remains to be seen to what extent our employees will be involved, but we're there to help if help is required."

Since 1973, the library has housed the W.E.B. Du Bois Papers, a collection of more than 100,000 letters, photographs and manuscripts of published and unpublished writings, as well as memorabilia and audiovisual materials that have to do with Du Bois. The library boasts one of the top three collections in the country for studying African-American history.

Included in the materials are Du Bois' letters to and from U.S. presidents and public figures such as Marcus Garvey, Booker T. Washington, Albert Einstein and Mohandas Gandhi, as well as a handwritten copy of his best known book, "The Souls of Black Folk," which was published in 1903.

According to the statement, another valuable item within the collection is a menu that was signed by those at the first meeting of the Niagara Movement, the predecessor of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). Because no restaurant in Buffalo, N.Y. would serve the black leaders, they held their first meeting across the river in Ontario, the statement said.

Cox said the collection's contents are used by students, faculty, visiting scholars and other researchers from around the world.

"Du Bois was a great intellectual and a great activist," Cox said. "He took things that he understood from his academic work and applied it to real-life situations and to improving the real lives of individuals in American society."

Randolph Bromery, the chancellor of UMass from 1971-79, led the effort to acquire the materials from Du Bois' widow, Shirley Graham Du Bois.

The UMass Board of Trustees named the library after Du Bois in October 1994. The official dedication was in February 1996.

In a statement, UMass Chancellor Robert Holub said, "This project provides an excellent example of how the Commonwealth's land grant University combines the latest information technology with excellence in public service to create new opportunities for scholarship, teaching and research."

During his 95-year life — from his birth in Great Barrington, Mass., in 1868 to his 1963 death in the African nation of Ghana, where he had become a naturalized citizen— Du Bois' résumé included work as a journalist, scholar, author, social activist and one of the founding members of NAACP.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

Empire State Building plans for green change

BY MICHAEL FRAZIER
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

MELVILLE, N.Y. — The Empire State Building is being converted into an eco-friendly skyscraper, transforming the landmark into a "green" architectural marvel as part of a multi-million-dollar upgrade, officials said Monday.

Former President Bill Clinton said the skyscraper will bring more attention to the need to convert structures into energy-efficient buildings.

The Clinton Climate Initiative, which was created to seek environmentally sustainable solutions worldwide, is a partner in the Empire State Building project planned for completion by December 2010.

"Every person on Earth knows about the Empire State Building," Clinton said. "I hope the innovative systems here ... will become a model of how to do big buildings."

The ongoing $20-million project, which is self-financed by the building's owner, is estimated to reduce energy consumption by up to 38 percent. Carbon emissions will be decreased by 105,000 metric tons over the next 15 years, project officials said.

The 1,454-foot building's current energy costs are about $11 million per year. Under the program, energy costs will be slashed to $4.4 million annually.

The upgrade includes replacing more than 6,000 windows with better-insulated ones, adding high-efficiency cooling systems and so-called intelligent lighting.

Anthony Malkin, president of the Empire State Building Co., said although new buildings are being constructed with the environment in mind, converting existing buildings greatly reduces carbon emissions.

The Empire State Building will get a green makeover.

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Are you looking for a job for next semester?

The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is looking to hire employees for advertising production in 2009 - 2010!

- Flexible work schedule
- Hourly salary
- Awesome people

Little to no experience in graphic design necessary! Looking for undergrads with good computer skills, strong motivation, the ability to learn, and a keen eye.

Contact Max Detmer at
Advertising@DailyCollegian.com
for more information, or stop by The Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

Eleanor Bateman Alumni Scholar in Residence

My Best Design Decision: The Path from Stockbridge to Success

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Wednesday, April 8 • 4:00 - 5:00 p.m.
Memorial Hall - Complimentary Refreshments
ALL ARE WELCOME
For more information, visit UMassAlumni.com or call 800.4546.UMASS (8627)

Bomb kills 32 in Iraqi capital

BY LAITH HAMMOUDI
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

BAGHDAD — A car bomb ripped through the Shiite district of Kadhemiyah Tuesday, killing eight people and wounding 20 just a day after string of bombings left 32 dead and more than 130 wounded in the Iraqi capital.

The latest evidence of a rising tide of violence since the beginning of March came just hours before President Barack Obama flew to Baghdad for a brief visit.

An infant survived, but no one knew its name or age, whether its mother had survived her wounds, or whether the dead man in the black car was its father.

A car repairman rescued the child. Abu Haider said he was in his shop, where he refurbishes car upholstery, when the explosion knocked him to the ground. Through the flames, haze and destruction, he spotted the crying child and the wounded mother. He grabbed the baby and took it to a nearby home for safety and ran back to save the mother. But Iraqi Security Forces blocked the way.

Haider, 40, was embittered. "It's a scandal what the security forces did. Why didn't they let us save the woman?"

Burned out cars and shattered glass littered the street outside his shop Tuesday afternoon, and the infant, held in the arms of a man standing outside his home, wailed.

Residents had helped the wounded to the hospital, U.S. and Iraqi soldiers were moving through the streets, and the dead were carted off to the morgue. It is unclear what will happen to the baby, now in the care of strangers.

"Is this the national reconciliation that Mr. Maliki talks about?" asked Haider, referring to Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki. "He must look for the Baathists and punish them," a reference to supporters of former dictator Saddam Hussein.

Shiites in the neighborhood saw the attack as a crime against Shiites.

Fadhil Hussein, 55, crossed the street and heard the boom. The car burst into flames where he'd been standing seconds before.

"I would be dead," he said. "This is a clear targeting of the Shiites.

As the neighborhood began to recover from the shock, Obama landed in Baghdad on an unannounced visit.

On the same day, Iraq's high court Tuesday reduced to one year the prison sentence of Muntathar al-Zaidi, a television journalist who hurled his shoes at former President George W. Bush during his last visit to Baghdad, shouting: "This is a farewell kiss, you dog."

The journalist, whom many Iraqis regard as a hero, was sentenced last month to three years.

"He didn't want to kill the president," his lawyer, Dhia al-Saadi, said. "It was only an expression to humiliate him."

Also on Tuesday, an unknown gunman killed Falah Mohammed Younis, a newly elected member of the council in Nineveh province, at his doorstep in Mosul after he returned from evening prayers. He was a member of the Hadbaa list, a nationalist party that's known as anti-Kurdish. The party won control of the mostly Arab Nineveh province in recent elections. Prior to the elections, the Kurds had control.

In Iskandiriyah, south of Baghdad, the Iraqi Army found the bullet-riddled corpse of a member of the U.S.-backed, mostly Sunni militias that recently came under Iraqi government control. The U.S. military had paid the men to switch sides and help calm some of the hotbeds of the Sunni insurgency, but the Iraqi government, after taking control of the militias, has arrested a number of top leaders.

And outside Fallujah, a white and orange taxi rigged with explosives targeted Saad Abu Qutaiba, a high-ranking member of Maliki's support councils. The support councils are tribal groups paid by Maliki. Abu Qutaiba was badly wounded, a policeman was killed and eight other people were wounded.

Special correspondent Hussein Kadhim contributed to this report

GM, Segway unveil vehicle

BY TIM HIGGINS
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

DETROIT — After 18 months of working together in secret, on Tuesday, General Motors Corp. and Segway Inc. unveiled a prototype two-wheel, electric passenger vehicle that the companies say could be a transportation solution for increasingly overcrowded urban areas.

Project PUMA – or Personal Urban Mobility and Accessibility – is a joint development program between GM and Segway, a New Hampshire-based manufacturer known for its innovative electric stand-and-ride scooter.

The prototype vehicle, to be unveiled at the New York auto show, uses lithium-ion batteries and balances on two wheels.

It looks like a pod jacked up on a dolly.

Two passengers can ride side-by-side inside the pod-like area. Video of the small and nimble vehicle shows it turning nearly in place. It can travel up to 35 mph and go as far as 35 miles between charges, GM said.

GM officials said the vehicle could run about one-fourth to one-third of today's cost of owning and operating a car.

The PUMA vehicle combines several technologies from the two companies, including an electric drive system and batteries, dynamic stabilization, vehicle-to-vehicle communications and autonomous driving and parking.

The connectivity technology allows vehicles to talk to each other to avoid crashes and drive themselves.

"From a technical prospective, this is very doable. There is nothing that needs to be invented here," said Christopher Borroni-Bird, GM director of advanced technology vehicle concepts. "The challenge, of course, is how do you begin to implement it in an existing infrastructure?"

While the PUMA vehicle hasn't been green-lighted for production, Borroni-Bird said the companies plan to develop a complete concept vehicle for next year.

General Motors and Segway demo a prototype two-wheel, electric passenger vehicle on Tuesday at the New York auto show.

Vermont legalizes gay marriage

BY KEITH B. RICHBURG
THE WASHINGTON POST

NEW YORK — Vermont on Tuesday became the fourth state to recognize gay marriage, and the District of Columbia Council voted to recognize same-sex unions performed in other states. The two actions give same-sex marriage proponents new momentum, following a similar victory last week in Iowa's Supreme Court.

"I think we're going to look back at this week as a moment when our entire country turned a corner," said Jennifer Pizer, the national marriage project director for the advocacy group Lambda Legal. "Each time there's an important step forward, it makes it easier for others to follow."

The issue is also advancing in New Hampshire, where it has passed the state House and is awaiting action by the Senate, as well as in Maine and New Jersey, which are debating same-sex marriage legislation.

New Jersey, which now allows civil unions for gay couples, is a particular prize for advocates because of its large size, and they are hoping for action this year after a commission in December recommended making marriage laws gender-neutral. Gov. Jon Corzine has said he would sign a same-sex marriage bill.

New York recognizes same-sex marriages performed in other states, and Gov. David Paterson has said he supports full marriage rights for same-sex couples. And sometime before early June, the California Supreme Court must decide whether Proposition 8, which banned gay marriage in the Golden State about five months after it became legal, was a valid use of the referendum power.

The action Tuesday in Vermont came swiftly, surprising even some of the proponents of gay marriage who were still celebrating their victory last Friday, when the Iowa Supreme Court ruled that same-sex marriages could go ahead.

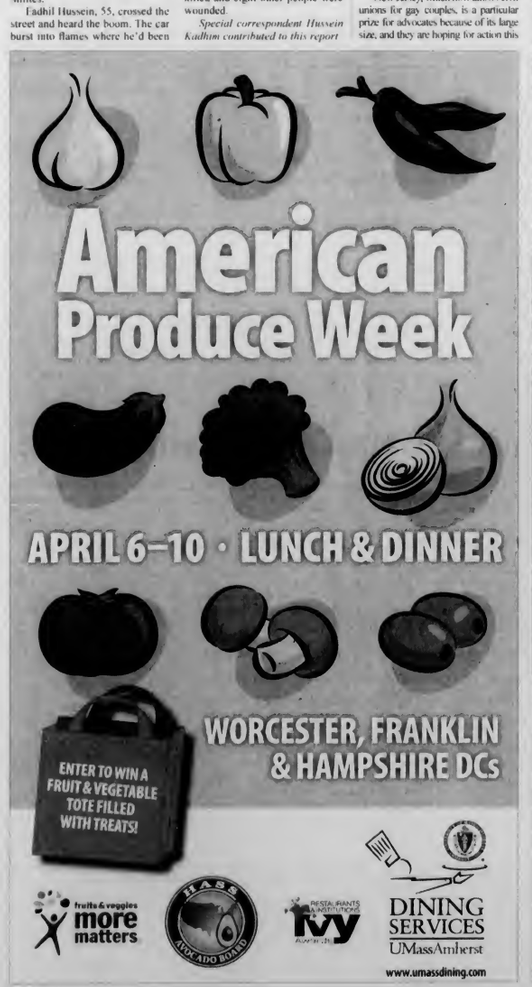
The two houses of Vermont's legislature voted last week for a same-sex marriage bill four votes short of a veto-overriding majority and Gov. Jim Douglas (R) vetoed it Monday. But Tuesday, several house members who voted against it last week switched sides to support the override, making gay marriage law.

The final vote was 100 to 49 to override the governor's veto. The initial vote last week was 94 to 52. Vermont has no mechanism for a citizen referendum to overrule the law.

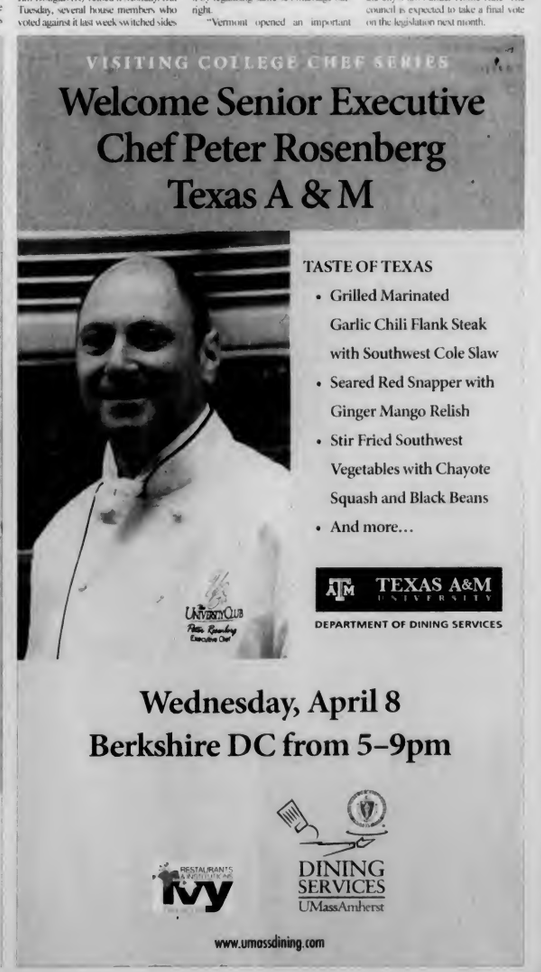
"All of us are thrilled at the pace," said Jennifer Chrisler, executive director of the Massachusetts-based Family Equality Council, which advocates for gay rights. "This is a great day."

With the Vermont vote, and the D.C. Council action, Chrisler said, "I think this is a very significant indicator of how the tide is turning in this country and folks recognize that this is about love and commitment." She added, "The arc of history is long but bends towards justice."

The Vermont vote Tuesday was particularly symbolic for activists because this is the state that nine years ago became the first to legalize civil unions between same-sex couples, seen at the time as revolutionary. Vermont has in recent years seen other states surpass it by legalizing same-sex marriage outright.



"Vermont opened an important back door," Pizer said. "Now it has invited gay people to enter through the front door of marriage."



Some 43 U.S. states have laws prohibiting gay marriages. 29 of those with constitutional amendments specifically defining marriage as between a man and a woman, but many of those are being subjected to court challenge. Gay activists also hope to challenge the 1996 federal "Defense of Marriage Act" that defines marriage as between a man and a woman.

Domestic partnerships already are legal in the nation's capital, and gay couples married in other states are recognized as domestic partners when they move the city.

Tuesday's legislation in Washington was billed as an important milestone in gay rights, because it explicitly recognizes married couples from other states.

The initial council vote was 12-0. The unanimous vote sets the stage for future debate on legalizing same-sex marriage in the District – and a clash with Congress, which approves the city's laws under Home Rule. The council is expected to take a final vote on the legislation next month.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Give sex a chance

Max Frisch once said, "Technology is a way of organizing the universe so man doesn't have to experience it."

Let me get one thing out of the way. I'm more than OK with technology. I'm not some old guy screaming at the brand new printer he can't figure out how to hook up to his newfangled computer. I sincerely think that most of the luxuries of living in a modern industrial country are, for lack of a better word, awesome.

Dave Coffey

But — and this is a big but — technology, like anything, is something that I believe is best applied in moderation. Is there a point where technology goes too far? I think when technology fundamentally (and suddenly, no less) alters the scope of human social activity for the worse that it has indeed stepped over the line.

Of course some might ask, "Has it crossed that boundary?" Is it now changing social interaction for the worse right in front of our eyes? Well, I'm pretty sure it is, and here was my first clue.

Recently, I was skimming a few news headlines and one of them caught my eye. The headline, from the U.K.'s Daily Mail, said, "Death of the Father: British scientists discover how to turn women's bone marrow into sperm." Now, at first glance, this did seem like a relatively positive scientific breakthrough. One of the first things the article mentioned was that "the breakthrough paves the way for lesbian couples to have children that are biologically their own." Obviously, there are no problems with that. But it was one of the later lines that got me thinking. The article went on to say, "But critics warn that it sidelines men and raises the possibility of babies being born through entirely artificial means."

The artificial part didn't really bother me. To be honest, it was the whole sidelining men thing that got me.

Sure, I'm biased, but it runs a bit deeper than that. This particular breakthrough could potentially put a large burden on human social interaction for two major reasons.

First of all, it completely takes the aspect of sexuality out of reproduction. When I first read that women can now have children without the need for a male counterpart, the first thing I thought was women no longer have to "go through" men to have a baby. By "go through," I am obviously referring to sex. This whole procedure completely takes the sexuality out of human reproduction. I'll skip the part where I explain why sex is generally considered to be a pretty fun activity.

In a world where someone can reproduce individually, there is no inherent need for interaction for the human race to continue.

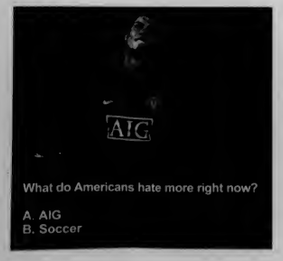
However, most people don't realize that there are other purposes for sex in between reproduction and fun. For example, any anthropologist could tell you that in primates, sex is used as a mechanism to reduce tension between individuals and aid in smoother interaction, as primates rely heavily upon social connections more so than other animals.

Even though, as humans, we are the most advanced primates, we still ultimately operate as primates. Thus, this usage of sex as a détente mechanism applies to human social capacities as well. But since the primary function for sex in humanity, and in reproduction, would be made obsolete by this new advancement, sex would most likely become obsolete as well. Thus, it would be ridding the human world of not only a great extracurricular activity, but also an effective tool for easing social interaction and tensions between individuals.

Second of all, and more importantly, this new way of producing children through one person instead of two essentially robs humanity of its, well, humanity. As I said before, humans, as all other primates, rely heavily upon social interaction and social learning. But in a world where someone can reproduce individually, there is no inherent need for interaction for the human race to continue.

Ideally, the way it works with good old-fashioned sexual reproduction is you produce offspring with someone you're in some sort of relationship with. I realize that this is simply an ideal version of reality. But still, this is how many children are born: their biological mother and father were two people who interacted both socially and physically to make them.



But when you can just construct sperm out of your own tissue and use it to impregnate yourself, you essentially don't need another individual to reproduce. You lose the need for interaction — of any kind really — for the human race to continue.

But, in simplest terms, isn't it that interaction which makes life the way we want it? Not only can basically all of human culture be attributed to some sort of social interaction, but we as a human species crave that interaction, because we thrive on social connection and social learning, things which this technological "advancement" would more likely discourage and make seemingly unnecessary.

So is this an example of technology running rampant? Could this possibly be the technological straw that could break the proverbial human back? I certainly think so.

But I'm sure there are a few people out there who can think of a reason or two why sexual reproduction is worth keeping around, even if technology has made it "outdated."

Dave Coffey is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu.

Ignorance not always so blissful

Matt Kushi

Let's face it. I'm ignorant and you're ignorant.

Everyone is ignorant in some way. The great thing about life is that it is all about learning. With each thing that we learn, we overcome another thing that we were previously ignorant about.

"Ignorance is bliss" – a line that many of us think of when we get into a sticky situation. If only we did not know fact A or fact B, maybe the situation would not have occurred. In a world that thrives on knowledge, it seems that those of us who inhabit this Earth are afraid of knowledge.

On April 3 in Binghamton, N.Y., ignorance was not so blissful at all. On this Friday, a Vietnamese employee that was about to be let go by his company, Shop-Vac, stormed into the offices of the American Civic Association and opened fire, killing 13 people.

As soon as we heard this story break, we developed stereotypes of the killer. We think that we have all of the knowledge to judge when knowledge is the one essential thing that we are missing.

The killer, Jiverly Wong, was a hardworking Vietnamese immigrant who was about to lose his job. Wong was also known as a loner. Now the stereotypes start clicking in our heads. He was a loner, thus antisocial. Due to this, he was unstable. It all makes sense. Only it doesn't. There is still the question of "why?"

What we have here is only the tip of the iceberg. Also mentioned in the news stories was that Wong was made fun of because he couldn't speak fluent English and he was a low income worker. If Wong had an emotional disorder, this clearly did not help.

We are taught in schools that the world is a cutthroat business. Career-wise? Yes. Life in general? It doesn't have to be.

However, being picked on and being not as well off as others is not a reason to take innocent lives. What Wong did was murder. Ultimately, Wong got what was coming to him for his murderous deeds. Death.

The question that must be asked is: could this have been prevented?

Perhaps if more people had paid attention to their surroundings, which included Wong, maybe this would not have happened. Maybe if he had not felt inferior to others because of a language barrier, he wouldn't have felt it necessary to kill people.

It once again comes to that line of "Ignorance is bliss." There are millions of people in this world oppressed not only by others but by their own demons as well.

There are many reasons why a killer kills. Some people are just terrible humans and take pleasure in taking another's life. Such was the case with 19th century outlaw Billy The Kid and 1960s psychopath Charles Manson. Others are driven off the edge of the cliff by a deadly cycle of oppression.

"Too often we excuse those who are willing to build their own lives on the shattered dreams of others," said Robert F. Kennedy in his famous "Mindless Menace of Violence" speech in 1968. This line epitomizes both sides of the equation for victim and killer alike. Some inhabitants of this world build our dreams on the shattered dreams of others.

Due to this feeling of inferiority, they reason out in their insecure world that they must fight back by shattering the dreams of others in order to redeem themselves.

What we need to do is not excuse this behavior. The only result is tragic loss all the way around. The killer does not become a martyr as he would hope. Rather, he becomes a forgotten body, known to the history books as merely one pathetic loser.

The real victims are the victims that the killer took with him. These people are ones that have had their short lives ended to young for no reason.

How does one not excuse this crime? You can kill the killer. However, that won't bring back the lost loved ones back to their heart-broken families.

This is not an issue that can be resolved with pen and paper and enforcing a new law. An outlaw will be an outlaw no matter what the law declares.

What must be done, in all corners of this world, is to treat each other with compassion. We must care about each other. We are taught in schools that the world is a cutthroat business. Career-wise? Yes. Life in general? It doesn't have to be.

In interacting with one another, we cannot subject ourselves to cutthroat methods. This leads to prejudices, hate and fear. The day that all of these factors combine to represent the majority of the world is the day when the world will end from humans destroying the race of mankind through a "mindless menace of violence."

If there is to be any lesson taken from these tragic murders, let it be that nothing is accomplished when humans kill other innocent humans. It only further divides us from each other.

In the end, ignorance is not bliss at all. We must embrace knowledge, not shun it. We must grow closer together and love one another as fellow family members of this Earth because we are all that we have.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

UMass, it is time to sell out

Ben Moriarty

If there is one thing that is getting really annoying to hear about, it's the economy.

Every day when you hear the news, it's always, "Dow Jones this," or "Obama did that," or "Am I really going to have to turn to stripping to pay my bills?" (To my editor, yes, that was on CNN).

For most of us students, though, this situation really doesn't matter much unless we are graduating this year. Then, it just sucks, unless you are fine with living with your parents, which I don't see much wrong with as I've always been a fan of parasitic living.

But for the rest of us, as long as we are able to get loans – or for us spoiled brats, have our parents pay for our schooling – we don't have to worry about it. As long as we can find a part-time job, we can pay for alcohol on the weekends. Gas is cheap and McDoubles are only slightly more expensive.

But for all of us here, we are in a tough situation, which was somewhat helped by President Barack Obama's bailout package. But we still are in what I like to call, a "pickle."

In an ironic display of capitalism, the government decided it was going to give money to many private and public institutions, which include our state education system.

About $82 million will be given to the University of Massachusetts system and, since Amherst is better than all the other ones, we at the flagship campus get about half of that money. That $40 million has made our fee hike go from $1,500 to $400. And students everywhere are rejoicing and going on with life just as they would have if the fee hadn't been reduced. There just might be slightly less complaining.

But there are still teachers and professors getting laid off, programs rumored to be cut (just ask the baseball players if you can find their field on campus), programs actually being cut (just ask the ski team) and departments being downsized.

I have some ideas to alleviate the fiscal pressure, some of which I'm saving in secrecy. But, there are many which would help reduce the budget deficit we are in, and potentially, put us in the black.

In an effort to not only spice up campus, but also get some money, it would be wise to sell some of the dormitory names for advertising revenue.

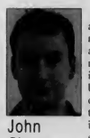
We have the presidents: John Adams, John Quincy Adams and Washington. And then we have some writers like Melville and Thoreau. Yes, these are the dorms in Southwest. And they all share one thing in common: their names are horrible, boring and horribly boring. And if you don't think those are horrible, just ask the people who live in North A, North B or any other variation of North.

In an effort to not only spice up campus, but also get some money, it would be wise to sell some of the dormitory names for advertising revenue.

The problem is deciding what companies are suitable for the name. Obviously, the school wouldn't be able to advocate anything illegal or detrimental to one's health. So to all the Southwesties, Popoville, Rubinoff Hut and Really Crappy and Watery Beer are out of the picture.

Things like Little Debbie, Hanes and Fischer Bros. & Leslie, producers of Kosher meat, on the other hand, are perfect for names. They all have people's names in them, and that's what UMass loves doing: naming things on their campus in honor of other people.



Even renaming a couple might be able to save a couple lecturers or professors jobs, and I'm sure their families would appreciate it. Chancellor Robert Holub might be worried that the credibility of the school would be ruined, but if worse came to worse, we could always just say it was a research project. We are, after all, a research institution. It's a win-win situation from that point. We get some money from companies, and then we say it was a research project.

I hope someone likes my idea, and decides to put it into action, but I doubt it will. We are, after all, from Massachusetts. Instead of finding ways to get money, or to reduce wasteful spending, we'll find something to cut, complain about it, whine and then blame whoever is on top.

So let's just get over the whining and blaming now and just get to snipping. I say we start with Sylvan and everyone who lives there. By doing that, we can get rid of the entire Japanese department. And that will transfer a bunch of jobs to other departments which don't remind us of anime.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu.

Despite claims, Obama still Bush league

John Glaser

When the Bush administration committed deplorable acts of war and military imperialism, the left went berserk in righteous defiance. Yet when the Obama administration commits similar offenses, the left obediently goosesteps along in compliant unison.

Barack Obama, our Dear Leader (as the North Koreans are compelled to call Kim Jong Il), ran for office promising to bring all the troops home within 16 months. That's no longer the plan.

In truth, he has, in every practical sense, signed on to the agreement reached by former President George W. Bush and the Iraqi government to remain until 2011.

The main difference is that the original Security of Forces Agreement (SOFA) planned to withdraw from Iraq entirely. Obama is telling America it must continue a full scale occupation of Iraq, with 50,000 troops remaining there indefinitely.

For a man who spoke out against the illegal invasion from the beginning, Obama is strangely committed to the undeterred continuation of American imperialism in Iraq. Despite security gains from the troop surge and bribery of sectarian groups to stop fighting, the Iraqi people still resent the foreign occupier they've been forced to live with for the past six years. And so does a majority of the American people object to its indefinite continuance.

No matter. He is president now. No need to placate to the whims of popular opinion. And besides, the left in this country has decided to wholeheartedly back Obama's imperial military occupation abroad, even in the very country which roused so much dissent in the Bush years.

Until the people are vigilant against all of those in power, until they consider no person or party sacred, we will never escape the embarrassment that is the American military and financial empire.

Iraq isn't the only country the formerly anti-war left has conceded to Obama to militarily dominate. Obama's Iraq-like surge in Afghanistan has utterly failed to provoke more than a minimal degree of defiance on the left. Because, of course, Bush's misguided foreign policy was immoral and despotic. But, Obama is a well-meaning champion in a difficult position, doing his best to consider everybody's views and proceed accordingly in a delicate and humble balancing act, effectively absolved of all burden of responsibility. Please.

The near 70,000 troops Obama plans to have on the ground in Afghanistan is a piece of foreign policy which promises to be as fruitless in the long term as any surge in Iraq. Military occupation has virtually no chance of foiling Afghanistan from becoming a safe haven for terrorists. Rather, it will attract and incite insurgent resistance as well as terrorist activity. But you won't hear the left condemn Obama for making the same mistakes Bush did in Iraq when his invasion flooded Iraq with fighters from all over the region.

Obama has held true to some substantive change in foreign policy, like making diplomatic progress with Iran, but that will remain only an incremental feature of improvement if he can't manage to resist the appeasement of America's massive military industrial complex and the insatiable need for an expanding empire.

In the face of all of this, the culpability of Obama and the Democratic congress remains comfortably unscathed. The left apparently promised him deference, conformity and faith. Regardless of how principled they were during the Bush years against avoidable militarism, against a president and a policy driven by false hopes and unsupported by reason or by the tenets of free societies, they now seem to have muddled those principles for the preservation of functioning partisanship.

It is this complacency, this sort of blind adherence even in the face of contradictory policies, that allows American political corruption. So the government can maintain its empire. So it can overhaul the broken financial system through indefensible corporate welfare, demanding our patience and support and promising future solvency, but clearly just breaking it even more. And nobody blinks.

Unfortunately, liberals all too often find Democratic transgressions excusable so that Obama can explicitly continue Bush's policies on extraordinary rendition and secret detention facilities not subject to international law. All without so much as a whisper of pointed dissent that can hold a candle to the volume and potency it had under Bush.

Until the people are vigilant against all of those in power, until they consider no person or party sacred, we will never escape the embarrassment that is the American military and financial empire. It has driven us to failed wars and economic collapse, but seems to be a status quo that most are committed to protecting under the guise of party politics.

John Glaser is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jglaser@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UPC's 'Battle of the Bands' tonight

Audience favorite wins spot at Spring Concert

By Ellie Rulon-Miller
Collegian Staff

Ten student musical acts will duke it out in the Battle of the Bands tonight, in hopes of scoring the opening slot for the University of Massachusetts Spring Concert.

The event is put on annually by the University Programming Council, which has also sponsored such events as Homecoming Week, Student Union Shutdowns and the Festival of the Arts.

The 10 acts were chosen from a pool of 58 demos that student musicians submitted to the UPC, said Brianne Niego, sophomore event coordinator. The council spent four hours one day going through every demo before agreeing on their 10 favorites. They paid particular attention to each act's vocals and how they would appeal to a crowd.

"We tried to pick a diverse lineup for Battle of the Bands," Niego said.

Students who attend should expect to hear music ranging from hip-hop, pop, rap, punk and power pop, Niego said.

The audience will ultimately decide the winner of the Battle of the Bands in the third round of the competition. In the first two rounds, each act will perform one song to be judged by two faculty members and two students. The three highest scoring acts from round one will move to the second and the top two from the second to the third, Niego said.

At the end of the Battle, the lineup of the Spring Concert will be officially announced. Amid rumors of a hip-hop artist headlining this year's concert, the UPC is certain that this will not change the outcome of the battle. "The audience and judges do not know who is coming because it hasn't been announced yet," Niego said.

There has been some student speculation about who the headlining act will be at this year's Spring Concert. The most popular theory seems to be that Chicago rapper Lupe Fiasco will be performing.

In addition to the opportunity to play at the Mullins Center, the winner of the Battle of the Bands will be entered in the National College Battle of the Bands. The competition will feature the winners from 15 other colleges. The winner of that competition will receive a record deal with Song Joust Records.

The event will be hosted by comedian Roy Wood, Jr. of HBO's "Def Comedy Jam" fame. He has been a guest on the Late Show with David Letterman and participated in NBC's Last Comic Standing.

The winner of the Battle of the Bands is to be decided by the audience, so be sure to attend and support your favorite act.

Battle of the Bands is free and will take place at the Student Union Ballroom tonight at 7 p.m.

Ellie Rulon-Miller can be reached at erulonmi@student.umass.edu.

Margot & Nuclear So and So's, Cloud Cult rock Pearl Street

By Angela Stamowski
Collegian Staff

The Pearl Street Night Club's clubroom was the place to be this past Monday for fans of chamber pop and indie rock alike.

The early 7 p.m. show featured underground darlings Margot & the Nuclear So and So's as well as the lesser known but equally talented Cloud Cult.

Opening these musical escapades was Ice Palace, a little indie outfit from Minneapolis. The band played some of its tried and true tunes as well as several songs off of an upcoming album. It made advanced copies of the album available at the merchandise booth as a perk for fans that came out to see them.

Ice Palace was comprised of several guitarists, a singer who seemed to have studied in the vocal school of Decemberists front man Colin Meloy, and several multitalented musicians who filled the rest of the roles interchangeably.

Cloud Cult, the next hand to take the stage, was a spectacle at the very least. Front man Craig Minowa greeted the audience wearing only one shoe and a mask over his forehead, complete with a second set of eyes.

This curious attire has become standard for Cloud Cult shows, but the band itself is anything but typical. The cavalry of Minnesota musicians travel the nation in a bio-diesel van that is based at their eco-friendly record label, Earthology Records.

Throughout their performance, a large canvas on the back of the stage gradually evolved into the image of a mermaid at the hands of Scott West. The painting was to be auctioned off to the highest bidder at the end of the show. According to Minowa, West is a "fulltime hand member."

Cloud Cult played a great deal of songs from its latest album, "Feel Good Ghosts," which was released last April. Spot-on harmonies and casual smiles between band mates showcased the band's connectedness. The camaraderie that existed between members was contagious, effortlessly drawing the listener in.

The only detracting factor from the performance was the three-ring circus effect that resulted from so much stimulation at once. Between projection screens, paintings and the six musicians, one could easily forget just how remarkable the actual performance was.

The band ended with the song "Take Your Medicine," the happiest song about fighting depression one could possibly fathom. In an earlier interview,

See MARGOT on page 6

'Observe and Report' follows in 'Blart' steps

By Roger Moore
The Orlando Sentinel

All malls may be created equal, with the same array of Gaps, Body Shops and J.C. Penneys from Bangor to Boca. But all mall cop movies aren't. Seth Rogen's "Observe and Report" is "Paul Blart: Mall Cop Strikes Back," a dark comedy with "issues."

Rogen takes his frustrated "real cop" wannabe into angry, profane and seriously anti-social places that the dimwitted Blart would never go. Observe and Report is a funnier movie, but also an unhappier one. The star and members of the team that made "The Foot Fist Way" and "Pineapple Express" find their laughs in flashers (full frontal nudity), firing range fantasies, cocaine, crudity and simple shock value.

This profane, rude, irresponsible, medication-ignoring bi-polar buffoon has little grounding in mall reality. Or one would hope. But he's funny.

Rogen is Ronnie Barnhardt, a rent-a-badge "head of mall security" at West Ridge Mall. He's touchy about labels. He may not get to carry a gun, but call him a "security guard" and deal with his profane wrath.

"We got Tasers. We got mace. It's not bad," he tells his troops, who include Michael Pena ("World Trade Center"), a snicker in his first big comic role.

Whatever his work misgivings, Ronnie's mall has a flasher and that gives Ronnie purpose. He must protect the fair Brandi. Anna Faris, a Pamela Anderson with talent, gives this cosmetics-counter bombshell a brazen, tequila shots-pounding verve. She's shallow but still isn't falling for Ronnie's tactless, politically incorrect come-ons. But Nell (Collette Wolfe), the donut-shop girl next door, just might.

The flasher and a burglary bring Ronnie into conflict with a real cop, played by Ray Liotta on a slow burn.

But as similar as the characters and many of the plot points are to "Mall Cop," writer-director Jody Hill ("The Foot Fist Way") never shies from taking "Observe" into the dark recesses of Ronnie's bi-polar mind. Ronnie and the boys hit the shooting range with all manner of deadly weapons. Dumping him in the worst neighborhood in town (Danny McBride plays a drug dealer) doesn't turn out the way you'd expect.

His drunken mom (the great Celia Weston) may fret over his medication when she's sober enough to remember. Without his meds, Ronnie is even more delusional than usual. And violent.

"I'm a cook, and I'm serving up justice!"

The movie's sinister streak makes it impossible to cozy up to, and Rogen's performance – despite a surprising athletic competence (fights, stunts) – is clumsier than usual owing to the actor-playing-poseur nature of the role.

But in its own demented "Pineapple"-"Foot Fist"-Four Letter Word Way, "Observe and Report" delivers a cynical, angry and funny take on a life of loud, violent desperation.

Amherst's 'Seder Under Stars'

Rabbi Shmuel, pictured with UMass students during last October's Sukkot, drove a portable sukkah, or booth, around campus. He will host a "Seder Under the Stars" tonight in the Amherst Town Common.

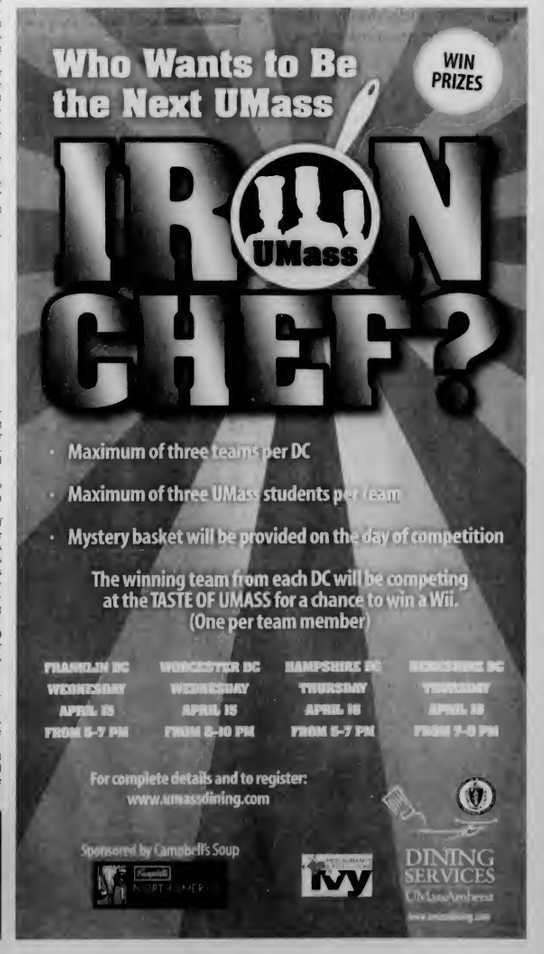
By Eric Magaze
Collegian Staff

Tonight at 8 p.m. in the South Common of the Amherst Town Common, without regard for the weather, Rabbi and Mrs. Shmuel Kravitsky will be hosting "Seder Under the Stars" in honor of the holiday of Passover. Passover is the holiday commanded in the Bible that commemorates the flight of the ancient Israelites out of Egypt.

The event is open to the entire community. The venue, which will be in a tent in the middle of town, was specifically chosen by Rabbi Kravitsky in order to "get as many people as possible to attend."

The word "seder" in Hebrew literally translates as "order" in English. Rabbi Kravitsky shares an analogy. A seder shares many elements with surgery that might be performed by a doctor. A surgeon will ask his assistants to provide all the proper medical devices in order that he can perform the surgery properly in the right steps.

In place of a physical operation in the case of surgery, a Passover seder is a spiritual operation. It will take its guests on a spiritual journey with fifteen stops along the way. The end goal is a "transformation of the body and the soul."



Rabbi Kravitsky, often called Rabbi Shmuel by students, is a recent addition to the Amherst community. He was originally born in Israel after his parents had emigrated there from Russia. In the early 1980s, when young Shmuel was six years old, he made it to Brooklyn, N.Y. with his family.

He had little connection to Judaism until reaching the age of 18. He began to seek within himself the answers to life's questions and after a lot of experimentation with various "-isms," he concluded that he did not believe he could find the answers to life in "money, intellectualism, drugs or women."

Today, both the Amherst community and the entire Five College area are able to benefit from Rabbi Shmuel's spiritual journey. He has made his home in Amherst along with his wife Ariel and 18-month-old daughter Moussia.

He wants to connect with college students in order to make the over 3,000-year-old Jewish tradition meaningful and relevant for today's generation. He can be spotted around campus in a black fedora hat. He is often handing out various goodies during Jewish holidays, but he is around

See SEDER on page 6

Midwest hits note in NoHo

From MARGOT on page 5

Minowa revealed that the song, "is not about antidepressants, but about the more general experience of facing the sources of one's depression and adjusting brain chemistry without medication: 'Take Your Medicine' is literally about conjuring up the strength to face the ugly things in yourself that most of us prefer to deny exist."

By the end of the performance, the entire crowd was enraptured. Even those who had come with the sole purpose of seeing Margot & the Nuclear So and So's had all but forgotten what they had been waiting for.

It took a few songs for Margot & the Nuclear So and So's to get on their feet, but once they had it was clear to see why the band has developed such a following. The initial disconnect seemed to be due in part to the wealth of new material on the set list.

The eight-piece Indianapolis assembly took the stage complete with a bass drum labeled "animal" and a guitar labeled "marmoset," as well as a trumpet, violin, synthesizer and practically every other instrument one could imagine.

Fronted by singer, songwriter and guitarist Richard Edwards, the band opened some new songs from last year's aptly named double album "Animal/Not Animal." The record was released in two parts, "Animal" being the album as the band intended it and "Not Animal" as chosen by Epic Records, the band's label.

The song "Mariel's Brazen Overture" saw Margot on their feet, featuring the vocal harmonies of Edwards and Emily Watkins. The tune is an unconventional ballad about the perils of love and unfaithfulness. Another new tune, "A Children's Crusade on Acid," showcased the band in all its glory, filling the room with the kind of intricate textures Margot is known for.

Also off of the album was "As Tall As Cliffs" commenced with an impromptu percussive jam in which the audience contributed the rhythm via handclaps. The song succeeded in involving the crowd and was met with tremendous enthusiasm.

Old favorites from Margot's "The Dust of Retreat" era, including the rocking "Quiet as a Mouse" and satirical "Vampires in Blue Dresses," were among the selected songs of the night. The latter ended in a military-style drum salute, which was strangely moving in the live setting.

The most anticipated moment, however, came in the form of "Skeleton Key," a clear audience favorite. Accustomed to the recorded version, the crowd was even able to insert an emphatic "Woo!" at the proper point in the song.

The encore, comprised of two very different songs, began with a slow tune featuring only Edwards and the multi-talented violinist, Erik Kang.

Margot saw the audience off with the song "Barfight Revolution, Power Violence" off of 2005's "The Dust of Retreat." The rollicking electric guitars and dance-worthy percussion ended the evening on a high note.

Though they started on a shaky foot, the band came together by the end of the performance and was quite amiable after the show. Members of both Cloud Cult and Margot worked the merchandise booth and readily chatted with audience members.

Regardless of stylistic persuasion, the evening at Pearl Street was a performance to remember for any music fan.

Angela Stasiowski can be reached at atasiow@student.umass.edu

Community Seder in Amherst Common

From SEDER on page 5

much of the academic year.

Rabbi Shmuel has been known for hosting many unique Jewish events on campus. In October, he drove a portable sukkah (tent or booth) around campus for Sukkot, and last month he chartered a Purim party bus to make its way around the Five College area. The party bus drew many students and was even noticed by the New York Times in this year's March 11 issue.

He was involved on campus even before returning as a local emissary for the Chabad-Lubavitch movement. As a yeshiva (seminary) student, he frequented the UMass community for about three years between 2003 and 2007. He was even responsible for promoting the concert with Matisyahu on Amherst Town Common in September 2004.

"I used to walk around and tell people that Matisyahu was coming, but nobody knew who he was," said Rabbi Shmuel. He knows Matisyahu personally and was even been referenced in Matisyahu's 2004 album "Shake Off the Dust... Arise."

He loves interacting with students on campus. He seeks to be a "light to the nations" by his example. He gets emails from students where they convey that prior to bumping into him their day was not going so well, but after interacting with him they were encouraged. He seeks to inspire and uplift people.

In addition to tonight's seder in the Amherst Town Common, this fall he will be teaching Coffee and Kabbalah, a one-credit class that will focus on Jewish mysticism and Chassidic philosophy. Rabbi Shmuel wants students to know that "people are often afraid to connect to real things. Judaism is an exciting thing and it is a real thing."

"Seder Under the Stars" will take place tonight at 8 p.m. in the Amherst Town Common.

Eric Magazu can be reached at emagazu@gmail.com.

Fourth film in 'Fast and Furious' franchise falls flat

By Robert W. Butler
McClatchy Newspapers

Excuse me while I pull my jaw off the floor.

Last weekend "Fast & Furious" revved into the nation's megaplexes, zooming off with more than $70 million in box office receipts. It was the biggest opening of the year and the biggest April opening ever, beating the $42.2 million racked up by "Anger Management" in 2003.

Must be a heck of a movie, huh?

Actually, "Fast & Furious" is a mediocre piece of Hollywood dreck, an opinion that I suspect would be confirmed by most of the folks who happily slapped down their $10 to watch it.

The fourth entry in a franchise that was never interesting to begin with, it's an action effort in which both the cops and the crooks zip around Los Angeles and environs in souped-up, nitro-burning cars, cheered on by hordes of nameless, bare-midriffed young women who undulate like the dancing girls in an old sword-and-sandal epic.

Shiny cars and skinny women. Toss in glowering fireplug Vin Diesel and pretty boy Paul Walker (the stars of the original "The Fast and the Furious" back in 2001) and you've got a package moviegoers couldn't resist.

Just how irresistible "Fast & Furious" was shocked even the bigwigs at Universal, who had projected an opening weekend take of about $35 million.

As someone who thinks movies should aspire to being more than just a roller coaster ride (get on, do a few loop-the-loops and get off without actually having gone anywhere), I view all this with grim bemusement.

I subscribe to the great cynic H.L. Menken's observation that "No one ever went broke underestimating the taste of the American public." You'd think that after years of awful movies dominating the box office I'd have become numb enough to not care anymore.

But I do.

I can understand why, in this grim economy, people just want a little brainless entertainment. "Fast & Furious" certainly qualifies.

What gnaws at me is the thought that if mediocre movies are so rewarded, what's the point of striving to make a good movie?

Making any movie is hard. Making a good one is darn near impossible. And if the best you can hope for is a berth at a film festival and straight-to-DVD release (if that), why bother?

What if from here on out I go to work knowing I'm never going to see a movie any better than "Fast & Furious" or "He's Just Not That Into You" or "Paul Blart: Mall Cop"? I believe I'd rather write about old ladies whose houses are filled with cats.

But here's the thing. Artists will always make art. They don't do it for the money or the recognition (although both are welcome) but because they have to.

They've got something they have to express – a story, an idea, a way of looking at the world – and they'll mortgage the farm, max out their credit cards and alienate their loved ones to see it realized. It's a beautiful form of madness.

If a tree falls in the forest and there's no one around to hear it, does it still make a sound?

If someone makes a great movie and it's a box office disaster, is it still art?

I say if only a handful of people see it, appreciate it and come to love it ... then, yeah, it's still art.

It's why I keep going to the movies.

Paul Walker plays Brien O'Connor in the new installment of "Fast and Furious." The franchise has never been much for film quality, but the movie raked in over $70 million in its first week, more than double its projection.

Williams detects liars in new series

By Rick Bentley
McClatchy Newspapers

LOS ANGELES — Kelli Williams has a really weird job.

Just the fact the former star of "The Practice" makes her living by acting would be weird enough for some. Her new role in the Fox series "Lie to Me" kicks the weirdness up a few notches.

"I am an actor who makes a living lying just to be able to play a character. I am trying to find the truth in the character, but it is not Kelli, it is the character. So I am lying to begin with. Then here we are on the show trying to detect lies within the already lies of acting. But, we try to make it as honest as possible," Williams says during an interview at the Universal Hilton.

The truth she has just told, as muddled as it might seem, gets a little clearer when you look at the nature of the series. Williams and Tim Roth play characters whose job is to tell when a person is lying. They do this by picking up on body language, facial expressions and changes in the voice.

All of this is based on the work of Dr. Paul Ekman. His findings about lie detection are based on decades of scientific study.

The Fox series only starts with who is telling the truth and who is a bold-face liar. Once it is obvious a lie is being told, the team then must figure out why the person is lying.

That part is not so exact.

"We don't always get it right. So we're trying to pick up people's behavior and their reasons why. So it's been pretty interesting to know that we're all fallible. It's like even though we are experts at this, we're not always accurate because there are many, many reasons why we lie, and we try to just piece it together and put the puzzle together," Williams says.

The "Lie to Me" star admits another truth. She finds herself using the lie detection techniques when she is off the set. It's not necessary when it comes to dealing with her three kids.

"I feel like mothers already have that ability. That third eye in the back of our head so we always know what our kids are doing," Williams says.

"My kids are 5, 7 and 10. Maybe when they become teenagers they will try to get better at it. That's when I am going to have to read Ekman's book."

Williams admits it is easy to tell when she lies – she turns bright red.

Kelli Williams stars in new Fox program "Lie to Me."

Tamblyn back in cop drama

By Rick Bentley
McClatchy Newspapers

LOS ANGELES — The last time Amber Tamblyn starred in a television series she talked to God. Accordingly, she couldn't make a return to network TV in just any old program.

Her vehicle of choice, "The Unusuals," lives up to its name. It is a cop drama, but with a lot of dark humor. The officers live relatively sane lives in an insane world. The detectives embrace life and death with the same passion.

Even Tamblyn knows this is not an easy series to explain. In some ways, Tamblyn's breakout role in CBS' "Joan of Arcadia" faced the same initial problems as "The Unusuals."

"You really cannot describe the humor and the quirkiness and the honesty of this show without seeing it," Tamblyn says of "The Unusuals." She adds that even the promotional advertisements don't show how well the series balances drama with comedy.

The actress is spending the day at the Universal Hilton talking about her new ABC show. Tamblyn is so energetic about the new show she can barely stay in her seat in a small conference room.

The 25-year-old Southern California native appeared in a host of small television parts from "Buffy the Vampire Slayer" to "CSI: Miami" before landing the lead in "Joan of Arcadia." Since then, she has appeared in a handful of movies, including the two "Sisterhood of the Traveling Pants" features. Her film success wasn't why it took a half decade before Tamblyn decided to return to television work. Tamblyn's passion for the offbeat almost brought her back to television a year earlier. She filmed a first episode for the potential CBS series "Babylon Fields." The series about zombies in Long Island was not put on the schedule.

"I knew that it would be hard to find something that could top 'Joan.' It is rare when you get to read something you really like," Tamblyn says.

"The Unusuals" was something she liked a lot. Her character gets transferred from vice to the NYPD's homicide unit. It is a strange new world. Eric Delahoy (Adam Goldberg) is trying to get himself killed in the line of duty. Leo Banks (Harold Perrineau) refuses to remove his bulletproof vest. Religious detective Henry Cole (Josh Close) is trying to keep his secret past from his street-wise partner, Alison Beaumont (Monique Gabriela Curnen).

And the criminals are even stranger. The series gives Tamblyn a chance to play a more mature role. Although she could easily pass for a high school student, Tamblyn will turn 26 in a few months. Age is not something she thinks about when choosing work.

"Everyone keeps talking about me doing older roles. Even my agents. I definitely enjoy playing all ranges of things. If there is a role of a woman who had a baby when she was young. Great. I'm there. If they want me to play 16 or 17. Done. It is all about the writing," Tamblyn says.

Speaking of writing: While waiting for just the right series to come along, that's how Tamblyn filled her time. Her second book of poetry is scheduled to be released in the fall. She wrote her first book, "Free Stallion," while on the set of "Joan of Arcadia."

Now she goes through starts and stops of writing inspiration. "Wanda Coleman, who is a wonderful poet out of Los Angeles, once told me those are the times when your inner muse is resting," Tamblyn says. "She believes there is no such thing as writer's block.

"You should never freak yourself out thinking you have writer's block. It only makes matters worse."

Amber Tamblyn is back in new network TV cop drama "The Unusuals." The series finds Tamblyn in her first role since her breakout performance in "Joan of Arcadia."

No luck needed for the Tar Heels

With Williams at helm, UNC has become team of the decade

By Israel Gutierrez
McClatchy Newspapers

DETROIT — Unlike Magic Johnson, who attempted to inspire his beloved Spartans before they began their Final Four journey, Michael Jordan, who had been in Detroit for at least two days, didn't offer any words of encouragement for his Tar Heels.

North Carolina players had to settle for Larry Bird, who wore a similar shade of blue when he played at Indiana State, walking by the UNC bench just before the game, pointing to the starters and offering a "Good luck, guys."

The Tar Heels just stared back at Bird, half in awe of Larry Legend, half wondering what exactly he meant by that.

This group needed no such luck. This was, by far, the best team in the NCAA Tournament.

Really good team

The Heels weren't just good – they were UConn women's team good.

Not a Magic-al pregame speech, not an overwhelming home-court advantage, not a contrived greater cause, not even the toughest of Ford-tough attitudes could have helped the Spartans overcome what they had in store for them Monday night.

When folks last fall predicted an undefeated season for UNC, the first half of Monday's championship was exactly what they envisioned: a team that dizzies you with its speed, overwhelms you with its inside scoring options and demoralizes you with three-point shooting. A team whose only flaw is occasional lapses in defense, which only means the difference between winning by 30 points and winning by 20.

The Heels could have withstood one of their top-four scorers actually leaving for the NBA and still have been good enough to win the school's fifth national title.

But with Ty Lawson, Danny Green, Wayne Ellington and Tyler Hansbrough all coming back, it was the ending this team was meant to experience. Roy Williams couldn't mess this up. Heck, Billy Gillispie couldn't mess this up.

But what Williams is doing in North Carolina is much more than impressive than babysitting a group of can't-miss kids.

All he has done in his six years since arriving to coach his alma mater is dominate the college basketball landscape. Sure, the Gators won back-to-back national titles, but they did it with a lightning-in-a-bottle starting five and have followed that up with back-to-back NIT appearances.

After winning the national title in his second year at Carolina with players he didn't recruit, Williams rebuilt a team of his own recruits and reached the Final Four three years later, then won his second national title one season after that.

It's the type of consistency we're used to seeing from Carolina. Whether it was James Worthy and Jordan, Eric Montross and Donald Williams, Rasheed Wallace and Jerry Stackhouse or Vince Carter and Antawn Jamison, the Heels always seemed to replace greatness with greatness.

Big Seperation

But Williams hasn't only rebuilt that tradition following the brief-but-forgettable Matt Doherty era – he has decidedly separated his team from his most hated competition.

If the Heels can't win a national title every year, they would be somewhat satisfied knowing they were better than Duke.

From 1986 to 2000, the Heels rarely could say that and be honest with themselves. Not when the Blue Devils were making eight Final Fours and winning three national titles in that span.

Since Williams started incorporating baby blue into his wardrobe once again, the Devils have been less rival and more resentful. Duke made the Final Four in Williams' first year in Carolina. Since then, Mike Krzyzewski's teams have exited the NCAA Tournament in the Sweet 16, Sweet 16, first round, second round and Sweet 16. Not a powerhouse team among them, not a national title contender to compete with three such UNC teams in that stretch.

And for those who believe the Devils can catch up quickly now that the Heels are expected to lose their entire core from this year's title team, it's not that easy. Williams has four McDonald's All-Americans on the way for next season, joining sophomore-to-be Ed Davis, who already is considered the best NBA prospect of the current Tar Heels. Duke, meanwhile, is adding just two McDonald's players to a team with several holes.

Get used to more of this. Williams arrived in 2003 and in six short years has made Carolina the team of the decade. And it's the early favorite to repeat next decade.

Sitting close behind ESPN's Dick Vitale toward the latter stages of Monday's title game, when everyone in the area was hoping aloud that the Spartans could at least make a game of it, fans might have heard Vitale, the voice of college basketball, summing up UNC in three words: "Too much talent."

That won't change. Not as long as Williams is recruiting for the school that barely needs to be sold.

It's why this championship team didn't need a pregame speech from an icon. Or even luck.

In this sport, Carolina blue is absolute gold.

North Carolina coach Roy Williams embraces with his players after they defeated Michigan State, 89–72, Monday to win their second NCAA Championship in the last five years.

North Carolina senior Ty Lawson cuts down the net after winning the NCAA Championship Monday night. The guard scored 21 points in the win.

Detroit lifted by MSU

Spartans fall to UNC, but give hope to city

By Drew Sharp
Detroit Free Press

DETROIT — No apologies or regrets.

Michigan State will mourn destiny dashed, but time will lessen the sting of falling one win shy of the national championship. These Spartans won't be remembered for how they finished but for what they started.

There's power in pulling together for a common goal, and these past seven days gave the city of Detroit and state of Michigan a rallying point.

That's the legacy of their Detroit visit.

North Carolina can't diminish that.

The Tar Heels proved themselves the better team in Ford Field – again. There's no surprise there, nor was there any shame in their convincing 89-72 victory Monday night before a Ford Field crowd that was 90 percent behind Michigan State.

If the Spartans had those 60,000 partisans on the floor playing defense, they might have – might have – slowed Carolina's own unrelenting drive toward destiny.

But nothing really changed from when the Tar Heels came to Detroit on Dec. 3 and laid a 35-point whipping on the home boys. The general thought then was that there was North Carolina, and then there was everybody else on a lesser tier.

The Spartans deserve thanks for providing a momentary escape from plant closings, job losses, home foreclosures and impending bankruptcies. They will want to forget how North Carolina dissected a defense that neither Connecticut nor Louisville could penetrate.

But they'll find enduring comfort in the memory of their team bus passing a sign at Cass Tech High on its way to Ford Field each of the last five days saying, "Thank you, Michigan State."

They'll mine solace from the recollections of those who adopted them this past week, many of whom didn't have any brand identification to Michigan State till now. One of their more appreciative supporters was standing in the tunnel awaiting their arrival following the game.

Magic Johnson had a smile and a hug for all of them.

"Anytime you lose in a heated competition," he said, "it's going to linger for a while. But in time they'll understand what a big lift they gave everybody around here. They'll be back. They're still a young team. They'll be back."

The fact that Kalin Lucas and Durrell Summers, two native Detroiters, fueled the Spartans' charge to the brink of a national championship certainly will raise Michigan State's profile in the city.

Lucas and Summers were Tom Izzo's first significant Detroit recruits. They have known each other since middle school. And when Lucas committed to the Spartans, Summers followed the point guard's lead.

"As far as I'm concerned," Summers said, "next season starts tomorrow. We'll learn from this and use this experience to teach the younger guys coming in next season about what it takes to get back to this level."

The talent keeps coming, and more of it is coming from Detroit. So much so that Detroit could become MSU basketball's next Flint.

That was Lucas' plan when he committed to the Spartans. Several high-profile programs courted the Orchard Lake St. Mary's star, but he was dismissed when he came to Michigan State – a national player opting for a regional program. Yet Lucas could become Detroit's Pied Piper.

Izzo already has secured Michigan's reigning Mr. Basketball, forward Derrick Nix from Detroit Pershing, and he has a verbal commitment from the 2010 favorite, Nix's teammate, guard Keith Appling, who scored a state finals record 49 points in the Doughboys' championship victory last week.

There's always tomorrow – even following the worst setback.

There was a trophy at stake Monday night, but the winner also earned Team of the Decade honors.

Michigan State had one national title and four Final Fours the last 10 years entering the 2009 tournament while North Carolina had one national title and three Final Fours. They have been the two most consistent, most successful programs through the last 10 NCAA tournaments.

But on this night, North Carolina ruled once again. The Tar Heels were as much a team of destiny as the Spartans. They have four likely first-round NBA draft picks who came back for another season because they wanted a national championship.

But don't paint them as villains because they snatched away something that people here thought belonged to them.

This was about basketball, nothing else.

And the much better basketball team deservedly earned its spoils.

Michigan State's Korie Lucious buries his face in a towel during the second half of the Spartans 89–72 loss to North Carolina Monday in the NCAA Championship Game.

Like Sports?
Write for the Daily Collegian
Contact Eli Rosenswaike at
Sports@DailyCollegian.com

Campus to Career
Where does your $$ go?
monster
Tuesday, April 14 • 5:30 p.m.
Memorial Hall
(between Herter Hall and the Chapel)
Find out more on the appropriate use of credit, designing your own budget, taking control of student loan debt and how to protect yourself against identity theft!
FREE ADMISSION • FREE REFRESHMENTS
Supported by Cape Cod Chips and Kraft/Nabisco
Register at UMassAlumni.com/students today!!
Don't miss the drawings!
Gift card to the UStore - Seniors exclusive $1,000 cash prize*
*$1,000 drawing to be held at Commencement Ball on May 21, 2009
Sponsored by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association and the Student Alumni Association
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

UM takes 3 awards

SOFTBALL from page 10

leads the team with her .291 batting average, 17 RBIs and a .460 on-base percentage.

The most impressive aspect of the Eagles team is the pitching staff. Despite all three pitchers on staff holding a losing record, the staff has a combine earned-run average of 3.06. Junior Taylor Peyton leads the staff with a 2.68 ERA despite her 7-9 record and helps her own cause at the plate with her .264 batting average and three home runs.

BC will need a strong performance from its pitching staff to get past UMass. With the A-10's co-Player of the Week, Carly Normandin, leading off for UMass, BC will face a challenge from the start.

Normandin has been on fire as of late, hitting .688 (11-for-16) in the previous five games. In those games, the junior led the Minutewomen with six runs scored and drove in five more.

The bigger threat with Normandin is her power. Of her 11 hits last week, six were for extra bases (four doubles, two home runs) for a 1.313 slugging percentage. On the season Normandin is leading the team in slugging (.718) and hitting (.435). Her nine stolen bases are also a team high.

Despite the team playing well and many players excelling at this time, Sortino still stresses that her team must get better everyday. With only a few practices left before the postseason, the Minutewomen need to make the most of them, as well as each game, to get ready before the competition gets tougher.

"Get a little bit better everyday because we have very few practices left," Sortino said after Tuesday's practice. "There are seven [practices] left until the postseason. Not many days to get better."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Senior Brandice Balschmiter was named the Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Week for last week. In four appearances, the pitcher went 3-0 with a save while striking out 37 in 18 innings pitched and no walks.

Baudinet singles in game-winning run

BASEBALL from page 10

bullpen late in the game was a bigger factor.

"That was big," Stone said of the late runs. "But what was bigger was that we got two quick outs in the ninth to finish the game with a lot of confidence and that's important because we've been ahead, a lot, and I think that the key is that we stayed aggressive and stayed with our pitching plan."

After taking the lead, the Minutemen never saw a major threat from the Eagles offense as part of sophomore leftie Charlie Benson's lights-out performance out of the bullpen. Benson went 5 1/3 innings and didn't surrender a run.

"[Benson] did a great job," Stone said. "He had command of all of his pitches, he got ahead in the count, he was working both sides of the plate. He just pitched a tough ball game, kept them off balance and we made the plays behind him."

Jared Freni got the start of UMass, going 3 2/3 innings and giving up two runs on three hits, a walk and two strikeouts.

The Eagles got on the board early when Mickey Biswall and Mike Belfiore both hit solo home runs off Freni to lead off the second inning. The Eagles, however, would not score for the rest of the game as Benson came and shut down the BC offense.

Senior Jim MacDonald homered for UMass, driving in the first runs of the day for the Minutemen. Baudinet, however, had the best offensive performance at the plate for the Minutemen, going 3-for-4 with a walk, two triples, a stolen base and a run scored.

"Baudinet did a great job," Stone said. "He played well in the outfield, did his role, had a big stolen base and I think he made some adjustments offensively, shortened his swing a little ... he swung the bat real well today, looked good at the plate."

Baudinet's single in the eighth ended the day for sophomore pitcher Pat Dean, who gave up three runs over seven innings, surrendering eight hits for the Eagles (19-11, 7-7 A-10). Before the seventh, Dean had the UMass under control, only yielding Macdonald's two-run home run in the fourth before losing it in the eighth.

"Dean pitched well throughout the entire time he was in there and the other kid who came in pitched well to, [Kevin] Moran. They just have a great all-around team" Stone said.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Junior Brian Baudinet went 3-for-4 with a run and drove in the game-winning run yesterday against BC.

Gilroy deserves nod over Thiessen, Wilson

MELONI from page 10

ed Gilroy for his effort in the win and the entire 2008-09 season. Even in a game where poor defense leads to three quick goals, Gilroy's contributions didn't go unnoticed from his grizzled old coach or his teammates.

"A lot of guys look up to him as far as his work ethic, and coming from a freshman to a senior, you can see a huge transformation in him and the way he approaches the game, and it shows with the success he's had so far," BU senior John McCarthy told New England Hockey Journal.

The seasons of Wilson and Thiessen, who forwent his final season of eligibility to sign with the Pittsburgh Penguins Friday afternoon, deserve acclaim, but their inclusion in the Hobey Hat Trick is where it should end.

Anytime Gilroy skates onto the rink – which is roughly 30 minutes per game – the right side of it becomes a black hole for wingers. Even with his extensive ice time and the Terriers reliance on him, he enters Thursday's Frozen Four matchup with a plus-21 rating. Expect to see him a lot in Thursday's national semifinal matchup against Vermont – especially when UVM dynamo Victor Stalberg hits the ice – and in the national championship game should BU advance. Even with the talented group behind him, Parker knows he'll get brilliance from Gilroy, and it will take nothing short of that to win these two games in Washington, D.C.

Kieran Millan is a good goaltender, but freshman don't post sub-2 goals-against averages in Hockey East without talented defensemen in front of them. Gilroy's not alone on the BU blue line, but the conversation about Parker's defensive core begins with Gilroy – and it's going to end with a national championship because of him.

Joe Meloni is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at managingeditor@dailycollegian.com.

Berry, Quirk sign pro deals

HOCKEY EAST from page 10

Wilson led Hockey East in scoring in his second season with the Terriers after the Nashville Predators of the National Hockey League selected him 11th overall in last June's NHL Draft. His 52 points this season led the Terriers who have occupied the No. 1 spot in the USCHO/CBS College Sports Division I Men's poll for most of the season and entered the NCAA tournament as the No. 1 overall seed in the 16-team field.

Northeastern's Thiessen rounds out the list. He was named Hockey East Player of the Year after leading the Huskies to a second-place finish in Hockey East during the regular season. The Huskies were atop the league until the final weekend when BU overtook them. He ended his season with a loss to Cornell in the opening round of the NCAA tournament. His 25-12-4 record was among the best in the country along with his .931 save percentage and 2.12 goals-against average. Only two goaltenders, Minnesota's Robb Stauber in 1988 and Michigan State's Ryan Miller in 2001, have ever won the award.

EARLY EXITS

New Hampshire sophomore forward James vanRiemsdyk forwent his final two years of eligibility to sign with the Philadelphia Flyers of the National Hockey League last Wednesday. vanRiemsdyk finished the season with 17 goals and 23 assists to lead the Wildcats in scoring. The Flyers drafted him with the second overall pick in the 2007 NHL Draft after his time with the United States National Team Development Program.

UNH's season ended in the quarterfinals of the NCAA tournament when it lost, 2-1, to BU. BU's Jason Lawrence scored the game-winning goal with 15 seconds left in regulation to end UNH's season.

"We're excited for him and wish him nothing but the very best," UNH coach Dick Umile told The New Hampshire, the UNH student newspaper. "He's tremendous, not only a hockey player, but he's a tremendous young man. As a coach, it's been a joy to coach him. He came in here highly touted and he handled it extremely well. He did a lot of good things for us in a very short period of time."

After his freshman season, he asked and was granted the Flyers permission to remain in Durham for a second season. The Flyers assigned him to the Philadelphia Phantoms of the American Hockey League.

While most expected vanRiemsdyk to sign after a successful sophomore season, Thiessen's departure from Northeastern was hardly anticipated. The goaltender forwent his final year of eligibility and signed a free agent contract with the Pittsburgh Penguins on Friday.

"I want to thank everybody at Northeastern," Thiessen, who played every minute of every game this season for the Huskies, told The British Colombia Local News. "I really enjoyed the last three years here. Northeastern will always be a special place for me, and it did a lot to further my goal of playing in the NHL."

Thiessen won't realize that dream just yet; upon signing him, the Penguins assigned him to Wilkes-Barre Scranton Penguins of the AHL.

BC defenseman Nick Petrecki also opted to leave school early in favor of the professional ranks. The first round pick of the San Jose Sharks left The Heights after his sophomore season with the Eagles. Merrimack junior blue liner Joe Coprieno joined Petrecki in signing with the Sharks.

"Joe is a tough, physical player who has shown a tremendous amount of progress under head coach Mark Dennehy and the Merrimack hockey program," Sharks executive vice president and general manager Doug Wilson said. "We look forward to working with Joe to help him further his development as a professional hockey player and we welcome him into the Sharks organization."

Massachusetts' Alex Berry was the first Hockey East player to sign a pro contract, inking a deal with the Toronto Maple Leafs shortly after UMass' lost to NU in the first round of the Hockey East Tournament.

UMass' Cory Quirk headlines a list of Hockey East players who signed minor league contracts after finishing their careers. Quirk signed with the Albany River Rats on March 21; he has four goals and two assists in eight games with Albany.

Material from personal interviews, other beat writers and league and team sources was used in this report.

Joe Meloni can be reached at managingeditor@dailycollegian.com.

Former UMass winger Alex Berry signed a contract with the Toronto Maple Leafs on March 19.

Healthy savings at the UHS Pharmacy!

OVER-THE-COUNTER PRODUCTS

PAIN RELIEVERS

- Acetaminophen (compare to Tylenol®) 325 mg., 100 ct. ..... $1.34
- Ibuprofen (compare to Motrin®) 200 mg., 100 ct. ..... $2.16
- Genaced (compare to Excedrin®) 100 ct. ..... $2.16
- Midol 8 ct. ..... $3.58
- Naproxen sodium (compare to Aleve®) 220 mg., 50 ct. ..... $2.72
- Prodium (compare to AZO®) 100 mg. 12 ct. ..... $4.48

ALLERGY

- Cetirizine (compare to Zyrtec®) ..... $8.04
- Chlorpheniramine (compare to Chlor-Trimeton®) 4 mg., 100 ct. ..... $1.13
- Loratadine (compare to Claritin®) 100 mg., 10 ct. ..... $0.85

COUGH & COLD

- Banophen (compare to Benadryl®) 25 mg., 100 ct. ..... $2.40
- Guiatuss DM (compare to Robitussin DM®) 4 oz. ..... $1.00
- Halls® cough drops ..... $0.67
- Halls Defense® cough drops with Vitamin C ..... $1.66
- NyQuil® 6 oz. ..... $4.76
- Pseudoephedrine (compare to Sudafed®) 30 mg., 24 ct. ..... $1.26

Plus vitamins, first aid, contraception and much more, at similar savings. If we don't carry what you need, ask us to special order!

UMASS AMHERST UNIVERSITY HEALTH SERVICES PHARMACY 150 Infirmary Way (413) 577-5030 • www.umass.edu/uhs (All prices + tax)

El Cid.

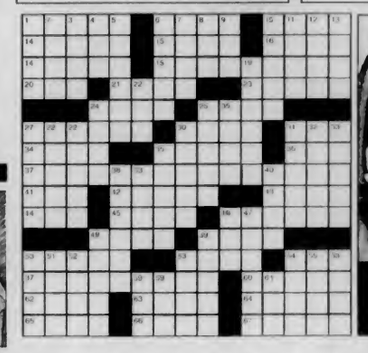
| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 6 | | | | | | | 1 |
| 1 | | | 9 | 5 | | | 6 | |
| | 3 | 2 | | | 8 | 4 | | |
| 6 | | | | | 7 | | | 4 |
| | | 5 | | | | 3 | | |
| 3 | | | 6 | | | | | 7 |
| | | 9 | 2 | | | 7 | 4 | |
| | 2 | | | 8 | 5 | | | 9 |
| 4 | | | | | | | 8 | |

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Headache
5 Capital city
10 Can
14 Carver
15 Give off
16 "Happy Birthday" writer
17 More rattled
18 Spain's chief port
20 Shirt, for short
21 Word with who or how
23 Spills
24 Flat-bottomed ship
25 Meth. or Luth.
27 Bear's milieu
30 Night in Paris
31 Letter for Plato
34 Complaint to a chiropractor
35 Low voices
36 Part of many German and Austrian names
37 Table game
41 Sawbuck
42 Low wagon
43 Before: prefl
44 Sign of a hit show
45 Neutral word
46 Hesitate
48 "Let it stand"
49 Overlay
50 Progeny
53 Place
54 1986-90 sitcom
57 Member of the reserves
60 "Jane Eyre" or "Oliver Twist"
62 Rim
63 Cracker topper
64 Group of trees
65 Peter I
66 Affirmatives
67 Start of a counting rhyme



DOWN
1 Golfer abbr.
2 Oxford, for one
3 Long-eared critter
4 Before
5 Flings
6 Resister
7 Renowned Persian poet
8 Russian space station
9 Lit shortening abbr.
10 ___ mignon
11 Religious picture
12 Tear
13 Periods of time
19 Amatory
22 Parvo shot giver
24 Shrewd
25 Aggressive
26 Upward slope
27 Realizes
28 Earthy color
29 Horned animal
30 Mother-of-pearl
31 Happening
32 Baked dessert
33 Goose's response?
35 Title topper
38 In 7th heaven
39 Food fish
40 Hardy cabbage
46 Chew like
47 Get even for
48 More positive
49 Longs
50 "By the Time to Phoenix"
51 Beer
52 Narrative
53 Fill
54 Cosmetic name
55 1 of Jacob's 12
56 Get away
58 Resort offering
59 Prom time, often
61 Vein contents

Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Science Outreach
Online or On Campus
Plan now for the summer
Session 1: June 1- July 9
Session 2: July 14- August 19
Registration Ongoing
Check our classes at Spire or UMassULearn.net

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Pity the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

- Don Marquis

DAYLEY BY ANNIE KEITHLINE

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELL

"Told you so."

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
If you get a full sex-change operation before Drag Ball, you can save a bundle by wearing your normal clothes.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
I know there is a recession going on and all, but people really need to stop going crazy and pretending they're in "Grand Theft Auto."

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You are the captain of the U.S.S. Bedroom, but sadly your vessel is a lowly kayak.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Did You Know??? #1: God is dead.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
"Do Wrinkle Creams Work?" We reviewed the top wrinkle creams. You'll be "shocked" at what we found! Learn more on p. 17!

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
When you've finally lost your pride ... Wait, you still have your pride? Good for you. This is a better-than-average day for yourself.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You'll find chess more fun than ever today, when you realize that the computer can make your moves for you while you surf Facebook.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You are nobody's personal zombie servant. Don't you ever forget that.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Did You Know??? #272: A clean shave and a pressed suit can spruce up even the most deceased of job applicants.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Sign below to waive all your rights, etc:

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Resist the urge to exercise today, and instead continue gorging on Cool Ranch Doritos.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Do not roll a joint out of this horoscope.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office. $11.00/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 17th.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENT

ATTENTION ALL JUNIORS AND SENIORS! FALL 2009 INTERNSHIP APPLICATIONS ARE NOW AVAILABLE AT THE STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE. GET HANDS ON EXPERIENCE IN THE FIELD WORKING WITH ATTORNEYS AND CLIENTS. EARN UP TO 12 UNDERGRADUATE CREDITS, NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY, WE'LL PROVIDE TRAINING. APPLICATION DEADLINE IS APRIL 13th. CONTACT OUR OFFICE AT 545-1995 OR STOP BY AT 922 CAMPUS CENTER.

Why study at UMass... when you can study in Spain! UMass Granada Program for Fall 2009. No previous knowledge of Spanish required! Fulfill your foreign language requirement! Your financial aid is available. Information Meeting: Wednesday, April 8th, 2009. 1PM Herter Hall, 4th floor lounge. ~Pizza will be served~

FOR RENT

Amherst: 2,3, & 4 bedroom apartments, $1200-$2250. FREE HEAT! Great Specials! www.MillValleyApts.com or 413-253-7377

Looking for summer housing? 3 bedroom apt. in Rolling Green looking to sub-let. Clean, convenient, and quiet. Call Kate at 978-257-2549

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

Petrichor

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM tops BC in late innings

Minutemen in position for 2nd straight Beanpot crown

BY NICK O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With 10 one-run losses on the season, the Massachusetts baseball team has had a major issue with closing out tight games. So when the Minutemen were in a similar situation, a one-run lead late against Boston College, the solution was simple: stretch the lead to more than one.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 5 |
| BC | 2 |

After entering the top of the ninth leading 3-2, UMass scored a pair of runs to stretch the lead to a much more comfortable three-run margin en route to a 5-2 over the Eagles in the first round of Beanpot Championship at Campanelli Stadium in Brockton, Mass.

A strong late-inning performance was a welcome sight for UMass coach Mike Stone.

"It was a very, well-played ballgame by us and we finished well and it was just a great night for us," Stone said.

The Minutemen (8-16, 3-7 A-10) took the lead in the eighth inning when junior outfielder Brian Baudinet singled to right center, driving in senior Adam Iempesta who had double to lead off the inning.

"Baudinet did a great job of getting deep into the count, fouling off some pitches and hitting a line drive," Stone said of Baudinet driving in the go-ahead run.

Sophomore first baseman Peter Copa started off the ninth inning with a walk and freshman catcher Tom Conley followed that up with by reaching when the BC first baseman botched Conley's sacrifice bunt. Shortstop Matt Gedman grounded out to first, advancing the runners, before Iempesta came through with a single to right field to bring in Copa and Conley.

The two late runs were vital for the Minutemen, giving them the cushion going into the ninth. Stone, though, felt that his team's performance out of the

See BASEBALL on page 8

The Minutemen's third baseman, Jim Macdonald, was 1-for-4 in UMass' 5-2 win over Boston College yesterday that put it into contention for its second straight Beanpot title. The junior's lone hit was a two-run home run in the fourth inning.

UMass ready to face Eagles

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It would be hard to say that the Massachusetts softball team was sneaking up on anyone. Being ranked No. 18 in the country, winning nine games in a row and 44 straight in the Atlantic 10 as well taking home all three of the A-10's weekly honors makes it kind of hard.

But for UMass, it is almost preferred that way because it knows it when they head to Chestnut Hill, Mass., to face Boston College today at 4 p.m.

"It is always a tough series for us," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "But we're looking forward to it because it is great competition and it will be a tough game."

After beating Boston College in both contests last year, 8-0 in Amherst and 9-0 later in Chestnut Hill, the Minutewomen will face an Eagles team today that knows what to expect and that is out for revenge.

The Eagles (12-20, 1-5 Atlantic Coast Conference) will need to find to a way to get to Brandice Balschmiter, the projected starter for UMass, Last season. Balschmiter started both games for the Minutewomen (20-6, 6-0 A-10) against the Eagles and allowed one hit in the first game and threw a no-hitter in the second contest.

"Balschmiter needs to move the ball around and keep getting a little bit better which is what she has been trying to do the last couple of weeks," Sortino said. "I think she brings a little bit more [this year] She has more tools to use in terms of her pitching than she did a year ago."

Junior Carly Normandin, he Minutewomen's leadoff hitter, leads the team in hitting (.435), slugging (.718) and stolen bases (nine) and was named the A-10 co-Player of the Week for last week.

As if it wasn't enough to face a three-time Easton All-American pitcher, BC must face a pitcher who is getting into mid-season form. Balschmiter was named the A-10 Pitcher of the Week Monday for last week where she went 3-0 with a save, pitching 18 innings and not surrendering a run while holding batters to a .103 batting average against her. Even more impressive is the control that Balschmiter demonstrated in her four appearances as she struck out 37 batters and walked none.

If Balschmiter is unavailable, rookie Sara Plourde would toe the mound for UMass. Plourde, the A-10 Rookie of the Week, would still be more than a challenge for the young Eagles squad.

BC features just three seniors on its roster, and only one who has started any games. In the Eagles' last contest, a 7-3 loss to No. 24 Georgia Tech, the starting line up featured one freshman, three sophomores and five juniors.

The lineup for BC does not jump out as a tough-hitting team the team has a batting average of .233 – but does feature a balanced attack that can hit for occasional power and has the ability to steal bases. Leading the way at the plate for the Eagles is freshman Brittany Wilkins who

See SOFTBALL on page 8

Gilroy clear choice for '09 Hobey Baker

The Terriers needed a spark, something to get the nation's best offense back on stride. The spark came, and an inferno followed. BU won the game, 6-3, and cruised past the Minutemen, 7-2, in the next game in Boston.

It wasn't Hockey East's leading scorer Colin Wilson that initiated BU's resurgence that night in Amherst. It was the Terrier captain; the one who spurned 23 offers from National Hockey League teams to reclaim the top spot in Hockey East for the red-and-white clad crew on the east side of Commonwealth Avenue.

Joe Meloni

Matt Gilroy scored the first two goals and four more followed. Before winning the Hockey East Championship and advancing to the Frozen Four later this week in Washington, D.C., Gilroy led the Terriers on a 17-game unbeaten streak to claim the Hockey East regular season title on the final day of the regular season.

Wilson drew the headlines for his consistent contributions to the score sheet, but Gilroy drew the praise of Hockey East coaches and the national media. On Thursday, Wilson, Gilroy and Northeastern goaltender Brad Thiessen emerged as the finalists for the 2009 Hobey Baker Award, beating out a field of seven other semifinalists, which included Wisconsin's do-it-all blue liner Jamie McBain and Air Force's Jacques Lamoureux, who led the NCAA in goals.

Given Gilroy's rigid attention to his defensive responsibilities, earning the semifinal nod illustrates the respect he's earned in his four seasons with the Terriers. Hardly a stay-at-home defender, he's become the puck-moving defenseman teams need to compete in today's version of hockey; he led Hockey East defensemen in points with 36 on eight goals and 28 assists through the NCAA Regionals.

And it started from nowhere. He walked on to one of the most respected college hockey program's in the country, and remained there for four seasons including consecutive all-American campaigns in 2007 and 2008.

"I was wrong on a couple of occasions about Matt Gilroy," BU coach Jack Parker told The New York Daily News. "I told him not to come as a freshman, and then I told him to leave as a junior. He's a feisty guy, because he doesn't listen to the coach, thank God."

Parker has seen a few good defensemen in his 36 years with BU – including Miracle on Ice maestro Jack O'Callahan, Tom Poti of the Washington Capitals and Ryan Whitney of the Anaheim Ducks. Still, none have earned three all-American nods, like Gilroy will when the teams come out later this week, or a Hobey Baker award, like Gilroy should on Friday night.

Following BU's win over UMass on Feb. 28, Parker laud-

See MELONI on page 8

Northeastern goaltender Brad Thiessen was named a finalist for the 2009 Hobey Baker trophy on Thursday. The junior signed with the Pittsburgh Penguins on Friday, forgoing his final year of eligibility.

BU pair headlines hat trick, JVR to Flyers

Several Hockey East players sign pro deals

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Entering the NCAA Division I Men's Ice Hockey Tournament, most around country agreed the class of college hockey was located in the Northeast. With four teams in the tournament it was hard to disagree with the sentiment.

The three finalists for the Hobey Baker Award were named last Thursday – and Hockey East's position as the dominant conference in 2008-09 was reaffirmed.

All three finalists came from schools in the 10-team conference after the list was whittled down from 10. Boston University sophomore center Colin Wilson, BU senior defenseman Matt Gilroy and Northeastern junior goaltender Brad Thiessen were named with the announcement of the winner coming Friday as part of the Frozen Four weekend in Washington D.C.

"We are absolutely ecstatic that these guys are getting the recognition for what they've done this year," BU coach Jack Parker told The Boston Herald. "They've had great seasons for us and I think it reflects their entire body of work.

"I'm also happy for Northeastern's Thiessen. It just highlights how good Hockey East was this year, to have three guys from our league in the Hobey hat trick," Parker continued.

The last time a player from Hockey East won the award was in 2000 when Boston College defenseman Mike Mottau took the trophy back to the Heights after the Eagles lost to North Dakota in the national championship game; New Hampshire's Jason Krog won the award the season prior.

Hockey East has won the award six times; BU's Chris Drury won the award the year before Krog to begin a three-year run on the award for Hockey East, and from 1991-1993, BC's David Emma, Maine's Scott Pellerin and Maine's Paul Kariya were named the best players in college hockey. Kariya was the first freshman to earn the distinction after scoring 100 points in 39 games for the Black Bears in the 1992-93 national championship season.

Hockey East

In his fourth and final season with Boston University, Gilroy, a former walk-on, led Hockey East defensemen during the regular season with 28 points and on eight goals and 20 assists. Seven games into the post-season, he has assisted on eight goals, including four in BU's opening round 8-3 win over Ohio State. The last defenseman to win the award was Denver's Matt Carle in 2006.

See HOCKEY EAST on page 8

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 60 LOW: 32 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, APRIL 9, 2009

UMass dorms to get new laundry contract

BY ALYSSA CREAMER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This semester, the University of Massachusetts' contract with Automatic Laundry expires and a committee will decide on the company to contract with for next fall.

Automatic Laundry is the company that has provided service and replacements for all the washers and dryers on campus for the past 10 years.

Whatever company is chosen, UMass hopes to contract with a company that will be responsible for ensuring that the on-campus washers and dryers all function properly, or if broken, are replaced in a timely fashion.

Frustration with UMass' washers and dryers is not unheard of – in fact, for years students have been complaining about the malfunctioning machines.

In 1998, UMass contracted with Automatic Laundry, a company self-asserting to be "the leading provider of laundry equipment and management for apartments, military bases, colleges and other multi-housing laundry rooms."

However, many area government leaders believe there are "key and missing" clauses, like one insisting the company is responsible for fixing a washer or dryer in a timely manner if it is broken. Also if a machine breaks down, then gets fixed but breaks down again within a certain period of time, it must be replaced.

Within UMass' area governments, Govs. Christopher Faulkner, David Robertson and Stephen Thomas-Brown, of Southwest, Central and Northeast, respectively, are leading the movement to ensure that student issues with the current laundry machines are voiced and addressed to the committee.

These students hope that when the next contract is established, it includes the customer service guarantees they feel are missing. It is unclear whether the machines purchased in 1998 were new that year, if in that year they were old machines, and if since 1998 the machines have been replaced by newer models.

"When I was a freshmen running for house council treasurer, I had wanted to investigate getting new machines because students have been citing laundry as a problem for quite a few years," said Faulkner. "But I found out that there was nothing that could be done until the contract was up."

"When we (the area government officials) heard that the laundry company's contract was ending this year, we really put it upon ourselves to find out what problems students were having with the machines and how we could help remedy these problems when the next contract would be signed," he added.

Area government officials, including Faulkner, Robertson and Thomas-Brown, created a Facebook group called "I've had enough of UMass laundry!" in order to generate student feedback about the washers and dryers in UMass' residential areas.

"The machines are really bad," said Faulkner. "They break down frequently. And the dryers in the towers are ventilated into buckets filled with water. That's not how you ventilate a dryer. The rest of the dryers are ventilated outside the buildings, but there are still other problems. Sometimes the Freshman communications major Jeff Porter stands frustrated before a washing machine in Southwest while doing his laundry. UMass' contract with the company that currently services the machines ends this semester.

See LAUNDRY on page 3

SGA senate votes to suspend RSO publication

Sean Robinson, speaker of the SGA, introduced a motion last night to recommend the conditional suspension of the RSO that sponsors The Minuteman publication.

BY MIKE FOX
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The SGA senate voted Wednesday night to recommend the conditional suspension of the RSO that sponsors The Minuteman publication, on charges of slander and violation of SGA bylaws.

The motion was put forth by senate speaker Shaun Robinson in response to a personal attack in the publication on Student Bridges director Vanessa Snow.

The motion stated the attack was a "clear example of slanderous defamation of character, and an intentional misrepresentation of an SGA member."

SGA bylaws acknowledge freedom of the press for RSOs, but stipulate that penalty is permitted in cases of slander of student body members.

Editor in Chief of The Minuteman, John Beale, clarified that the comments were intended as, "jokingly mean-spirited" and that he personally found the comments unnecessary, and that their publication was the decision of the majority of the publication's editorial board.

The legislation called on the secretary of the registry to suspend The Silent Majority unless they were to issue a written apology that would be published as an advertisement in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Beale stated that he had no problem apologizing for the statements and that the newspaper will appeal the decision and look into a way that it can better represent itself as an advocate for free speech. He added that The Minuteman planned on consulting advisors on the matter.

Commuter Area Senator Derek Khanna voted in opposition to the motion. He based his vote on a defense of free speech, identifying the legislation as censorship.

Southwest Senator Josh Davidson, the other member of the senate to vote in opposition, based his vote on legal concerns.

"I don't think that the senate has legal grounds to take this action," said Davidson. "Certainly a case could be made for the accusations brought up by the senate tonight, but there needs to be a legal process preceding this type of action we need to be careful and diligent about our actions due to their possible legal implications."

Speaker Robinson responded by saying attorneys were consulted prior to the night's meeting.

"By putting this motion forward, all we are doing is enforcing the bylaws as they are written and those bylaws are the governing rules and regulations of our organization," he said.

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu

Minutemen collapse again in 9th inning, fall to UConn

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Mitchell Eilenberg stood on the mound after giving up two two-run home runs in the ninth inning, with a look of disbelief on his face. The scoreboard read 11-9; the Massachusetts baseball team was not ahead.

Eilenberg finished the inning, but three short outs later, Connecticut completed the sweep of the season series against the Minutemen.

"Sickening," was the word that UMass coach Mike Stone used to describe the feeling of faltering late in "the 12th time that we've lost late in the game that we should've won."

| | |
|---|---|
| UConn | 11 |
| UMass | 9 |

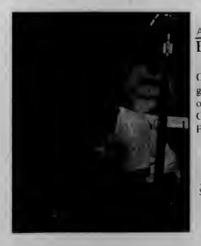
After four lead changes in the game, UMass (8-17, 2-7 Atlantic 10) entered the ninth inning leading the Huskies, 9-7. But Eilenberg served up two home runs in yet another crushing defeat for the Minutemen.

"Once again, we failed to play well enough at the end of the game to win it," Stone said. "It just eats at you. We need to be tougher and we need to compete better at the end of the game. We gave up five home runs by the end of the game, that's terrible."

Eilenberg came into the game in the eighth inning, relieving Mike DiCato, who gave up three runs on three hits in the seventh to give UConn a 7-4 lead. But the Minutemen quickly answered, scoring five runs in the bottom of the inning for a two-run lead.

Eilenberg pitched a spotless eighth, rendering UConn (15-14) hitless and sending the Minutemen into the ninth with a two-run lead.

The ninth, however, did not go nearly as well.



Eilenberg struck out UConn third baseman Dalc Brannon to start the inning, but a Matt Burnett single precipitated the collapse of the Minutemen. John Andreoli pinch ran for Burnett and advanced to third on a wild pitch to George Springer.

Springer made Eilenberg regret this miscue when he deposited the next pitch over the center field fence to tie the game at nine. Left fielder Peter Fatse then reached on a costly error by third

See BASEBALL on page 8

UMass pitcher Robert Machado surrendered two runs in yesterday's 11-9 loss at Lorden Field. The Minutemen took a lead into the ninth inning before giving up a pair of homers and four total runs.

ARTS & LIVING
BANDS BATTLE

On Trak took home the grand prize of the night, opening up the Spring Concert for headliner Lupe Fiasco.

SEE PAGE 6

SPORTS
GOALIE CLASH

UMass goalie Doc Schneider and the No. 14 Minutemen will take on Hobart and star goalkeeper Max Silberlicht this weekend in Geneva, N.Y.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION
COLUMN| 1, 2, 5 STRIKES YOU'RE OUT

Columnist S.P. Sullivan weighs in on Amherst's law that prevents more than four people who aren't related from sharing a house.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
VIDEO| BATTLE OF THE BANDS

Stay tuned for exclusive video of UPC's Battle of the Bands.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 47

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wanczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Deisner
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
COMICS EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Leigh Greaney
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenzweig
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zohlnert
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kocziwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Melissa Tuttinen
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larrard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Weliver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, INCLUDING ITS ADVERTISING REVENUES. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCRIBE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN DELIVERED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 AM AND 5:30 PM.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Michael King

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michelle Abbasciano

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEWS

BLOG | EDITOR'S NOTE
NEWS EDITOR WILL MCGUINNESS DEBUTS THE MDC'S NEW BLOG THAT WANTS YOUR NEWS TIPS AND MUCK. TAKE PART IN INVESTIGATING THE EVENTS AND OFFICIALS OF YOUR AREA.

VIDEO |
DIDN'T SEE THAT FREE SPEECH RALLY EVERYONE'S TALKING ABOUT? IT'S FINE. WE'VE GOT IT ON TAPE FOR YOU.

VIDEO |
REPORTER GISEL SAILLANT PROVIDES A SPRING BREAK RETROSPECTIVE YOU CAN WATCH WITHOUT DELETING YOUR INTERNET HISTORY RIGHT AFTER.

ARTS & LIVING

PODCAST |
THE COLLEGIAN'S OLIVER SCOTT SNURE INTERVIEWS PRODUCER AND MUSICIAN JOHN VANDERSLICE

PODCAST|
DAILY COLLEGIAN FILM CRITICS KEVIN KOCZWARA AND SHAYNA MURPHY TAKE A LOOK AT UPCOMING FILMS AND ASSISTANT MULTI-MEDIA EDITOR PETE RIZZO ADMITS HE'S NEVER SEEN A WOODY ALLEN MOVIE

GET YOUR POKE ON!

LIKE US AS MUCH AS WE LIKE YOU? BECOME FRIENDS WITH THE COLLEGIAN ON FACEBOOK TO GET DAILY NEWS UPDATES SPRINKLED INTO YOUR FRIENDS' CONSTANT NEWSFEED CONFESSIONS.

Somali piracy hits first American vessel

BY EDMUND SANDERS
LOS ANGELES TIMES

NAIROBI, Kenya — The first pirate attack in more than 200 years against an American-flagged vessel off Africa didn't last very long.

Wednesday morning, a U.S.-registered cargo ship – which routinely works under contract for the Defense Department – and its all-American crew were hijacked by pirates off Somalia as it was transporting humanitarian aid to African nations.

Less than 12 hours later, the 20-member crew – which was unarmed, according to the ship's owner – managed to overpower the pirates and regain control of the vessel, according to U.S. officials.

The dramatic turnaround is the latest chapter in the growing piracy crisis off Somalia, which has lacked a functioning government since 1991.

"The crew has taken back control of the ship," said a U.S. defense official speaking on the condition of anonymity. "There is still one pirate aboard."

However, The Associated Press reported that an unidentified crew member had picked up the ship's satellite phone to report that some of the pirates were in a lifeboat and still holding the ship's captain hostage. It was not immediately clear whether the lifeboat was still onboard the ship, but other reports said the boat was in the water.

According to the defense official, at least four pirates seized control of the ship, and the fate of the other three pirates was unclear. They might have tried to flee in their own vessel, the official said. Another Associated Press report said the foiled pirates were "in the water."

The company that owns the ship said it could not immediately confirm that its crew was back in control. But Capt. Joseph Murphy, an instructor at the Massachusetts Maritime Academy, told The Associated Press that he had been called by the Department of Defense and told that the crew, including his son Shane, the second-in-command on the ship, had regained control.

Numerous vessels have successfully fended off or outrun pirate attacks in recent months, but the actions of the U.S. crew, if confirmed, marked a rare instance of seafarers overpowering pirates after a vessel was seized, maritime officials said. Pirates seized the Danish-owned ship around 7:30 a.m. as it moved about 240 nautical miles southeast of the Somalia port city Eyl in the Indian Ocean, according to U.S. naval officials.

The ship's owner, Norfolk, Va.-based Maersk Line Ltd., is a U.S. subsidiary of Denmark's A.P. Moller-Maersk. The shipping giant is a longtime Pentagon contractor, according to security analyst company Globalsecurity.org, operating vessels with "top security clearance." The hijacked vessel, called the Maersk Alabama, was not sailing under a Defense Department contract at the time of the attack, according to company and U.S. military officials.

Maersk Chief Executive John Reinhart said the company's seafarers were well-trained to deal with the risks of piracy.

"We have ways to push back, but we don't carry arms," he said.

He said the ship was carrying humanitarian food aid "to Africa for people in need."

A spokesman for World Food Program confirmed that part of the ship's cargo was being ferried on its behalf, including 4,000 metric tons of corn headed for Somalia and Uganda, and 1,000 metric tons of vegetable oil earmarked for refugees in Kenya. The ship was expected to dock in the Kenyan port of Mombasa on April 16.

"Every indication is that this is the first time a U.S.-flagged ship has been successfully seized by pirates in this region," according to Lt. Nathan Christensen, a spokesman from the U.S. 5th Fleet in Bahrain.

According to Andrew Mwangura, head of the East African Seafarers Assistance Program in Nairobi, the last pirate attack of an American vessel by African pirates was reported in 1804, off Libya. "It's been a very long time," he said.

Over the past three years, Somali pirates typically have anchored hijacked vessels off the coast and negotiated ransoms between $1 million and $3 million. Last year, total ransom payments collected by Somali pirates are believed to have topped $50 million.

Trans-Atlantic food fight over U.S. beef

Some European cheeses and other imported gourmet foods may be off American shelves soon as trade disputes heat up over the EU's refusal to import hormone-treated U.S. beef.

BY FRANK GREVE
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

WASHINGTON — Roquefort cheese and some other popular European food imports could disappear soon from U.S. gourmet shops and fancy food departments.

The imports, which also include selected processed meats from Italy and jams from France, are hostages in a long-running trans-Atlantic food fight over the European Union's French-led refusal to import hormone-treated U.S. beef.

By the tit-for-tat logic of playgrounds and trade disputes, if the European Union doesn't lift its 20-year beef ban, the United States gets to impose punishing tariffs on selected products that EU members want to sell here. The World Trade Organization ruled that the ban had no scientific basis and in 1999 authorized retaliatory U.S. tariffs until the EU relents.

The first round of tariffs didn't make the EU budge, so the Bush administration's U.S. trade representative, Susan Schwab, announced a second round as she left office in January.

No one's likely to starve as a result, but the pending 300 percent duty on Roquefort, which could be imposed as soon as April 23, would drive its price into the unheard-of range of $60 a pound.

"I couldn't afford it," said Jennifer Fennell, 40, of Washington, an aghast fan. The salty, creamy, crumbly blue that smells a bit like the sheep with whose milk it begins now costs about $20 a pound.

At $60, Roquefort "will die a slow death over maybe four months" as stockpiles sell out, predicted Dominique Deliqueau, the vice president for sales and marketing at DCI Cheese Co., in Richfield, Wis.

That's just what the trade representative intended, and it's music to the ears of France-bashers, competing U.S. cheese-makers and even Roquefort's French rivals for U.S. sales.

While Roquefort is the most harshly attacked, other, 100 percent U.S. tariffs probably would double the retail prices of bottled water from Italy, chestnuts from France and foie gras, truffles, beef sausage, bone-in hams, canned peaches and filled chocolates from 26 EU member countries, France prominent among them.

"We tried to make sure countries most hostile to settlement and anti-trade understood that it had consequences," Schwab explained. Accordingly, Britain, usually an ally in trade talks, was spared.

While pounding longtime intransigents such as France, the new list also taxes more products from more countries, including peripheral ones such as Bulgaria, Poland, Slovenia and Cyprus.

If EU members won't start buying U.S. beef, their best hope is that Obama administration trade negotiators merely threaten their European counterparts with punishing new U.S. tariffs and don't impose them. Incoming U.S. Trade Representative Ron Kirk signaled that possibility by deferring the new tariffs' effective date, originally set for March 23, for a month.

To add leverage, the new tariff plan draws powerful international companies such as Swiss-based Nestle into the fray. Nestle, which has influence in agriculture ministries throughout Europe, owns an Italian bottled water popular with U.S. consumers – San Pellegrino – that the tariff would make prohibitively expensive.

Why bash Roquefort rather than French brie, however? Why go after French sheep farmers to avenge French intransigence on U.S. beef imports? Why go after U.S. consumers such as Fennell with a fusillade of minor trade interventions that mix punishment and protectionism?

The rough logic was that the tariffs had to get the attention of as many EU governments as possible without harming U.S. businesses, Schwab said. In practice, spreading the pain while making it acute meant going after iconic niche products such as Roquefort, whose U.S. market totaled just $2.7 million last year, according to U.S. Agriculture Department figures.

NEED AN APARTMENT?

• Excellent location... 1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St. • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS
FEB. 4TH FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

WRITE FOR NEWS!

NEWS@ DAILY COLLEGIAN. COM

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
OPEN LATE NIGHT TILL 4 AM!

Need money towards fall tuition?
Now's your chance to win up to $2,000!
Visit UMassAlumni.com/students and enter the Tuition Raffle today!
Tickets are $7 each or 5 for $25
Drawing will be held Sunday, April 26, 2009.
Winner will be notified via phone.
SEE WEBSITE FOR RULES AND ELIGIBILITY
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION UMASS AMHERST

Journalist in Lebanon charged with spying

BY BORZOU DARAGAHI AND RAMIN MOSTAGHIM
LOS ANGELES TIMES

BEIRUT, Lebanon — An Iranian-American journalist has been charged with espionage by the country's security court, the prosecutor and her lawyer said Wednesday.

Roxana Saberi, a 31-year-old freelance journalist living in Tehran, the capital of Iran, was arrested more than two months ago by authorities and is being held inside the capital's Evin Prison. Sohrab Heydarifard, the judge overseeing her case, told state television that she is being charged with working for U.S. intelligence.

"The charge against her is one of espionage," he said. "This accused has been coming and going to certain government circles under the cover of reporter and without a permit. And, through the contacts that she has made with certain employees of these government organizations, she has perpetrated actions to compile and gather information and documents and transferred them to American intelligence services."

Iranian authorities said Saberi had been investigated by the counter-espionage section of the Ministry of Intelligence and Security, had confessed to the allegations and had been informed of the serious charges against her.

"The documents are there in her case, and she has admitted to all of the charges," Hassan Haddad, deputy chief prosecutor at Tehran's Revolutionary Court, told the Iranian Students News Agency, or ISNA.

A trial will begin next week, Heydarifard said.

Saberi's lawyer said he still lacked basic details about the case. "I have not read her file, so I cannot confirm" Saberi's confession, said Abdul-Samad Khorramshahi.

"On Saturday, I will go to see when the trial will be held and whether I can read the file or not," he said.

U.S. officials said they are monitoring Saberi's situation through the Swiss Embassy in Tehran, which serves as Washington's representative in the Islamic Republic.

"We are deeply concerned by the news that we're hearing," Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton told reporters. "We wish for her speedy release and return to her family."

Saberi, the daughter of an Iranian American father and Japanese American mother, worked as a journalist for various Western news outlets, including the British Broadcasting Corp. and National Public Radio. Authorities revoked her credentials in 2006, but she continued to report for broadcast outlets and work on a book.

Saberi's parents, Reza and Akiko, arrived in Tehran on Sunday morning and visited their daughter in prison Monday. She had been moved from Evin's solitary confinement ward to a general population segment.

Haddad, the prosecutor, told ISNA that an indictment had been issued against Saberi and that a branch of the Revolutionary Court was investigating the case.

"Since the case is still being investigated and no verdict has been issued yet, we cannot reveal more details on it," he was quoted as saying. "However, as soon as the verdict is issued, more details will be given on the charges against her."

Saberi, born in New Jersey, holds dual U.S. and Iranian citizenship and has been living in Tehran for six years, but Haddad said the Islamic Republic does not acknowledge her American nationality.

"She holds Iranian nationality, passport and birth certificate and has entered the country with her Iranian documents," he said. "We are not aware if she holds any other nationality, and the issue will not influence how Iranian judicial sources handle the charges against her."

Student leaders gather support for new UM laundry contract

LAUNDRY from page 1

dryers spin, but then they don't dry. Sometimes they heat up, but they don't spin. Also, they frequently flood."

With 648 group members, many UMass students posted personal stories about difficulties with UMass' washers and dryers. Many stories included complaints about noisy or smelly washers and dryers, floods, the cost of the machine and way the number of cycles needed to get the job done.

"It really is a problem. I never know what is going to work or what isn't at any given time," said sophomore history major Hamza Dave Flanagan.

The Facebook group also directs students to the website www.automaticlaundry.com/College/univ.htm where students can report broken washers and dryers within their buildings.

"I started doing my laundry at midnight, and it took me until 4 a.m. to finish my laundry because of the stupid dryers," said freshman Allison Coelho, a psychology major. "I spent 8 dollars on the dryer alone, because I had to go through three cycles, because the clothes would just not dry."

The University appointed Meredith Schmidt, director of the Campus Center/Student Union complex, as chairman of the committee to solve the issue of contracting a laundry company for next year.

The committee consists of mainly faculty from auxiliary services. Governor of Northeast Stephen Thomas-Brown is the student representative on the committee.

"I'm really proud of the collaboration between the area government officials," said Faulkner. "We're making sure that we are serving the students in the different areas. I'm very excited about this, and I will be living on-campus next year so I will get to see the benefit of this."

The decision about whom to contract with should be made by the end of the month.

"The thing I want students to realize is that their area governments do listen to them, and we will help them," said Robertson in a statement, "but this is just the first step, and the student body must hold their government accountable to follow through next year."

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu

The job market is global. *Are you?

Teachers, Engineers, Health majors, Math and science majors, Agriculturalists and foresters, French and Spanish speakers encouraged to apply.

www.peacecorps.gov/events

Developmental team comes to Springfield

BY GISEL SAILLANT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The NBA announced last Tuesday that Springfield, Mass. – the birthplace of basketball – will be home to a new NBA Developmental League franchise. The announcement took place at a conference at the Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame.

The Developmental League is the NBA's official minor league, which consists of 16 teams across the nation. According to the NBA Developmental League fact sheet, 60 players from the D-League went on to the 2008-2009 start-of-season rosters. The D-League also advocates for youth basketball and educational development through their "NBA D-League Cares" program.

The conference focused on presenting the D-League to community businesses and leaders, as well as current business partners to highlight the economic impact the team could bring to the Pioneer Valley.

Dan Reed, the president of the NBA Development League, said it was "poetic justice," that the NBA had finally arrived at the birthplace of basketball. Reed said Springfield was a very attractive location for the NBA D-League as it helped fulfill their goal of expanding to the East Coast. Reed talked about the history of the league and showed a video about the standards Springfield can expect and its potential for the team to create relationships within the community.

Several former University of Massachusetts men's basketball players have participated in the D-League, including forward Gary Forbes who led UMass to the National Invitation Tournament finals last year. Forbes has played for D-League teams in Tulsa and Sioux City.

The new team's NBA affiliation has not yet been determined, but it's likely that the franchise will serve two NBA teams.

With the exception of the Boston Celtics, the new franchise will be the only men's professional basketball team in the region.

The team's home games will be played at the recently-renovated Mass Mutual Center in the city's downtown area. The venue holds over 6,000 patrons for basketball and is currently home to the Springfield Falcons American Hockey League franchise.

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu

Healthy savings at the UHS Pharmacy!

OVER-THE-COUNTER PRODUCTS

PAIN RELIEVERS
- Acetaminophen (compare to Tylenol®) 325 mg., 100 ct. ..... $1.34
- Ibuprofen (compare to Motrin®) 200 mg., 100 ct. ..... $2.16
- Genaced (compare to Excedrin®) 100 ct. ..... $2.16
- Midol 8 ct. ..... $3.58
- Naproxen sodium (compare to Aleve®) 220 mg., 50 ct. ..... $2.72
- Prodium (compare to AZO®) 100 mg, 12 ct. ..... $4.48

ALLERGY
- Cetirizine (compare to Zyrtec®) ..... $8.04
- Chlorpheniramine (compare to Chlor-Trimeton®) 4 mg.,100 ct. ..... $1.13
- Loratadine (compare to Claritin®) 100 mg., 10 ct. ..... $0.85

COUGH & COLD
- Banophen (compare to Benadryl®) 25 mg., 100 ct. ..... $2.40
- Guiatuss DM (compare to Robitussin DM®) 4 oz. ..... $1.00
- Halls® cough drops ..... $0.67
- Halls Defense® cough drops with Vitamin C ..... $1.66
- NyQuil® 6 oz. ..... $4.76
- Pseudoephedrine (compare to Sudafed®) 30 mg., 24 ct. ..... $1.26

Plus vitamins, first aid, contraception and much more, at similar savings. If we don't carry what you need, ask us to special order!

UMASS AMHERST
UNIVERSITY HEALTH SERVICES
PHARMACY 150 Infirmary Way
(413) 577-5030 • www.umass.edu/uhs
(All prices + tax)

Who Wants to Be the Next UMass IRON CHEF?
WIN PRIZES

- Maximum of three teams per DC
- Maximum of three UMass students per team
- Mystery basket will be provided on the day of competition

The winning team from each DC will be competing at the TASTE OF UMASS for a chance to win a Wii. (One per team member)

| FRANKLIN DC | WORCESTER DC | HAMPSHIRE DC | BERKSHIRE DC |
|---|---|---|---|
| WEDNESDAY | WEDNESDAY | THURSDAY | THURSDAY |
| APRIL 15 | APRIL 15 | APRIL 16 | APRIL 16 |
| FROM 5-7 PM | FROM 8-10 PM | FROM 5-7 PM | FROM 7-9 PM |

For complete details and to register:
www.umassdining.com

Sponsored by Campbell's Soup

ivy

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
www.umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 9, 2009

"FREEDOM OF SPEECH IS OF NO USE TO A MAN WHO HAS NOTHING TO SAY..." - FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

That's one small step for students

A month ago, the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees voted to raise our fees, ignoring the fact that the federal stimulus money includes enough to cover our deficit for the next two years. Two weeks ago, we won a victory when Gov. Deval Patrick promised to use that money for the operating budgets of institutions of public higher education, specifically to "rescind" the UMass fee increase.

Emily Bloch

About 100 students from the Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth and Lowell campuses packed the Board of Trustees meeting on Feb. 27, trying to prevent the board from preemptively raising our fees. At the meeting, governor-appointed trustees told us that the hike was necessary to prevent devastating budget shortfalls and that the increase in financial aid will make up for the dent in anyone's pocketbook. One thing they failed to mention was that some of this aid would come in the form of loans, which would just add to the thousands of dollars of dept that many students are already graduating with.

UMass Dartmouth administrators tried to intimidate with 20 police officers, who treated us with courtesy. The administrators intentionally restricted 40 of us from entering the meeting room, which could have held everyone if they had been willing to open the movable partitions. Forty more of us were not even let into the building, which could easily have held 100 more people, but administrators insisted it was filled to capacity.

At the start of the meeting, the state secretary of education explained that Gov. Patrick had not yet decided how to spend the stimulus money. The law gives the governor a choice: spend the money on capital projects — new buildings and renovation — but when there is already additional money set aside in the package, or spend it on the operating budget, preventing layoffs and fee increases and investing in a major long-term engine of the state's economy. This is enough money to cover almost all of the shortfalls faced by the entire public higher education system, meaning that, if the governor spends it on the operating budget, UMass would see almost no deficit and need no fee increase.

Alex Kulenovic, the elected student trustee from UMass Boston, proposed that the board delay the vote on the increase until the governor reached a decision on the money. The board shut down discussion on the motion.

The work is far from done. Now, more than ever, students need to stand together.

The students inside began a peaceful disruption to make sure that student opposition was heard. Several appointed trustees criticized our tactics as childish and hypocritically told us that we should use "democratic channels" while they insisted that it was useless to lobby the state government for funding.

Instead of adding their voices to the growing cry for the governor to use the money properly, 11 of the appointed trustees – and, to the dismay of her shocked and angry constituents, the elected student trustee from UMass Dartmouth – voted to raise our fees and send the governor the message that UMass students have got it covered.

After the meeting, students agreed to go to the governor's press conference to demand that he would be open and publicly committing himself and a petition of the faculty, staff and students of public higher education, we [illegible] calls to the governor's office, many of the calls where some of [illegible] and the incoming governor of all [illegible] universities.

Our efforts paid off. Last week, Gov. Patrick announced plans to use some [illegible] towards higher education [illegible] budgets. Of that, $[illegible] would go specifically to the UMass system to "rescind" the $1,500 fee increase. This combination of protest and advocacy forced the governor to take a step toward rolling back the fee increase. This is a victory for students.

But the work is far from done. Now, more than ever, students need to stand together. In the short term we need to make sure that student fees are indeed rescinded as the governor announced, and that the state legislature does not use federal stimulus money as an excuse to cut higher education even further in the fiscal year 2010 budget.

This university, regardless of our fee increase, is already too expensive for many Massachusetts residents. Students need to rally together to fight any proposal that would make UMass less accessible.

We have to continue to let our administration, trustees, governor and legislators know that students are still paying attention and that we will not stop working until higher education is truly accessible and affordable.

Emily Bloch is the SGA student trustee. She can be reached at ebloch@student.umass.edu.

1, 2, 5 strikes you're out

S.P. Sullivan

They say in Amherst that two's company, three's a crowd and five is in direct violation of the unrelated-tenants bylaw.

News broke early this week that five University of Massachusetts students sharing a house on East Pleasant St. were forced to vote somebody off after a neighbor delivered a photograph of an overpopulated driveway to the Amherst Select Board, resulting in the resurrection of the long-ignored bylaw.

The bylaw prohibits more than four persons who aren't family members from cohabiting a house or apartment. The town bylaws define a family as, "An individual residing in one dwelling unit; A group of persons related by marriage, blood and/or adoption residing together in one dwelling unit; or a group of unrelated individuals, not to exceed 4, residing cooperatively in one dwelling unit."

UMass students Katie Kelly, Isadora Dunne, Jill Newman, Andre Dumas and Kylee Youmans — who are one over limit for an Am'erst family — were unaware of the bylaw, as were their landlords, assistant professor of political science Ray La Raja and his wife, Taryn.

Ignorance of the law is no excuse, but it can offer an explanation.

When the story hit our main page on DailyCollegian.com, a lot of readers commenting on the story had the same general response: OMG, WTF?

"This is outrageous," Haley Omand, a UMass student, commented on the story. "I had no idea about this bylaw at all. And honestly, it's absolutely idiotic. Almost everyone I know who lives in Amherst is breaking this law. And during a time when UMass is encouraging all juniors and seniors to move off campus to prevent another housing problem next year, even holding workshops and housing fairs, it seems ridiculous for the town of Amherst to enforce this law."

And the numbers suggest Omand isn't alone.

We put up an unscientific poll to go with the story, asking readers whether they knew about the bylaw before the story ran. As of 7 p.m. Wednesday, 74 percent said no.

The town hasn't done much to inform students about the bylaw, leaving it largely up to landlords and their tenants. It's not very enforceable, either, unless Town Manager Larry Schaffer is planning a series of town-wide sleepover parties.

You might not know the law exists, and they're not really sure if it's constitutional, but they're going to enforce it anyway.

The women living in the E. Pleasant St. precedent-house had a good relationship with their landlords and weren't engaging in anything particularly sketchy. But it seems a neighbor took issue with the five cars in their driveway and took photographs of it to force the Select Board into action, effectively making an example out of them.

Select Board Chairman Stephanie J. O'Keeffe said via e-mail Tuesday that the bylaw, "like many (noise, sidewalk shoveling, etc.), is investigated and enforced based on complaints."

Lesson learned. Be nice to your neighbors, they could turn on you – with photographic evidence.

The bylaw is doubly controversial because the town received a legal opinion some years ago that said it wouldn't hold up if challenged in court. Schaffer told the Daily Hampshire Gazette that the town will enforce the law "until and if it's overturned."

Now, the Select Board and the town are in a tug of war between the legality of the bylaw and the town residents complaining about those goddamn kids and their goddamn cars making their goddamn driveways look like a used car lot. But this is some convoluted logic. You might not know the law exists, and they're not really sure if it's constitutional, but they're going to enforce it anyway.

I asked political science professor Sheldon Goldman about the constitutionality of the bylaw, and he pointed me in the direction of Supreme Court case 416 U.S. 1 Village of Belle Terre v. Boraas, in which the Court upheld a 1974 town ordinance in New York State limiting the number of unrelated persons cohabiting a house.

"But since then privacy law has been liberalized, although to the best of my knowledge the precise question before the Court in Belle Terre has not been reconsidered," Goldman said. "A good legal argument can be made on both sides of the issue."

After the story about the enforcement of the bylaw ran in Tuesday's Collegian, Student Government Association (SGA) Sen. Derek Khanna sponsored a motion to call on the town to repeal the bylaw, and to form an emergency "Off Campus Housing Committee" that would first deal with the issue of this particularly bylaw, but would continue its relationship with the Select Board.

"After that it'll move on to other issues, like noise complaint laws," Khanna said in an interview Wednesday. "It will basically serve as a liaison to the town council."

So maybe next time an ordinance is passed that makes a good percentage of the UMass students' living situations illegal, somebody will tell us about it.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian columnist. Read him online at blog.masslive.com/umass101.

Ed/Op, where we won't kick you out — no matter how many roommates you have

Edopblog.blogspot.com

Breaking away from the same ideas

Nick Milano

After suggesting that the University of Massachusetts should cut its athletic department, I was bombarded with e-mails and comments, disagreeing with what I had written. It was almost as bad as when I had written a column that attacked the National Rifle Association (NRA) for blindly attacking any laws restricting gun ownership.

E-mails from literally around the country came pouring in, even one from a crazy libertarian who was supposedly running for president. He was writing to let me know – in the nicest terms possible — I assure you, that my opinion on guns was ill-informed. This is why people write opinion pieces, to stimulate discussion. For this reason, I want to clarify the argument I was making. I do not necessarily believe wholeheartedly that UMass should eliminate its athletic department. I wanted to raise the issue to get people talking about different ideas.

I think the athletic program at UMass is well run. When there was an incident with the men's lacrosse team last year, the players suspected to be involved were immediately suspended.

Unlike some athletic programs, which tend to drag their feet and even ignore mistakes by their athletes, there was no hesitation. The media relations department is impressive. When things seem to be going absolutely crazy, with multiple games at the same time on the same day at five different fields, everything still gets done (full disclosure: I used to work in the UMass Office of News & Media Relations).

To cut these peoples' jobs and to take away athletes' teams would be harsh and unfair. But I thought it was necessary for someone to offer up a different plan than simply and unsurprisingly raise fees again.

It is the duty of our elected officials and appointed executives to think outside the box, to offer fresh ideas, not recycled half-measures.

Once it was apparent that there would be cuts in the state budget, resulting in extensive setbacks to UMass' budget, the $1,500 fee hike seemed to have been the only idea debated by those at the top of state government and those running UMass.

There are alternative ways to think about this problem, but it seems our leadership is stuck doing what they always do. They recycle and repackage ideas consistently, afraid to offer up a controversial plan or even discuss alternative options. It is the duty of our elected officials and appointed executives to think outside the box, to offer fresh ideas, not recycled half-measures. Besides, if the budget shortfall was due to cuts due to a poor economy, then does it not follow that, when the economy is back on track, that this $1,500 fee hike would be superfluous?

Naomi Klein wrote a book about a concept called the shock doctrine, which she defines as a tool used by die-hard, free-market capitalists to instill their system in times of crisis. Milton Friedman and his followers believed that, to instill massive reforms, a crisis was needed to distract the government and populace. While we cannot compare raising fees by $1,500 to the horrors wrought by Friedman's followers in Chile in the 1970s and 1980s, the idea has staying power.

The budget cuts are temporary and are the result of this shattered economy in which tax revenues are obviously going to decrease. Any fee hike will be obsolete once the economy turns around. Using this methodology, one can see that perhaps government and the school administration were using the economic crisis as a way to raise fees – always an unpopular idea.

Thanks to the federal budget money, however, the fee increase may be on the sidelines, for the time being anyway. Obviously the athletic department is not going anywhere either. But our government and administration's dependence on fee raises should be a warning sign to us.

They are stuck in a rut of offering the same terrible ideas repackaged as necessary because of an emergency or disguised as something else. Gov. Deval Patrick was elected on the theme of "Together We Can," and with the belief that he would change how Beacon Hill operated. He is guiltier than anyone of sticking to stupid, inside-the-box proposals. His casino idea is a cop out – a way to stimulate revenue without actually growing Massachusetts' economy.

The Obama administration is frighteningly stuck on keeping the status quo, once the economy turns around. There have been no real demands placed on those who destroyed any hope of economic growth for the next few months.

Leaders are supposed to be courageous, smart, wise and able to look at a problem and see 10 different ways to solve it. I offered up the athletic department as an example of a new way of approaching the budget cuts.

Our government is stuck in the traditions of taking the easy way out. This is not even close to brave leadership. It is merely following a tried and true method of temporarily solving problems. We should not just expect more from our leaders; we should demand it.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Bigger government equals bigger problems

Alex Perry

Ronald Reagan stated in his first inaugural address that "government is not the solution to our problem; government is the problem."

It is no wonder why Republicans everywhere, including me, are scared to death of the power grab government has been making recently. If you trust government and think they have been doing a great job the last 10 years, you have to have been giddy with the news in recent weeks. But if you were amongst the majorities that gave low approval ratings of the Bush administration, or were in the majority adding to the record low approval ratings of the Democrat-controlled Congress the last few years, you're probably as sick as me – or will be by the time you are finished reading this column.

To me, it's rather obvious that government already can't handle its duties. There are countless examples of this: its inability to run a balanced budget, its inability to foresee its actions causing an eventual financial crisis and its inability to handle health care or education properly despite the best resources in the world. The list goes on.

And now, professional politicians such as Barack Obama and Nancy Pelosi, both of whom have never worked at a business or owned a business and seemingly can't even handle their current jobs, are now trying to tell us they have the solutions for failing American businesses.

Is this a joke?

The number of Obama appointments that have been dismissed due to failure to pay taxes makes you wonder what percentage of these politicians are even able to handle their personal finances.

The secretary of the treasury himself is a tax cheat. But government arrogantly thinks they can handle businesses better than experienced members of the private sector? Please.

Last week, Obama asked CEO of General Motors, Rick Wagoner, to resign. He has been the CEO of GM for eight years and has worked with the company for 30 years.

Allegedly, the primary reason for this resignation request was Wagoner's asking for more federal aid than any other auto company in combination with his allegedly ill-fated decision to have the company focusing on making trucks and SUVs rather than hybrid cars. Now government is deciding for GM what cars they should be making and, in turn, what cars you should be driving.

Maybe Pelosi and company do have a better feel for selling cars then Wagoner, but I seriously doubt it. The real issue here is the power grab government is making. They are sticking their noses in the middle of everything, and everyone who took bailout money, willingly or unwillingly, is now subject to being run by government.

So now, the treasury and government will be determining what is for the wages of all employees from secretaries to CEOs. Does this sound like a free market?

Business being "run" by government doesn't stop at the removal of "bad" executives. Take the "Pay for Performance Act of 2009," for example.

Under this proposal, the government would impose pay restrictions on all employees – not just top executives – on all companies that received any bailout money. The bill is intended to restrict "unreasonable and excessive compensation." The government is presenting this bill as if it is simply intended to stop CEOs who have received bailout money from stealing from American taxpayers. But really all it does is give government the power to run these companies.

The government now has the ability to dictate the amount of compensation all employees of these companies will be making. In the bill, there is no outline for what the government means by "unreasonable and excessive compensation." It is being left completely up to the government and treasury's interpretation.

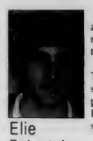
So now, the treasury and government will be determining what is fair for the wages of all employees from secretaries to CEO's. Does this sound like a free market? What it sounds like is a slippery slope towards socialism.

This power grab attempt by Obama and Pelosi is an attempt not to save America. Instead, it is an attempt to take control of America. They are using our money to "save" businesses, and then use their newfound ownership as justification for running those same businesses.

This is not saving America. This is undermining what America is and stands for.

Government under this administration is primarily interested only in expanding its power, not saving America. This is no better exemplified than by the case of Goldman Sachs. Fearful of being told how to run its company, Goldman Sachs is trying to give the bailout money it received (but never even wanted or requested) back to government. However, they are being told they can't give it back.

If all government wanted to do was save these businesses, why would they ever not take money back from the businesses that said they don't need it? The only explanation is that they want control of those businesses.



This isn't the American dream. If you graduate and get a well-paying job, you shouldn't have to look over your shoulder at government who may determine you are overpaid.

In a free market, government should not be bailing out businesses. Government should not be running American businesses. Government should not be determining compensation for those business' employees. Government should not be removing people from businesses.

What government should do is take a look in the mirror and start dealing with its own widespread corruption and failures, not spreading them to the private sector.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at aperry@student.umass.edu.

Frats are more than big, fat Greek stereotypes

Elie Feinstein

Alpha, beta, gamma, delta, epsilon, zeta, eta, theta, iota, kappa, lambda, mu, nu, xi, omicron, pi, rho, sigma, tau, upsilon, phi, chi, psi, omega.

These letters spell many things. They spell leadership, community service, brotherhood and sisterhood, professionalism and, of course, fun. But more than anything else, they spell stigma.

Few student groups, if any, do more for this campus and for local communities than the Greek organizations at the University of Massachusetts. Yet, no student group on campus deals with more prejudice, contempt and hesitation.

Let's face it. Frat row is dead. It is a ghost of the past. But the stigma still lingers.

Unlike other large universities that boast significantly higher Greek involvement, UMass has little to no appreciation for what Greeks do.

The appreciation, as you all know, is for the weekends. Students – not just freshmen – show up in droves to "frat parties." The other night I walked out of my building onto Sunset Ave. and some girls got a ride with the Dominos delivery guy to Alpha Delta Pi (ADP). I've never seen such fast delivery.

I've also never seen such hypocrisy. Find me one student who has never been to a frat party. Or one that has played Beirut in one of the houses and been yelled at for calling it beer pong. Or one that just sat and chilled on a couch with a sister and a light beer. If you can, kudos; that was a day well spent.

There is an entire culture in Greek life that transcends drinking. No other group on campus, and probably on any campus, has been able to build a stronger sense of community.

But now, find me a student who hasn't been to one of the houses during the day, who hasn't helped Greeks raise money for heart disease, autism or cancer research, who hasn't helped make buildings more accessible. Or one who hasn't gone to a chapter meeting to see how well organized and professional these people are. I wish my homework was that easy.

The paradox is that Greeks are labeled as the party animals because the rest of the campus parties with them.

But there is an entire culture in Greek life that transcends drinking. No other group on campus – and probably on any campus – has been able to build a stronger sense of community. Greeks are diverse. They represent different socioeconomic, regional, national, racial and religious backgrounds.

My friend is in a wheelchair and has an easier time maneuvering his way through most of the houses than he does in many of the university buildings.

Why is this editorial a tirade about Greek life? It isn't. It is my attempt to express my frustration with this school's perpetual indifference to individuals who exemplify merit, outstanding performance and goodheartedness. It just so happens that many of these individuals are in Greek life.

I want registered student organizations, in general, to receive more funding. If the school, or the student government association, wants to encourage student outreach and work with local communities, let the RSOs that deal with those issues receive the funding. Let us empower ourselves. Let us empower our neighbors rather than take away the potential leadership opportunity, imagination and drive that it takes for students to garner their own support and fight for their own cause.

Greeks, of course, have a devotion to service that dwarfs that of any other body on campus. I remember attending one of the fairs for the Multicultural Greek Council (MGC) and the National Panhellenic Council (NPHC), and listening to some of the members talk ardently about the service they have committed themselves to.

The Interfraternal Council (IFC) and Panhellenic Council (PHC) – though they receive far less funding – manage to raise thousands of dollars for UDance, Relay for Life and countless smaller projects throughout the year.

In fact, the IFC and PHC, with some support from the multicultural groups, have begun a tradition of holding meetings with the Town of Amherst's selectmen to precipitate a more harmonious relationship between the two entities.

So here's my question: when are we all going to start thinking for ourselves? When are we going to stop thinking of Greek life as something mindless and instead as something mindful? When are we going to realize that the conformity we fear in joining a fraternity is not as great as the conformity of our prejudice? When are we going to chuck yesterday's dictionary into the past and write our own?

But more importantly, does anyone know how to get to Theta Chi?

Elie Feinstein is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at efeinste@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

NOW IS THE TIME TO LEGALIZE IT

Dear Editor,

RE: "Mass Weighs Pros And Cons Of Legal Marijuana," April 1

Bull's-eye! It's time to completely re-legalize cannabis (marijuana) and one reason that doesn't get mentioned is because it will lower deadly hard drug addiction rates.

DARE (Drug Abuse Resistance Education) will have to stop brainwashing youth into believing lies, half-truths and propaganda concerning cannabis, which creates grave future problems.

How many citizens try cannabis and realize it's not nearly as harmful as taught in DARE-type government environments? Then they think other substances must not be so bad either, only to become addicted to deadly drugs. The old lessons make cannabis out to be among the worst substances in the world, even though it's less addictive than coffee and has never killed a single person.

The federal government even classifies cannabis as a Schedule I substance along with heroin, while methamphetamine and cocaine are only Schedule II substances. For the health and welfare of America's children and adults, that dangerous and irresponsible message absolutely must change.

Further, regulated cannabis sales would make it so citizens who purchase it would not come into contact with people who often also sell hard drugs, which would lower hard drug addiction rates.

Stan White
Dillon, Colorado

SETTING US BACK A CENTURY OR TWO

Dear Editor,

It's interesting to see and read how little America has progressed over the past century in terms of racial equality, especially UMass students. Now I know why I can hardly cross the street while standing at a crosswalk for a minute or more – cars refuse to let me cross. Is it because of my skin color? Maybe or maybe not. Maybe they thought I like watching cars drive by.

The people who make comments like, "black people always feel like they're the victim," are ignorant. Ignorant mainly for the fact that they do not know what it means to be black in America, what it means to be born unprivileged and tattooed with stereotypes. It is those same people who walk with sticks up their ass because they are too blind and closed minded to see that they "have it made" for them already.

In other words, America was built with you (caucasians) in mind and everyone else as the wood that kindles the fire. I bet you did not know that there was a period in time where immigrants (yes, from Italy, France, Ireland, etc.) had to fill out applications to be considered "legally white." I bet you also did not know that some people with fair skin from the Caribbean prefer to throw their native culture away and assimilate themselves into American culture just so they are considered white and be entitled to the privileges that come with the title. I'm not saying that caucasians who go through struggles do not exist. I am saying that the world is already on their side. The whole world.

Yes, it is perfectly okay to avoid certain groups of people and to be racist. But how is that benefiting the overall progression of society into a more equal and accepting one? Racism and its prevalence continues to be strong because we do not know how to learn from our mistakes. Racist acts have left many dead, many injured and many people in jail for life. Do we not learn from the past? How can we ever move forward if we are constantly repeating the mistakes of our forefathers and mothers?

In addition, expressing racist ideas openly is also okay. We all are entitled to free speech right? However, when it endangers others or conflicts with a person's pursuit of happiness and rights as free human being, it is intolerable. Personally, I believe that Jason Vassell should do time behind bars regardless. But there is something wrong with you if you can say with a straight face that he had a fair trial.

Nathalie Regis
UMass Student

NOT QUITE WATER UNDER THE BRIDGE

Dear Editor,

The UMass Amherst Student Bridges program is an agency of the Student Government Association. Our mission is to increase college access and success for underrepresented students by building partnerships with local schools and community organizations, offering college awareness, preparation and success activities, and advocating for enhanced institutional and public policies and practices. The program has primarily partnered with schools and organizations in Holyoke and Springfield.

As a student-funded organization, we hold ourselves accountable to the Student Government Association, the Center for Student Development, and to the general student population – we are always open to questions, concerns and constructive criticism.

Our program development team includes our Faculty Adviser, Mari Castañeda, associate professor of Communication, an undergraduate programmatic coordinator, graduate programmatic coordinator, community outreach coordinator and an AmeriCorps VISTA.

We have developed very specific evaluation models that assess our program's impact. Student Bridges offers a range of opportunities for UMass students, including internships, independent studies and academic credit through a service learning course that meets on Tuesday nights, and includes a mandatory community service learning component.

Student Bridges has a solid base of student and community support and participation. Student Bridges has four interlocking program components:

1. College Preparatory Academic Tutoring-Mentoring: Student Bridges places UMass students as tutor-mentors at partner schools and programs in Holyoke and Springfield. Tutor-mentors are required to enroll in a component academic course, "Engaging with the Community," a service learning course that serves as the primary vehicle for recruiting, placing, training, supervising and evaluating tutor-mentors.

2. Community Outreach and College Awareness: Student Bridges hosts college awareness and preparation workshops, trips to UMass, and community-based events that encourage local youth to attain higher education. Student Bridges "ambassadors" – a diverse group of student allies and volunteers – support these activities.

3. Policy Advocacy: Student Bridges staff, interns and ambassadors work collaboratively with faculty, schools, community organizations and national and local coalitions to advocate for policies and practices that support college access and success for under-represented students.

4. Supporting Retention: Student Bridges retention coordinators work in collaboration with Freshman Achieving More for Undergraduate Success (FAMUS) and other registered student organizations to provide social networks and support for under-represented UMass students.

For more information, visit our website or stop by our office in room 306 of the Student Union.

Student Bridges Staff

TIME OUT FOR YOU KIDS

Dear Editor,

That's it. I am officially putting all the liberal hippies and conservative curmudgeons in time out. Go sit in the corner, stop crying and calm the hell down.

Now that all is quiet for the moment, I would like to present a more balanced view on the recent discussions concerning free speech and our First Amendment rights.

Recently, there has been much heated debate as to Don Feder's speech as well as the April 1 rally by a series of political clubs on campus. Conservatives feel that their right to speak was infringed upon, where as protesters and leftist organizations say that no such action occurred. Both sides have quoted the First Amendment in their defense in the numerous articles in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and both have demonstrated their discontent with the other.

To be redundant, here is the First Amendment as stated in the Constitution:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

It is understood through this that everyone has the right to speak, but also the right to be heard. And in order to hear what someone has to say, we must posses understanding.

Understanding one another is simple. We all do it on a daily basis when we go to class. We go to class, sit down and listen to what the teacher has to say and try and comprehend the material. If you have a question or don't understand, you politely raise your hand and ask. If you disagree, you say so when appropriate either after class or in a formulated way during class. What you do not do is pull your loud speaker out of your bag and start heckling the teacher. Nor do you take rash action and make a statement that is clearly offensive to others.

This in-class concept can be applied to the political rallies here on campus. Free speech is part of being an American. But as a college student, we are educated enough to know that people disagree with each other constantly, but they have the right to be heard. It is through listening to the other and formulating our thoughts in an educated manner that we expand our knowledge as students and thus educate ourselves through debate. But when we start yelling over the other simply because we disagree and want to hear ourselves speak, you get what happened at the Don Feder speech and at the rally.

Now, instead of taking the liberal approach by pointing out the problem then offering no solution, I propose this: The next time I see someone out there with a loud speaker, or protest sign or a controversial speaker that believes hate crimes do not exist, I promise to stop, listen and try and understand their point of view. Then maybe I'll even take the time to disagree with them in a calm and educated manner.

Or maybe I should just bring a louder microphone that theirs.

Time out is over. Hippy, here's your joint back. Curmudgeon, here's your bible.

Play nice now.

Brian M. Gilb
UMass Student

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 9, 2009 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

On Trak to open Spring Concert for Lupe

On Trak and Malado kept the crowd involved during its sets en route to winning the UMass Battle of the Bands competition. The band's tight performance, blending of genres and stage presence helped push it past the competition. The group will serve as this year's opening act for the Spring Concert, beginning a show that will feature Lupe Fiasco and DJ Girl Talk.

Lupe Fiasco, Girl Talk and All Time Low heading to Mullins

BY ANDREW SHERIDAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last night, after classes had let out and the campus had begun to clear, the Student Union started filling with an odd assortment of students. Black-clad emo punks, skank-dancing ska fans and hip-hop aficionados packed the ballroom as it prepared to host the UMass Battle of the Bands.

The winning student band On Trak and Malado will serve as the opening act for the UMass Spring concert. The concert will be headlined by All Time Low, DJ Girl Talk and hip-hip artist Lupe Fiasco.

When the Battle of the Bands began at 7:30, the atmosphere was more akin to a middle-school social than a rock concert. As the bands began to play, the lights stayed on, the crowd stayed silent and – for the most part – people stayed in their chairs and off of the dance floor.

The first act started things off on a high note, with a predictably "ska" group known as the Ska-Some Society. With talented instrumentals and an up-beat attitude, they received high scores from the judge panel and gave high hopes for the rest of the evening.

Sadly, those hopes were to be dashed in short order, as the following performers were more or less along the lines of hip-hop karaoke and high school garage bands.

Presiding over the battle was MC Roy Wood Jr., a comedian who has been featured on Def Jam Comedy and Comedy Central. Between acts, Wood kept the crowd entertained, if not attentive, with solid commentary on college basketball, hunting and the notorious "super-F".

Few of the middle acts were noteworthy. Members of the crowd slowly got out of their seats over the course of four or five acts, but there was little energy evident. And no one got more than a half-hearted cheer out of the fans.

This all changed, however, when Quarterlife CRISis took the stage. This all-UMass band upped the energy with danceable songs and an original entry which earned them straight 9-out-of-10's from the judges.

Following Quarterlife was the all-girl rap group Solo Sexx. By far the most unusual entry in the competition, Solo Sexx was like a cross between Zenon, Girl of the 21st Century and Missy Elliot, complete with luminescent backup dancers and plenty of glitter. Perhaps despite of their unique appearance, the girls were undeniably talented, and brought home top scores for the first round.

Finishing off the first round was On Trak and Malado, a hip-hop group that outshined similar acts proceeded. Although they were a bit hard to understand, they won over the crowd, and along with Quarterlife and Solo Sexx, moved on to the second round.

The second round of the competition proceeded with better performances than the first. Solo Sexx's offering brought the ballroom to its feet, and finally put some enthusiasm into the melancholy crowd. On Trak followed them up with a superior act, and despite a lack of original material, Quarterlife was well received.

Despite an impressive display of rap talent, Solo Sexx was eliminated at the end of the second round. "I think personally that we did really, really good, we were really original," said front girl M.C Velvet. "Unfortunately, we didn't see eye-to-eye with the judges, and that really sucks. We lost to a band that did covers, so what can you say?"

The final round went much like the first, with On Trak showing its skill and versatility, and Quarterlife providing talented instrumentals, but still singing covers. Decision time came and the crowd's opinion was heard. On Trak and Malado were declared the winners. "The competition was tough," said A-Live of On Trak. "The girls did their thing, and the rock band did their thing."

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at arts@dailycollegian.com

Quarterlife Crisis brought back the '90s with its cover of a Third Eye Blind track, but that wasn't enough to crown the band winners of the UMass Battle of the Bands.

Sole Sexx's performance outshined earlier acts. It failed to make it past the second round despite an energetic and original performance.

UMass Theatre Guild brings myths to life

BY MICHELLE FREDETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After another semester of hard work, the University of Massachusetts Theatre Guild will be performing their spring play, "Metamorphoses."

Each fall and spring semester the guild puts on both a play and a musical (this semester's musical is "Bare" by Jon Hartmere Jr. and Damen Inirabartolo), somehow finding time between studies and jobs to rehearse.

Tom Andrea will direct "Metamorphoses" by American playwright, Mary Zimmerman.

The show is a more contemporary play than what the guild has been performing lately. With the exception of "Stop Kiss," which was first produced in 1998 and was performed by the Theatre Guild in the fall 2007 semester, "Metamorphoses" is the only other play in the past four years to premiere in the 1990s.

Zimmerman's play emanates from her interest in mythology. Some of her other plays include "The Odyssey" and "The Arabian Nights," both of which have similar roots in the past.

The play "Metamorphoses" is based partly off of the Roman poet Ovid's famous work of the same title. The "cosmogony" story and the story of Phaeton are both from the first half of Ovid's poem, while the rest all stem from later parts of the text.

The show does not have a typical linear plot. Instead, it consists of many vignettes, each of which deals with a different myth from classical literature.

The play begins with the story of the cosmogony – the creation of the world – and continues into tales about specific people, including Midas, Alycone and Ceyx; Erysichthon, Orpheus and Eurydice; Narcissus, Pomona and Vertumnus; Myrrha, Phaeton, Eros and Psyche; and Baucis and Philemon.

Most of the tales deal with the theme of transformation in some way. Midas turns his daughter to gold accidentally. Alycone and Ceyx are transformed into seabirds. Narcissus becomes the narcissus plant. Baucis and Philemon are turned into trees whose branches intertwine.

Though lovers Eros and Psyche are not transformed, the myth comes from Apuleius' novel "Metamorphoses," which is also sometimes called "The Golden Ass." The novel does involve transformation, as the main character Lucius is turned into a mule early in the text.

The UMass Theatre Guild has gone through many metamorphoses itself, having once been the Operetta Guild in 1937, the UMass Music Theatre Guild in 1970 and finally the UMass Theatre Guild in 1990, when the UMass Music Theatre Guild combined with the University Players.

The Guild is the oldest registered student organization, and is said to have begun in 1936 when the Men's Glee Club, Women's Glee Club and the College Orchestra combined to produce a different Gilbert and Sullivan operetta annually. This lasted for eight years before the group branched out into different operettas.

Prior to the guild's merge with the University Players in 1990, most of the shows produced were musicals. These included "Kiss Me, Kate," "Company," "Godspell" and "Pippin," among others.

The group also performed all over campus, at places like the bowl in Orchard Hill, the Student Union Ballroom, Bartlett Hall and the basketball courts in Southwest. Now, the performances are primarily limited to Bowker Auditorium and the Fine Arts Center.

The first show officially produced by the UMass Theater Guild was "Ten Little Indians" in the fall of 1990. Since that time, the guild has kept its production steady. Two shows per semester became the norm. This output has had a few slow seasons between the fall of 1994 and the spring of 1996.

According to the UMass Theater Guild program from its 2001 production of "And Then There Were None," the guild "aim[s] to provide Five College students a fun opportunity to experience all aspects of theater."

All the guild's shows are student-run, and "Metamorphoses" is one more production in the group's long history.

"Metamorphoses" will be performed at Bowker Auditorium. Shows are tonight at 8 p.m., Friday at 8 p.m. and Saturday at both 2 and 8 p.m. Tickets are $6 for students and seniors and $10 for the general public. They can be purchased at the Fine Arts Center box office or at the door.

Michelle Fredette can be reached at mfredett@student.umass.edu

Sedaris doesn't read his own written word

BY ALEX BUTLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"I never read from any of my books," David Sedaris told me after his Sunday night reading at UMass. "I read in an article somewhere that I read selections from my various books, but I never do that. I like to try out new material ... see what works and what doesn't."

"Oh, really. I didn't know that. Um..." I quickly shuffled my Collegian article to hide that paragraph which directly confirmed that common misconception. "I thought you at least read one story from..."

"Wow, hold on," he said. "Look at that. That has got to be the worst haircut I've ever seen. I mean, really."

Sedaris was talking to one of his fans after the show, a kid with a lengthy black mohawk that was let down, swinging past his shoulders. He was behind me in line to meet and greet the famous author.

"And I've been on a lot of book tours. That's something I've never seen."

Sedaris, who is known for his brutally honest dry-wit, has a habit for talking with his fans after readings. And after Sunday night's show at the Fine Arts Center, it was no different. The well-known author, of seven collections of writing, read to an almost sold-out crowd that evening. It was a humble reading, one man with an armful of stories. But if anyone knows David Sedaris and his work, that armful can stretch an awfully long way.

Sedaris brought with him many experiences, stories ranging from his current life in Normandy, France, to passing a kidney stone, blissfully, on percocets.

"I'm just going to start, I guess I'm just going to read this," Sedaris began in his unique, high-pitched tone, unfolding his collection. Sedaris used, as I later found out, only new material for the crowd.

He assumed numerous voices during his reading. One voice was of disgruntled flight attendants, explaining how they get back at nauseating passengers. Instead of just asking for their garbage, the attendants told Sedaris that they would stroll the aisles, calmly asking, "You're trash ... You're trash ... Your family's trash..."

In another diary entry, he commented on a woman in a Weight Watchers meeting as she unfairly assumed everyone was on the same page as her. "Now, I know you girls can't deny you've ever pulled off the road and eaten five bags of Halloween candy..."

But one of the most endearing stories took place in Australia (think: Canada in a thong) when Sedaris was able to feed a Kookaburra bird. As the bird took off with its piece of duck entrails, Sedaris reminisced back to his childhood when he and his sister Amy sang the well-known children's song, "Kookaburra in the old gum tree." Kookaburras, as it turns out, smack their prey against the tree before devouring it. The "Whap! Whap! Whap!" of the meat brought the author back to his father's paddle as he was reprimanded for singing with his sister.

"I hated him for it, and never really understood why he condoned it. If it were me, I used to tell myself, I would have shown the neighborhood what adorable children I had," Sedaris explained. "But in hindsight, having a teenage son not only sing a children's song, but try to sing it to the best of his ability, may have seemed a bit strange."

Sedaris addressed more people in his life, influences and obstacles along his literary career.

Life is like an oven, a woman once explained to him that "consists of four burners. One burner is family, one is friends, one is your health and another is your work. In order to be successful, you've got to turn off one of those burners. But in order to become really successful, you've got to turn off two."

It's an interesting idea when you consider Sedaris's memoirs, which are almost too honest. His family and friends are not exactly exploited, but are often central to his jokes and dry wit.

Another influence that Sedaris mentioned was British playwright Alan Bennett. The dramatist is well known for his plays, but also for his monologues on BBC radio. Sedaris played one recording over his microphone, a series entitled "Talking Heads." During the five-minute recording, the audience fell quiet, not sure how to react. People seemed to look to Sedaris for cues on when to start laughing. Most of the British humor was unfortunately lost, but it was the only dull point in the performance.

Sedaris has a knack for making his readers feel at ease with whatever they're reading, and his lecture was no different. At the end, he asked for questions and comments, pleased to meet with anyone after the show.

But a long, black mohawk. He wasn't ready for that one.

Alex Butler can be reached at ajbutler@student.umass.edu.

David Sedaris read new material to a nearly sold-out crowd at the Fine Arts Center on Sunday. He then held a meet and greet afterwards so he could speak with his fans.

WRITE FOR ARTS, IT IS A LOT OF FUN. ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, NHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Does Your Group Need Money?
The UMass Amherst Alumni Association helps RSOs and other student organizations fund projects that will improve and enhance student life.
Awards are limited to $2,000 per applicant group per academic year.
Visit UMassAlumni.com for an application and grant guidelines today or call the Alumni Association at 545-2317.
Deadline for the next grant review is Monday, April 13!

Are you looking for a job for next semester?
The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is looking to hire employees for advertising production in 2009 - 2010!
• Flexible work schedule
• Hourly salary
• Awesome people
Little to no experience in graphic design necessary!
Looking for undergrads with good computer skills, strong motivation, the ability to learn, and a keen eye.
Contact Max Detmer at Advertising@DailyCollegian.com for more information, or stop by The Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
■ PRESIDENTIAL APTS ■ COLLEGE INN APTS
■ COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS ■ LANTERN COURT APTS
■ PERRY APTS ■ MILL HOLLOW
■ 177 N. PLEASANT ST. ■ CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best In Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
BRING YOUR COLLEGE ID FOR COVER DISCOUNT!!!
SKYPLEX is NOW HIRING:
Doors open at 9 to party until 2 a.m.!
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq Downtown Springfield 413 [illegible] 9000 www.SkyPlex.us

9th inning dooms UM

BASEBALL from page 1

baseman Jim Macdonald and the Huskies capitalized on yet another error when first baseman Mike Nemeth took Eilenberg deep to right field, putting the Huskies up for good, 11-9.

All of this came after a five-run seventh inning rally by UMass that saw back-to-back home runs by center fielder Brian Baudinet and Macdonald. First baseman Peter Cupa started the inning for the Minutemen with a lead-off walk and advanced to third when freshman catcher Tom Conley doubled to right-center field.

Sam Boone pinch-hit for Matt Gedman, hitting a two-RBI double to center field, bringing UMass within one. Baudinet homered to left field, putting UMass up by two. Macdonald followed Baudinet with a solo shot of his own, capping the offensive explosion put together by the Minutemen in the seventh.

Although the offensive output by UMass was ultimately overshadowed by struggles on the mound.

In all, each of the four Minuteman pitchers gave up multiple runs on a day when temperatures reached as low as 46 degrees. Freshman Robert Machado gave up four hits and two runs while striking out two in his first career start.

The only two runs given up by Machado came by way of a Pierre LePage RBI double to right field in the second inning and a solo home run by Fatse in the fourth.

Machado gave way to sophomore Garrett Butt in the fifth inning. He allowed just one hit in fifth, but he struggled in the sixth inning – allowing solo home runs to George Springer and Mike Nemeth.

Mike DiCato came in for the seventh inning and gave up three runs off of three hits.

UMass also lost its lead-off hitter when left fielder Jim Cassidy came up lame when he ran out a fly ball in the first inning. Cassidy gripped his right hamstring as he limped to first base. Garrett Glashoff replaced him and was hitless in four at-bats. Right fielder Mike Donato led the Minutemen with three RBI on two hits.

UMass returns to action when it travels to Saint Louis, Mo., on Friday for game one of a three-game series against A-10 rival Saint Louis (17-14, 5-3 A-10).

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

UMass sophomore right-hander Garrett Butt allowed two home runs in the sixth inning Wednesday afternoon against UConn. But it was two home runs in the ninth inning that cost the Minutemen the victory.

UMass looks to stay perfect in ECAC, extend win streak

LACROSSE from page 10

his career after opponents averaged 9.46 goals per game against him last season.

"It makes him a lot quicker – certainly gives him more energy," said Cannella on the effects of Silberlicht's weight loss. "Good for him. I'm sure the experience that he had the last couple of years and over the summer really challenged him to get himself better and he has – tremendously."

Silberlicht was almost unbeatable earlier this season, allowing just two goals against Bucknell, four against Binghamton, five against Rutgers and six against Providence. But in the last three games – all losses – he's allowed a total of 32 goals.

Despite Hobart's recent struggles, Cannella expects to see the best out of Silberlicht and the rest of the Statesmen.

"We've played in some tight games with them over the years. With the amount of talent and athleticism that they have, it's a formidable group," Cannella said. "It's senior day for those guys, so I'm sure they'll be pumped up to play us."

Riding a three-game winning streak, UMass is excited heading into the matchup as well. But the Minutemen have struggled at times this season, too, something Cannella knows can happen at anytime to a team. He's just not sure why it's happened to a team as talented as Hobart.

"I don't know. Sometimes you go through it – middle of the year we went through it for a week there, where guys get down."

Game notes

Hobart and UMass have only one common opponent so far this season. The Minutemen defeated Penn State, 9-7, while the Statesmen dropped a 10-8 decision … UMass is 7-2 all-time vs. Hobart, including 3-1 in Geneva … The Minutemen won last year's matchup 8-7, in overtime.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@dailycollegian.com

Diogo Godoi, right, leads a talented UMass defense that has shut down elite competition this year.

Sell rights to Mullins

O'MALLEY from page 10

existing facilities, putting a name on that. But it has a lot to do with a percentage of the construction cost."

However, Mullins and McGuirk are far from beloved names for UMass students. We don't have a Cameron Indoor, a Rose Bowl or a Palestra. This isn't a knock on the buildings themselves, just the lack of fondness for either place's history amongst the student body. Let's face it, if students came back next year and the Mullins Center became the Domino's Center, there would not be much of an uproar.

Selling naming rights would be a good move for UMass athletics as an additional source of revenue. The only drawback is the obvious: the school would appear to be selling out while losing a tribute to someone who was important to the introduction to the building.

This is true. But how many students on campus actually know who Mullins was? There is little chance that a corporate sponsor would get any sort of resistance.

Getting such a deal, however, is no simple task for the athletic department

"If you're talking about a corporate sponsorship like you see at many public facilities, there aren't really specific guidelines to that," McCutcheon said. "But those would most likely be associated with a term of a number of years and if we wanted to enter into something like that, the sponsorship would have to be fairly significant."

Todd McDonald, the assistant athletic director and head of marketing for UMass athletics, echoed McCutcheon's stance. He said that a sponsor would have to produce "a significant dollar amount and a multi-year agreement."

Another hurdle for this type of deal is the current agreements on some of the school's buildings. According to McDonald, the opportunity to change the naming rights for the Mullins Center is not available, as the building's name is "locked up."

This is especially unfortunate because, of all of the buildings on campus that aren't a 26-story library, the Mullins Center is the most marketable and visible as it hosts multiple major sports and features a number of concerts.

Beyond the availability of any of the buildings, though, UMass is yet to get a major offer for naming rights on a building.

"We haven't been approached by anybody. It's more the University reaching out and trying to get someone involved in that kind of situation," McCutcheon said.

If that's the case, then it's time to put this baby on the block and shop it. Even if the Mullins Center can't be renamed, the court and rink can.

For example, the University of Maryland has a $25 million deal with Comcast for the naming rights and court logo. The Minutemen may not get a similar deal to the Terps, but, if they shopped around enough, they could get some sort of bite.

Rutgers University has made its intentions clear, openly shopping their 14-year-old stadium for sponsors for a deal that is speculated to surpass $1.4 million per year.

Even if UMass can't get a major deal like some of the elite programs in the country, a few hundred thousand thrown here and there can make a major difference in the department.

It could be enough for, let's say, a ski team.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Last of the Mathematicians.

| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 8 | | 3 | 7 | | 5 | | |
| | | | | | | | 6 |
| | | | | | 8 | 1 | 7 |
| | | 2 | 9 | 1 | | 6 | |
| | | 8 | 2 | | 3 | 9 | |
| | | 1 | | 4 | 8 | 2 | |
| 7 | 3 | 9 | | | | | |
| 1 | | | | | | | |
| | | | 4 | | 1 | 3 | 5 |

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY:

Thursday April 9:
DOWNSTAIRS 10 PM - 1 AM
DJ VID KID

Sunday April 12:
EASTER BRUNCH
10 AM - 2 PM

Tuesday April 14:
IPA BEER TASTING
6-8 PM

Wednesday April 15:
ABC UPBAR WINE SOCIAL
6-8 PM
Keep updated on ABC events on facebook

29 NORTH PLEASANT ST. AMHERST
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

amherst cinema
Fri Apr 10 - Thu Apr 16
sunshine cleaning 2:30 5:00 7:30 10:00 + 12:15pm Sat & Sun
THE CLASS Fri. Sat. Tue 2:00 4:45 7:15 9:45 +Sat 11:30a Sun 11:15a 7:15 9:45 Mon 7:15 9:45 Wed 2:00 9:45 Thu 2:00 4:30 9:45
twolovers 4:30 9:30 + 11:45am Sat & Sun
PRAY THE DEVIL BACK TO HELL 2:15 7:00
Othello Sun. Apr. 12 @ 2pm Thu. Apr. 16 @ 7pm
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Apr 10 - Thu Apr 16
Adventureland 4:30 7:00 9:00 +2:15 Sat & Sun +10:00a 2:15 Wed sunshine cleaning 5:00 7:30 9:30 + 3:00 Sat & Sun + 10:15a 3:00 Wed
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5848

ACROSS
1 ... over, read carefully
6 Babilonia's namesakes
10 Poet's contraction
14 "... an inch and they'll take ..."
15 Wheel rod
16 Cockney mare
17 Assigns a value to
18 World's longest
19 On the increasing
20 Drawings done on transparent paper
22 Cement-sand-water mixture
24 Waiter's item
25 Sieves
26 Ran after
29 Burdened
30 One of two before "hooray"
31 Lump of turf
33 Bra part
37 Angered
39 Ohio, for one
41 Unassisted
42 Apostle's name
44 Aromatic wood
46 Fitting
47 Kitchen implement
49 Attached dwellings
51 Predicaments
54 Foreign currency
55 Sixties skirts
56 Sears and Roebuck, e.g.
60 Fast period
61 Singer Billy
63 Brilliant success
64 Florist's need
65 Break bread
66 Famed riveter
67 Oddball
68 12/24 & 12/31
69 Refine ore

DOWN
1 Section
2 Actor Epps
3 ... Hayworth
4 Chooses
5 Wished for
6 Spicy
7 WWII power
8 Liked up
9 Appeared
10 Heavy rainfalls
11 Compose
12 State in India
13 Lucie Jacinta and Francisco of Fatima
21 Low point
23 Lyrical works
25 Assessed
26 Small piece
27 Employ
28 In ... mitted
29 Sweetheart
32 Major faults
34 Course
35 Dog food brand
36 Stop going upward
38 Beverage container
40 Gordon or Andreth
43 Lasso
45 LBJ's
48 Live
50 Petty officer, for short
51 Burst of applause
52 Unsullied
53 Beautician's solution
54 Loses color
58 Southern specialty
57 Differently
58 Metal bar
59 Editor's note
62 Half of MVIII

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

T Shirts & Sweatshirts in 1-3 Days!

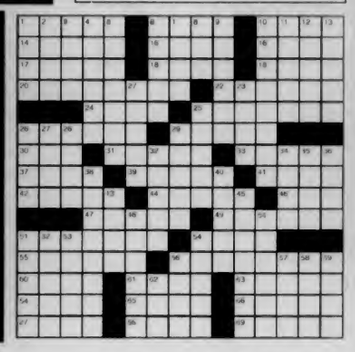
sunraise printing
Custom Printed Tees
Student Discounts
586-7133
sunraiseprinting.com
Hadley, MA 01035



you don't mess with comics

comics messes with YOU

comics@dailycollegian.com

Quote of the Day

"A compromise is the art of dividing a cake in such a way that everyone believes he has the biggest piece."

- Ludwig Erhard

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
When the detective asks what you were doing on the night of March 20, you will have to admit to seeing Jonas Brothers 3D.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Sometimes jokes are welcome, like the one about the boy who said, "I enjoy school. It is about prinicpal of it." OK, don't use that one.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
No matter what the angry, pitchfork-wielding mob may have to say about you, I still think you're beautiful.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Whenever you feel down, take solice in the fact that your lips and eyelids have not (yet) been chewed off by a chimpanzee.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
It's always a good day when you don't wake up all sticky.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You destined to become a computer programmer named Christine Gontarez.*

*THIS APPLIES ONLY TO CHRISTINE GONTAREZ.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
7th Day: God rests.
366th Day: God writes the "Happy Birthday" song.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You failed to realize that your scab-based snack food product would be a health hazard. Whoops.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You lose cell phone connections faster than Amy Winehouse kills erections.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Did You Know??? #494: There used to be an Olive Garden right down the street from here.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
No one ever had a problem with facial hair until Gillette went and made us all self-conscious.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Do not go along with the new plan for students to get a SPIRE chip embedded in their brains. Push for SPIRE helmets instead.

Dayley by Annie Keithline

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! by Tim Rickard

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums
Walk to Campus!
Hurry, Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

Send your requests for advice to:

comics@dailycollegian.com

Bliss by Harry Bliss

"You're certain this is where you parked the car?"

Classifieds

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office. $11.00/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 17th.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENT

ATTENTION ALL JUNIORS AND SENIORS! FALL 2009 INTERNSHIP APPLICATIONS ARE NOW AVAILABLE AT THE STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE. GET HANDS ON EXPERIENCE IN THE FIELD WORKING WITH ATTORNEYS AND CLIENTS. EARN UP TO 12 UNDERGRADUATE CREDITS, NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY, WE'LL PROVIDE TRAINING. APPLICATION DEADLINE IS AFRIL 13th. CONTACT OUR OFFICE AT 545-1995 OR STOP BY AT 922 CAMPUS CENTER.

FOR RENT

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

FOR RENT

Amherst: 2,3, & 4 bedroom apartments, $1200-$2250. FREE HEAT! Great Specials! www.MillValleyApts.com or 413-253-7377

Looking for summer housing? 3 bedroom apt. in Rolling Green looking to sub-let. Clean, convenient, and quiet. Call Kate at 978-257-2549

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinanan examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 9, 2009

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Elite goalies collide in N.Y.

Schneider, No. 14 UMass set for goalie Silberlicht, Hobart

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's only fitting that the last-ever ECAC meeting between Massachusetts and Hobart features two of the elite goalkeepers in the country.

UMass' Doc Schneider and Hobart's Max Silberlicht, who both rank among the Top 6 in the country in goals-against average and save percentage, will square off Saturday in Geneva, N.Y., in a key conference matchup for both teams.

The ECAC, which is known for having many of the best stoppers in the nation, will be without UMass next season as the Minutemen are moving over to the CAA. But for now, the No. 14 Minutemen (6-3, 3-0 ECAC) are concentrated on maintaining their perfect conference record and first-place standing.

But winning on the road in the talented ECAC is never easy, especially against one of the most improved players in the country in Silberlicht.

"He's lost a ton of weight. Obviously he had a great experience for two years playing there and with the under-19 [national] team last summer," UMass coach Greg Cannella said of the 6-foot-1, 215-pound Hobart goalie. "He's much more of a leader and much more confident in his other abilities."

His leadership skills have been tested recently. After starting out the season 5-0, including a Top-15 ranking in the media poll, the Statesmen (5-4, 1-3 ECAC) have dropped four consecutive games – including three losses in the conference by a combined five goals.

A one-goal loss to Rutgers and two-goal defeats against Fairfield and Penn State won't make Cannella or the Minutemen take Hobart lightly.

"Athletically – on attack, midfield and defensively – they're as good as anybody we'll play all year," Cannella said. "You look at their midfield group, all those guys played against us last year and have experience."

In addition to worrying about Silberlicht and the defense, Canella and Co. must contend with a deep, balanced offense that has four players with at least 11 goals scored this season.

"You got to try to contain all of them. It's going to be a very difficult chore for us going into there on Saturday," Cannella said.

UMass, which leads the ECAC in goals per game at 10.7, only has two players with more than seven goals this season. But with conference-leader Jim Connolly (25 goals) and Tim Balise (18) leading the way, Silberlicht, much like Schneider, will have a difficult assignment.

Silberlicht's goals-against average of 6.99 (5th in the country) and save percentage of 63.3 (4th) indicate he's up for the challenge. The junior goalkeeper has completely turned around

See LACROSSE on page 5

UMass goalkeeper Doc Schneider, like Hobart goalie Max Silberlicht, ranks in the Top 6 in the country in goals-against average.

Why not sell naming rights?

Nick O'Malley

Even though the UMass ski team is now the casualty of the budget crisis and the baseball team is off the chopping block for now, the athletic department is not yet out of the woods in terms of its fiscal crisis.

Outside of budget cuts or, as the department showed last week, team cuts, there has been little mention of the efforts taken by the athletic department to salvage it finances. One particular source of revenue, though, has not gotten serious consideration: selling the naming rights to UMass athletic venues.

At first glance, this wouldn't seem viable for a college program in a slumping economy. However, UMass would be far from the first to make this move.

Last month, San Diego State University sold the naming rights to its basketball arena – previously Cox Arena as part of a deal with Cox Communications – to the Viejas tribe of Kumeyaay Indians. The Viejas, who own a casino, offered the university $6.9 million over 10 years for their troubles.

Hey. Where can we get some of that?

At a school where Coca-Cola controls our drinks and the majority of our athletes wear adidas, taking another step in selling out for the sake of the athletic department is a small concession.

According to athletic director John McCutcheon, the athletic venues at UMass, which include the Mullins Center and McGuirk Alumni Stadium, currently do not pull in any revenue through their naming rights. Instead, the tributes to William D. Mullins and Warren P. McGuirk were generated through donations for the venues upon construction.

"There have typically been donations in the past and been permanent naming rights associated with new facilities," McCutcheon said. "It's a little different with

See O'MALLEY on page 8

UM survives extra-innings

Normandin's home run in 9th lifts Minutewomen over BC

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's been a while since the Massachusetts softball team felt threatened.

Back on April 5, UMass won in a highly-fought contest, 3-1, against Saint Louis. Despite the close score, the Minutewomen never really felt threatened – they were hitting the ball better than their counterpart and they played with the utmost confidence.

In that game, like most of their recent contests, junior center fielder Carly Normandin was the offensive star of the game, reaching base more often than not, driving in runs and hitting with power with frequency. Wednesday night against Boston College, though, was a bit different. Normandin went 0-for-4 with two strikeouts – not providing the offensive spark that the Minutewomen (21-6) have come to expect.

That is, until the ninth inning.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 4 |
| BC | 3 |

The junior took the extra-inning pitch from BC pitcher Taylor Peyton over the center field fence to give her team the 4-3 lead. Pitcher Brandice Balschmiter, who started the game, finished the Eagles off in the 9th to give the Minutewomen their first extra-inning win of the season.

The Eagles (14-21) took the lead immediately in the first inning, thanks to three walks by the usually-accurate Balschmiter. After loading the bases, Balschmiter struck out the next two batters to regain control. But uncharacteristic of Balschmiter, she walked the next batter to force the runner on third to cross the plate.

UMass, though, would get its revenge.

In the fourth inning, Michelle Libby and Jessica Serio hit back-to-back home runs to put the Minutewomen ahead, 2-1. UMass would add to its lead later that inning as Kylhe Magill drove in Davina Hernandez, who earlier singled to left field.

The Minutewomen took their lead to the sixth where Balschmiter again ran into trouble.

After striking out the first BC batter, Balschmiter gave up two-straight singles to put runners on first and second. The senior induced Katrina Vasquez to ground out to third. The next batter, Brittany Wilkins, hit a single to right field, driving in both Alison Kooistra and Carolyn Jones to tie the game at 3-3.

The score would remain the same until Normandin's late-inning heroics.

The win extended the Minutewomen's win streak to 10. The Eagles, who like the Minutewomen have just recently started to play the home portion of the schedule, have struggled at Shea Field in Chestnut Hill. BC dropped to 3-5 at home on the season with the loss.

UMass travels to Philadelphia to take on Atlantic 10 rival Saint Joseph's and Temple in two, two-game series this weekend.

GAME NOTES

Magill went 3-for-5 and had four defensive assists ... Shortstop Whitney Williams committed three errors. She has a team-high 11 on the season.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

Freshman second baseman Kyllie Magill went 3-for-5 with a run batted in for UMass in a 4-3 extra-inning win over Boston College.

Slumping Temple up next

BY ADAM MCGILLEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will try to continue their perfection in the Atlantic 10 when they play Temple at 1 p.m. on Saturday at McGuirk Stadium.

The Minutewomen (7-6, 4-0 A-10) come into the weekend atop the conference standings. The Owls were in that position last season as they beat UMass for the Atlantic 10 championship in 2008 – but this year has played out a lot differently for Temple (1-10, 1-3 A-10).

Last year's success was due in large part to a seven-member senior class that graduated from Temple in 2008. A young team with nine freshmen on the roster, Temple started the 2009 season on a dismal streak, losing 10 straight games before earning its first win last weekend.

After losing in conference play to Saint Joseph's, La Salle and George Washington, the Owls took on Richmond (2-11, 2-2 A-10) at home. Richmond had been pegged by the league's head coaches to win this year's championship, but the Spiders have fallen short of those expectations.

UMass defeated Richmond on April 3 by a slim 13-12 margin, but the struggling Owls demonstrated a dominance unseen this year against the same opponent, doubling up the Spiders, 12-6, last Sunday.

"It was just a wake-up call for everyone in the conference that anyone can take a game," junior Stephanie Hopkins said at a cold, blustery practice on Tuesday.

Despite the disparity in records this year, UMass coach Alexis Venechanos expects stiff competition from Temple.

"They bring a wealth of experience from being a competitive team last year. They're well-coached and we're expecting a battle," Venechanos said.

UMass has typically had trouble against Temple. The last time the Minutewomen beat the Owls was nearly a decade ago in 2000. In that year, UMass beat Temple in the regular season and then again in an overtime victory to win its last A-10 championship.

Since then, Temple has beaten UMass every year, including three separate occasions where the Owls knocked the Minutewomen out of the A-10 playoffs. Last year and again in 2003, Temple defeated UMass in the final game of the A-10 championships.

Coming into this year's matchup, though, Temple is looking up at the Minutewomen from the bottom of the conference.

A balanced offense has carried UMass to first in the A-10, riding a four-game win streak in conference play. Four Minutewomen have 20 or more goals on the season. Sophomore Jackie Lyons leads the team with 26 goals, followed closely by fellow sophomore Haley Smith (25), with seniors Meghan Reddy (24) and Holly Drown (20) rounding out the top scorers.

Stephanie Hopkins, who has 13 points on the season (10 goals and three assists) said that the Minutewomen are excited to move forward.

"After three years of playing here and kind of having some up and down seasons, and just making it to the conference championship last year, I had a good feeling about this year," Hopkins said.

UMass played five nationally-ranked opponents in February and March, including a 22-5 loss to No. 1 Northwestern on March 25.

"I think that [playing ranked teams] was a huge part of our improvement. We have a lot of young girls on the team and it was important to play the highest level in order to be the highest level team," Hopkins said.

Playing at home has also been an advantage for the Minutewomen. They are currently 4-1 at McGuirk Stadium, including a 13-10 win over then-No. 13 Dartmouth on March 4.

Venechanos said that she expects a tough game against a historically tough team, regardless of their record this year, and believes the Minutewomen will continue to step it up at McGuirk.

"The girls get really fired up to play here to defend their turf," Venechanos said.

Adam McGillen can be reached at amcgille@student.umass.edu.

Jackie Lyons leads the Minutewomen with 26 goals this season. UMass takes on Temple this weekend at McGuirk Stadium.

Ploch returns to lineup

BY JAY ASSER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Magdalena Ploch is back and her return couldn't come at a better time for the Massachusetts tennis team.

After being declared out for the rest of the season with a back injury during UMass' trip to Florida during spring break, Ploch is now returning to play the last two matches to finish off the regular season.

The Minutewomen (9-11, 1-1 Atlantic 10) can't welcome Ploch back fast enough as they look to improve their seeding heading into the A-10 Conference tournament by defeating conference rival Rhode Island on Senior Day Thursday afternoon.

Yet UMass coach Judy Dixon didn't anticipate Ploch coming back to play before next season.

"Ploch had a bad back off and on and the doctors just decided to rest her and calm it down," Dixon said. "Now, she is medically cleared to play, which is a shock and a surprise to the whole team, including me."

Dixon plans on easing Ploch back into the lineup, playing her exclusively at doubles. Once Dixon feels she is back in form, Ploch will see increased playing time and be more of a factor going forward into the conference tournament, which begins on April 17.

"She had her first practice today, and was rusty for sure," Dixon said. "If the Temple match ends up getting played on Friday despite the possible weather, then at least she will have had a match under her belt."

With five consecutive losses, the Minutewomen now find themselves facing a significant match as it pertains to seeding for the conference tournament. Though Ploch's return is energizing, Dixon worries it may be too little, too late.

"Without Ploch on the court, we have really taken our lumps," said Dixon. "With her back, it may be too late to affect our conference seeding and we may end up with a bad seed."

Seniors Laura Danai and Lauren MacKay will be in search of a wins to end their careers at home when they step onto the Mullins Courts for the last time in UMass uniforms.

"Our two seniors have meant so much to this program so this is going to be an emotional match for the entire team, not just the seniors," Dixon said.

Rhode Island enters Thursday's match at a strong 12-2 with a win in its only conference match so far this season against Fordham.

All of the Rams' players have a winning record in both singles and doubles with freshman Tristany Leikem leading the way at 19-4 and 17-5 in singles and doubles play, respectively.

The all-time series between UMass and Rhode Island stands at 33-6-1 in favor of the Minutewomen. The last meeting between the two teams took place on April 13, 2008 when the Rams hosted UMass at Kingston, R.I.

The Minutewomen earned the 4-0 victory that day in their last conference match of the season before the A-10 Tournament. UMass finished the season undefeated in conference play, posting a 4-0 record against A-10 opponents.

After that day's doubles matches finished, Dixon and URI coach Sandy Wood decided to call the match after either team scored four points due to the frigid weather, resulting in some unfinished matches.

Though the A-10 Conference tournament is played indoors, many teams, including UMass, have recently been playing outdoors as the weather has started to improve. Living in New England however, the weather has also been unpredictable, which is why Dixon has held practices at 7 a.m. this week in order to be prepared against another weather-influenced match.

All factors considered, there will be many aspects of this match to watch and pay close attention to on Thursday.

"There is the importance of a conference match, our number-one player coming back and stepping on the court for the first time in over a month, and Senior Day," Dixon said. "Put it all together, shake it up and it will end up being a big day."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Magdalena Ploch, who has been out with back injury, is expected to be back in the lineup Thursday when UMass faces Rhode Island.

the daily collegian

THE NATION'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

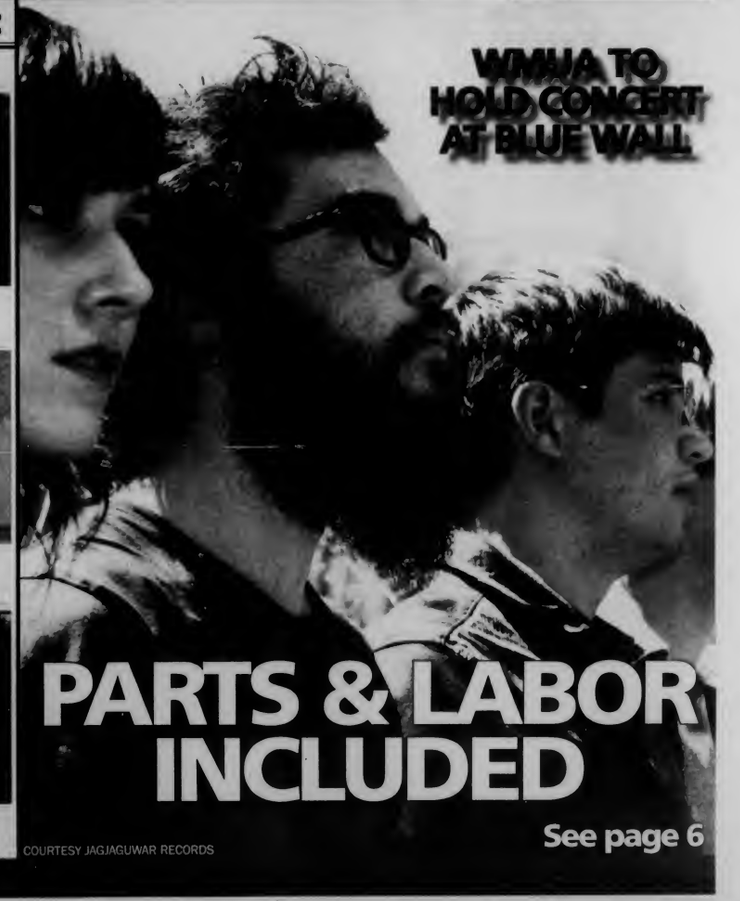
APRIL 10, 2009

inside this issue:

SPORTS

SEE PAGE 13

ARTS&LIVING



SEE PAGE 7

NEWS

SEE PAGE 3

COURTESY JAGJAGUWAR RECORDS

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIX
ISSUE 48

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Waszczuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Leigh Greaney
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenswaike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Koczwara
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Turtinen
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Larnard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo P.J. Stanley
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Weliver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. SULLIVAN
COPY EDITOR
MICHELLE FREDETTE
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHAEL SARKES

(Editor's Note)

Less is more, UMass says

Lisa DeBenedictis

Ever hear of the expression "someone's eyes are bigger than his stomach?"

The University of Massachusetts' Dining Services certainly has and has chosen to act upon it with a recent decision to "Go Trayless" beginning in fall 2009, when they will remove trays from all of the dining commons on campus.

This movement is part of an effort to save energy and money in the form of the electricity and water that is needed to wash and dry the trays, but Kenneth Toong, director of UMass Dining Services, offered another interesting benefit – a cut down on food waste and overall consumption.

"On average, students waste five or six ounces of food per visit," said Toong. "When you have a tray, it is definitely more convenient. It is one trip to put all your food and beverages on the tray, but sometimes they tend to get more than they actually eat. This way, you can take what you need and go back if you need more."

Although the thought of attempting to balance all of the dishes, silverware and cups upon exiting the DC may be daunting (and dangerous), what is interesting is that studies have actually shown that eliminating trays from the equation reduces food waste by about 25 to 30 percent, according to UMass Dining Services.

And it's not just wasting less food; it's eating less food, too.

In fact, Dining Services implemented a program last year to use smaller plates and give out smaller portions to students – such as serving a three to four ounce piece of chicken or fish to students as opposed to a six ounce- in each of the DC's last year, and has already seen changes in students' eating habits, according to Toong.

Going "Trayless" in school cafeterias across the country is gaining popularity, and many agree that it makes a lot of sense.

"People buy less food and subsequently eat less and throw away less. For the customer, it's good for the budget and the waistline. For the cafeteria (and the environment), it substantially cuts down on waste. Sounds like a win-win situation," said New York Times columnist Steven J. Dubner in his recent blog article "What Happens When College Cafeterias Go Trayless?"

While "Going Trayless" certainly does seem to be "a win-win situation" for everyone at UMass, it may very well be that at the bottom of the piles of saved food, energy and water is saved money.

With UMass' $46 million deficit, the University is looking to cut costs in any way possible, and that includes cutting students' waistlines. According to Toong, the dining halls serve over five million meals a year, so reductions to the program make sense economically just as much as the health and environmental benefits that conveniently coincide.

At the same time, how many of us students actually clear our plates every time we eat at the dining halls? If simply giving us smaller plates, lesser portions and eliminating trays will indeed make us healthier, save a lot of wasted food and make UMass a couple bucks, who can really complain?

I won't, so long as they lower the cost of our meal plan, too.

Lisa DeBenedictis is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at ldebenedictis@dailycollegian.com.

Students feel loan squeeze

By Hannah McGoldrick
Collegian Correspondent

With the combination of the nation's weakening economy and the rising tuition costs encroaching on the University, non-profit student loan funders, such as the Massachusetts Educational Financing Authority, are being forced to revise their lending practices for the upcoming fiscal year, raising concern for University of Massachusetts Amherst students seeking financial assistance.

UMass participates in the federal Direct Loan Program, which includes the subsidized and unsubsidized Direct Loan and the PLUS Loan for parents and graduate students. To attain these loans, students must file a Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA), maintain satisfactory academic progress, be enrolled at least half-time in a degree program and complete the entrance interview and master promissory note.

UMass offers two kinds of loans from the federal government – Federal Perkins Loans and William D. Ford federal direct loans. Many students at UMass choose to borrow from federal loan programs because, according to Lindsay McCluskey, former SGA Student Trustee and Center for Educational Policy Advocacy representative, many private loans are "not regulated at all. There is a private interaction with the bank, and students end up paying back much more than they needed."

There is very little data on the use of private loans because they are not easily tracked. According to UMass Spokesperson Ed Blaguszewski, "for the fiscal year 2008, 9,809 students borrowed from the subsidized direct loan and 720 from the PLUS loan program." Also, for the same year, 4,286 students resorted to private loans.

Last summer, the Massachusetts Educational Financing Authority struggled to secure enough funding for loans. According to MEFA spokeswoman Jessica Belt, the priority of the agency during the economic recession is to provide manageable loans for students. MEFA offered loans with interest rates as low as 7.75 percent comparing favorably with federal loan interest rates of 8.5 percent. Many other competitive private lenders offer interest rates up around 18 to 20 percent. News came last week when Governor Deval Patrick announced the allocation of $300 million to the non-profit private lending organization.

"The first step toward future success starts with education and securing opportunities for tomorrow's workforce," Patrick said in a statement. "Through our continued partnership with MEFA, we are making a college education affordable and accessible for more Massachusetts students, and that's good news for all of us."

McCluskey is also a member of the United States Student Association and lobbied at the USSA Legislative Conference in Washington D.C. last month. A major focus of the conference was the issue of student loans. USSA members lobbied for Congress to pass the same budget that President Obama has proposed, pushing for increased spending on government direct loans.

The challenging economic climate has prevented many students from applying to the University and other universities alike. In the Five College area, excluding UMass, tuition is rising to upwards of $50,000 per year. Since federal direct loans are available, many administrators such as Blaguszewski believe "lack of financial aid should never be a deterrent for students to attend college." However, an important portion of the FAFSA is the expected family contribution, and this value may be unfeasible for many families during the economic recession.

JENNIFER LAM/COLLEGIAN

Students wait in line at the Bursar's office in Whitmore earlier this year.

McCluskey said, "[this portion] goes unseen because administrators think that students' families can pay the rest."

While many students are in the process of either awaiting graduation or making college decisions, finances are continually in question. Despite the low interest rates of MEFA, the University's Office of Financial Aid still advises that private loans should only be pursued after all other financial aid options have been exhausted.

Hannah McGoldrick can be reached at hmcgoldr@student.umass.edu.

Rep. Club V.P. DeFlumeri arrested

Leader denied access to office after alleged violation of order

By Adam P. Coulter
Collegian Staff

Two separate restraining orders were filed in court on Friday morning against the University of Massachusetts Republican Club vice president who subsequently was arrested the same day for violating one of the orders. He has since been banned from the Republican Club offices on campus.

Bradley S. DeFlumeri, of 215 Ferry St. 2 Everett, Mass., was arrested at 4:13 p.m. on Friday afternoon and charged with violating an abuse prevention order that had been filed in Eastern Hampshire District Court in Belchertown earlier that day. A female Mt. Holyoke College student and a female UMass student – who each had been in a relationship with DeFlumeri according to police – made written and oral statements to their respective police departments and a judge asking for a restraining order against DeFlumeri.

"There was a female UMass student who came to the UMPD last Friday at 1:00 a.m. and reported some things to us that were of concern, with Brad the target of that concern, enough so that we did an extensive investigation," said University of Massachusetts Police Department Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald.

The female gave police a written statement, but authorities did not issue a warrant for DeFlumeri at that time. "The information that came to us did not amount to enough probable cause to make an arrest for abuse," he added.

"But it was the opinion of our domestic violence specialist and the victim that a restraining order was appropriate," said Archbald.

According to DeFlumeri, the student with whom he allegedly had a relationship with was coerced into pursuing legal action against him.

During the initial interview with the UMass victim, information came to the UMPD's attention concerning another student who was also in the process of getting a restraining order against DeFlumeri.

"The information was about a Mount Holyoke female that Brad was in a relationship with. She was being transported to Belchertown to also get a restraining order against him for some incidents that had just happened between Brad and her," he said.

Mount Holyoke Police also informed the UMPD that they wished to ban Brad from their campus.

"There was a full restraining order issued by the District Court against Brad by the Mount Holyoke female," said Archbald.

While a UMPD officer was assisting the UMass student in court to get the second restraining order, DeFlumeri was served the Mount Holyoke order at the UMPD station in Dickinson Hall. "We gave him the restraining order copy and told [DeFlumeri] what it means," he said. DeFlumeri then left the station briefly.

"The violation was immediately proceeding the issuing of the order. Within minutes, he violated it by making numerous phone calls to the Mount Holyoke victim," said Archbald. DeFlumeri, for reasons unknown, was then seen driving near the UMPD station.

"One of our sergeants who is familiar with Brad and his car saw him and arrested him late Friday afternoon," he added.

DeFlumeri was then booked and spent the weekend in jail.

"I understand that because the violation was so soon after he was issued the restraining order, the Clerk Magistrate said 'no bail,'" Archbald said.

DeFlumeri was then released Monday.

On Monday morning, the UMass student dropped her restraining order against DeFlumeri and recanted all her previous statements to police and the judge.

"She went to court, she had to speak in front of the judge and proceeded to recant the statements," said Archbald. The Mount Holyoke order remains in "full effect."

The first restraining order, by the Mount Holyoke female student, contains special stipulations which in turn could affect the day-to-day operating of the UMass Republican Club.

"The stipulations state DeFlumeri must stay away from the Republican Club offices at UMass Amherst. The reason the court gave was because the Mount Holyoke student is in the Republican Club and part of the committee at Mount Holyoke," said Archbald.

The Mount Holyoke student gave information to all authorities involved that she frequently visits the Republican Club office at UMass.

"All parties believed, considering her frequency of that office, it's in the best interest of the victim to disallow Brad DeFlumeri access to that office," he added.

Republican Club president Greg Collins had no comment.

After DeFlumeri was released from jail on Monday, the UMPD received information that he was seen in the area of the Republican Club office. "We had a conversation with him about not testing the limits of the restraining order," said Archbald.

"He has removed his things [from the office], and I have not heard in the last 24 hours that he has been up there," he added.

DeFlumeri said he plans to file multiple complaints against the UMPD.

"I maintain my full innocence and am confident that due process of law will result in my vindication."

Adam P. Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu.

Free now, King speaks to captive crowd

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

For Robert Hillary King, the struggle has yet to end.

King's struggle brought him to Gordon Hall Thursday, where an overflow crowd of about 80 people gathered on the third floor to hear him tell of oppression and brutality at the hands of what he calls a corrupt justice system.

King is a member of the Angola Three, who were held in solitary confinement at Louisiana's Angola State Penitentiary starting in 1971.

The three were convicted of murdering a prison guard despite circumstantial evidence.

King was freed in 2001 when his conviction was overturned, though the other two members of the group, Albert Woodfox and Herman Wallace, remain in solitary confinement.

Initially imprisoned for an armed robbery he says he did not commit, for which he received 35 years, King came into contact with members of a group called the New Orleans 12 while at New Orleans Parish Prison in the late 1960s.

It was with the New Orleans 12 that he says he had his political awakening.

"I was arrested and falsely accused of a crime I had not committed, and I refused to accept any deal, and at this time I became politically aware," he said.

"They knew they were dealing with an individual who could not afford a lawyer, who could not afford bond, this stuff is replicated big time over and over."

At New Orleans Parish Prison, King said he organized an escape and was ultimately charged with aggravated escape and given eight additional years.

"They charged me with aggravated escape, and I did my best at every chance I got to aggravate them," he joked.

While in prison, King became a member of the nation's only prison chapter of the Black Panther Party.

King said the Panthers functioned as a prisoners' rights group, acting to promote unity among inmates, reduce sexual violence, improve working conditions, and help file appeals for other inmates.

In 1972, King's fate turned worse as he was implicated with Woodfox and Wallace in the stabbing death of a guard. Despite limited evidence, the state had its sights set on the three, hoping to pin the crime on the Black Panthers. They were convicted on the testimony of convicted murderer Hezekiah Brown, and placed in solitary confinement for the duration of their time in prison.

King said his chief message is that the state and the justice system use power wrongfully and will not admit mistakes that reflect flaws in the system.

"We have to take a second look at the prison system," he said. "We have to begin to look at prison as a new form of slavery."

He said the prison system is continuing to balloon as it profits on an increasingly punitive justice system.

"The American government is the biggest profiteer from prison, there are more than 2.1 million people who are directly incarcerated and then you have about 4.5 million who are under some indirect form of prison, on parole or probation," he said.

King spoke to the burgeoning prison industrial complex, stating that when he entered prison Louisiana had just one state prison, where it now has 11 and 64 parish jails.

Later, King addressed the case of Jason Vassell, the former UMass student who is facing 30 years in prison after a racially-charged incident on campus last spring.

"I'm told that Jason is a young black man who has become the victim of some kind of frame-up as a result of an incident that took place within a dorm, there are many Jasons," he said.

King's ultimate message is that the American people must reframe their view of what prison is and what constitutes slavery.

"They made it possible for the remnants of slavery to continue," he said of the government, "prisoners are indeed slaves, and unless we change our view of slavery and our view of prison we will continue to see men pour into prison, until we change our view we are escalating, and there won't be any de-escalation because there's so much money in it."

Robert H. King, an original member of the Angola Three, spoke in Gordon Hall last night.

King was brought to campus in part by the Radical Student Union, the Graduate Student Senate, and other local groups.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sjbutterfield@gmail.com.

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Waking up to the nightmare of child abuse

Evan Haddad

The April Fools Eve shift began as languidly as any other for Douglas Wait, a security guard at the Heywood-Wakefield Place apartment building in downtown Gardner, Mass. Most nights, it's a torpid job; this historic part of town wears the elegant description of the visitor's brochure like a white kid glove: "A charming and safe character with a unique architectural style."

But on the night of April 1, 192 Central St. was deserted, only to be seen swathed in yellow police tape – all its charm chased away by flashing red and blue lights. Wait was making his usual rounds that night through the quiet halls of the complex. He arrived at the fourth floor.

When he went to lock up the building's laundry room, however, he was confronted with something unimaginable.

The whir of the washing machine dulled the feeble and helpless whimpering of a 2-year-old child, lying drenched in blood upon the grimy linoleum floor. Scissors in hand, the culprit – and mother – looked towards the door, glowering at Wait. "I have to kill her. I have to kill her." Susan Johnson was screaming between curses, according to the Associated Press (AP).

Wait wasted no time. Though Johnson wielded the scissor blades threateningly, Wait managed to disarm her. He then made a frantic 911 call, which was released by the police, in which one can hear Johnson's chilling shrieks of, "Die! Die!"

She charged, venturing to blind him with a dousing of Chanel No. 5. Wait managed to push her back. In an insane display, she snatched up a hair dryer, which lay upon the washing machine, and attempted to strangle the child, coiling the cord around her neck. After hearing the commotion, Real Hellriegal, a 65-year-old resident in a nearby room, rushed to the laundry room and joined the scuffle, the AP reported. Yet it wasn't until a third resident jumped in that they were able to subdue Johnson. Local police arrived shortly thereafter.

"She had surprisingly amazing strength," Hellriegal told WBZ-TV in Boston. "She had the thing wrapped around the poor kid's throat. … It was just an awful scene, something I will never forget. It was terrible."

While the nearly incoherent Johnson was led away in steel cuffs, the 2-year-old was rushed to Henry Heywood Hospital, and then transferred to UMass Memorial Medical Center. Over 100 superficial punctures and gashes covered her little body. Despite her trauma, doctors report she remains in stable condition.

The whir of the washing machine dulled the feeble and helpless whimpering of a 2-year-old child, lying drenched in blood upon the grimy linoleum floor.

Susan Johnson, 38, was a resident of Turners Falls, and had driven some 30 miles to Gardner under the delusional pretense that a cult was following her. She purchased the pair of scissors in order to disguise herself and the 2-year-old girl. The defense attorney, Peter Binder, remarked that Johnson seemed to have no memory of the event, and has a very paranoid personality.

Johnson was arraigned the following morning, April 2, in Gardner District Court on charges of armed assault with intent to murder, three counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and assault and battery on a child.

Photos from the hearing reveal a disheveled and distant-looking woman with scabbing wounds and scratches climbing up her neck, like ivy on a wall. She had allegedly been stabbing herself too, along with the infant. She remains held without bail in Framingham State Prison, where she is undergoing an evaluation to determine her competency to stand trial. Police said that Johnson had a history with the Department of Social Services.

According to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Massachusetts claims second prize (after Florida) for confirmed cases of child abuse in the country; an abhorrent 114,421 reports of abused and neglected kids were recorded in 2007 – those numbers are nearly double the national average.

Again in this sad story, the State seems to have come in too late, placing the young child only now under the good, ostensibly Christian roofs of a St. Mary's or St. Vincent's type orphanage. State provisions will allot her three squares a day, a bed probably surrounded by many other beds, and some sort of education until she is 18. Maybe someone will take her into a family. Maybe not.

There is no doubt that the case of Susan Johnson and her daughter is an extreme example of this furtive, oft-unspoken-of behavior known as child abuse. Undermining its relevancy by simply writing it off as ludicrous or insane, however, does injustice to the real immediacy of a truly universal phenomenon.

In a way, it is a case of crying wolf. Stories about the Susan Johnsons of the world are entertaining – of course, not in an enjoyable way. But they tend to retard our view of what is reality and what is fiction; the relevant aspects of those same problems. When we hear of a Susan Johnson, we prick our ears and peel our eyes for a few days for something like child abuse. But when her scarred face soon fades from the screen, we tend to slip on our nightcaps again and go back to bed.

Evan Haddad is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ehaddad@student.umass.edu

America's imperialist grip on the Middle East

Tristan Brosnan

President Obama's new strategy in Afghanistan has been dubbed by many political analysts as the more, more, more strategy – more troops, more money and more of just about everything else, from NATO advisors to expanding military bases.

At the core of the Obama administration's shift in strategy is the recognition that the Bush administration failed to defeat al-Qaeda and the Taliban. One of the first initiatives Obama took as President was the signing of an order shutting down the Guantanamo Bay detention camp within the year.

Many throughout the world applauded this act as a definitive action against the excesses of the Bush administration. Yet a month later the Obama administration told a federal judge that military detainees in Afghanistan have no legal right to appeal their detention. In response to the filing, Tim Golden of The New York Times wrote, "The Obama administration responded by essentially upholding the Bush administration's position."

So while the Guantanamo Bay detention camp gets axed, the Bagram Detention Center gets the green light. If this is just one case example that will be symptomatic of the new administration's foreign policy in Asia, it seems that Afghanis are in for more of the same, a lot more of the same.

Unfortunately for the people of Afghanistan, more of the same means more aerial bombings, more killings and more occupation. Due to the rural character of Afghanistan, the U.S. military's strategy has been heavily reliant on aerial campaigns and limiting the number of ground excursions.

According to a 2007 Human Rights Watch report "Troops in Contact," over one million pounds of bombs were dropped in Afghanistan and in the first seven months of 2008 the U.S. dropped nearly 800,000 pounds of bombs on Afghanistan. The 17,000 new troops deployed to Afghanistan by the Obama administration will mean more ground operations which will likely mean more exposure to combat and the need for troops to call in more aerial raids and bombings.

A United Nations report released in February found that recorded civilian casualties in Afghanistan had increased by 40 percent in 2008. Of the 2,118 civilian casualties 39 percent were killed by the U.S. and Afghan government forces. The U.S./NATO war has created a humanitarian catastrophe. Malnutrition, forced immigration, unemployment and poverty have all increased as a result of the U.S./NATO war.

Along with the increased troops, money and effort in Afghanistan, the Obama administration has indicated a move away from a strategy focused on nation building, reorienting the mission on targeting al-Qaeda and its allies, namely the Taliban.

The U.S. is certainly engaged in a war to eliminate al-Qaeda and either alienate or neutralize its allies and supporters. The White House and the Pentagon cited the elimination of al-Qaeda as the main pretext for the war since it began. The fight against al-Qaeda, however, has always been subordinated to the larger imperial and political goals of the U.S. in the region.

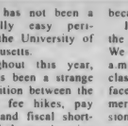
The fight against al-Qaeda, however, has always been subordinated to the larger imperial and political goals of the U.S. in the region.

For centuries, Afghanistan has been a linchpin for empires because of its key location, connecting the East to the West. There are a number of motor forces that are driving U.S. foreign policy in Afghanistan today, including gaining access to natural resources in Central Asia and strengthening its grip on subservient client states that can counter the influence of Iran, Russia and China.

This is the same reason that U.S. has been giving billions in military aid to Pakistan over the past eight years. Central Asia is home to a plethora of untapped oil and natural gas reserves. By establishing Pakistan and Afghanistan as strategic and subordinate allies in the region, the U.S. will be in a better position to gain access to those reserves in the years to come.

This isn't an outlandish conspiracy theory; rather, this theory mirrors the thinking of Washington. In a report released by the Department of Defense called the 2008 Army Modernization Strategy, Lt. Gen. Stephen Speakes, deputy chief of staff of the U.S. Army stated, "We face a potential return to traditional security threats posed by emerging near-peers as we compete globally for depleting natural resources and oversees markets."

Is it easier to believe that the U.S. had economic and political motivations for going to war against al-Qaeda or that the U.S. Marines are on a feminist mission to liberate the women of Afghanistan?



In an article published in The New York Herald on Oct. 15, 1900, Mark Twain, commenting on the U.S. war in the Philippines wrote, "We have gone there to conquer, not to redeem … And so I am anti-imperialist. I am opposed to having the eagle put its talons on any other land."

Whatever veneer Barack Obama and Richard Holbrooke use to justify the war and occupation of Afghanistan can't cover up the war's imperial aims. Every war is started on the premise of good intentions; the problem in Afghanistan is not the failure of the declared good intentions of the U.S., but rather the imperial occupation itself.

Tristan Brosnan is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at tbrosnan@student.umass.edu.

The drill with New Dirt

Michael Phillis

This has not been a financially easy period for the University of Massachusetts.

Throughout this year, there has been a strange juxtaposition between the campus' fee hikes, pay freezes and fiscal shortfalls and the continuation of "New Dirt."

New Dirt, the name given to all of the new campus construction, has become increasingly controversial as student and faculty alike look for ways to overcome budget shortcomings.

These projects force the administration to make a choice. Should long term plans and large-scale campus improvements be secondary to daily issues and concerns?

It turns out, long term is important and its value shouldn't be discounted.

UMass has finally begun to steer away from its uncomfortable affliction with cement construction and less-then-stellar architecture. The new buildings look great; it's a nice breath of fresh air.

However, the money involved cannot be ignored. The new Student Recreational Center, scheduled to open across from the Mullins Center in the fall of this year, has a price tag of about $50 million. That cost alone represents a number that surpasses any debt that might have been incurred from our budget shortfalls this year.

I think the soon-to-open Recreational Center is a great improvement to this campus and projects like it are worth their weight in gold.

The Recreational Center money has already been spent. The controversy lies in future projects that have not yet broken ground. One of the longest-running controversial initiatives is an $8-10 million dollar project to get the band some new facilities.

Currently, the Minuteman Marching Band offices are in the University Apartments, buildings which are so decrepit that they are "substandard for housing," according to the University.

Better colleges have better infrastructure. This change has been a long time coming.

Many students I have talked to are ambivalent about the buildings themselves and are simply frustrated by the new noise and hassle of the construction. It can be a pain navigating through the backhoes and wet concrete – never mind dealing with the racket.

I can sympathize here. As a resident of Brett House in Central, I dealt with the renovation of the sidewalk outside my building. The noise came early and without mercy. A consistent half-past seven, never-ending alarm became a fact of life, living just beyond my window.

The girl I was dating last semester became frustrated with the pounding of asphalt outside my window. Wake-ups became an increasingly difficult affair.

I distinctly remember one morning when the construction seemed especially noisy. We both woke up to a clock that read 7:45 a.m., almost three hours before our first class. Her hand, awkwardly draped over my face, jerked quite abruptly as the jackhammer sprang to life and played a rude version of taps for those unfortunate students nearby.

I looked back at her. She wore an acute expression of dreariness. An angry tired look contorted her features from the rude awakening she had suffered.

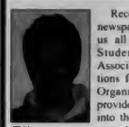
It wasn't pretty. I could only imagine I looked the same.

At that point, I had nothing good to say about the construction projects on campus. Then I cheered up and had my coffee.

I think the soon-to-open Recreational Center is a great improvement to this campus and projects like it are worth their weight in gold. I'm excited for the grand opening. Boyden Gym, with its high-school gymnasium feel and obvious lack of sparkle, has been an issue for years. Prospective students need to see that UMass can compete with some of the more prestigious colleges around the country; buildings are essential to this goal.

New Dirt is a long-term bet at the right time for UMass. Funds must keep flowing to these projects and a long view recognizing the importance of buildings, faculty and research will do wonders for this school and our pride.

UMass stands in a state that refuses to show our school its due respect. As the saying goes, respect is never given, it's earned. Our school is finally making the right moves now to benefit the next round of incoming freshman. Yes, I am a little disappointed. I won't be able to enjoy all of the new improvements but at least it's happening. New construction should help increase alumni donations and, most importantly, raise the quality of this school.



You hear a lot of complaints about UMass. I miss watching UMass play basketball on network television come March. It may also be nice to enjoy a more personal relationship with my professors instead of enlisting in the countless classes that are only offered in Mahar. We can't fix everything at once but it's nice to see some of the changes happen.

Once all of the New Dirt projects have been completed, the band may be able to play the UMass fight song from a brand new building instead of being forced to change in the parking lot of the football stadium before games.

Recruiting might be a little easier for them, too.

Michael Phillis is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mphillis@student.umass.edu

Divvy dollars demcratically

Eli Gottlieb

Recently, The Minuteman newspaper decided to help us all out by printing the Student Government Association's budget allocations for Registered Student Organizations. The data provides a valuable insight into the way this University runs by sheer silliness. For example, did you know that the UMass Republican Club received $15,431 this year while the University Democrats receive $3,770?

Yes, that's right! The Republican Club is socialist and leeches off the government while the Democrats appear to raise their own funds. The budget contains two different lines for Mens' Volleyball, one of which receives $5,210 and the other of which receives $3,500.

The Black Mass Communications Project receives $11,000, and I wondered as I read the number, who on campus has actually heard of the Black Mass Communications Project?

The Black Student Union receives $17,850 – a number that the Jewish Student Union, Arab Students Association, Asian American Students Association and South Asian Students Association can't match put together.

One single trend emerges from all these allocations: the SGA makes its allocations to RSOs either by asking a magic 8-ball, by writing down the whims of a mentally-impaired child or through a process of incredible bias.

One might think this appropriate given that black people make up the largest minority population in the United States (competing with Latinos depending on which state you live in), but somehow I don't think they outnumber the sum of those four other groups on the UMass campus in specific.

Some groups appear to perform a useful function, but somehow require incredibly large amounts of money to do so. ZooDisc, the ultimate frisbee club, has $4,980 from the SGA this year, and for some reason the University Programming Council apparently needs $65,532 just to show us months-old movies in the Cape Cod Lounge on Friday and Sunday nights.

Seriously, can someone please explain what the SGA does with our money?

They appear to spend a total of $2,000 funding a Polo Club and an Archery Club. We apparently also spend $1,680 on a Figure Skating Club, and $5,350 on that stupid anti-drinking program BASIC.

The SGA allocated $1,687 to "Student Valley Productions" last year, and I've never heard of them either. Numerous other basically anonymous organizations seem to make their sole public appearance on the SGA's budget rolls like a hikikomori sneaking out of his room to beg his parents for money.

Oh yes, and I have to mention the SGA's funding for itself: $3,190 for their legislative work and $70,805 for "SGA Executive." Student Bridges receives $172,743 in order to perform and facilitate volunteer work. With a budget that small, I honestly can't see how they can afford to have their workers do else but volunteer.

Meanwhile, the Emergency Medical Services Club received $350; I can only hope they raise funds for themselves. The Pre-Veterinary and Animal Society got $450. History Club gets $650.

One single trend emerges from all these allocations: the SGA makes its allocations to RSOs either by asking a magic 8-ball, by writing down the whims of a mentally-impaired child or through a process of incredible bias. I will address these possibilities in reverse order.

First of all, I think that no matter what else makes the SGA tick, some bias towards certain ethnic groups seems to come through quite obviously. In total, the constituencies of the ALANA Caucus – the only known "political party" of the SGA who most students also know run the SGA with an iron fist in a multicolored velvet glove – received $127,076 in RSO funding.

By my calculations, this makes up just about one third of all SGA funding to RSOs. If one runs the figures after removing all the tiny RSOs that get even timer budgets that fraction only goes up. I suppose running the SGA by getting all your friends to vote for your candidate out of a sense of socio-racial-economic solidarity does entitle you to a certain amount of control.

But, it only shows how the SGA has morphed from a student government into an advocacy organization for everyone who believes themselves unjustly oppressed, and therefore entitled to the dollars of the student body.

If I start a blog called "The Grand Zionist Conspiracy" and get lots of page hits, does that entitle the Student Alliance for Israel to control the entire Internet?

Of course, if I wish to insult the SGA in this way, I need a better suggestion. Honestly, I don't have one since I don't think UMass students will ever really bother to become heavily involved enough to make an SGA-type of organization self-regulate via democracy.

I think that we may well have to make RSO funding come from a referendum.

Every student would write down which RSOs they want to fund, and the university administration or a vestigial SGA would take these tallies and use them to divide up the money proportional to the actual wishes of students.

True, this would mean groups that require expensive equipment would at least initially go underfunded, but a student wouldn't have to actually have membership in an RSO to vote to fund them.

Groups with lots of expenses could ask all their members' friends to vote for them in addition to the actual members.

This would actually represent how UMass students want to support our university's student groups.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu

COURTESY SECRETWAR RECORDS

Parts & Labor to play Blue Wall

By Nora Drapalski
Collegian Correspondent

At first glance, it's hard to see why hardcore-experimental Talk Normal and alternative-rock Parts & Labor would be performing together. With contrasting sounds, these two Brooklyn-founded bands seem like an unlikely pair.

But the Blue Wall Café will be hosting the double act in WMUA 91.1 FM's last musical event of the semester on Saturday, April 11 at 8 p.m.

Talk Normal, the opening act of the evening, is not for the faint of heart. Every minute of their new "Secret Cog EP" is thick with a haunting guitar dominating its sound, and heart-wrenching vocals whispering in and out in a chaotic display. Each song is punctuated by frequent, sharp bursts of noise while the lyrics are spoken rather than sung.

Drummer Andrya Ambro sets the tone as she crafts a steady beat as a heavy backdrop for vocalist and guitarist Sarah Register. Meanwhile, Register tests the line between singing and noise; the result is both discordant and unnerving.

Somehow this duo combines disorder and insanity in such a way that it is undeniably addicting. While it may require a few listens to get into, Talk Normal is captivating in the sheer quirkiness of its music.

Fortunately, Talk Normal's experimental noise-rock will be complimented by the multi-faceted stylings of Parts & Labor this Saturday.

PARTS & LABOR
BLUE WALL CAFE
AMHERST, MA
SATURDAY, APRIL 11
8:00 PM / FREE

Parts & Labor, formed in 2002, was co-founded by Dan Friel, a former Amherst resident, and B.J. Warshaw. The self-proclaimed experimental rock band cannot, and should not, be confined to this title, though. Their versatility is shown in their songs, ranging from trance-like beats to indie-influenced melodies.

Parts & Labor will be coming to UMass as they finish their tour of the U.S. for their newly released album, "Receivers." Voted Album of the Year in 2008 by WMUA DJs, Parts & Labor have become a familiar name in alternative radio stations. Their sound is simultaneously compelling and hypnotic, and somehow has something for everyone.

Friel contributes the keyboards and guitar and Warshaw lends his bass, while both also provide vocals. After cycling through drummers, their four-person band has finally settled down with Joe Wong (drummer) and Sarah Lipstate (guitarist).

On "Receivers," the quartet shows off by taking part in some profound genre-jumping. Tracks like "Nowheres Nigh" and "The Gold We're Digging" lean more towards the indie-alternative side, while "New Buildings" and "Processional" are heavy experimental rock tunes almost painful to listen to in their aggressive approach. This diversity exemplifies what Parts & Labor is all about. The effortless transition from organized chaos to punk-influenced lyrical creations is the element Parts & Labor toys with as it develops into a powerhouse group.

Over the years, Parts & Labor has developed into a cohesive sound utterly captivating in its intensity. With each successive album, Parts & Labor displays a deeper mastery of music, as the band demonstrates its knowledge of instruments and sound.

In its third concert produced here at UMass this year, WMUA Amherst 91.1 FM seeks to expose UMass Amherst students and Pioneer Valley community members to music they wouldn't necessarily hear anywhere else. Through this effort, WMUA has already featured artists like The Death Set, Eric Hnatow and Brown Recluse Sings.

Talk Normal and Parts & Labor will appear this Saturday, April 11 at 8 p.m. in the Blue Wall Café before wrapping up their tour and heading home to Brooklyn. Entrance is free.

Nora Drapalski can be reached at ndrapals@student.umass.edu.

the source
PLANNING YOUR WEEKEND SO YOU DON'T HAVE TO.

FRIDAY / SATURDAY

METAMORPHOSES

THE UMASS THEATRE GUILD WILL PRESENT 'METAMORPHOSES' THIS WEEKEND AT THE BOWKER AUDITORIUM. 'METAMORPHOSES' IS A COMPLETELY STUDENT-RUN PRODUCTION. A PERFECT WEEKEND DESTINATION FOR ALL YOU GREEK MYTHOLOGY BUFFS OUT THERE.

VENUE: BOWKER AUDITORIUM
DATE: TONIGHT & SATURDAY
DOORS: FRI - 8:00 PM
SAT - 2:00 PM & 8:00 PM
PRICE: STUDENTS, $6 / GENERAL $10

SEND US YOUR SOURCE WORTHY EVENTS!
ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Unnecessary 'Consumption'

Gallery exhibit highlights the misleading pleasures, consequences in consuming

By Caroline Scannell
Collegian Staff

If you happen to be jonesing for a sugar high, look no further than "wünderarts" gallery where artworks by Petula Bloomfield and Sarah Bliss are currently showing. The exhibition, "Consumed," touches pointedly on themes of excess, pleasure seeking, the one-dimensional drive to consume and the consequences of a culture centered on those practices.

Both of the artists share a kind of playfulness with their overlapping vocabulary of consumer culture; their works both use bright colors, neon streaks, lush imagery and torn up fragments of magazine ads to voice a harsh criticism of contemporary society with deeply satirical underpinnings.

Petula Bloomfield's work depicts decadent food objects and floral motifs in bright colors and high gloss in a style that approaches lewdness. Gallery owner Nora Maroulis recounts, "Petula went off on this exuberant bent with regard to these over-the-top pastries and florals." Her dense imagery conveys "opulence as a reflection on the still lives of the 18th and 17th centuries but reflecting on the exuberance of our own times."

In fact, Bloomfield attributes her source of inspiration to works "by artists such as Lucas Cranach, Quinten Massys and Hieronymous Bosch with their portrayal of human shortcomings." In this tradition, her work highlights the hedonism of contemporary lifestyle and appetite.

For instance, her piece "Feeding the Soul" evokes the promise of pleasure, but really only offers the empty calories of fruit tarts stacked one on top of another. The piece articulates the idea that, like junk food, you know it is bad, but that knowledge is not enough to curb your appetite.

Through the digital manipulation of photographs and oil and acrylic paint Bloomfield presents a cross between a magic eye print and a Capri Sun juice box label, or a neo-classical acid trip with overripe fruits, cupids and Rubenesque virgins.

While there is something tacky, kitschy and contrived about Bloomfield's pieces, it is in no way a turnoff. Instead the works touch on the pleasure of consumption, despite its false promise of fulfillment.

At the same time that Bloomfield focuses on the practice of pleasure seeking, Bliss' work centers on the collateral damage of consumer culture. In her recent works, Sarah Bliss moves away from strictly oil and acrylic painting to incorporate a variety of different media, including what an average person might think of as trash.

Using packaging refuse, trash bags and other "disjunctive materials [her work] draws attention to the 'backside' of consumption: both its seductive beauty and the fantastic accumulation of material that becomes 'trash.'"

Bliss writes, "My work addresses systems of exchange, the relationship between commercial and cultural production, and the commodification of the art object. I explore the dynamics of seduction and the methods utilized by producers, marketers and retailers to attract consumers, claim value, create desire and manufacture pleasure."

While Bliss's bold and brightly colored works of dribbled paint on Plexiglas as well as her bric-a-brac wall installations comment on the production of desire, echoing the falsity of pleasure-seeking emphasized by Bloomfield, she implicates herself in this grotesque system of commercial exchange.

Owner Nora Maroulis explains, "Sarah went down this path that took her into thinking about and working from a frame of reference where she is very interested in not only society as consumers but in herself as well as an artist."

Her tower of trash, titled "May Cause Flash Fires," consists of shrink-wrapped cardboard boxes and inkjet prints of packaging debris. The work comments on the wastefulness of her own art practice as a participant in "art making as a commodity industry."

Though the underlying message of "Consumed" may inspire guilt in viewers — or at the very least leave you with a toothache — the exhibition on the whole is joyful, fun and thought provoking.

"Consumed" will be on view Saturday from 12-5 p.m. at wünderarts, located at 383 Main St. in downtown Amherst.

Caroline Scannell may be reached at cescanne@student.umass.edu

COURTESY WUNDERARTS.COM

"Consumed" will feature the artwork of Petula Bloomfield, a teacher at Pioneer Valley Performing Arts Charter School in South Hadley.

COURTESY WUNDERARTS.COM

Artist Sarah Bliss' work centers on the collateral damage of consumer culture. In her recent works, Bliss moves away from strictly oil and acrylic painting to incorporate a variety of different media, including what an average person might think of as trash.

'Dragonball: Evolution' or Extinction?

Anime adaptation draws poor reviews leading up to opening

By Nora Drapalski
Collegian Correspondent

"Dragonball Evolution" faces one question as it flies into theaters today – how does it compare with the story that inspired it?

The original "Dragonball" follows the story of Goku, a monkey-tailed alien boy who comes to Earth as he searches for the seven Dragon Balls. Along the way, Goku meets a smart-mouthed girl named Bulma; a perverted master of martial arts named Roshi; and a bald, comical monk named Krillin. And, of course, one can't forget the famous green-skinned alien named Piccolo.

With characters like these, "Dragonball" is obviously quite a quirky story. Ignoring some eerie Superman similarities (alien comes to Earth, saves Earth from other alien invaders, falls in love with aggressive female, etc.), "Dragonball" has become one of the most well-known original animated series of all time and has inspired authors for years.

Unfortunately, the American film adaptation does not seem to be getting the same positive attitude. Although slated for its American release today, the film has already received far more than 3,000 reviews by users on IMDB.com, scoring an average rating of 3.1 out of 10.

However, looking at the film objectively, there is little doubt it will succeed financially. Certainly fans of the anime series, which inspired a generation on Cartoon Network, will go see the movie at least once.

In an effort to gain attention from those who may not have seen the series, "Dragonball Evolution" also features a familiar cast. Movie fans will recognize Justin Chatwin (Goku) from "War of the Worlds," Emmy Rossum (Bulma) from "The Phantom of the Opera," Chow Yun-Fat (Master Roshi) from "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon," and James Marsters (Piccolo) from "Buffy the Vampire Slayer." Others may also recognize newcomer Jamie Chung, who plays Chi Chi, Goku's love interest, from "The Real World: San Diego."

Between past fans and teenagers looking for a good action film, "Dragonball Evolution" has targeted a strong, movie-going audience. With movie attendance on the rise, "Dragonball" also picked a key time to be released to maximize interest. April precedes the summer box office months, and thus the film will face considerably less competition.

The producers of "Dragonball Evolution" seem to be stuck between the proverbial rock and a hard place. With an estimated budget of $100 million, producers want to broaden the target audience in order to increase ticket sales. However, by doing so, changes have to be made that may upset certain members of their target audience and decrease attendance. Such a struggle could mean the difference between a success and a failure at the box office.

COURTESY 20TH CENTURY FOX

"Dragonball: Evolution," the live-action adaptation of the popular anime series, hits theaters today. Initial reviews of the film have been less than favorable.

With the suggestion of change, most discussions of "Dragonball Evolution" focus on this question of loyalty to its predecessor.

When early screenshots of the film were released to the public, an uproar rose amongst fans at seeing the representations of their favorite characters by the American actors. Fans were shocked to see that producers dropped the vibrant designs from the anime and instead tried to make the characters more believable.

Most noticeably, Justin Chatwin's representation of Goku deviated greatly from the initial designs. Chatwin lacks the long, black spiky hair his character originally has, as well as his famous orange fighting outfit for the majority of the film.

In addition to physical alterations, the character of Goku has also been altered to suit the stereotypical action movie star. Gone is the naïve, overenthusiastic Goku of "Dragonball." Instead, we are shown a trite one-liner who tries too hard to look cool by flexing his arm muscles.

Chatwin isn't the only one in desperate need of a makeover, though, as demonstrated by Emmy Rossum and James Marsters. Rossum as Bulma shatters the character's image by lacking the trademark blue hair (instead featuring a single blue streak). Her youthful appearance also contrasts the image of the mature character upon whom she is based. Meanwhile, Marsters looks positively laughable in his portrayal of Piccolo, although his deep, husky voice and commanding presence quickly mollify the audience.

To complete the problems with the characters is the absence of some key players. Where are the fan favorites? Where are the hilariously bumbling Krillin, adorable Puar, and abrasive Oolong, the pig you love to hate? Perhaps they are lying in wait for a possible sequel if all goes well.

If the trailers are anything to go by, the action scenes are forced, with few graphics to enhance the effects. While a similar fight would take three seconds in the anime, "Dragonball: Evolution" drags it out in sequences so slow, it seems as though they used slow motion during production. Which begs the question, what did that supposed $100 million budget go to?

Nora Drapalski can be reached at ndrapals@student.umass.edu.

CINEMARK®
The Best Seat In Town
Advance tickets & showtimes available online at cinemark.com
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. • 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp 1118#
EARLY BIRD SPECIAL M-F, 1ST MATINEE SHOWTIME $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)
$5 Tuesdays are back!! All shows all day are $5!!
◆ HANNAH MONTANA THE MOVIE [G] 100 425 705 940
◆ OBSERVE AND REPORT [R] 135 450 735 955
◆ DRAGONBALL EVOLUTION [PG] 200 410 720 930
◆ FAST AND FURIOUS [PG13] 120 230 355 510 630 750 910 1025
◆ MONSTERS VS ALIENS - 3D [PG] 220 440 700 920
◆ MONSTERS VS ALIENS [PG] 110 330 550 810
◆ THE HAUNTING IN CONNECTICUT [PG13] 145 445 740 1000
◆ ADVENTURELAND [R] 140 435 730 1020
◆ DUPLICITY [PG13] (715 1005 no shows 4/16)
◆ I LOVE YOU, MAN [R] 125 430 745 1015
◆ KNOWING [PG13] 115 415 725 1010
◆ RACE TO WITCH MOUNTAIN [PG] 130 420
◆ BEER WARS LIVE Thursday 4/16 only- tickets $15
Senior Show 10am 4/16
ADVENTURELAND
CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

COURTESY MICHAEL HAYES

Garden designer Wolfgang Oehme sits in the private Vollmer garden in Baltimore, where he launched a radical, natural form of landscaping.

Big Ideas, smaller landscapes

By Adrian Higgins
The Washington Post

BALTIMORE — On a quiet street in the Murray Hill section of suburban Baltimore, Pauline Vollmer looks out from her sunroom onto a garden of cascading terraces, large and unusual shrubs and massed perennials.

The former lawn and rose garden are just a distant memory for Vollmer, 92, who 4 1/2 decades ago asked Wolfgang Oehme to rework both the front and rear gardens of her white brick house. Oehme was then a recent émigré from Germany, working as a designer for Baltimore County, but this commission allowed him to install a residential garden based on ideas he had cultivated as a student in Berlin.

His notions were radical in an American suburban landscape that knew only grass and foundation shrubbery. Oehme (pronounced UR-ma) instead layered the outdoor spaces with specimen shrubs, massed perennials and ornamental grasses, turning the idea of a garden on its head. As a predominantly herbaceous garden, it grew hushed by the month, bloomed defiantly in the heat of summer and became a tapestry of colors and textures in the fall and beyond.

"There's something to look at every day, even in the winter," said Vollmer, whose genteel property thus became the launching pad for a revolution in garden design in the United States.

Oehme, who will be 80 next month, was exploring the garden last week with as much enthusiasm and sense of ownership as when he designed it, though life has changed recently for him. He has sold his interest in Oehme, van Sweden & Associates, the firm he created with James van Sweden in 1975, and has started a smaller company working in Baltimore and its suburbs, where he lives.

The partnership became one of the most successful in the annals of garden design. Van Sweden once wrote that when he walked through the Vollmers' gate for the first time, "I knew right then that Wolfgang Oehme was somebody to grapple with, to be involved with."

In the early 1970s, they worked on van Sweden's townhouse garden in Washington's Georgetown, which became a showroom for a style they called the New American Garden. They turned a mom-and-pop design and garden-installation practice into one of the most prominent landscape architecture firms in the nation. By the 1990s, Oehme and van Sweden (OVS in design circles) became synonymous with a naturalistic planting style. As the firm on Capitol Hill grew, OVS designed gardens for major botanical institutions and parks, as well as for residences of the rich and famous, including Oprah Winfrey.

The photogenic quality of their landscapes coupled with van Sweden's business savvy got their work noticed in shelter magazines around the globe. The exposure, in turn, introduced to gardeners such signal plants as ornamental grasses and perennials like Russian sage, black-eyed Susans and liatris.

Oehme and van Sweden planted them not in threes or fives, but by the hundreds, sometimes thousands. "You're taking plants that have been used in a very feminine way, and you give them this hulking masculinity because of the scale and size of these large plantings," said Charles Birnbaum, president of the Washington-based Cultural Landscape Foundation.

Birnbaum said the firm's influence has also been spread by van Sweden's writings. He is now at work on a fifth book on landscape architecture. "I don't know of another firm that's practiced during this time that's done more to articulate its design intent and ideas," Birnbaum said.

"It's been an interesting ride," said van Sweden, 74, "and we have had a lot of fun."

Van Sweden, who in recent years has been using a wheelchair, works part time at the company and said he plans to retire in three or four years. The baton is passing to three principals. One of them, Eric Groft, said Oehme is still working with him regularly as a consultant on planting plans. "He and Jim set the philosophy, and it's my mission to carry that philosophy forward," Groft said. "I don't see any major shifts in the way our gardens look."

Oehme, meanwhile, has formed a landscape design company with organic gardener Carol Oppenheimer, and though it is small — they work out of a cafe with WiFi — the ideas remain big. Also, German landscape architect Stefan Leppert has written a hagiographic book chronicling Oehme's career, "Ornamental Grasses: Wolfgang Oehme and the New American Garden" (Frances Lincoln, 2009).

The circle has closed in another way. For the past five years, Oehme has been involved in a project in Bitterfeld, the town in the former East Germany where he lived for 10 years before he went to college. There, a communist-era coal pit has been converted into a lake with meadowlike plantings beside it.

Oehme worked for the parks department in Bitterfeld before leaving to study landscape architecture in Berlin, where he first saw ornamental grasses used extensively and was heavily influenced by a naturalistic designer named Karl Foerster. He later spent time at a botanical park in Hamburg laid out by landscape architect Karl Plomin that was full of the types of herbaceous plants he would eventually use here. Many of them, ironically, hailed from North America but were little known or used in U.S. gardens.

In 1957 he came to Baltimore, where he found the prevailing residential landscaping of the day "like a desert," he wrote. "I went on a crusade."

Pauline Vollmer was an active garden club member who found Oehme through a mutual friend. "She would quote Wolfgang all the time: 'Wolfgang said this; Wolfgang said that.' I said, 'Do you think he would look at my garden?'"

When Oehme presented a sketch of plantings to Vollmer and her late husband, Leo, "I said to my husband, 'I don't know what we are going to do, but we are not going to do that.' But the more I looked at it, I got intrigued with it, and I said, 'Maybe this might be a good idea.'"

Beginning in 1964 and over several years, the amount of lawn both in the front and back was reduced and eventually entirely supplanted by herbaceous ground covers. Conifers, large shrubs and ornamental trees were positioned not just as accents, but to veil the land, add a sense of mystery and blur the property boundaries.

Oehme put in trees that would become hallmarks of his palette: kousa dogwood, Photinia villosa, sweet bay magnolia, Chinese fringe tree and Amur maackia. Vollmer offered a rare conifer called China fir. "She said, 'I have something special,'" Oehme recalled. "I said, 'Put it by the garage. I don't want it cluttering up my garden.'" It is now about 50 feet high.

Oehme also put in a large, late-flowering shrub named clerodendron, which is covered in striking blooms and berries in September. "It's full of hummingbirds and butterflies," he said, waving his hands in animation and grinning broadly. "It's like the tree is alive."

I've never been with Oehme without learning about a new plant. While touring three gardens he and Oppenheimer have planted in Towson, Md., and Baltimore, he speaks glowingly of a tickseed called Coreopsis pubescens (Sunshine Superman), which is covered in yellow flowers from summer to October. He also commends two salvias, indigo sage (Salvia forskaohlei) and S. nemorosa tesquicola, for their long blooming habits.

Far from the bleak, war-ravaged Germany of his youth, Oehme prepares for another year in the garden. When will he retire, I ask, and his blue eyes flash a bit and he shakes his jowls. "Never. Even when I'm dead I'm not going to retire. My ideas will live on."

THE ASIAN AMERICAN STUDENTS ASSOCIATION PRESENTS...

The 26th annual

Asian Night

Breaking The Stereotype

April 11, 2009

FINE ARTS CENTER

DOORS OPEN 6:30 PM

SHOW STARTS 7PM

FREE ADMISSION!

FREE DIM SUM & GREEN TEA ICE CREAM!

SPECIAL GUESTS

Kelly Tsai

Tim Be Told

PROUD SPONSORS:

YUR KOCHIYAMA CULTURAL CENTER

STUDENT AFFAIRS CULTURAL ENRICHMENT FUND

FINE ARTS COUNCIL

ALUMNI

Cousins to follow Calipari

By Jerry Tipton
McClatchy Newspapers

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Highly regarded prospect DeMarcus Cousins became the first recruiting notch in John Calipari's belt as Kentucky coach late Tuesday night.

That's when Cousins made it official. After first committing to Memphis, he will follow Calipari to Kentucky.

"He wanted to do it at the highest level and with a coach he's grown to feel comfortable with," said Otis Hughley, Cousins' high school coach, in explaining the decision.

Calipari's success with NBA-bound players such as Derrick Rose and Marcus Camby probably played a role in Cousins' decision, Hughley said.

So did style of play.

"I think he likes the opportunity to play pro sets," Hughley said. "Pick and roll. Pick and pop.

That will highlight the arsenal and variety he has in his game ... he wanted to find a place to do more than sit on the block or just play outside. He wants to play the whole game."

Cousins, a 6-foot-10 player for John LeFlore High in Mobile, Ala., is rated as the nation's No. 2 prospect in the class of 2009, according to the recruiting service Rivals.com.

Cousins averaged "close to 27 (points) and 11 (rebounds)" for LeFlore last season, Hughley said.

He'll come to Kentucky with the expectation of being a so-called "one-and-done," a player who only plays one season at the college level, as Rose and Tyreke Evans did for Calipari at Memphis.

When asked if Cousins would be a one-and-done player, Hughley said, "He can be. All that stuff is contingent on too many variables."

Hard work and a good attitude can make Cousins a one-and-done player, the LeFlore coach said.

"A lot of guys can practice all day every day, that doesn't mean it's going to happen," Hughley said. "He certainly has everything he would need."

Recruiting analysts see Cousins as a top-shelf prospect.

Jerry Meyer of Rivals.com said Cousins was one of the most skilled big men he'd seen in more than six years appraising prospects.

He rated Cousins over Al Jefferson, who jumped from high school to the Boston Celtics, because Cousins has greater shooting range and is a better passer.

"He'll be a good NBA player," said analyst Brick Oettinger of the Prep Stars recruiting service.

Cousins has not taken a college entrance exam, so his academic eligibility remains unfulfilled.

One other question hangs over Cousins. He's had fits of temper while playing in the summer AAU circuit.

"There are flare-ups," Meyer said before adding, "That's better than being soft and won't compete ... he plays with a chip on his shoulder. He doesn't mind getting physical. It's just a matter of controlling and channeling (the anger)."

Hughley all but guaranteed that Cousins will not have any flare-ups for however long he plays for Kentucky.

"He won't do that under Coach Cal," the LeFlore coach said. "He didn't do that under me.

All that is really directly correlated to how he's led. A lot of it is just being young."

Orton wavering?

Internet buzz suggested signee Daniel Orton was wavering on his commitment to UK.

He's scheduled to play in the Derby Festival high school all-star game on Saturday.

But the player's father said there was no change in his son's commitment to UK. Daniel still intended to play for Kentucky, but he also might consider the option of seeking a release.

Derby Festival organizer Dan Owens called the player's father on Wednesday to make sure Orton still intended to play in the all-star game.

Former UMass coach John Calipari left Memphis with noted prospect DeMarcus Cousins right behind. Calipari recently took the head coaching job at Kentucky.

Are you looking for a job for next semester?

The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is looking to hire employees for advertising production in 2009 - 2010!

- Flexible work schedule
- Hourly salary
- Awesome people

Little to no experience in graphic design necessary! Looking for undergrads with good computer skills, strong motivation, the ability to learn, and a keen eye.

Contact Max Detmer at
Advertising@DailyCollegian.com
for more information, or stop by The Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

UMass loses on Senior Day

By Steven Levine
Collegian Staff

Atlantic 10 rival Rhode Island came and conquered on Thursday, a day that UMass wanted to win desperately. Senior Day. The loss gave the Minutewomen their seventh in their previous eight matches and, unfortunately, the honorary seniors did little to help in a close 4-3 defeat. UMass coach Judy Dixon thought the team could've performed much better, especially in singles play.

"When things weren't going our way, we couldn't find the strength to tough it out and fight hard," Dixon said. "Some players felt that, because they were losing, a teammate would pick them up.

As a result, the whole team lost. This was a very important match and I would say 70 percent of us played well."

Dixon currently has 198 wins as the UMass coach, and the possibility of number 199 was spoiled by a very narrow margin.

It looked promising early for the Minutewomen, winning each doubles match by at least five games.

However, as the match progressed into singles play, the Minutewomen could not repeat the success. Of the six singles matches, UMass won just two.

In the No. 2 match, UMass sophomore Kaitlyn Carpenter defeated Christen Cadigan, 6-4, 6-0. UMass Junior Maude Lecluyse won her No. 4 singles match, 7-6(8), 7-5. The remaining matches were lost by UMass, primarily from being outhustled by the Rams.

"It certainly wasn't our finest moment," Dixon said.

In the No. 6 match, senior Lauren MacKay lost in three sets. After dropping the first set, 4-6, McKay won the second, 6-2, before losing the third, 6-3.

A fairly unhealthy UMass team has been plaguing them for weeks, and coach Dixon knows that getting star freshman Magdalena Ploch back in the lineup will be beneficial.

UMass hosts Temple on Friday, a match the Minutewomen would like to have in an attempt to return to early-season form.

| | |
|---|---|
| URI | 4 |
| UMASS | 3 |

"Maggie will be back in the singles lineup tomorrow," Dixon said. "I'm hoping that will create enough of a change to get our momentum back. Along with some improvement at the top of our lineup, Maggie's presence should give us a boost."

Temple (14-4) is a strong team and is currently on a six-game win streak. They possess a deep lineup with junior Elyse Steiner at No. 1, and sophomore Lucie Pazderova entrenched at No. 2.

With the addition of Ploch, UMass hopes to regain confidence in its lineup. But with just one match remaining before the A-10 championships, the Minutewomen must find their chemistry quick.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Gabriella Jonnatta has seen limited action this season as a freshman. The Minutewomen have lost four out of their last five matches away from Amherst.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior Holly Heinricher will look to lead the Minutewomen again this spring. She is UMass' top 200 meter dash athlete for the UMass women's track team.

Finally at home

Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano
Collegian Staff

On Saturday afternoon, the Massachusetts men's and women's track teams will host their first home meet of the season at the UMass Track & Field Complex. Both teams are coming off injury-plagued indoor seasons that led to mediocre finishes. The men and the women are relying on different forms of leadership to carry them through the season.

For the Minutemen, underclassmen like Philip Weltman and Scott VanderMolen emerged as serious threats during the indoor season. Weltman, who is just a freshman, finished sixth in the 400-meter run at the IC4A Championships with a time of 48.45, good for second best all-time at UMass. VanderMolen ranked 11th at the IC4A's in the 1000 meter run with a time of 2:26.83, registering the fifth best time in UMass indoor track history. UMass coach Ken O'Brien says the underclassmen have definitely motivated the rest of the team and prevented the upperclassmen from getting complacent.

Last year, the Minutemen excelled in the distance events, with seven of their athletes in the top ten in the 1500 meter run. Coach O'Brien feels strongly about the team's chances this year although he says that continued success is anything but a sure thing.

"The nature of sport is that things rarely happen this year like they did last year. I'd be happy to have seven out of any ten spots in the meet," said O'Brien.

The women's team has relied more on senior leadership and has leaned on the support of their captains. Redshirt senior pole-vaulter Kristen Bakanowski continues to literally raise the bar to a new level with each coming week. She currently holds both indoor and outdoor records in the pole vault for UMass. She continues to be a serious threat for the Minutewomen and anchors their field events, able to secure first place finishes every time she steps on the track.

Both the Minutemen and women have shown their potential to dominate in certain areas of competition. On Saturday, as well as for the remainder of the outdoor season, it will be a matter of filling the void in other events and being able to score points across the board. "I think our decathletes can surprise people, our distance runners have come out slightly ahead of opponents but the A-10 is really strong in distance events", said O'Brien. "We have four to five good jumpers who can all score near the top."

The jumping events have also been a strength for the Minutewomen and they hope to continue their success against a tough field of A-10 opponents.

As the season goes on, both teams will hope to continue their assault on the record books and do what they need to do to make a run at the A-10 championship.

"All team members need to stay focused in practice and at the meets," said women's coach Julie LaFreniere. "Each athlete must perform at the highest level, especially under pressure. We need to reinforce composure".

Noah Steinberg-DiStefano can be reached at steinber@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TUCKER/COLLEGIAN

As of late, shortstop Whitney Wilhams has had trouble defensively. Williams had two errors in UMass' last game against Boston College in the ninth inning.

UMass off to PA

Temple, Saint Joe's to test UM defense

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Sometimes a wake up call is needed.

One in the form of a win is preferred, such as the Massachusetts softball team's, 4-3, 9-inning victory over Boston College Wednesday night.

For UMass coach Elaine Sortino, who constantly pushes her players for improvement, Wednesday's affair gave her plenty of material for Thursday's practice.

"We faced a team that was going to make it tough on our pitcher. They were going to put the ball in play, our defense had to pick it up and our hitters needed to be patient and disciplined," Sortino said. "We struggled in all three categories."

Thursday's practice was the final tune up for the No. 17 Minutewomen (21-6, 6-0 Atlantic 10) before they head to Pennsylvania to resume A-10 play on Friday. UMass squares off against Saint Joseph's at 3 p.m. on Friday and noon on Saturday followed by a double header starting at 12 p.m. Sunday against Temple.

The Hawks (15-13, 4-2 A-10) will bring a top-heavy lineup to the plate, but it will be lacking towards the bottom of the order. Brooke Darreff leads the way with a .413 batting average for St. Joe's and has two of the team's 11 home runs. Power is one aspect that the Hawks lack, with a combined .355 slugging percentage.

When it comes to the Owls (5-21, 3-5 A-10), the Hawks' numbers look great. Temple lacks a single .300 hitter and is hitting just .220 as a team. But as UMass learned against Boston College (14-21, 1-5 Atlantic Coast Conference), numbers can be deceiving.

"I thought [Wednesday] was a really tough day for us," Sortino said. "Boston College came at us and we really struggled.

"I think Temple is on the rise; they've been splitting a lot of games," Sortino said. "It looks like they got off to a slow start but they are starting to hit the ball a little better and the pitchers are doing a little bit better as well."

"Amazingly Balschmiter got ahead with almost every batter and didn't do the job finishing," Sortino said. "She just needed to step it up a notch to finish each batter."

After showing impeccable control last week, and earning the A-10 Pitcher of the Week award, when she walked no batters, Balschmiter walked three Eagles in the first inning. One of those walks came with the bases loaded, giving the Eagles a 1-0 lead.

UMass is going to need better outings this weekend from its pitching staff as well as solid defense if it wants to prevent any other close games like Wednesday's. The Minutewomen committed four errors against BC, one that led to BC's run in the first inning.

UMass currently sit in first place in the A-10, but have both St. Louis and Charlotte – both 6-2 in conference play – waiting for the Minutewomen to slip up. With more lackluster performances, even their 44-game winning streak in conference play may not be safe. It also doesn't help that every team in the A-10 plays the Minutewomen as if it is a championship game and that UMass is playing four games on the road again after playing five straight at home.

"We've been home since we came home from Florida and now we're on the road and we had some tough situations we faced [Wednesday]," Sortino said. "It is tough winning on the road."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

Feeling homesick

UMass has only played four games in Amherst this season

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

After going 1-4 in its first home games of the season, the Massachusetts baseball team travels to St. Louis, Mo. to take on Saint Louis in an inter-conference battle.

This will be the first time this season that UMass (8-17, 2-7 Atlantic 10) will face the Billikens (18-14, 5-3 A-10).

The Minutemen play an SLU team that has 13 home wins, whereas UMass has only played four games at home.

The Minutemen swept a three-game series in Saint Louis when SLU joined the A-10 in 2006 and the following year UMass took two games from the Billikens in Amherst. With no games played in 2008, the next chapter in the series comes this weekend.

In its last contest against Connecticut (15-14), UMass dropped an 11-9 decision in which UMass relief pitchers gave up nine runs. UMass coach Mike Stone used three pitchers on Wednesday in the loss for the last five innings of the game and Minuteman starters haven't made it past the fourth inning in four of the last five games.

"We used a lot of pitchers [Wednesday] so we're only going to use starters and relievers that we feel are ready to go," Stone said of the rest of his deep pitching staff.

Mitchell Clegg (1-1) is tied for second on the team with six starts and has a 5.06 ERA, the best among regular starters on the team.

His 37.1 innings-pitched and 33 strikeouts are both team-highs. Mitchell Eilenberg (1-3) has struggled with a 7.20 ERA but he's been one of the most consistent pitchers coming out of the bullpen for Stone this season. In eight of his 15 appearances this season, Eilenberg has given up one run or fewer.

Another advantage of Stone's pitching staff is its depth.

Seven Minuteman pitchers have at least one start under their belt this season.

Outfielder Mike Gedman has started 15 games in the outfield for Stone but he's also come out of the bullpen nine times, earning four saves.

Gedman is the only reliever who's successfully closed a game for UMass this season, a troublesome fact because the Minutemen have played in 17 one-run games this season.

"We need to be strong, especially at the end of the game," Stone said. "We need to ask more of ourselves as individuals."

The Billikens have five saves as a team and Chaz Salembier has four of them. In 11 appearances, Salembier has 15 strikeouts and 13 earned-runs in 18 innings pitched.

The SLU offense is centered around its powerful infield. Ryan Bennett leads the Saint Louis offense with a .443 batting average and has started all 27 games for the Billikens. Andrew Guerra is second on the team with six home runs and Zach Miller has a team-leading 43 RBIs.

Coming off of a game against UConn in which he got his 200th career hit, infielder Adam Tempesta is third on the UMass side with 33 hits, to go along with a team-leading 20 RBIs. Outfielder Brian Baudinet leads the team with a .359 batting average and has scored a team-leading 22 runs. He'll look to build off a strong game against the Huskies in which he and third baseman Jim MacDonald hit back-to-back homeruns in the seventh inning.

The game will start at 7 p.m.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillme@student.umass.edu

JESSICA OTLER/COLLEGIAN

UMass pitcher Mike DiCato has an earned-run average of 6.82 this season. DiCato has allowed 46 hits over 34.1 innings pitched.

comics

NOT FOR HUMAN CONSUMPTION

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office. $11.00/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 17th.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ATTENTION ALL JUNIORS AND SENIORS! FALL 2009 INTERNSHIP APPLICATIONS ARE NOW AVAILABLE AT THE STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE. GET HANDS ON EXPERIENCE IN THE FIELD WORKING WITH ATTORNEYS AND CLIENTS. EARN UP TO 12 UNDERGRADUATE CREDITS, NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY, WE'LL PROVIDE TRAINING. APPLICATION DEADLINE IS APRIL 13th. CONTACT OUR OFFICE AT 545-1995 OR STOP BY AT 922 CAMPUS CENTER.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Worship at Dwight Chapel on Sunday mornings at 9 or 11. For rides and information please call us at 256-8059 or visit www.dwightchapel.org

FOR RENT

Amherst: 2,3, & 4 bedroom apartments, $1200-$2250. FREE HEAT! Great Specials! www.MillValleyApts.com or 413-253-7377

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

FOR SALE

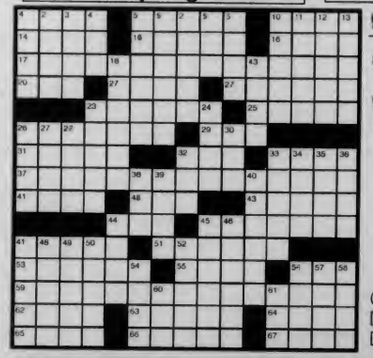
Toyota Celica GT Convertible, 1996, 25th Anniversary Edition, 76,200 miles, excellent condition, automatic, AC, $8900. 413-658-8687



ACROSS
1 Reason to wed
5 Calculator
10 Word for one
14 Sashes of the East
15 Prayer hour
16 "Ach!"
17 Completes
20 Darn
21 Harness part
22 Grow incisors
23 Block
25 Lets go
26 Back-side
29 Suffix for violin or balloon
31 Island by a lagoon
32 Big club
33 Warmth
37 Desert in time of need
41 One who lacked freedom
42 Payment
43 ___ acid
44 Four-legged animal
45 Scab's opposite
47 Unsightly marks
51 Holy
53 List of changes
55 Nigeria's neighbor
56 Product sold by the gallon
59 Normal
62 Rat's follower
63 Liqueur
64 Locale
65 Litter
66 Covers up
67 First lady's man

DOWN
1 Cabin materials
2 Musical instrument
3 Look at
4 Consonant
5 Capital city
6 Ridicule
7 Male bee
8 Old French coin
9 Military unit abbr.
10 Wood cutter
11 Upper crust
12 Shaping tool
13 Forehead stuff on 2/25/09
18 Batter's delight
19 Weight
23 Divide by two
24 Little, for one
26 Unhealthy sound
27 Nice seasons
28 Banking transaction
30 Notice
32 Consumed
33 Weather forecast
34 Actor Estrada
35 Undesirable spots
36 God of thunder
38 Suppositions
39 Monster's home
40 City on the Rio Grande
44 Regarding
45 Plot
46 Small amounts
47 Lasting part
48 Box
49 Wall hanging
50 Floating devices
52 Was painful
54 Part of the loot
56 Word with iron or lock
57 Dog on an old TV series
58 Look like
60 Numerical prefix
61 UN member

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

www.dailycollegian.com

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst Outreach
Online or On Campus
Plan now for the summer
Session 1: June 1- July 9
Session 2: July 14- August 19
Registration Ongoing
Check our classes at Spire or UMassULearn.net

TRICK BAG BY ANNIE KEITHLINE

ScandiHOOvians
SCANDINAVIAN DESIGN FOR LIVING
A BEAUTIFUL LIFESTYLE
Find us on Facebook!
22 Strong Avenue Northampton, MA (413) 586-0002
25 S. Pleasant Street Amherst, MA (413) 256-0004
SCANDIHOOVIANS.COM

Mathahoovians.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | 8 | 5 | 1 | | | 4 |
| 4 | | | | | | | 7 | |
| | 5 | 9 | | | 3 | | | |
| 6 | | 7 | 3 | | | | | |
| 8 | 9 | | | | | | 5 | 3 |
| | | | | | 8 | 4 | | 9 |
| | | | 4 | | | 8 | 2 | |
| | 7 | | | | | | | 6 |
| 3 | | | 2 | 8 | 6 | | | |

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
We at The Collegian will indeed accept your erotic classified ads. Well, at least I will.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Before you crack open that energy drink, be aware that ingesting too much Taurine will make your hands grow to an enormous size.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You're the fastest player on the diamond. You can make it to home plate before anyone else even realizes they're playing.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
The trucker named Russell will have only two things larger than his beer belly: One of them will be his libido.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You will run two miles today. Some people would be proud of that, but I know you are just running from your problems.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You call yourself an "inventory liquidator," but according to authorities you are a "wanted felon."

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Your first mistake was waking up today. Go home immediately. Go back to sleep.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Recession Survival Tip #35:
The average Labrador Retriever can feed a family of three for six days.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You will have a terrible waxing accident tonight, if you want to call it an "accident."

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Want to meet God?
Play dice.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You would have been an NBA rookie right now, if having your left nostril amputated hadn't killed your draft potential.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Today will bless you with a lottery ticket that pays for itself.

QUOTE OF THE WEEKEND

"Ability will never catch up with the demand for it."

— Malcolm Forbes

CHEAP CITY By Michael Capozzola

BLISS By Harry Bliss

"Welcome aboard, Lou — this is where it all happens."

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

SUNNY | HIGH: 56 LOW: 28 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, APRIL 13, 2009

UMass students struggle with part-time employment

By Lorraine Burger and Jim Sullivan
Collegian Correspondents

Students at the University of Massachusetts are having more and more trouble finding part-time employment as employers make cutbacks to deal with the ongoing recession.

But there is some hope for the near future.

Gov. Deval Patrick announced last Friday plans to increase the number of summer jobs for teens by 10,000 with the assistance of federal stimulus money, the Associated Press reported.

Yet, that scrap of hope is a faint glimmer in the reality many students in the Pioneer Valley currently face.

UMass senior Erica Naft sees the effects of the ailing economy on her weekly paycheck. Naft used to work an average of 18 to 28 hours per week. Now, Naft says she works eight to 18 hours per week at the CVS in Amherst Center for an hourly wage of $9.28. She makes about $100 per week. It isn't enough when rent is $465 a month.

Naft is working less because CVS has cut back on part-time employee hours to maintain full-time staff, a growing trend among employers in the Pioneer Valley.

Naft said there is really nothing part-time employees can do because the full-time employees need to work a minimum of 30 hours per week to keep their benefits.

"They can't get left out in the cold because, for them, this isn't a part-time job, it's a career," Naft said. "It's just unfortunate because I have bills to pay and I don't know how I'm going to pay them."

Naft is one of many students working their way through school on part-time jobs in the retail and service sector.

In the past year, Linens 'n Things, Sharper Image, Circuit City, and Steve and Barry's stores have all gone out of business, and more will likely follow before the recession ends.

UMass economics professor Rick Wolff said the recession will hit the Pioneer Valley harder as it progresses.

"We're going to see a sizeable number of for-rent signs in retail establishments that cannot make it," predicted Wolff. "Malls are on the edge of disintegration; a lot of places will be barren, we'll see sales of every kind – trying desperately to save their situations – we'll see a lot more soup kitchens opening up. This is the worst crisis of capitalism in our lifetimes."

Finance and operations management professor Robert Nakosteen said that the retail sector will be hard hit.

"There will be some stores closing for good, as households cut down their consumption and save more," said Nakosteen.

It is difficult to say which companies are struggling more or less than others, and which ones will stay afloat through the recession.

"We don't have large, well-established businesses," said Wolff. "They're dependent on the immediate Pioneer Valley market. Cutbacks are everywhere. No area is exempt, it's a general crisis. Each individual business has its own situation to deal with."

Students struggling financially are trying finding ways to make ends meet. Some are working multiple part-time jobs, creating budgets, and even extending the duration of their education.

"It's not a bad idea to further your education," suggested Wolff. "There are enormous risks that face you if you go into the job market right now. It's not only a hard time to get a job, they offer disappointing wages, and the company hiring you is desperate and unsure. You're hiring into a very uncertain apple. There might be a big fat worm in there, and you'll never know."

Continuing your education will allow time for the job market to

See JOBS on page 3

Construction meets with cuts

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

At the University of Massachusetts, campus leaders the a grapple with the ramifications of a $45 million budget deficit as a number of new buildings on campus are nearing completion.

Over the past few years UMass has invested heavily in construction on the flagship campus, with "New Dirt" projects cropping up almost everywhere. The building spree has resulted in a number of new buildings coming to fruition this year, including the Integrated Sciences Building, Studio Arts Building, Recreation Center and the Central Heating Plant.

This past semester, the campus community has seen Chancellor Robert Holub and other leaders working to cut the budget deficit by raising student fees and reorganizing departments and staff. Holub traveled to Washington, D.C. in January to lobby for federal stimulus money and as much as half of the $81.6 million in stimulus spending slated for the UMass system by Gov. Deval Patrick could be headed toward the Amherst campus.

However, despite the relief that could be headed to UMass/Amherst, all signs point to campus construction slowing down in the foreseeable future.

"All of these projects finishing up now were put in process years ago, and all of the financing was set up a while ago," said Jim Hunt, the communications manager for UMass Facilities and Campus Planning.

"The projects with shovels currently in the ground will be fine," Hunt added. "But we are facing a $5.5 million cut in capital construction, and an additional $1.5 million cut in deferred maintenance. A lot of things will have to stay on the wish list for now."

The UMass construction "wish list" includes a modern, Olympic-sized swimming pool. The upcoming Recreation Center, funded almost entirely by student fees, was originally slated to cost $100 million, but when its funding got cut in half, the new pool was one of the first casualties.

Aging facilities have plagued the pools currently available to students, and organizations such as the UMass Aquatics Masters swim club have come out strongly against the postponement of a new pool.

"UMass swimming and diving teams are among the University's most successful and competitive varsity sports, despite operating with uncompetitive facilities and recruiting against teams with much larger budgets," Terry Singer and Judy Dickinson, members of UMass Aquatics Masters Amherst, inwrote The Daily Collegian editorial lastin January. "A modern aquatics facility would enhance the quality of student life for the average UMass student ... [and] enhance UMass' broader contribution to its community."

When asked whether the University will adequately address its recreation facilities when the new building opens, Hunt said, "No issue is ever [completely] resolved. There's lots of things we'd like to add. ...We were going to have to do something, and I think it was a pretty good move."

A new student union building will also continue to occupy a spot on the construction "wish list," much to the dismay to a number of RSOs and student groups who have fought over space that has shrunk as their groups grew over the years.

Most of the construction on campus began prior to the recession. With budget cuts in place there will be less room for more 'New Dirt.'

Hunt acknowledges the building "is too small and practically crumbling in parts. ... We've grown beyond its capacity."

Hunt added that a new student union should be one of the next projects UMass undertakes, but that the timetable for any future construction has been changed due to the budget crisis.

Despite the large cuts there are still two large projects that have been in the on the horizon for this year, a new police station on Eastman Lane and North Pleasant Street, as well as a massive face-lift to the terrain of Southwest.

The new police station, which is being constructed at a cost of $12.5 million, will move the UMass Police Department from its previous home in Dickinson Hall to the quieter confines of Northeast Residential Area.

Southwest residents will also live with construction as many of their streets and sidewalks will be dug up over the next year, when a number of key pieces of infrastructure are replaced underground in addition to beautification of the residential area.

When the dust finally settles, what Hunt described as Southwest's "hodge-podge of pieces here and there" will have been cleaned up and redesigned, freeing up more open space and pedestrian accommodations in what is currently the most urban of all the residential areas.

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu

Professor to develop wireless traffic network

By Ben Williams
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts professor Hossein Pishro-Nik has received a $400,000 National Science Foundation grant to develop a wireless communication system that could revolutionize the way we drive.

Pishro-Nik, an assistant professor of Electrical and Computer Engineering, is working to create the mathematical framework to support a network that would help prevent automobile crashes and decongest traffic.

"The main question I want to answer in this research is how to optimize this very complex system," said Pishro-Nik. "The question is 'what is the optimal design for such a network?' there are lots of factors involved. How can we understand that so we can optimally merge this network so we get the best results in the most efficient way?"

The use of wireless communication between cars could relieve some of the traffic that has increased tripled in the past 30 years.

In recent years, a number of countries have planned to create vehicular as hoc networks (VANETs) that would serve a variety of purposes related to improving safety and efficiency, according to Pishro-Nik. However, there is no standardized rigorous framework on which these networks will be built.

Pishro-Nik says the average delay due to traffic has triple in the past 30 years, which wastes 2.3 billion gallons of fuel per year. Not only that, but traffic accidents are the most common cause of death among 15-to-34-year-olds.

The VANETs Pishro-Nik would be developing could prevent traffic accidents by sending signals to cars in danger. In one example that Pishro-Nik's team has developed a model for, a car that fails to stop at a signal would receive a signal that it failed to stop, and the car at the other end of a possible collision would also get a signal it was in danger.

There are a number of obstacles Pishro-Nik said will have to be overcome before VANETs are commonplace. Technologically, Pishro-Nik said high-frequency signals cannot penetrate buildings, so the amount of infrastructure needed to circumvent them would be substantial, particularly in large cities.

Also, it is easy to imagine being overwhelmed by a mass of warning messages about other dangerous drivers, so tweaking the systems so that it makes driving safer and not less dangerous is also a concern.

Pishro-Nik says there are a number of more political concerns, like the increase in the cost of cars, since widespread use of VANETs would require cars to have some sort of receiver for warning messages.

"What happens is, you're going to have to implement some infrastructure. The questions is who is going to pay, and how you're going to enforce regulations," said Pishro-Nik. "It is also going to increase the cost of vehicles. There will be lots of issues and regulations that should be addressed. We are working on scientific part of that."

However there are possible far-reaching effects of Pishro-Nik's work. Cars that drive themselves have been the stuff of dreams and science fiction since vehicles became widespread, but complex VANETs could make that a reality, Pishro-Nik says that's a far way off however.

"There are lots of problems in terms of regulations, if cars are driving themselves then who will be liable? But in terms of theoretical applications, that is one thing we will be studying," said Pishro-Nik.

Pishro-Nik will be working with a large set of traffic data at the Transportation Engineering Group testing mathematical predictions in attempt to make the most efficient systems possible.

"We're looking at the big picture, examining complex networks with thousands of vehicles and trying to answer the most important questions about what these communication networks can provide and what is the optimum design to provide it," said Pishro-Nik.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliams@dailycollegian.com.

Cementing her place

UMass senior ace Brandice Balschmiter tied Danielle Henderson's wins record of 108 with her latest victory over Saint Joseph's this weekend.

ARTS & LIVING
TATTOO REMOVAL

Getting a tattoo is a decision some spend days, years and other times just inebriated seconds thinking about. But a recent survey suggests that thinking about the decision to splurge on ink pays off in the end.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
OWLS GROUNDED

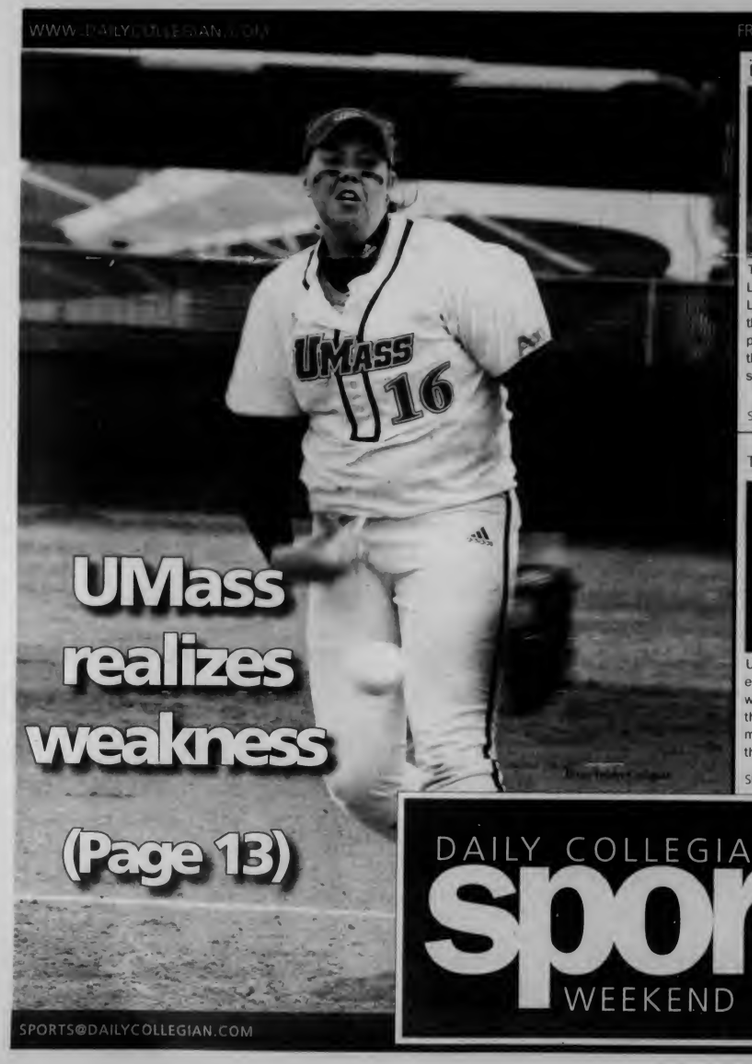
The Minutewomen ended a 12-game losing streak against Temple this weekend in a 16-4 victory over the Owls. With the win, UMass is 4-0 in the Atlantic 10 and locked up a spot in the tournament.

SEE PAGE 10



EDITORAL & OPINION
COLUMN | DOWNSIDES OF FREE-RANGE

Nicole Sobel says that, by letting the pigs go off into the pasture, they're exposed to more contaminants and are at higher risk to carry diseases.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
TWITTER | FOLLOW SPORTS AND NEWS

If you hang out in cyberspace and wonder what The Collegian is up to every second of every day, be sure to follow CollegianNews and UMassSportsMIX on Twitter.

BASEBALL

The Minutemen travel to Saint Louis, Mo., to take on Saint Louis in a three-game series this weekend. UMass has only played four games at home this year and are 8–17 this season.

SEE PAGE 13

TENNIS

UMass' Senior Day doesn't end happily for Minute-women. Despite sweeping the doubles portion of the match, UMass struggled in the singles.

SEE PAGE 12

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 49

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3693 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Mekinda
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wanczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
COPY EDITOR Nirk Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Leigh Greaney
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenswike
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
WEB EDITOR Victor Jaark
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnieri
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kocrwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Lamand
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rimo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Welver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1918 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1950. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1996. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kate Olesin

COPY EDITOR
David Humphreys

PRODUCTION TEAM
Brandon Sylvia

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEWS

BLOG | EDITOR'S NOTE
NEWS EDITOR WILL MCGUINNESS DEBUTS THE MDC'S NEW BLOG THAT WANTS YOUR NEWS TIPS AND MUCK. TAKE PART IN INVESTIGATING THE EVENTS AND OFFICIALS OF YOUR AREA.

VIDEO |
DIDN'T SEE THAT FREE SPEECH RALLY EVERYONE'S TALKING ABOUT? IT'S FINE. WE'VE GOT IT ON TAPE FOR YOU.

VIDEO |
REPORTER GISEL SAILLANT PROVIDES A SPRING BREAK RETROSPECTIVE YOU CAN WATCH WITHOUT DELETING YOUR INTERNET HISTORY RIGHT AFTER.

ARTS & LIVING

PODCAST |
THE COLLEGIAN'S OLIVER SCOTT SNURE INTERVIEWS PRODUCER AND MUSICIAN JOHN VANDERSLICE

PODCAST|
DAILY COLLEGIAN FILM CRITICS KEVIN KOCZWARA AND SHAYNA MURPHY TAKE A LOOK AT UPCOMING FILMS AND ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA EDITOR PETE RIZZO ADMITS HE'S NEVER SEEN A WOODY ALLEN MOVIE.

GET YOUR POKE ON!

LIKE US AS MUCH AS WE LIKE YOU? BECOME FRIENDS WITH THE COLLEGIAN ON FACEBOOK TO GET DAILY NEWS UPDATES SPRINKLED INTO YOUR FRIENDS' CONSTANT NEWSFEED CONFESSIONS.

Crew members from hijacked American ship return to safety

By Robyn Dixon
Los Angeles Times

MOMBASA, Kenya — The first fragments of crew members' dramatic battle to regain control of their U.S.-flagged ship from Somali pirates emerged Saturday night as the Maersk Alabama finally docked in this Kenyan port.

From the ship's deck, exhausted crewmen shouted snippets of heroism, and one pumped his fist in the air in jubilation as they approached the dock in the darkness.

But the men's relief was tempered by the knowledge that their captain, Richard Phillips, was hundreds of miles away off the coast of Somalia, drifting with desperate pirates in a lifeboat that has run out of fuel. Saturday was his fourth day in captivity; a day earlier, Phillips tried to escape by jumping overboard, but was recaptured immediately.

Details are sketchy, but Phillips reportedly surrendered himself to the pirates to secure the safety of the crew.

With a heavy security cordon in place at the Mombasa port, and a screen of shipping containers erected to protect crew members' privacy, access was limited. But a couple of crew members spoke to reporters, and told of other heroic acts.

"Hey, this guy's a hero!" one said, indicating the ship's chief engineer, ATM Reza. He described how Reza managed to lure one of the pirates into a trap in the engine room. Details of the saga were unclear as reporters shouted questions, and it was not known whether the pirate who Reza nabbed later managed to flee with the captain.

In another attack Saturday in the ocean off Somalia, a lawless country that has had no stable government since 1991, pirates hijacked a tugboat and were holding its mostly Italian 16-person crew as hostages, maritime officials in Kenya said. The tugboat is Italian-flagged, but its ownership was unclear.

The latest attack brought the current total of pirated ships to more than 20, with about 300 hostages.

As the U.S. drama continued, family members of the four pirates and elders from their hometowns gathered Saturday at the Somali coast in an attempt to help end the standoff between the four pirates who are holding Phillips and the U.S. destroyer Bainbridge, which is monitoring the situation nearby.

"They wanted to free the captain without ransom and arrange to take the pirates back home safely," said Abdi Gaariye Samatar, who is part of a pirate gang in the Somali port city of Eyl.

"The elders are worried about the American warships surrounding the pirates," he added.

A maritime expert in Kenya, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said the family members and elders spoke with U.S. negotiators and sought a written assurance that the Americans would permit them to bring the pirates back to Somalia for prosecution rather than be detained by the U.S.

"The Americans refused," the expert said. "They said they would not guarantee that the elders could take the boys."

John Reinhart, president and chief executive officer of Maersk Line, said the Maersk Alabama's crew would not be allowed to leave the ship and reunite with their families until an FBI investigation is complete.

"Because of the pirate attack, the FBI has informed us that this ship is a crime scene," he said short media briefing from the company's headquarters in Norfolk, Va., on Saturday afternoon.

Crew members will be given telephones to call their families, but Reinhart said it was unclear how long the FBI questioning would take.

He said he spoke with some of the crew members and they expressed concern about the captain.

"One of the things they asked was to make sure we do everything we can to bring home the captain," he said.

Despite intense interest in hearing how the crew retook control of their vessel, and whether Phillips volunteered to board the lifeboat with the pirates in return for his men's safety, Reinhart said he could not provide any specifics of the investigation to date or the status of the negotiations because such details "could pose a risk to our primary purpose," which was Phillips' safety and safe return.

"I'm not going to say that he gave himself, because that is speculating," Reinhart said.

The relief was palpable among some crew members after the ship slowly approached the dock at Mombasa's port and a mooring rope was thrown.

"Are you guys all from the States?" one crew member said to the crowd of waiting journalists. "Really?"

"When I get home I'm going to hug my wife and kids, my boys."

And the first meal? "Steak!"

But with the captain's life still in danger, not all the crew were pleased to see the crowd of reporters. One crewman approached and stared for some minutes with obvious anger and contempt, before cursing and calling the journalists "leeches."

Many of the crew, wearing blue overalls and blue hard hats, appeared exhausted. A bus was brought to the shipside, ready to take the crew away after the debriefing.

Bernard Odemba, the pilot who brought the ship into the port, said the crew was clearly relieved, but also worried for its captain. He said the pirates had done some damage to winches on the ship.

Analysts and diplomats see the key to the Somali piracy problem as resolving that country's long-running civil strife.

"It's a bit difficult to patrol the sea, it's so vast. It's a land-based problem. If we can get the political situation in Somalia squared away, they won't have a base to operate from," the diplomat said.

Pirate attacks often use large "mother ships" disguised as fishing boats as their ocean bases. Then they attack in powerful speed boats using grappling hooks to board a ship, or even ladders. By the time the crew members realize an attack is under way, the pirates are just minutes from the final attack, boarding the ship and firing machine guns and grenade launchers.

They typically gain control within a few minutes, and take the vessels to land bases in Somalia.

U.N. sets up sanctions against North Korea

By Colum Lynch
The Washington Post

NEW YORK — The U.N. Security Council's five permanent powers and Japan reached agreement Saturday on a statement condemning North Korea's April 5 rocket launch over Japan. The text would revive a 2 1/2-year-old threat of financial and travel sanctions against individuals and entities linked to Pyongyang's missile program.

The pact set the stage for a likely agreement as early as Monday by the 15-nation council on a statement that would also demand that North Korea not conduct any additional missile tests. It ended a diplomatic standoff between the United States and China, which blocked an American-backed effort to rally international criticism of North Korea, formally known as the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK).

Saturday's accord came less than a week after President Barack Obama called on the Security Council to punish North Korea for launching the rocket in violation of U.N. resolutions banning Pyongyang's use of ballistic missile technology.

It came less than 48 hours after U.S. and Chinese diplomats brokered a compromise text that registered displeasure over North Korea's launch while encouraging it to agree to the early resumption of six-nation talks aimed at "achieving the verifiable denuclearization" of the Korean Peninsula. Those talks broke down in December over a dispute between the United States and North Korea over an American plan to verify the dismantlement of Pyongyang's nuclear program.

"We think this is very strong and sends a clear message to the DPRK that their violation of international law will not be treated with impunity and will indeed have consequences," U.S. Ambassador Susan Rice told reporters after the big powers briefed the full council on the draft. It "clearly and unequivocally condemns the launch of April 5, it makes it plain that this launch contravenes" U.N. resolutions.

The Security Council imposed sanctions on North Korea in October 2006, shortly after Pyongyang tested a nuclear device. The sanctions included a prohibition on additional nuclear tests and ballistic missile launches and a ban on trade in conventional military equipment, including battle tanks, combat aircraft and warships. It also set up a sanctions panel to manage a list of individuals and companies that would be subject to a travel ban and a freeze on their financial assets.

The council has never submitted a list of North Korean individuals or companies that would be subject to the measures. The panel suspended its activities in summer 2007 after North Korea struck an agreement with the United States and other key powers to dismantle its Yongbyon nuclear reactor.

Saturday's draft calls for reactivating the U.N. sanctions committee to produce by April 24 a new list of individuals and companies subject to sanctions. If the committee — which includes all 15 council members and makes decisions by consensus — cannot agree on a list, the matter will be taken up in a formal session of the Security Council on April 30. The council can pass a measure with nine votes, as long as none of the permanent five members casts a veto. The statement also urges member states to enforce sanctions against Pyongyang.

The agreement required concessions by both sides. China and Russia initially defended North Korea's claim that it had the right to launch a satellite into orbit. But by supporting the compromise, they accepted the U.S. argument that Pyongyang's launch violated the terms of the 2006 U.N. Resolution 1718, which bans all nuclear and ballistic missile technology.

But the United States and Japan were unable to secure support for the adoption of a more forceful Security Council resolution, which is legally binding. Instead, the council's big powers approved a weaker presidential statement, which traditionally carries less legal force than a resolution.

Rice said that the statement would be "legally binding" on North Korea and that the new list of sanctions — which would include an expanded ban on more goods — would be "reinforcing and substantially strengthening" the sanctions.

U.S. reviews policy on Myanmar government

By Tim Johnston
The Washington Post

BANGKOK, Thailand — When Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton announced recently that the United States was reviewing its policy of sanctions against the government of Myanmar, formerly known as Burma, it marked the final recognition of a global failure to modify the behavior of one of the world's most repressive regimes.

"Clearly, the path we have taken in imposing sanctions hasn't influenced the Burmese junta," Clinton said during a visit to Asia in February. "Reaching out and trying to engage them hasn't worked, either."

Her comments have triggered an intense debate about what approach toward Myanmar might prove more effective.

For the past 12 years, the United States has pursued a policy of increasingly tight sanctions — blocking imports, investment and all other financial contacts and ultimately imposing sanctions that target individual junta members. Meanwhile, Myanmar's Asian neighbors tried the opposite approach with a charm offensive known as constructive engagement, epitomized by the 1997 invitation to join the Association of Southeast Asian Nations.

Neither path produced results.

Many diplomats and regional analysts say the most likely solution is a combination of carrot and stick: expanding aid and lifting some of the broad sanctions that have helped slow Myanmar's economic development to a crawl, while at the same time crafting sanctions that more effectively hit the bank accounts and travel plans of those who run and benefit from the regime.

"We are examining what we would call 'intelligent engagement,'" a senior Western diplomat said recently.

The opposition National League for Democracy, which won the 1990 elections but was never allowed to take power, was once among the most vocal advocates of sanctions. But the party's leader, Nobel laureate Aung San Suu Kyi, is under house arrest and unable to speak publicly, and many observers have said that recent ambiguous statements by the group suggest its position might be softening.

Sean Turnell, an Australian expert on Myanmar, points out that there are significant problems with lifting even broad sanctions. In the absence of a gesture such as releasing the more than 2,100 political prisoners the junta is holding, such a move could be seen as rewarding intransigence and brutality, he said.

Thant Myint-U, author of a book about Myanmar's history titled "The River of Lost Footsteps" and the grandson of former U.N. secretary general U Thant, says the current sanctions on the regime are hurting ordinary Burmese people more than generals.

"Any moral hazard of seeming to reward the generals is far outweighed by the moral hazard of not doing more to lift tens of millions of people out of poverty and finding a new and more dynamic way of promoting development and democracy in Burma," he said. "We need to find ways of increasing the right kind of aid, trade and investment, opening up the country, strengthening the middle class and laying the foundations for a meaningful democratic transition."

Turnell says that option is less clear-cut than it appears.

"The big argument for trading with Burma is that you are encouraging alternative loci of power in the commercial class, which has interests in protecting private property and the rule of law, but all that depends on the commercial activity being located outside the state sector, and that isn't the case in Burma," he said. "If you look at the gas, oil, gems, agriculture sectors, you see the overwhelming involvement of the state."

Pragmatists say that the broad sanctions are hurting Western interests in Myanmar and in the region as a whole.

"It was fairly clear that by ceasing our economic engagement in Burma we were allowing particularly the Chinese presence to solidify – because they have a very amoral foreign policy – and so I have been saying for several years that we need to have a different approach with Burma," Sen. James Webb, D-Va., the head of the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on East Asian and Pacific affairs, said recently, referring to a trip he took to Myanmar in 2001.

WRITE FOR NEWS!
NEWS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mix up your morning and take a breakfast break on us!
It's back: MORNING MIXER in Memorial Hall
Start your day off right with complimentary bagels, fruit, coffee, assorted juices and a free 5-minute chair massage by A Healing Place.
Last one of the academic year!
Tuesday, April 14
8:30 - 10:30 a.m.
Stop by for your chance to be entered into a drawing for a FREE UMass Amherst duffle bag of goodies!
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION · STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION · BRUEGGER'S
Sponsored by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association and Bruegger's Bagels of Amherst.
UMassAlumni.com • You were. You are. UMASS.

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Students finding ways to wait out shaky job market

JOBS from page 1

improve as well as allow you to add to your credentials.

However, according to Nakosteen, some students are doing just the opposite.

"Many students are accelerating their programs to finish early and avoid the fee hikes," he said. "Don't take it personally when jobs are hard to find. Hunker down and figure out a way to wait out the job market."

As tuition and fees at UMass for the next year increase by $1,500, the teen employment rate continues to drop. Teen employment is at a historic low, according to a study published by the Center for Labor Market Studies at Northeastern University.

"The weakening job market has continued to take a severe toll on employment opportunities of teens and young adults across the country. Earlier this spring, the Center for Labor Market Studies testified before the U.S. Congress that the summer job market for teen would be extremely weak and forecast a seasonally adjusted teen summer employment rate of only 34.2 percent, which would have marked a 60-year historical low teen employment rate."

That 34.2 percent of teens in the work force is a number that accounts for young people between the ages of 16 and 19, and with students entering college as young as 17, this statistic matters to those worried about surviving on part-time employment.

With no end to the economic recession in clear sight, students like Erica Nafi are left without answers and only the hope that the stimulus money Gov. Patrick plans to delegate to summer jobs will take effect quickly.

"I have little savings [and] a lot of debt," she said.

Loraine Burger can be reached at lburger@student.umass.edu.

Jim Sullivan can be reached at jdsulliv@student.umass.edu

Researchers at UC Berkeley discover central 'fat' gene

By Christine Chen
Daily Californian, UC Berkeley

BERKELEY, CA — Little did the mice chowing down on carbohydrates in a campus lab know, but UC Berkeley researchers have found a way to prevent most of the food they were eating from being converted into fat.

The study, published March 20 in the journal "Cell," identified a gene central to the metabolization process. By disabling the gene in mice, scientists caused them to convert 60 percent fewer carbohydrates to fatty acids in the liver, said Roger Fong, a UC Berkeley graduate student in the department of comparative biochemistry and lead author of the study.

Typically, when humans eat foods rich in carbohydrates, their blood glucose level increases and signals the insulin hormone to attach to a transcription factor protein. This protein in turn signals glucose to be converted into fatty acids in the liver.

Examining this process, scientists found the key gene that leads to the conversion of glucose into fatty acids in an insulin pathway.

Previous studies on cancer cells showed the gene plays an active part in repairing cells and is highly expressed in cancer cells. Yet scientists found in the study that it was also involved in metabolic processes.

The study also gives more understanding to the mechanisms behind Type-1 diabetes. People with this form of diabetes are not able to produce insulin at all, which prevents them from producing fatty acids normally.

By turning off the gene, scientists were able to create a block in the fat-converting process. With the gene disabled, the next protein in the signaling pathway is never activated and the process is not completed.

This process can serve as a reminder of how humans are able to store fat in order to survive, which scientists say has new implications in our modern fast-food society.

"In olden times, it's for survival because we don't eat continuously, so we have to make fat and store," said Hei Sook Sul, UC Berkeley professor of nutritional science and toxicology, who co-authored the study. "But in modern society, food is available all the time, but this process itself did not disappear, so if we eat a lot of carbohydrate, we become fat."

The scientists emphasized that the future aims of the study include helping people eat good carbohydrates without gaining fat. But for the time being, only the mice can enjoy this benefit.

"Although our research can help people eat more carbohydrates without the worry about gaining fat, our true intention is to let people enjoy all the good carbs such as fruit, vegetable, pasta," Fong said. "The best way to control body weight is to eat less, limit carh intake, and have a balanced diet."

New study finds lobbying investment worth the price

By Dan Eggen
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — In a remarkable illustration of the power of lobbying in Washington, a study released last week found that a single tax break in 2004 earned companies $220 for every dollar they spent on the issue — a 22,000 percent rate of return on their investment.

The study by researchers at the University of Kansas underscores the central reason that lobbying has become a $3 billion-a-year industry in Washington: It pays. The $787 billion stimulus act and major spending proposals have ratcheted up the lobbying frenzy further this year, even as President Barack Obama and public-interest groups press for sharper restrictions on the practice.

The paper by three Kansas professors examined the impact of a one-time tax break approved by Congress in 2004 that allowed multinational corporations to "repatriate" profits earned overseas, effectively reducing their tax rate on the money from 35 percent to 5.25 percent. More than 800 companies took advantage of the legislation, saving an estimated $100 billion in the process, according to the study.

The largest recipients of tax breaks were concentrated in the pharmaceutical and technology fields, including Pfizer, Merck, Hewlett Packard, Johnson & Johnson and IBM. Pfizer alone repatriated $37 billion, representing 70 percent of its revenue in 2004, the study found. The now-beleaguered financial industry also benefited from the provision, including Citigroup, J.P. Morgan Chase, Morgan Stanley and Merrill Lynch, all of which have since received tens of billions of dollars in federal bailout money.

The researchers calculated an average rate of return of 22,000 percent for those companies that helped lobby for the tax break. Eli Lilly, for example, reported in disclosure documents that it spent $8.5 million in 2003 and 2004 to lobby for the provision, and eventually gained tax savings of more than $2 billion.

"There's always been speculation that lobbying is a lucrative area," said Stephen W. Mazza, a Kansas tax-law professor who is one of the authors of the study. "We've been able to come up with quantifiable returns and show that it really is the case."

Mazza added that the results are "troubling" because they show how large companies can distort tax policy to benefit their bottom line.

Obama has made lobbying a key target of his ethics policies, sharply limiting the access of lobbyists to the administration and forbidding the appointment of many former lobbyists in the government without special waivers. The moves have angered many lobbying groups, but have had little apparent impact on the ongoing boom in the business.

"It's always hard to measure the financial benefits of lobbying, but generally everyone knows it does bring in a lot," said Craig Holman, government affairs lobbyist for Public Citizen. "That's why corporations are pouring more and more money into lobbying every year. Clearly, they understand it has a very good rate of return."

The tax break in question was included as part of the American Jobs Creation Act of 2004, and was billed as a way to create jobs in the United States by requiring companies to use the money for specific purposes.

But the Congressional Research Service and others have since found that many companies cut jobs in the wake of the tax break and that nearly all the money was used for stock buybacks or dividends. Supporters failed in a bid to include a similar tax break in this year's stimulus legislation, and a Senate subcommittee has launched an investigation into how companies used their tax savings under the 2004 program.

The provision was championed in part by the Homeland Investment Coalition, a group of companies and trade associations that was formed to push for the repatriation holiday. The Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America, one of the disbanded coalition's members, said in a statement Friday that "repatriation of profits provided a new source of investment for American companies."

"PhRMA supported the legislation four years ago as part of a broad business coalition because of the additional economic benefits the bill would provide," senior vice president Ken Johnson said. "It meant jobs and skilled training for American workers, as well as a shot in the arm for local economies."

Scientists identify new muscle stem-cell

By Emily Zarka
Campus Press, U. Colorado

BOULDER, CO — The most recent issue of the scientific journal Cell Stem Cell contains a paper written by researchers at University of Colorado on a newly identified type of skeletal muscle stem cell now referred to as "satellite-SP" cells.

The authors of this paper are members of CU's MCD biology department, Bradley Olwin, Kathleen Tanaka, John Hall and Andrew Troy. Other co-authors include Dawn Cornelison from the University of Missouri and Susan Majka from the University of Colorado - Denver.

"We found pretty much by guess and by luck this new population," said Bradley Olwin, a professor of MCD-biology at CU who has been working on these cells for the last 20 years.

The paper summarizes this team's identification of stem cells found within populations of satellite cells in mice tissue.

Muscles are made of highly specialized fibers that cannot repair themselves when damaged. The remedy for damaged muscles comes from tiny cells that reside on the muscle fibers and respond only when the muscles are injured. These cells are called satellite cells, Troy said, who is a biological sciences doctoral candidate who was a co-author of the paper.

"We were looking at how satellite cells sustain themselves during injury," Troy said of the experiment's purpose.

According to Olwin, the scientific community has known that muscles can regenerate since the late 1960s. However, Olwin said it wasn't until the last five to 10 years that different cells were found in the fairly homogeneous group within the muscle.

"We suspected there was a cell that was a more primitive population (in the satellite cells) that could renew these cells," Olwin said. "We expected something like this to take place."

The scientific community gains information from this identification.

"For the scientific community it sheds a lot more light on muscle regeneration and the satellite cells specifically," Troy said. "We don't really know where they come from or what makes them different. It opens up a whole new type of cells to work with."

Olwin said the scientific community may have known that these cells existed in some form, but less was known about them until now.

"In that sense what we've done is identified a cell people knew was there, but didn't have them as well identified as we do," Olwin said.

Olwin said these satellite cells are stem cells because they perform the primary function of a stem cell, self-renewal.

Troy said the general population could be affected by this discovery in the future, especially those who have muscular dystrophy, which is the loss of a protein called dystrophin that causes the muscles to literally tear themselves apart.

"If we could take a small tissue from a person with muscular dystrophy and isolate these stem cells and make them healthy, they might solve these problems," Troy said.

Olwin said before testing can begin on humans, the team has plans to put human cells in mice first. If the technology is successful in humans, only one injection would be required for treatment.

Olwin said the problem with using the "satellite-SP" cells on humans is that they are tough to locate.

"The problem is these cells

Nathan's Famous OFFICIAL
Hot Dog Eating Contest
Dear Students,
On April 23, between 6:00 and 7:00 pm during the Taste of UMass in Mullins Center, you can compete as one of 12 students in the Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest and a chance to go to the national competition in Coney Island.
To register send an e-mail to:
mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu or visit www.umassdining.com
& click on the Nathan's banner.
Best of luck,
Dining Services
UMass contest limited to 12 UMass students
To qualify for national competition you are required to eat at least 16 hot dogs, including bun during a specific time.
www.umassdining.com
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Taste of UMass 2009
Ivy
*Contest open to current UMass students only. Contestants must be at least 18 years old with identification. Contestants must sign a UMass contest waiver.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, APRIL 13, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Free-range, germ-filled

Nicole Sobel

For a long time now people have been going into the meat section at supermarkets, distracted by a cornucopia of different labels, and wondered the obvious question: is free-range pork really better and safer to eat then conventional pork?

There has been a widespread assumption that, the health benefits are indisputable However, scientists have recently found that free-range pork can be more likely than caged pork to carry dangerous bacteria and parasites. It's not only pistachios and 50-pound tubs of peanut butter that have been infected with salmonella, but also 500-pound pigs allowed to root and to roam pastures happily before butting heads with their own death.

Anyone familiar with a parasitic disease called Trichinosis, and it's correlation with pork?

Well, a study published in the Journal of Foodbourne Pathogens and Disease, which brought these findings to light last year, sampled more than 600 pigs in North Carolina, Ohio and Wisconsin. It not only discovered higher rates of salmonella in free-range pigs (54 percent versus 39 percent), but also greater levels of the pathogen toxoplasmosis (6.8 percent versus 1.1 percent) and, most alarming, found that two free-range pigs carried the parasite trichina (as opposed to zero for confined pigs).

For many years, the pork industry has been assuring cooks that a little pink in the pork is fine. Trichinosis, which can be deadly, was assumed to be history. But with this new information surfacing, people may want to be a little more careful what kind of pork they pick out in the store, and what kind they eat when they're out.

For a long time now, we have been tricked into believing that a 'free-range' sticker on chicken or pork equals a better, healthier choice. However, with these undisputable statistics, it's hard to be ignorant to the obvious fact that 'free-range' is not as healthy to eat as many people thought it to be.

Agricultural scientists have long known that even meticulously managed free-range surroundings sometimes subject farm animals to a spectrum of infection. This study, though, brings us closer to a more concrete idea of why the free-range option can pose a heightened health threat to consumers.

Free-range is like piggy day care, a thoughtfully arranged system designed to meet the needs of consumers who despise industrial agriculture and adore the idea of wildness.

I mean, it's obvious when you really think about it. Just a little time outdoors increases a pig's chances for interaction with rats and other wildlife which can carry transmittable diseases as well as moist soil where pathogens find an environment conductive to growth.

This news is especially troubling for connoisseurs of fine pork. Yes, it's true that most free-range pigs produce a sweeter meat, and better tasting pork. However, how many of us are willing to risk getting sick in order to taste a sweeter piece of pork?

A lot of consumers look to free-range pork as a more civilized step toward wildness and, by implication, a more "natural" taste. But here's the catch: Free-range is not necessarily natural. And neither is its taste.

Free-range is like piggy day care, a thoughtfully arranged system designed to meet the needs of consumers who despise industrial agriculture and adore the idea of wildness. It's meant to appease people with certain ideals about how animals should live their lives before being eaten by humans. But the fact remains that people who believe free-range pork to be a better option for their bodies arc just fooling themselves.

Think of it this way, a free-range system is engineered in part to achieve a producer's market-driven goal: protecting his squealing investments from nature's most obvious threats while allowing them a modicum of muscle-enhancing movement.

Wow, aren't they fortunate? Pigs lucky enough to land in this verdant playpen are endowed by the hand of man less with survival skills than with the ability to generate flesh retailing for $12 a pound. Free-range is ultimately a point between the wild and the domesticated. This is tricky business, and it should come as no surprise to the consumers who have any understanding of product and profit and what's really on the mind of farmers who take care of these free-range pigs.

The long history of animal husbandry has been an impassioned quest toward intensified control. Free-range pork boldly countered this quest, throwing it into partial reverse. The problem was that it went far enough to expose animals to diseases but not far enough to render the flesh truly wild.

What people taste when they eat free-range is a result not so much of nature but of human decision. Raising animals indoors, fighting their diseases with medicine and feeding them a carefully monitored diet have long been basic tenets of animal husbandry that allowed a lot more people to eat a lot more pork without getting sick. Although they aren't running around in the blissful happiness that free range pigs do, these pigs are also not coming into contact with bacteria and other transmittable diseases. And as a consumer, I'd say the pork being of higher quality health-wise is much more imperative to me than knowing that some pigs ran around a tad bit more freely than others.

I'm willing to sacrifice the sweet taste of free-range pork for my health. After all, if you find yourself not wanting to eat pork that isn't free-range, but also not wanting to eat pork that is contained but void of a sweet taste, there's only one ethical choice left for the conscientious consumer: a pork-free diet.

Nicole Sobel is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at nsobel@student.umass.edu.

Laundry change daisy fresh

Nick O'Malley

The Student Government Association (SGA) has been widely criticized across campus for, amongst other things, largely ignoring many of the issues that are pertinent to the bulk of the student body. The focus of the SGA, which has centered around affairs like the Jason Vassell case and the divestment from Israel, has struggled coincide with the affairs and interests of most students.

However, on April 8 the SGA showcased its intention to make a major difference for students when it was announced that dorms at the University of Massachusetts will be receiving new washers and dryers next year.

At first glance, this seems like a minor motion that hardly deserves mention. But, like so many other things as UMass, laundry is an oft-malfunctioning, overcrowded system that frustrates students to the point that Facebook groups are made because of it.

Many students have complained about the faulty system at UMass.

Instead of installing their own appliances, the school is in a contract with Automatic Laundry, a 10-year agreement that is wrapping up at the end of the semester. Due to this contract, though, students can't approach the school with their laundry issues. Rather, they must approach the company themselves. Students are left to either make do with washing machines that frequently flood and dryers that don't dry even after they have been repaired by a technician, or seek off-campus facilities.

So, just as the inefficiency of the laundry system was just becoming another facet of life in the dorms, it was the SGA that came in on a white horse to lead the students to magical land where you only have to put your clothes through the dryer once.

At the SGA meeting last Wednesday, it was announced that the deal with Automatic Laundry was expiring and that the school would be looking for a new company to sign with.

Oh, happy day.

The SGA has been the butt of many a joke here at UMass, including the one that accuses the members of doing nothing but eat pizza at meetings. No one's laughing now, though, as the SGA showed that they are, in fact, motivated to do the one thing that most people want them to do: address and fix the most pressing problems of the student body.

This isn't about Student Bridges. This isn't about transparency. It's about there being a problem and the SGA showing initiative to do something about it.

This isn't about Student Bridges. This isn't about transparency. It's about there being a problem and the SGA showing initiative to do something about it. The SGA has over $2 million in its budget and people constantly ask what exactly they do with it. For once, it appears it's going to something everyone can agree on.

Unless there's someone that brought a dryer from home and charges his friends a buck to use it, there aren't many people that should take issue with this. Unfortunately, this is something that rarely happens for the governing body of UMass students. Instead, the SGA has a habit of getting locked up in affairs that are really only important to the SGA.

It doesn't take much to see it, just look at this year's results for the SGA elections. SGA President Ngozi Mbawuike got 1,687 students to vote for her, out of a pool of approximately 18,234. That's not a whole lot of give-a-crap for who runs the SGA. Election fail.

Not many people can say exactly what it is that the SGA does. It just sort of does its thing until the spring when someone knocks on your door saying that this new candidate is going to fight for the students.

It happened when Malcolm Chu ran. There aren't many things you really put a finger on what he changed for the students. It happened again when Mbawuike ran and we're getting new dryers less than a dozen days after she took office. See the difference?

That's not to say Mbawuike's going to be the champion for the students (or maybe she will, it hasn't even been two weeks). What it does say, though, is that there is at least one instance where the students were pissed off about something and the SGA came in and said, "Hey, we'll fix it." That's a comforting thing.

The issue of laundry was one of the most intriguing points on the Chris Faulker-Josh Davidson ticket when they ran for office. They lost, yet their efforts are proving to make a difference.

Wait, the SGA is taking a cue from the losing party and is coming together to address a campus-wide issue? The SGA is actually doing the sort of things Barack Obama said he'd do.

It would've been all too easy for the SGA to pass over the issue and simply renew the contract with Automatic Laundry. Instead, the issue was looked into and the SGA saw that the company offered terrible customer service and neglected to replace malfunctioning machines in a timely manner.

It's stuff like this that gets people to get interested in the SGA and gets them to vote. Now, if they can just Wi-Fi in the dorms.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

America, the home of no blame

Eric Tripoli

For eight arduous and agonizing years, the people of the United States had fallen prey to the outrageous policies and ideals of the Bush Republicans. We have suffered through illegal and unwarranted wiretapping and immigration laws that amount to unbridled racism.

In 2005, a bill before Congress contained one sentence that provided the Congress with the power to snoop into any American citizen's International Revenue Service (IRS) history. This was passed because the bill itself was over 2,000 pages long, a convenient haystack to stick that needle nobody was looking for.

Fast forward to November 2008. Barack Obama is elected President. He represents a set of ideals that are truly progressive and for the people, rather than at their expense. It finally felt as if we would have the leadership that we needed to get our nation back on the straight track and improve our image in the eyes of the rest of the world. He was going to throw us a much-needed life preserver, and guide the Congress in a direction congruent with his own vision for our nation.

It is still early in his tenure, but Obama has certainly wasted little time in getting down to cases. He seems to have a plan for everything, from fixing the banks to the housing market to our image abroad to global warming. His climate change initiative boasts such features as reducing carbon emissions by 80 percent by 2050 and investing $150 billion in earth-friendly energy technologies. I must admit, it is nice having some domestic policy at dinnertime for a change.

This bill places the burden and blame on big business and not on the insensitive jerk driving a Hummer around downtown Amherst.

Congress is already hard at work on building a solution for climate change. One bill, compiled by House Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman Henry A. Waxman (D-Calif.) and Rep. Edward J. Markey (D-Ma) was recently introduced to the Congress. This bill would allow American citizens to sue the United States government if they feel that they are or will be a victim of the nation's inactive but caustic role in global warming. This includes anybody "who has suffered, or reasonably expects to suffer, a harm attributable, in whole or in part."

The bill's definition of the word "harm" is as broad as the Bush/Cheney interpretation of "torture." It will allow citizens to seek up to $75,000 in damages per year with a cap of $1.5 million per year.

So we have a bill that allows the American people to sue the government for more than double the annual income of what is considered "middle class." While this bill is in its infantile stage and will be subject to revision after revision, I see it as a complete waste of paper and a horrendous opening for the American people.

The fact that the language of the bill, at present, includes language that allows people to sue based on the possibility that they got sick because of our failed climate initiatives makes me completely sick. Henry Waxman, especially, should know better, given his history of investigating groups of political heavy-hitters whose sole goal is self-preservation and profit. He is playing right into the hands of the lazy, ungrateful, and opportunistic nature of countless Americans. Who would not want asthma for an easy $75,000 a year?

I suppose this bill acts as a wonderful complement to our nature. We often portray ourselves as victims rather than the culprits. We claim the housing collapse was because of the banks, not because the people purchasing the loans did not have the common sense to see that they simply did not have enough money to get a loan they could pay back.

I am sure many people remember the McDonald's coffee scam where a customer of the fast-food chain bought a cup of coffee, accidentally spilled it, resulting in a burn, resulting in a lawsuit, resulting in a huge payoff because this customer claimed that they did not know the coffee was hot. Common sense, why have you forsaken us?

This bill acts as an institutionalized manifestation of that sort of philosophy, where if you have been done wrong, somebody has to pay you for it, especially if it is your own fault.

Why is this bill a waste of time? Well, climate change is something that we, as citizens, have been able to help stem for quite some time. I am not suggesting we alone can stop or reverse it. But there is always something more that we could do.

We have had these opportunities to take charge ourselves, away from the government, in order to help the planet stay healthy. This bill places the burden and blame on big business and not on the insensitive jerk driving a Hummer around downtown Amherst.

Who is really going to pay for the backwards climate policies of past and present? We have had plenty of time to be responsible consumers, but in the end, it is just easier to blame someone else for the choices we never made.

Eric Tripoli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at etripoli@student.umass.edu.

A strong system starts with community

Eric Magazu

As students, we are quick to associate amongst each other in select groups. These groups are often referred to as cliques, but appear in many different forms.

The foundation of these social groups can be based on the location of where we live, rooted in our shared interests or beliefs or based on common heritage or ancestry. It should be obvious that our division into social groups is not unique to students, but occurs just as often, if not more so, among the broader population as well.

The arrangement of human beings into distinct social groups is strongly rooted in history. People separated from at least one cohesive social group tend to be labeled as outcasts. If interference occurs with the bonding among these social groups, not only do people on an individual level lose their sense of purpose, but, on a collective level, inevitably find a broader moral and cultural breakdown.

This is where the pursuit of government policies that are radically libertine or individualistic are destructive to our civilization. We must make a distinction between the authentic, traditional understandings of liberty that are rooted in American history and its philosophical forerunners, and the seemingly misguided notions of individual liberty commonly accepted today.

British anthropologist Robin Dunbar has studied human interactions and found that human beings are capable of maintaining about 150 stable relationships with other people. We can deduce from this data that, absent strong common societal ground rules, societies formed with members beyond this number will begin to notice discord among the members.

This can very well explain why nationwide socialism, and other collectivist, political philosophies tend not to be as successful as theorized. These philosophies may be successful if they were far smaller in scope.

In addition to the size, there are two other concerns. The first is the lack of a common moral framework to hold the group together, and the second is the lack of a genuine love and affection between the different members. Without all three components, there will simply be too much mistrust, suspicion and cheating for such a system to work properly.

There is a similar failure among intensely individualistic political schemes, including systems that have become closely identified with America, including laissez-faire capitalism and, in the last five decades, moral permissiveness.

There is nothing inherently wrong with free enterprise and private businesses. The only trouble is that, absent a shared cultural destiny and common moral framework, these systems can become heartless and cruel.

There is nothing inherently wrong with free enterprise and private businesses. The only trouble is that, without a shared cultural destiny and common moral framework, these systems can become heartless and cruel. It is necessary for people to have a shared loyalty to one another, as fellow citizens and fellow Americans.

Examining the problems with our traditional left-right political divide could lead us to conclude the reestablishment of a tribal system would be the most ideal form of human organization, but this is not necessarily the case. There are many things that we as Americans can start changing to correct some of the mistakes that we have made in recent times.

The American system was specifically designed by the founding fathers to recognize our imperfect human tendencies. The devolution and federalization of governmental authority in the direction of the states and our local cities and towns was ideal for forming such a system.

We know that we have the most say in our affairs when we are among our family, less among our neighborhood, and even less on the national level. By devolving government authority towards the levels closer to the individual, we are able to gain a stronger sense of control in our lives and identity in our purpose.

Local control provides a natural check on large businesses, since local communities will pose their own regulations on these enterprises. This will defend against large businesses commanding monopoly-level market-share in a very organic way, without excessive bureaucratic, nationwide regulation.

There is a cynicism in participating in a socialist political system since we often do not know – and do not trust – the people who benefit from communal largess; and, we feel that our own contributions are not properly rewarded.

In order to counteract this, it is necessary to have a sense of shared tradition and ritual within our communities in order to foster the necessary bonding between people of disparate backgrounds and varying personalities. Traditions and rituals aid in overcoming the natural distrust among people.

By honestly having concern for our fellows, the desire to help those who are in trouble becomes second nature, is ultimately beneficial, to our society.

The American founders allowed for all of these things to be done in our communities. We can start at the University of Massachusetts. The student organizations that we join are reflective of our human tendency to affiliate in groups. We can channel this for the benefit of the organizations we are involved with, our larger community, and all of our fellow men.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 13, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Inked for life? Removal is an option

Student survey correlates thought with sustained tattoo happiness

BY JENNIFER TURNER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For a little cash and a little time, almost any adult can walk into a tattoo parlor and leave a human canvas. But, a recent survey suggests thinking before inking may save you a lot of money in the end.

In a recent non-scientific survey of University of Massachusetts students, it became apparent the students most satisfied with their tattoos were the ones that spent considerable time thinking about exactly what they wanted. Many of these students even got them for special sentimental reasons.

"It took me almost 25 years to get a tattoo. My brother and I got the same one, and it has a lot of meaning to both of us. Absolutely no regrets," said history major Matthew Lemieux.

However, not all people are as satisfied with their ink job.

According to a 2008 Harris Poll, approximately 16 percent of Americans with tattoos have regrets yet few people know their options. Getting a tattoo removed is a painful and expensive experience, but recent developments have made it more successful.

Previously, tattoo removal was done through dermabrasion or excision. Dermabrasion is literally the scraping off, or sanding, of the skin. Excision involves cutting the skin off that contains the tattoo. Neither of these techniques were especially successful, and both were extremely painful. Since the introduction of laser removal, however, these procedures have become nearly obsolete.

Laser tattoo removal has become the most popular and successful way to go, though it is not without the hefty price tag. Laser treatments at a Worcester-based laser center start at $400 per treatment, and depending on the size and color of the tattoo it could take anywhere from 4-14 treatments. Each treatment takes approximately 10-minutes and can only be performed once every two months.

Different lasers are used for different colored inks. The wavelength emitted from the laser determines which ink colors it can target. Not every color is so easy to get rid of, as Andrea Yamarik has discovered.

"I know a girl who has spent the last three years getting a Peace Frog tattoo removed. Apparently, green is the hardest color to get out," she said.

She's partially correct. Green is one of the hardest colors to remove, but not the only challenge. Red, orange and yellow are also difficult to remove, since no laser is particularly good at breaking these colors up.

Once the laser breaks down the color, the body's white blood cells attack the ink causing the tattoo to gradually fade.

Dr. Stuart Bentkover of New England Tattoo Removal has over 20 years of experience with cosmetic laser surgery, and is one of the only doctors in the area to specialize in tattoo removal. Two different lasers are used in the Worcester office of New England Tattoo Removal.

According to Bentkober's website, the AlexLazr is primarily used to treat the colors black, blue, brown and green. The Palomar YAG5 laser is able to use two different wavelengths which enables it to attack the more difficult red, orange, yellow, as well as black, brown, blue and green.

A topical anesthetic is provided before the procedure, which helps – but does not eliminate all the pain. Afterwards, a protective bandage called Tegaderm is placed over the tattooed area of the skin, and should remain for 3-5 days.

The area will feel like a bad sunburn for a few days, and it will take approximately six weeks to see the final product

See TATTOO on page 6

Spring play embraces transformation

BY MICHELLE FREDETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Even after three other performances, the cast of the University of Massachusetts Theatre Guild's spring play, "Metamorphoses," still put care and energy into their fourth show this past Saturday night.

The Guild kept a small cast, all of whom were dressed in black pants and tops. As each cast member took on a specific character, they donned robes, jackets, t-shirts or aprons on top of their black base. In this way, the guild truly embraced the transformative nature of Mary Zimmerman's show.

The wardrobe transformations were not only a metamorphosis in and of themselves, but were used to greater represent the scenes of transformation within the play. A dark gray shawl attached at the wrists – first wrapped tightly around the body but let loose upon transformation – gave Alcyone (Sophie Kaner) wing-like arms, and a quick change from a dress and apron to a full skirt made Erysichthon's mother transform from an old woman to a young girl.

Erysichthon's mother's metamorphosis was one of many well-planned changes. An actor dressed as the sea god, Poseidon, came on stage and held a lustrous blue cloth in front of the woman as she changed behind it. By waving the cloth back and forth with urgency, the actor playing Poseidon made it seem as if he really were the one causing the alteration.

The blue cloth came into play similarly with Meryya's transformation. Myrra (Christa Elliot) dissolves into tears in a pool, and by ducking towards the floor as the cloth is draped over her, Elliot almost did seem to disappear.

As Baucis and Philemon, played by Kaner and Ben Sharton respectively, transformed into trees the actors stiffened and finally froze completely. No props or changes of costume were needed – the actors were able to move their bodies in such a way that the audience could imagine the bark hardening over their mouths.

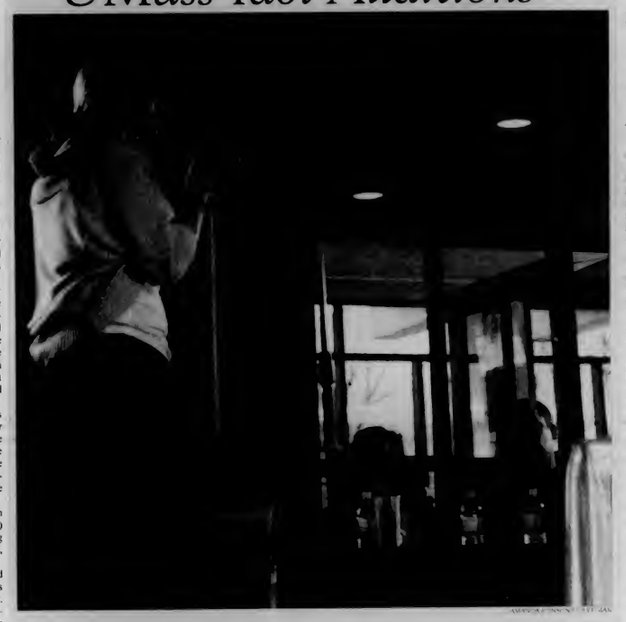
Only Narcissus' transformation was weak. Narcissus (Ariel Twohig) also stiffened and froze in transformation. However, in the myth Narcissus is transformed into a flower – the narcissus plant – after being paralyzed by his own beauty. Because the brief interlude has no narrator and there was nothing flowerlike about Twohig when she was carried off stage, it was unclear what had happened.

Twohig oozed vanity appropriately and maintained her paralyzed posture perfectly as she was carried away, but the scene lacked something nevertheless.

Music in Zimmerman's play typically accompanies scene changes or certain poetic moments within the vignettes. The whining violins and other strings upped the urgency in the storm scene within Ceyx and Alycone and the sense of loss when Orpheus looks back to Eurydice over and over.

The musicians played beautifully, the only downside being that they didn't have more opportunity to add their craft to the performance. However, the silences within "Metamorphoses" worked well – they were long enough to add emotion without feeling awkward.

The guild's use of dance throughout the show was appropriate and well done.



In the story of Alycone and Ceyx, Kaner and Sharton danced gracefully together as if they really were birds. Carolyn Billmers danced a elegant ballet in the role of the love-questioning Psyche. Twohig, as the embodiment of Hunger, slunk across the stage, combining pirouettes with jerky arm movements and gnarled fingers to show the pressing drive that hunger creates.

The show was acted skillfully, and moments of tension – such as Alycone's (Kaner) vision of her dead husband – were given appropriate emotional treatment without feeling forced or overacted. Andrew DiBartolomeo especially stood out with his range. He filled the role of a drunken reveler with humor, was properly whiny as Phaeton, but was able to be serious in the roles King Cinyras and Zeus.

Other than a slight hiccup with the "Narcissus Interlude," the UMass Theatre Guild skillfully blended strong acting, dancing, and accomplished musicianship to put on a successful performance of Mary Zimmerman's "Metamorphoses."

Michelle Fredette can be reached at mfredett@student.umass.edu

UMass Idol Auditions

Sarah Thompson performs as judges look on while auditioning for UMass Idol, an annual event held during Taste of UMass.

McQueen and his acclaimed 'Hunger'

BY COLIN COVERT
STAFF WRITER (MARCH 2009)

English visual artist Steve McQueen has attracted more global acclaim in the past year than most filmmakers earn in a lifetime. With his first theatrical feature, "Hunger," a harrowing account of the last weeks in the life of imprisoned Irish Republican Army hunger striker Bobby Sands, elevated him to the apex of the international film scene virtually overnight. The film won top prizes at the Cannes, Venice and Toronto film festivals, the BAFTAs and the Los Angeles Film Critics Association Awards.

McQueen traveled an unusual route to reach the summit. He was not burning to make movies or enamored with red carpets as a youth. Growing up in London, he viewed films as "an avalanche of discovery," about "how Japanese fell in love, how Germans fell in love, how Americans fell in love," he said in an interview earlier this week from his Amsterdam home.

He first used a movie camera at age 18 to document his trip from home to art school. He worked in film, photography, sculpture and graphic arts, more intrigued by ideas than the medium used to express them. His dad urged him to learn a trade while his mom encouraged him to do what he loved, so he settled on making films as a compromise. After graduation, McQueen entered New York University's film school. Three

See HUNGER on page 6

Talented introvert wins over Calvin

Lamontagne delivers split personality live

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ray Lamontagne must know how much his fans appreciate him. Amidst the catcalls of "I love you, Ray," and "Say something, Ray," Lamontagne has been notoriously known for not giving interviews, talking to the media or acknowledging or interacting directly with his audience when he performs live.

His aversion to fame has been well documented, garnering him a reputation of being a talented introvert, one who had gone through so much during his life that he is a challenging person to get to open up. The only way that he does is through his music.

Lamontagne does not like having light shone on him and prefers to perform somewhat in the dark, while standing off to the side, instead of in front of his ensemble.

Before Lamontagne took the stage, The Low Anthem, a three-piece Indie acoustic trio from Providence, R.I. set the tone for the evening.

With soft melodies and simple songs from frontman Ben Knox Miller and multi-instrumental sensations Jocie Adams and Jeff Prystowsky, the three definitely fit the bill paired with Lamontagne.

Lamontagne, along with his four-piece band, opened their set with his radio-hit, "You Are the Best Thing," off his third and most current studio album, "Gossip in the Grain." His powerful voice on full display, Lamontagne forgot the third verse to the fan-loving song, and shot a glance over to fellow guitarist Eric Heywood.

The band continued to play, as Lamontagne shrugged and strummed away. After the song had ended, he approached the microphone and softly addressed the crowd with a smug look on his long, bearded face: "Usually it's Eric's fault, but I'll take full responsibility for this one."

As the crowd erupted in laughter and applause, Lamontagne again smiled at his band, and began the rhythmic counting, "One, two, three, four," like a general commanding his troops into battle.

"Hold You in My Arms," off Lamontagne's first album, "Trouble," was again upbeat like "You Are the Best Thing," featuring pulsating percussion from drummer and producer Ethan Johns, along with the soft, electric guitar.

Lamontagne toned down and tapped into his emotional sides with "Let It Be Me" and "I Still Care For You" before the dark, "Empty," off his second album, "Till the Sun Turns Black."

Still after every song, the catcalls came.

"You're the best thing, Ray." "Keep giving it to me, Ray." Yet, Lamontagne refused, after his little mishap with the opener, to address them directly. In a way, he seemed fulfilled by shunning them, while the crowd was left wanting more. This went on throughout the entire show, and with some people shouting rude and obnoxious things, it was easy to see why Lamontagne would not want to relate.

After an unimpressive rendition of "Henry Nearly Killed Me (It's A Shame)" along with Lamontagne using the harmonica in the Dylanesque, "Narrow Escape," he did a rhythm and blues and an edgy rendition of "You Can Bring Me Flowers." The two renditions sound like two entirely different songs, with two different emotions emanating from each of them. The first version, sad, were the second one, angry but nonchalant.

"Achin' All the Time," another track off "Gossip in the Grain," was less than impressive. Following it, Lamontagne again went up-tempo and with loud percussion and down strumming with his ballad to the White Stripes drummer in "Meg White."

"Meg White, baby you're the bomb / Oh, Jack is great, don't get me wrong / But this is your song."

Two highlights came at the end of the set list, "Shelter" and "Trouble." Lamontagne really shows his vocal range in "Shelter," where "Trouble" is another happy song much like the opener.

After a standing ovation and thunderous applause, Lamontagne returned with his band to play the funky "Three More Days" and the more subtle "Gossip in the Grain" to cap off the evening.

To experience Ray Lamontagne live is to appreciate his two personas that go hand-in-hand: The quiet craftsman who keeps to himself, and the energetic and powerful musician who puts on an amazing show.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Songwriter Ray Lamontagne performed with his four-piece band last Saturday in Northampton.

Funny man 'Observes'

By Roger Moore
The Orlando Sentinel

The clatter of a keyboard on the other end of the phone line is Seth Rogen, typing away. He's in the office and he's tidying up e-mails, details and the like for his next film "The Green Hornet," which begins production in June, even as he's talking up "Observe and Report," his latest. As if we needed reminding that Rogen, who turns 27 April 15, is one of the busiest guys in showbiz – popping up in movies, scripting and starring in others, doing "Saturday Night Live."

It's what gives him cover from the inevitable question regarding "Observe and Report," which is about a mall cop gone wrong. Has he seen "Paul Blart: Mall Cop"?

"I have not seen it. I'm friends with the guys who made it. I feel terrible about it. It only compounds my poor friendship skills. I'm a lousy filmmaker AND friend! But I have been sooo busy."

Rogen says he did "Observe" just for the chance to enjoy that same clash of comic styles he enjoyed on "Pineapple Express" – that "Canadian comedy meets Southern comedy thing." Whatever Southern writer-director Jody Hill thought of mall cops, Rogen says he had no mall cop moments from his own past to contribute. He grew up in Canada. "and we have malls there. I was generally up to no good. So any cops that were hassling me were right."

He loved meeting his comic-romantic match in the film, Anna Faris ("The House Bunny"). In "Observe and Report's" signature scene, the mall cop takes the out-of-his-league cosmetics girl on a date, gets her commode-hugging drunk and has sex with her, seemingly after she's passed out.

"That sex scene is one of the funniest things I've ever experienced in a movie," Rogen says. "What I love about it is you can literally feel the audience pulling back, thinking 'How is this going to be OK? What could she say to make this right?' What is the one thing she could say that keeps me from stomping out of this movie in two minutes?' And she says the one thing. Perfect."

The dark and violent "Observe" is earning mixed reviews, with many critics leaning toward what Nick Schager in Slant Magazine says, that Rogen's "unhinged routine doesn't totally camouflage his inherent soft-and-cuddly likability."

But hit or miss, the big guy's got his next big gig lined up. And he's hard at it, though not in the gym, even though it's a comic-book action film. Britt Reid, The Green Hornet, "is not supposed to be the peak of physical perfection. But when I do action moments in the movie, you've got to believe that I could possibly be really doing that stuff. I can't be, 'Oh, he's WAY too out of shape to pull that off.'

"I'll be a little different, physically I have changed my physical appearance before. I got bigger for 'Observe and Report.' But no one ever gives me credit for that!" •

Comedic actor Seth Rogan stars in the new film "Observe and Report." His next film, "The Green Hornet," starts production in June.

According to Steve McQueen, his latest feature,"Hunger," is an unflinching, lyrical, sometimes excruciating record of one individual's choice to die for his idea of justice.

'Hungry' for justice

HUNGER from page 5

months later he dropped out, alienated from a student body more distinguished by its affluence than by imagination, and a stodgy faculty. "They wouldn't let me throw a camera up in the air," he said.

"It wasn't about experimenting with an idea. It was like a Chinese circus where they teach you to do the splits. The thing about film school is, there's a huge line of people who can do things perfectly. But how many interesting filmmakers are there?"

McQueen began creating experimental film projects for British museum shows. His goal was to make films that "transcended what was on the screen and reverberated around the room beyond the frame of the image." For his 1998 installation "Barrel Roll," he affixed three cameras to an oil drum and rolled it down the streets of New York City, then projected the footage simultaneously on three gallery walls. The piece won Britain's premier contemporary art award, the Turner Prize.

"Hunger," a raw, poetic examination of Sands' decision to starve in protest against prison conditions, is anything but a political film, McQueen says. It's an unflinching, lyrical, sometimes excruciating record of one individual's choice to die for his idea of justice. Whether the act is suicide or martyrdom is left for the viewer to decide.

McQueen vividly recalls hearing about Sands' decision to starve in 1981. He was 11 years old, listening to the nightly news with his parents, puzzled by the man's recurring photo and the rising tally counting the days Sands refused food.

"It was puzzling," McQueen recalled. "It was like a child at the table refusing to eat and the mother and father saying, 'You're not leaving the table until you eat.' What that child wears, when it goes to bed is controlled by the parents, it's only control of the body that he can take. It's pretty universal, and it stuck with me. When I got the opportunity to make a feature film, that was the first I wanted to do."

That universal theme of self-determination guided McQueen in his choice of the title, too, he said. Rather than call the movie "The Bobby Sands Story" or "The Prison," he called his film "Hunger" "because everyone has hunger for something, aren't they? I hope so, at least."

Think before you get inked

TATTOO from page 5

of the session.

Even after multiple treatments, thousands of dollars, and a couple of years — the tattoo may never fully go away. Some people have to just leave it alone and live with the remnants. However, if the area has lightened enough it is possible to cover the remaining ink with a flesh-colored tattoo. This is a worst-case scenario, however, and many people have had success — or at least enough success to be satisfied with the result of the removal.

So the question remains, if people knew how long and expensive a process tattoo removal was, would they think twice before getting a tattoo?

"I have one tattoo — my only regret is getting it on my back where I can't see it. I wish I could see it," said a UMass student Samantha Wojszmis. "I have taken a lot of time to figure what I want because I don't want one that I will regret later on."

It does seem that the people most satisfied with their tattoos are the ones that put a lot of thought and time into knowing exactly what they wanted. It is the impulsive decisions — names of ex-lovers, simple flowers or butterflies, meaningless tattoos to make mom and dad angry — that have led to the most removals.

Jennifer Turner can be reached at jturner a student umass.edu

Laser removal has become the golden standard for tattoo removal. While the procedure is often painful and not always entirely effective, it has replaced archaic and ineffective techniques such as dermabrasion (the scraping off, or sanding, of the skin).

UNIVERSITY PROGRAMMING COUNCIL &
STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION PRESENTS
MAY 3
SPRING CONCERT 2009
HOSTED BY COMEDIAN ROBBIE PRINCE
DOORS OPEN AT 5:30PM SHOW STARTS AT 6:30PM
TICKETS AVAILABLE AT THE MULLINS CENTER BOX OFFICE
FREE FOR UMASS STUDENTS WITH A VALID STUDENT ID AT BOX OFFICE
FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS $15
GENERAL ADMISSION $35
MULLINS CENTER
UMASS AMHERST
UNIVERSITY PROGRAMMING COUNCIL
GIRL TALK
LUPE FIASCO
ALL TIME LOW

Tragedy shakes Anaheim

By Jeff Miller
McClatchy Newspapers

ANAHEIM, Calif. — They just stood there, most of them did, formed in a circle, three deep, more than 100 people total.

It was an hour before the start of the rest of the season, and the vigil for Nick Adenhart outside Angel Stadium had grown into the most unlikely of gardens. Flowers blooming on concrete.

The scene was so poignant Friday even the ushers assigned to monitor the area stepped back at times to shoot photos with their cell phones.

The people just stared ahead, looking at the same thing but seeing the same nothing. What their eyes searched for can't be found. Not here. Not anywhere.

An answer to the simplest and most painful question of all:

Why?

That's what we're left with today, with three deaths that make no sense, with murder charges that still can't bring justice, with distant eyes and bewildered hearts. But without an answer, that answer.

Why?

There's a reason they call it faith.

"It hurts," Angels pitcher Dustin Moseley had said earlier, "to the inner most of you."

He knew him better than most of the Angels did, Moseley having met Adenhart four years ago, soon after Adenhart joined the organization.

When he heard the news Thursday of his teammate's death, Moseley said he "pretty much cried for quite awhile." Later, when he arrived at the stadium for a team meeting, he said, "The same thing started all over again."

As he spoke now, Moseley's eyes moistened and his voice quivered.

"One moment you're OK," he said. "The next it kind of comes in waves."

Many of these Angels, though, didn't know Adenhart well. He was younger than all of them and, as a rookie, generally as quiet as an off day. He made the team mostly because of injuries to veterans everyone knows.

But failing to know someone in this sport isn't the same as failing to identify with them. The paths players travel to the major leagues are littered with the same torn ligaments, Holiday Inn lobbies and lunches at Sizzler.

"I never really got to know Nick," pitcher Joe Saunders said. "But we had so much in common that it's crazy."

They shared a family connection to Maryland, an affinity for the Washington Redskins and, yes, similar missteps en route to Anaheim.

So there's a reason Saunders cried Thursday for the first time, he said, since he was 11. And why, when he left the stadium, he made a point to call his father. And why, when he arrived home, he made a point to hug his wife and daughter.

It was Moseley who said an event like Adenhart's death "takes you out of that bubble you think you're in."

But what of the rest of us? Our exposed feelings, our tears, our search for why?

Adenhart pitched four games for the Angels, only four, and had been on the big-league roster two weeks in all.

So what of the concession workers who arrived at the ballpark's main entrance together, wrapped their arms around each other and began crying?

What of Fox Sports West's Bill Macdonald, who met Adenhart just once, but during an on-air tribute for him Thursday suddenly began welling with emotion?

What of the people who Friday visited the intersection where the accident happened, placed flowers on the ground and started sobbing?

"Everyone can connect with what happened that night," Manager Mike Scioscia said. "This isn't just a baseball player or an Angel. This is a person. The pain being felt, especially by the parents, is going to be excruciating."

Angels pitcher John Lackey holds a jersey of former teammate Nick Adenhart, who was killed in an accident hours after pitching Wednesday.

They played baseball eventually Friday, Red Sox-Angels starting not as a game but as a distraction, a chance, for a short time at least, to forget about remembering.

In the first inning, Jered Weaver retired Boston in order.

In the second, the Angels scored three times.

In the fifth, they did the "Kiss Cam" on the video board, and a Friday night at Angel Stadium began feeling like a Friday night at Angel Stadium.

"We were kind of numb before the game," center fielder Torii Hunter said. "Everything was cloudy, like you weren't sure if it was real or not. But it felt good to get back out there."

We'll have to be content with that much, with the assurance baseball will move on as the Angels, given no choice, move forward.

There's no answer to why things like 22-year-olds dying happen. They just happen. So instead, let's seek comfort.

For the rest of this season, the Angels will wear a patch commemorating Adenhart's life. It's the No. 34 and his last name.

The patches were placed on their jerseys Friday, on the left side of the chest.

From that spot, the rookie pitcher will contribute in a way only he can now — Nick Adenhart, adding heart.

Marcus Jordan committs to UCF Monday

By David Whitley
McClatchy Newspapers

ORLANDO, Fla. — Tony Bennett has been there. So have such renowned performers such as Elton John, Dolly Parton and John Calipari.

With all due respect to them and Duran Duran, none holds the intrigue that will unfold at the UCF Arena next basketball season. Ladies and gentlemen, we give you the one, the only ...

MJ.

That's Michael Jordan to those of you who've been living inside a Reebok shoe the past 25 years.

His son Marcus is actually the one who'll be performing. He committed to the Knights on Monday, and here's hoping he doesn't change his mind before next Wednesday's signing day.

Even if Marcus plays more like Michael Jackson's son, this would be the biggest signing in University of Central Florida history. His mere oral commitment has elevated the phrase "UCF" into the nation's basketball conversation.

People are asking, "Why is offspring like him going to a place like that?"

A little investigating will reveal UCF's attractions. Good program, snazzy arena, no more Calipari to contend with at Memphis. And what can USF do to top this, sign one of Shawn Kemp's 18 sons?

It's all good for UCF, but the Heir Apparent news angle will quickly play out. That's what happened at Illinois the past two seasons with MJ's oldest son, Jeff.

His pedigree brought out a lot of media attention at first, especially when the team took a preseason tour of Canada. Once the season started he was just another guard trying to earn playing time. At least he was until you-know-who showed.

MJ doesn't make a lot of games, but when he does it's like Zeus coming down from Mount Olympus. His mere presence sets off a buzz usually reserved for events like a Dolly Parton wardrobe malfunction.

UCF can't comment on the signing until it's official, but Kirk Speraw must be wondering what it will be like to have MJ looking over his shoulder.

Maybe you caught the video last week of Jordan at a Charlotte Bobcats game. He sat courtside and snarled at officials, odd behavior for someone who had approximately seven offensive fouls called on him in 13 years.

If NBA refs were that deferential to Jordan, what will Conference USA officials do when they hear his booming baritone?

Chances are nothing.

MJ knows his roles. When he's at Charlotte games, he's the Managing Member of Basketball Operations. When he's at UCF games, he'll be Interested Father of Freshman Guard.

He knows Marcus doesn't need his old man turning into Little League Dad, though it might finally make UCI the lead story on SportsCenter. Illinois coaches say MJ hasn't tried to impose any hoop wisdom on them.

He'll just ask them what encouragement he can offer Jeff. Then he shows up two or three times a season and sits with the other parents in a section near the Fighting Illini bench. The only special treatment he gets is preferred parking.

When cameras pan the crowd during timeouts, the scoreboard shows ex-players, persons of interest and even Ron Zook. MJ prefers to remain out of the lens.

That doesn't mean he's anonymous. Cell phone cameras track every reaction. He'll sign autographs and chit-chat as long as you don't ask him about drafting Kwame Brown.

Between Illinois games, Bobcats games and filming underwear ads, Jordan probably won't make it to the UCF Arena more than a couple of times a season. And you can bet it won't be announced in advance.

The last thing MJ wants to do is make a spectacle of himself. That's OK, just being there is going to be spectacle enough.

Michael Jordan's son, Marcus, committed to UCF last Monday. With his arrival will come a flurry of media presence.

Plourde stays undefeated

SOFTBALL from page 10

lead to 5-0.

After Reeves reached on a walk and Michelle Libby singled, Serio hit a line drive down the third baseline that cleared the fence and stayed fair for the junior's fifth home run of the season.

UMass tacked on three more runs to enforce the mercy rule in the sixth inning.

Sara Plourde dominated the Hawks on the mound to earn her sixth win of the season.

The Freshman pitched six innings only allowing one hit while striking out eight.

Plroude, though, struggled at times with her accuracy, walking four batters.

Extra Bases: Normandin went 4-for-9 in the series, raising her conference-best average to .424 and extending her hit streak to 15 games. ... UMass A-10 winning streak is now at 46 games ... Plourde had a no-hitter intact until the seventh inning in Game 2 ... UMass two games against Temple that were scheduled for Sunday were postponed and no make-up date has been set.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

Whitney Mollica is batting .337 for the Minutewomen while hitting two home runs and 15 RBIs. Mollica also has seven walks.

Solid defensive outing keys UMass win

LACROSSE from page 10

the game ended. The offensive attack was led by sophomores Jackie Lyons and Haley Smith, who each scored four goals in the contest. Lyons added two assists, Smith had one.

Senior captain Holly Drown also had a hat trick for UMass while five other players scored one goal each.

One of the keys to the potent UMass attack is actually the play of its defense. Defenders such as Rosenzweig, freshmen Riley Perry and Jesse O'Connell, as well as defensive midfielders such as Merritt Cosgrove, are very skilled at creating turnovers and starting up a fast break.

UMass forced 12 Temple turnovers and committed only six – that differential was key to the Minutewomen being able to get on the attack and keep the ball out of their zone.

"I think our defense has amazing stick skills, and it really helps to bring it up to the attack," Cosgrove said. "They really have the ability to get the attack going because they can really take care of it on defense. I think that's been [a key to our success] this year."

The Minutewomen made it a point not to play to the scoreboard and stay aggressive.

"I think it's really important especially at the level we are trying to be at now that when you do get up, you keep up and you don't let another team ever think they have a chance," Cosgrove said.

The victory helped cement UMass' place in the upper echelon of the A-10.

In their last game against George Washington, another A-10 opponent, the Minutewomen crushed the Colonials, 18-5.

Overall the Minutewomen have outscored conference foes 64-31.

UMass needs one more victory in its next two games to the clinch the league title and the top seed in the A-10 Tournament.

Its next game is a home contest against Duquesne this coming Saturday at McGuirk Stadium.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Write for Sports!
Contact Eli at sports@dailycollegian.com.

NEED AN APARTMENT?
PUFFTON VILLAGE
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Are you looking for a job for next semester?
The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is looking to hire employees for advertising production in 2009 - 2010!
• Flexible work schedule
• Hourly salary
• Awesome people
Little to no experience in graphic design necessary!
Looking for undergrads with good computer skills, strong motivation, the ability to learn, and a keen eye.
Contact Max Detmer at Advertising@DailyCollegian.com for more information, or stop by The Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

Minutewomen lose, A–10s approaching

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

Friday's final regular season match against Temple proved to be an overwhelming defeat for the Massachusetts tennis team.

The defending Atlantic-10 champion Owls (15-5) took all seven points en route to their seventh consecutive victory while giving UMass their seventh loss in eight contests.

Although doubles play was hard fought by the Minutewomen, the Owls showed their strength sweeping all three games.

| | |
|---|---|
| Temple | 7 |
| UMass | 0 |

The No. 1 match for UMass was lost, 8-4, by sophomore Tanisha Hodgson and freshman Magdalena Ploch, who just came back from injury.

The Owls also won the No. 2 match, 8-5, against senior Laura Danai and junior Maude Lecluyse.

The No. 3 match was not as difficult for Temple, winning 8-1.

Although the Minutewomen dropped all three matches, the strong doubles competition against a dominate Owl team is a good sign heading into the A-10 playoffs on Friday, April 17.

However, doubles play can't win the match alone, a fact that the Minutewomen proved last Thursday when they won every doubles match before losing every singles match against Rhode Island.

The undesirable trend remained on Friday, as UMass' solid doubles play could not translate into singles action.

Freshman standout Magdalena Ploch returned to action Friday playing in the No. 1 match, having recovered from injury.

She was defeated by Temple's top player, Elyse Steiner, 6-2, 6-2.

UMass' Candynce Boney dropped the No. 2 match against Lucie Pazderova, 6-1, 6-0. For No. 3, Kaitlyn Carpenter lost, 6-2, 6-2. No. 4, Tanisha Hodgson, was defeated, 6-0, 6-3.

The more competitive matches came from the No. 5 and 6 matches, as Minutewomen Danai and Lecluyse both recorded 7-5 first set losses. At No. 5, Danai went on to lose her second set, 6-4, while Lecluyse lost her second, 6-2.

The loss represented an exclamation point in UMass' long struggle.

Having lost seven of their last eight contests, the Minutewomen must try to find their early season form, when they started the season 4-1.

Since then, Injuries, strength of schedule and general inconsistency has plagued UMass, who will now prepare for the A-10 Championships on April, 17.

After defeating St. Louis in last year's A-10 Championship first round, the Minutewomen went on to fall against Richmond in the third place match.

Although seedings are not yet released and opponents are unknown, UMass hopes to push farther in this year's championships.

For UMass coach Judy Dixon, her 199th career victory continues to be elusive, and her shot at reaching 200 this year will have to be achieved through strong playoff performances.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu

Magdalena Ploch lost her first two matches after returning from injury on Friday. The Minutewomen lost seven out of their last eight matches with the Atlantic 10 Tournament upcoming.

Early NBA award predictions

By John Smallwood
McClatchy Newspapers

With the NBA regular season winding down and the playoffs just around the corner, now is a good time to list my NBA Awards:

MOST VALUABLE PLAYER: LeBron James, Cleveland Cavaliers

The popular thing to do lately has been to try to turn this two-player race into a threesome.

No disrespect to Miami Heat guard Dwyane Wade, who is having a brilliant season, but the MVP can't come from a team that is barely over .500 and fighting with the Sixers for the fifth seed in the Eastern Conference playoffs.

At least not when the other two candidates are James and Kobe Bryant.

If this were for Player of the Year, Wade, who leads the league in scoring at 29.9 points and is eighth with 7.5 assists, might be my pick, but a team's success element goes with being MVP.

Bryant still does more things better than any player in the league. The reigning MVP is third in scoring (27.0 points per game) and has led the Los Angeles Lakers to the best record in the West, despite missing Andrew Bynum for a long stretch.

But this year belongs to James.

James' breakthrough season came as soon as he entered the NBA. But this season has been spectacular, as he has averaged 28.3 points, 7.7 rebounds and 7.2 assists. He leads the NBA with seven triple-doubles.

More important, the Cavaliers already set a team record for wins, are battling the Lakers for best overall record and have lost only once at home.

COACH OF THE YEAR: Mike Brown, Cleveland Cavaliers

It's laughable that Lakers coach Phil Jackson has won nine NBA titles, but been named coach of the year only once.

But I'm adding to the comedy.

Considering he's coached Bryant, Shaquille O'Neal and Michael Jordan, Jackson knows the difficulties that come with coaching a great player.

Cleveland's Mike Brown knows it's not just as simple as rolling the ball out to James. Brown, the second youngest coach in the league, at 39, continues to show his improvement in allowing James to be James while getting the rest of the team to fall in line.

Serious consideration was given to Stan Van Gundy of the Orlando Magic.

EXECUTIVE OF THE YEAR: Danny Ferry, Cleveland Cavaliers

Ferry acquired Robin to go with Batman when he orchestrated a three-team deal that brought guard Mo Williams to Cleveland in the August.

For the bargain-basement cost of Damon Jones to Milwaukee and Joe Smith to Oklahoma City, Ferry got Williams, who made the All-Star team, to team with James.

Last season, Cleveland's second-leading scorer, center Zydrunas Ilgauskas averaged 14.1 points. Williams averages 17.9 points and also chips in 4.0 assists a game.

Special notice goes to Rex Chapman, of the Denver Nuggets, who ended the Allen Iverson experiment on Nov. 3 by shipping him to Detroit for All-Star point guard Chauncey Billups.

ROOKIE OF THE YEAR: Brook Lopez, New Jersey Nets

The last time the No. 1 overall pick was named Rookie of the Year was in 2003-04, when James won.

And while I certainly wouldn't argue with top pick Derrick Rose, of the Chicago Bulls, winning, I'll go with Lopez, the 10th overall pick.

In the NBA efficiency rating, Lopez, who averages 13.0 points, 7.9 rebounds and 1.8 blocks, leads all rookies with a ranking of 17.26. Rose is second at 16.65.

MOST IMPROVED PLAYER: Thaddeus Young, Sixers

This award should go to players with no more than three years' experience. It's kind of silly for Hedo Turkoglu to be named most improved in his seventh season.

Already a surprise for his rookie contribution, Young has nearly doubled his scoring average to 15.2 points. Young had played seven consecutive games with more than 20 points when he injured his ankle on March 31.

WORST FREE-AGENT SIGNING: Elton Brand, Sixers

To be fair, the jury is still out on whether this will work long-term for the Sixers, but $87 million is a lot to pay for a guy who played only 29 games before suffering another season-ending injury. Perhaps more disturbing is that the Sixers played better with Brand out of the lineup than in it.

MOST DISAPPOINTING TEAM: Detroit Pistons

Last season, the Pistons won 59 games and reached the Eastern Conference finals. This season, the Pistons might not post a winning record and might just barely qualify for the playoffs.

The move of trading savvy point guard Chauncey Billups for the dynamic Allen Iverson has been a complete bust for the Pistons. Iverson wasn't the player he had been, and was sent to the bench before being shut down for the season.

General manager Joe Dumars can't wait for this season to end, so he can dump the expiring contracts of Iverson and Rasheed Wallace.

LeBron James is picked by many to win the NBA's MVP this season. James is averaging 28.3 points per game, 7.7 rebounds and 7.2 assists this season for the Cavaliers.

Boston University puts exclamation point after huge win

By Brad Elliott Schlossman
McClatchy Newspapers

WASHINGTON — Did anybody expect anything different?

An NCAA tournament that was filled with stunning comebacks and thrilling finishes ended just that way in Verizon Center on Saturday night.

Boston University scored two extra-attacker goals in the final minute of regulation to tie the game, then won its fifth national championship in overtime, defeating Miami 4-3.

Sophomore defenseman Colby Cohen's snap shot from the top of the left circle hit off of diving Miami defenseman Kevin Roeder and fluttered over goalie Cody Reichard's shoulder 11 minutes, 47 seconds into overtime, capping the game and a wild tournament.

It is Boston University's first national championship since 1995 and it marked just the second time since the tournament field expanded to 16 teams (2003) that the No. 1 overall seed won the title.

"Wow, what a hockey game. What a finish," Boston University coach Jack Parker said. "The finish made it an unbelievable game, obviously. It's the greatest comeback I've ever been involved in."

Miami appeared to be on track to become the first No. 4 seed ever to win a national title when Tommy Wingels and Trent Vogelhuber scored back-to-back goals to give the Redhawks a two-goal lead with less than five minutes left.

But Parker pulled goaltender Kieran Millan with three minutes and the Terriers converted twice.

Zach Cohen scored on a blind backhand from the bottom of the left circle with 59 seconds left and Hobey Baker Memorial Award winner Matt Gilroy fed Nick Bonino for a one-timer in the right circle with 17 seconds left.

Cohen was named the tournament's most outstanding player after winning it.

"I was really concerned coming in because the teams that are supposed to win the tournament usually don't," Parker said. "The team that plays great in March and April is the team that wins this tournament. Sometimes, the best team doesn't win."

This time, the top-ranked team did win. The Terriers started the season with an impressive 5-1 victory over University of North Dakota and held on to the nation's No. 1 ranking for most of the season. They posted a 17-0-2 record away from home down the stretch and were always on the right side of the crazy finishes.

The Terriers, who didn't have to play a No. 1 or a No. 2 seed in the tournament, reached the Frozen Four behind a Jason Lawrence goal with 15 seconds left in the Northeast Regional final against New Hampshire.

On Thursday, they trailed Vermont by a goal with less than seven minutes left, but got tallies from Chris Higgins and Colin Wilson in the final 6:53. And on the big stage Saturday, the Terriers pulled out another victory, leaving the Redhawks shocked and devastated.

"It doesn't feel good right now," said Miami coach Enrico Blasi, whose program had never before played for a national title in any sport. "But the sun will come up tomorrow and the guys will realize what they accomplished. It's going to sting a while, but like I said, we made history and hopefully we can continue that into the future."

UMass holds on late for win

BASEBALL from page 10

a 6-1 cushion," Stone said.

Like many times this season, UMass has been ahead or in close games late, but have had trouble closing games out and finding ways to lose.

Hot senior right-hander Mitchell Eilenberg got a ground ball to the shortstop to get his first save of the season and ninth of his career.

In the second game of the doubleheader, sophomore lefthander Nick Serino put together another strong performance.

Serino held the Billikens hitless through the first five and a third innings before a double scored a runner from third.

The Minutemen had nine hits, but could only muster one run as sophomore outfielder Kyle Multner scored on an error after a single in the top of the seventh.

Macdonald was impressive at the plate, going 3-for-4 with two doubles while Multner went 2-for-4 and a run scored.

"We had timelier hitting today, which was good, and more this weekend than we have had in a while," Stone said. "Serino pitched a great second game, [we] could've won that one too."

Even with the victory in the first game, the strongest performance for UMass was Freni's performance in the series finale.

The Minutemen found their bats from the first game, producing three runs in the first inning and added a pair of insurance runs in the top of the seventh.

Freni surrendered just one run, when J.D. Dunn plated after an RBI single by Bennett.

"We came back today and Jared pitched great, and actually got stronger as the game went on, and was sharpest at the end of the game," Stone said.

The Minutemen will travel to Fenway Park on Monday evening to face Northeastern in the Beanpot Championship.

"Its much better going into a big game like that when you have won already, and we feel good about ourselves," Stone said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

Bryan Leigh is 0–4 this season with an ERA of 3.45. Leigh has pitched a total of 28.2 innings while giving up 32 hits and 21 runs in nine appearances for the Minutemen.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Last of the Mathematicians.

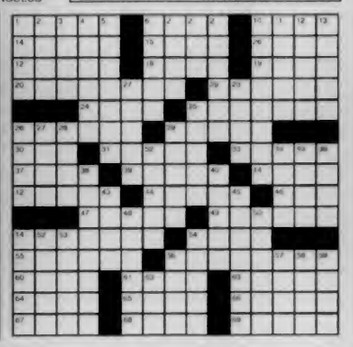
| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 8 | | 3 | 7 | | 5 | | |
| | | | | | | | 6 |
| | | | | | | 8 | 1 | 7 |
| | | 2 | 9 | 1 | | 6 | | |
| | | 8 | 2 | | 3 | 9 | | |
| | | 1 | | 4 | 8 | 2 | | |
| 7 | 3 | 9 | | | | | | |
| 1 | | | | | | | | |
| | | | 4 | | 1 | 3 | | 5 |

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst Outreach
Online or On Campus
Plan now for the summer
Session 1: June 1- July 9
Session 2: July 14- August 19
Registration Ongoing
Check our classes at Spire or UMassULearn.net

UMOC
Meetings in the Campus Center Mondays at 7 p.m.
www.umass.edu/rso/outingclub



ACROSS
1 ... over, read carefully
6 Babilonia's namesakes
10 Pixel's contraction
14 ... an inch and they'll take ...
15 Wheel rod
16 Cockney mare
17 Assigns a value to
18 Wund's longest
19 On the increasing
20 Drawings done on translucent paper
22 Cement-sand-water mixture
24 Waiter's item
25 Silvers
26 Rain after
29 Burdened
30 One of two before "hooray"
31 Lump of turf
33 Bra part
37 Angered
39 Ohio, for one
41 Unassisted
42 Apostle's name
44 Aromatic wood
46 Fitting
47 Kitchen implement
49 Attached dwellings
51 Predicaments
54 Foreign currency
55 Sixties skirts
58 Sears and Roebuck, e.g.
60 Fast period
61 Singer Berry
63 Brilliant success
64 Florist's need
65 Break bread
66 Famed tweeter
67 Oddball
68 12/24 & 12/31
69 Refine ore

DOWN
1 Section
2 Actor Epps
3 ... Hayworth
4 Chocolates
5 Wished for
6 Spicy
7 WWII power
8 Laid up
9 Appeared
10 Watery rainfalls
11 Compose
12 Slate in India
13 Lucas Jacinto and Francisco of Fatima
21 Low point
23 Lyrical works
25 Assessed
26 Small piece
27 Employ
28 In ... thrilled
29 Sweetheart
32 Major faults
34 Course
35 Dog food brand
36 Stop going upward
38 Beverage container
40 Gordon or Andreth
43 Lasso
45 Late
48 Live
50 Petty officer, for short
51 Burst of applause
52 Unsullied
53 Beautician's solution
54 Loses color
56 Southern specialty
57 Differently
58 Motor bar
59 Editor's note
62 Half of MVIII

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Quote of the Day

"A compromise is the art of dividing a cake in such a way that everyone believes he has the biggest piece."

- Ludwig Erhard

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
When the detective asks what you were doing on the night of March 20, you will have to admit to seeing Jonas Brothers 3D.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Sometimes jokes are welcome, like the one about the boy who said, "I enjoy school. It is about prinicpal of it." OK, don't use that one.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
No matter what the angry, pitchfork-wielding mob may have to say about you, I still think you're beautiful.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Whenever you feel down, take solice in the fact that your lips and eyelids have not (yet) been chewed off by a chimpanzee.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
It's always a good day when you don't wake up all sticky.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You destined to become a computer programmer named Christine Gontarez.*

*THIS APPLIES ONLY TO CHRISTINE GONTAREZ.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
7th Day: God rests.
366th Day: God writes the "Happy Birthday" song.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You failed to realize that your scab-based snack food product would be a health hazard. Whoops.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You lose cell phone connections faster than Amy Winehouse kills erections.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Did You Know??? #494: There used to be an Olive Garden right down the street from here.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
No one ever had a problem with facial hair until Gillette went and made us all self-conscious.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Do not go along with the new plan for students to get a SPIRE chip embedded in their brains. Push for SPIRE helmets instead.

HAVE YOU SEEN THIS MAN?
Call the 24-hour Comics Page Hotline at
1-800-MDC-COMX

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! by Tim Rickard

Send your requests for advice to:
comics@dailycollegian.com

Bliss by Harry Bliss

"You're certain this is where you parked the car?"

Classifieds

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office. $11.00/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 17th.

Announcement

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Announcement

ATTENTION ALL JUNIORS AND SENIORS! FALL 2009 INTERNSHIP APPLICATIONS ARE NOW AVAILABLE AT THE STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE. GET HANDS ON EXPERIENCE IN THE FIELD WORKING WITH ATTORNEYS AND CLIENTS. EARN UP TO 12 UNDERGRADUATE CREDITS, NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY, WE'LL PROVIDE TRAINING. APPLICATION DEADLINE IS APRIL 13th. CONTACT OUR OFFICE AT 545-1995 OR STOP BY AT 922 CAMPUS CENTER.

For Rent

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

For Rent

Amherst: 2,3, & 4 bedroom apartments, $1200-$2250. FREE HEAT! Great Specials! www.MillValleyApts.com or 413-253-7377

Looking for summer housing? 3 bedroom apt. in Rolling Green looking to sub-let. Clean, convenient, and quiet. Call Kate at 978-257-2549

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room eat in kitchen, pantry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 miles to campus! www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

For Sale

Toyota Celica GT Convertible, 1996, 25th Anniversary Edition, 76,200 miles, excellent condition, automatic, AC, $8900. 413-658-8687

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 13, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Balschmiter reaches feat in win

UM sweeps weekend series against St. Joe's

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's been a long time since the No.17 Massachusetts softball team lost a game (March 15, 6-3 to Florida Gulf Coast). It's been so long in fact that the Minutewomen were still playing in Florida and have yet to host a game at the UMass Softball Complex.

UMass, despite their success so far this season, has had some close calls, however.

On April 8 the Minutewomen barely beat a Boston College team, 4-3, in extra-innings thanks to the oft-reliable Carly Normandin.

Normandin hit a home run in the top of the ninth to boost UMass.

Friday, the Minutewomen found themselves in another extra-inning affair, this time against Saint Joseph's.

Kyllie Magill followed her solo home run earlier in the game by delivering a game-winning single to drive in pinch runner Davina Hernandez, pushing UMass on top, 4-3.

The Minutewomen fell behind early in the third inning after Brandice Balschmiter gave up a single to Beka Shumock and hit Laura Cardone with a pitch.

Later in the inning Brooke Durreff lined a single to left field, which put the Hawks up 2-0.

UMass, though, overcame the deficit almost immediately.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 4 |
| St. Joe's | 3 |
| UMass | 8 |
| St. Joe's | 0 |

Magill hit her second home run of the season over the left field fence in the fourth and Whitney Williams and Normandin hit back-to-back RBI singles to push UMass on top, 3-2.

The Hawks (16-15, 4-4 Atlantic 10) evened the game in the bottom of the seventh.

Dana Bieniek led off the inning with a single and later scored after a sacrifice bunt moved her to second and Durreff singled to left field, again driving in another Saint Joseph's run.

Until the 10th inning the score remained the same.

With a little help from the Hawks defense and timely hitting, the Minutewomen (23-6, 8-0 Atlantic 10) were on there way to 11th straight win.

Audrey Boutin reached base on an error to lead off the inning. Hernandez, who Boutin replaced at bat, re-entered the game to pinch run.

After a sacrifice by Williams, Magill did the rest by singling to center field to drive in Hernandez.

With the win Balschmiter tied Danielle Henderson for UMass all-time win leader with 108 wins.

Game two, though, was a bit different.

The Minutewomen, this time, jumped out to the 2-0 lead. With two outs in the top of the first, Whitney Mullica reached base on an infield single to extend the inning. Sarah Reeves capitalized after sending a pitch from Dani Gonzales over the center field fence.

UMass continued its Game 2 domination when Jessica Serio opened the game up, extending the Minutewomen's

See SOFTBALL on page 7

The Minutewomen have won 12 games in a row dating back to March 15th against Florida Gulf Coast. Whitney Williams is hitting .274 and is second on the team with 12 walks.

Brandice Balschmiter tied Danielle Henderson's all–time wins record at UMass with her 108th career win on Friday.

BRANDICE BALSCHMITER'S CAREER STATISTICS

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Wins: 108 (T-1st) | CG: 120 (2nd) | Innings: 950 (2nd) |
| K's: 1,030 (2nd) | SHO: 57 (2nd) | Walks: 236 |
| ERA: 1.03 (3rd) | Saves: 6 | Losses: 31 |

Owls grounded, A–10 bound

Minutewomen rout Temple with 7–straight goals

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the freshmen it seemed like business as usual. For the sophomores and juniors it was a big win. But for the seniors, it was a tremendous weight lifted from their shoulders.

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team had lost their last 12 contests against Temple, including last year's Atlantic 10 Championship Game. But all of those games seemed like ancient history on Saturday afternoon at Garber Field after a 16-4 rout over the Owls. As if exorcising demons wasn't enough, the win also clinched a slot for UMass in the A-10 Tournament.

"It's a really great accomplishment. It feels good to finally beat them, we lost to them last year," senior captain Jackie Rosenzweig said. "I've never beat them in my four years of playing and I'm so glad we beat them finally – it was a great team win."

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 16 |
| Temple | 4 |

Temple (1-12, 1-4 A-10) has been in a slump lately, but UMass coach Alexis Venechanos doesn't believe the Owls' struggles should minimize the Minutewomen's accomplishment.

"I know it was our seniors' mission to come into this game and pick up their first 'W' against Temple," Venechanos said. "I give Temple a lot of credit, they came in, they're a tough, well-coached team and this is a great win. Temple is a great team.

"Their record doesn't show how good they really are, at the beginning of the game it was a back-and-forth battle," Venechanos continued. "I was impressed at how well we handled their run and how we were able to make our own run."

It was a close contest for the first 15 minutes, and at one point Temple held a 2-1 lead. UMass (8-6, 5-0 A-10) then reeled off seven straight goals to take an 8-2 lead into halftime.

Despite the lead, the Minutewomen remained on the attack in the second half, scoring eight more goals before

See LACROSSE on page 7

Haley Smith is second on the Minutewomen with 29 goals on 65 shots while adding four assists. Smith has started every game for the UMass this season at the attacker position.

Starters, relievers get job done in series

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Entering the 2009 season, the Massachusetts baseball team's biggest question mark was not its offensive production, but how far UMass coach Mike Stone's starters could go into ballgames and how the bullpen could hold onto leads.

After this weekend's series victory against Saint Louis, it seems as if the Minutemen's rotation can go pretty deep and still be effective.

Junior right-hander Jared Freni pitched his first complete game Sunday evening, surrendering six hits while striking out five en route to a 5-1 UMass victory.

The win capped a strong weekend on the mound for the Minutemen (10-18, 4-8 Atlantic 10), who also won the first game of a doubleheader Saturday, 6-4, before falling in Game 2, 3-1 late Saturday afternoon.

"It was great to bounce back after a tough loss at UConn, and get the first win of the series," Stone said.

UMass fell to the Huskies in the ninth inning, 11-9, back on April 8, despite home runs by junior outfielder Brian Baudinet and senior third baseman Jim Macdonald.

Senior second baseman Adam Tempesta also recorded his 200th career hit as a member of the Minutemen in the defeat.

Senior southpaw Mitchell Clegg (2-1) went a career-high 8.2 innings, surrendering four runs on eight hits while striking out nine.

After the Minutemen scored three runs in the top of the first, the Billikens (19-16, 6-5 A-10) got one of them back on back-to-back singles by Cody Cotter and Ryan Bennett. After a sacrifice bunt moved Cotter to third, a sacrifice fly brought him home in the bottom of the first inning.

Clegg was dominant over the next seven innings, surrendering just three hits while gaining run support in the fifth and sixth innings.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 6 |
| SLU | 4 |
| SLU | 3 |
| UMass | 1 |
| UMass | 5 |
| SLU | 1 |

"Mitchell Clegg pitched a great game, it wasn't so easy at the end of it, but we were able to get it done with

See BASEBALL on page 8

Jared Freni pitched his first complete game Sunday, giving up six hits while striking out five. Freni has a 1–1 record this season.

Want up-to-the-minute updates
On all-things UMass Sports?

Follow the Sports Section of the Daily Collegian on Twitter!

UMassSportsMDC

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 62 LOW: 33 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, APRIL 14, 2009

'Working' with culture

BY JOSH WALOVITCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two University of Massachusetts student groups and an Isenberg School of Management professor will host a panel discussion tonight, to promote increased cooperation and preparation for students as they enter the global workforce.

The Jewish Leaders in Business (JLB), Muslim Student Association (MSA) and SOM Dean Anthony Butterfield have invited five UMass professors to "Culture in the Workplace" to talk about their unique cultural backgrounds, their personal challenges and inspirations and how the experiences shaped their professional lives.

The faculty members presenting their personal stories are economics professor Jerry Friedman, legal studies professor Iza Hussin, women's studies professor Miliann Kang and SOM professors Brian Brown and Amir Kouzehkanani.

"This event is especially symbolic because the tension between Muslims and Jews is well known, and to have a partnership here on campus makes this event significant," said UMass Chancellor Robert C Holub, who plans to attend the event.

"I think this event is exemplary and something that will be very positive for this campus. Anytime you are promoting understanding of cultural differences it's going to be positive, we have a global economy and workplace, people are going to have to learn about other cultures and how to get along with other individuals," he added.

Holub, who is Jewish, said he grew up in academia and did not see himself as disadvantaged, as his faith had never prevented him from getting hired or receiving grants.

He said he is aware, however, of the history of some American educational institutions and their records of discrimination based on cultural differences.

"English literature, for example, you couldn't be Jewish and get a job at certain universities. Harvard would not hire, up until a certain point, people who had studied English literature and were Jews," added Holub. "Jews couldn't really understand English literature because they were culturally different, that was the attitude."

"Having disagreements and

See CULTURE on page 2

President of MSA Subhan Tariq, left, stands with Chancellor Robert Holub, Dean of SOM Anthony Butterfield, President of JLB Sam Akiba and advisor of JLB Scott Nielson.

Budget plan '09 detailed

UMass to see $10 million in cuts, professors to be rehired

BY LISA DEBENEDICTIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Although the official state legislative budget plan will not be finalized until July 1, the University of Massachusetts has outlined its own plans for next fiscal year's budget.

UMass Chancellor Robert C Holub sent out a campus-wide e-mail Monday, informing faculty and students that despite the money, UMass is expecting from the federal stimulus, the University still plans to make budget cuts totaling more than $10 million, with more than $5 million coming from cuts in administrative and support services.

"The budget will streamline administrative costs and focus as many resources as possible on faculty hiring and retention going forward, and includes creation of a funding source for 45 faculty hires over the next four years using reallocated funds created through reorganization and administrative cuts," said Holub in his e-mail.

Despite the cuts in spending, Holub added, there will no longer be any large-scale layoffs; rather, they plan to rehire many of the lecturers and teaching assistants who have been informed that they may not be able to return.

"The federal government, through the guidelines for use of the stimulus/stabilization funds for higher education, has been clear that this support has been designed to save and create jobs," said Holub.

As indicated by the UMass system and the administration in recent weeks, there is still plans for a rebate on the $1,500 fee increase, but it remains largely dependent on how much UMass will receive from the stimulus package.

Also included in the budget plan are roughly 2.3 percent cuts to the academic schools and colleges, 4 percent cuts to non-academic units and a plan to create a new fund that will allow the University to hire 45 new faculty positions over the next few years.

"This funding was generated through administrative reorganization in the central administration and in the schools and colleges," said Holub. "The 45 positions will be tied to the implementation of a new strategic hiring process designed to link future hiring of new faculty with areas of excellence and need, and to coordinate the faculty positions in the planning of the offices of research, facilities and development."

Although the cuts appear to be far less severe than previously expected, the budget remains dependent upon the outcome of the final approval of the state budget.

The Massachusetts House of Representatives budget is due this week, and the Senate will not finish the budget until the summer.

Holub reinforced in his e-mail the importance of advocacy and support from UMass alumni, parents, faculty and students in the coming months.

"In the last few months here at UMass Amherst, we've aggressively pursued federal support, advocated on Beacon Hill and communicated directly with our alumni and parents of students, urging their active support," said Holub.

"We have stood with faculty, staff and students in arguing forcefully for support of UMass Amherst as a wise investment for the Commonwealth, and will continue to do so," he said.

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebenedictis@dailycollegian.com.

Town of Amherst discusses 4 person occupancy bylaw

Town committee members discussed the possibility of amending the Amherst town bylaw that limits four unrelated people to a household yesterday, when representatives from the UMass Student Government Association were present and advocated for off–campus students.

BY WILLIAM MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Representatives from the Student Government Association were present at last night's Amherst Select Board meeting to advocate for University of Massachusetts students living off campus.

Last week, the town began enforcing a bylaw that limits residences to four unrelated inhabitants. One UMass student was forced to move from her five-bedroom house as a result of town residents' complaints that there were five people listed on the lease.

SGA commuter senator Derek Khanna spoke in the open address portion of the meeting and asked the board to stop the enforcement of the bylaw, saying it is unconstitutional and disproportionately affects student residents.

In last Wednesday's SGA Senate meeting, Khanna put before the governing body a motion to create a taskforce to specifically deal with the town government. The group is a temporary committee organized in direct response to the town's actions.

Khanna said he hopes to draft a bill with fellow senators that would ask for the repeal of the bylaw.

In the meantime, he said, "We ask the select board to stop kicking students out of leases immediately."

William McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com.

Police investigate local woman's death

A local resident fell from McGuirk Alumni Stadium on Friday in what police believe was a suicide.

Deborah Diggs, 59, of 101 Blue Hills Road in Amherst, was seen walking along the upper parts of the stadium Friday by the Temple University women's lacrosse team. Members of the team called the University of Massachusetts Police Department when they discovered Diggs' body on the ground near the stadium.

Diggs was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital, where she was pronounced dead.

UMass spokesman Ed Blaguszewski said it is believed that Diggs had no connection to the University.

William McGuinness

Diggs, above, was killed after falling from McGuirk Stadium.

ARTS & LIVING
"WTAM" REVIEW

Collegian staff writer Brian Wood reviews Cymbals Eat Guitars's newest album. The band set the bar high for future releases.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
BUZZER BEATER

UMass senior Tim Balise's goal with less than a second remaining forced overtime against Hobart on Saturday. The Minutemen needed just 23 seconds of OT to claim a thrilling 7–6 win.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION
COLUMN | NOT HAPPY? THEN VOTE

Subhan Tariq is tried of hearing students complain about the Student Government Association only to ignore elections.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
TWITTER | FOLLOW SPORTS AND NEWS

If you hang out in cyberspace and wonder what The Collegian is up to every second of every day, be sure to follow CollegianNews and UMassSportsMDC on Twitter.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIX
Issue 46
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Mekoni
Business Manager Alex Wasserzug
Production Manager Michael Sarkas
Night Supervisor Kate Olsson
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Dettmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Leigh Greaney
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenswaike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Ass't Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Prowse
Classified Manager Emily Stapleton
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Korzwara
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Tuttimen
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Lamard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo P.J. Stanley
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gollmerster
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Widmer

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on contributing revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Alpha Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Daily Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been recognized with Live Wire and Pacemaker awards for design and layout. All material printed is the property of the Collegian. Subscriptions are available for $170 per semester, $300 per year. Delivery is available for $200 per semester, $350 per year. Subscriptions are available for $100 per summer session. Delivery is available for $120 per summer session. Subscriptions are available for $220 per year. Delivery is available for $250 per year. Subscriptions are available for $120 per summer session. Delivery is available for $150 per summer session. Subscriptions are available for $240 per year. Delivery is available for $280 per year. Subscriptions are available for $140 per summer session. Delivery is available for $170 per summer session. Subscriptions are available for $260 per year. Delivery is available for $300 per year. Subscriptions are available for $160 per summer session. Delivery is available for $190 per summer session. Subscriptions are available for $280 per year. Delivery is available for $320 per year. Subscriptions are available for

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 14, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Collegix

Michael Cartwright

Thanks to countless television ads in which sedated geeks float across Earth's greenest pastures, we're way too familiar with today's prescription drugs. From Lipitor (for high cholesterol) to Ambien (for sleeplessness) to Wellbutrin (for Seasonal Affective Disorder), we know there's a pill for pretty much everything. With that being said, today's column space has been purchased by Collegix, a pill that increases your test-taking skills while making awkward walks of shame a lot easier to tolerate.

(Does it really work? Of course not, but remember, pharmaceutical companies have millions of people buying pills "if diet and exercise fail." It was only a matter of time before Pfizer designed a pill specifically for college kids.)

Like other placebos, Collegix must now supply potential users with a list of side effects longer than Fyodor Dostoyevsky's "The Brothers Karamazov." Here is the official warning:

Collegix may cause back pain, occasional neck stiffness, muscle cramps, mild to severe stomachaches, and incontinence. You may become nervous, constantly referring to yourself (in addition to atheist) as being "more nervous than a long-tailed cat in a room full of rocking chairs."

Your thoughts may become darker than Tim Burton reading Edgar Allan Poe in the corner of an opium den. You may wish to hold your girlfriend or boyfriend close and gently whisper lyrics to "Earth Angel" into his or her ear. You may feel obligated to hash Bill Bennett in the kneecaps with a billy club.

You should not attempt to walk across University Drive. You should not operate a motor vehicle if taking additional pills, such as Flintstones vitamins, Ritalin or Molly.

While discussing politics, you may find yourself accusing friends (particularly likeminded individuals) of being a "despicable [redacted]."

Your existence may feel like it's being rotoscoped for a Richard Linklater film. Men may feel an urge to attract Amherst Cougars. Women may feel an urge to attack wide-eyed Tiger Cubs. You may feel compelled to send a letter to The New York Times, one that kindly urges Mr. David Brooks to update his inset photo.

Wild fits of regurgitation may occur if exposed to Linguistics 401, Introduction to Syntax. You may find yourself resonating with Nick Flynn's 2004 memoir, "Another Bullshit Night In Suck City." (Do not encourage Hucketman.)

Prolonged use of Collegix may cause you to feel like your life is going to end, and while this thought isn't likely to be beneficial at the time, it's still quite truthful.

Reported cases are rare, but pilltst may cause a rapid drop in IQ, turning your mind into the rough equivalent of Miss South Carolina's on four or five shots of NyQuil. The possibility of feeling sympathy for Troy Duffy or Pete Rose is increased. You may experience nightmares involving Margaret Cho and Paula Poundstone.

You may start to believe that you truly comprehend the conclusion of "Donnie Darko." You may feel a strong desire to fly a zeppelin, but only while sporting a pair of goggles worn by Moses Malone during the 1983-84 NBA season. You may get attached to uber-geek culture, which often results in (not ironically) blasting Weezer's Pinkerton while reading Wil Wheaton's blog.

If you no longer know your name, contact a doctor immediately, and discontinue college-level consumption of alcohol (unless you've recently been dumped by your significant other for your roommate.)

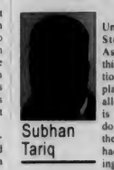
Avoid all salad dressing, marinara sauce and microwave popcorn. (I not endorsed by the late Paul Newman. Groin pain is common; grabbing one's crotch a la Michael Jackson circa Home Alone 2 (or a Devil Rays centerfielder in mid-July) is to be expected.

Avoid eating Wings Over Amherst, Bueno Y Sano, Pho Noodle and Antonio's. Under no circumstances should you eat at Baku's African Restaurant. You may feel the need to enter a "chill drum circle" somewhere between Orchard Hill and Central, introducing a new, mellow tune entitled "Talkin' Like Spicoli & Smellin' Like Patchouli."

You may see the virgin Mary floating in a bottle of Smirnoff. Do not operate heavy machinery. Swifters and Braun electric toothbrushes may prove to be heavy machinery.

If you find yourself experiencing any of the aforementioned side effects simultaneously, be sure to quadruple the dosage.

You should not take Collegix for more than four years.



Prolonged use of Collegix may cause you to feel like your life is going to end, and while this thought isn't likely to be beneficial at the time, it's still quite truthful.

So, really, what's the risk? Life's full of side effects.

Ask your primary care physician (or University Health Services nurse) if Collegix is right for you.

Michael Cartwright is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mcartwri@student.umass.edu

Stop complaining, start voting

Subhan Tariq

So often I hear that the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association isn't doing anything or that it is dysfunctional. People love to complain about how money is allocated or how the system is run, but no one wants to do anything about it. Over the past few months, I have had the honor of becoming a SGA senator and have quickly learned how the SGA functions and how much it actually does.

People love to criticize and yet no one really wants to do anything about it.

During this past SGA elections cycle, I had the opportunity to talk to some campaigners who informed me that they spoke to approximately 70 percent of the students on campus. They went to every dormitory, letting students know about their candidate and encouraging them to go out and vote. Similarly during the election, I noticed campaigners waiting near polling places encouraging people to vote.

The result? A mere 12 percent of the student population turned out to vote. Pathetic, eh?

Let's compare the results of the recent SGA election to the 2008 presidential election, where 55 percent of the eligible population turned out to vote. Let's even compare that to congressional elections, where a mere 28 percent of the population turns out to vote on our Congress.

The fact is if you want "change," you have to vote.

We were told a lot about change during the past presidential election, and change starts with a vote. Students, if they are truly worried about what the SGA is doing or how it is run, need to do something about it and vote.

It's funny to me, anyway, to see that tons of people love to criticize the SGA, but few put up real alternatives. Do we really want the administration that pushed for fee increases without seeing how much federal aid we would receive to handle the student government, or do we want to handle our activities our own way?

Students, if they are truly worried about what the SGA is doing or how it is run, need to do something about it and vote.

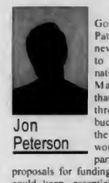
Yes, the SGA has some flaws, but what are you doing about it? What sorts of things are you doing to help the SGA become more efficient and ultimately more responsible to the students on campus?

Are you attending senate meetings or talking to your senator? Do you know who your senator even is, or that you even had a representative?

Many will say, "Well, the elections process is too hard and, therefore, we should push for an online form of voting." To that, I would agree, but let's take a look at the system right now. We have paper voting at all dining commons and at the Campus Center. That means at this point most, if not all, of the student population had the ability to vote – and only 12 percent did.

Let's compare that to the online form, where you just click a name without knowing who the person is or what they stand for. Also, the current version of what is being offered for the online voting system is incredibly insecure.

People quickly point out that it has never been hacked, but that's because no one has ever needed to hack that system. The online system would be based on the OWL system, which is mired with flaws in coding.



The fact is that if students wanted to vote, they would vote. It is incredibly easy to show your ID card and vote. The students don't have to do any of the labor intensive work required in counting votes or writing an elections report.

The fact is that the SGA works hard, often deep into the night in order to help the students and for nothing more.

Senators aren't paid for their work and often end up sacrificing a lot of their time to draft legislation, as well as attending countless meetings. Their tireless efforts often get lost when people who love to complain criticize the SGA. To senators, your efforts aren't lost, at least not with those who actually care and vote.

Subhan Tariq is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached a tariq@student.umass.edu

Stealing the future's money and freedom

Jon Peterson

Suppose that Gov. Deval Patrick made a new initiative to support the national parks in Massachusetts that were being threatened by budget cuts. In the first year, he would permit the parks to submit proposals for funding so that they could keep, essentially, the same budget, while they were getting visitors at levels that would not allow them to keep those services otherwise.

In the second year, the parks would be advised to propose additional expenses to add to the "park initiative" that they felt would create additional benefits to the people who were going to the parks.

In the third year, the managers of these parks would be told that it was their "duty, that by providing a public service to their constituents in Massachusetts, that they provide only the highest quality parks at reasonable rates."

They would be told that they would be scorned by the public and that they would be overridden by the governor himself if they chose to balance their own budgets and spend little more than they were bringing in.

Assessments of the park managers would include attention to how many new proposals they brought forth to the Governor's Office, how much they talked about the enjoyment of the visitors as opposed to how much economic value they felt the parks brought to the community, and whether they took advice and associated from people who were already using the parks on how they could make the parks more enjoyable.

You could also replace national parks with military bases. Consider that the governor informs the base commanders in Massachusetts that they would be supported because of a strong public interest in them so that they did not need to make changes to the budgets of bases, like Otis Air Force Base. A few years down the road, these bases might be taking advice from the governor on how best to interact with the public.

They would receive money for their bases only if a significant amount of it went to providing services to interested people on issues totally unrelated to their duties as the military.

Our governor and SGA are saying, "It is our right to enslave other people and our children to pay off our debts, so that we don't have to balance our budgets now."

Anyone who thinks this sort of thing couldn't happen in Massachusetts is seeing it happen now with the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association, and Gov. Patrick's newly enacted "rebate" that will use money from the federal stimulus bill to counteract the $1,500 fee increase.

The fee increase – voted upon by the UMass Board of Trustees – balances the school's budget as it is now being cut by some $10 million, along with most other state agencies.

While each of those things is definitely important, the only difference is in the focus of the concern – namely education – as opposed to the parks or the military.

Certain groups, such as the 100 students who hiked from the different UMass campuses to Dartmouth for the Feb. 27 meeting of the Board of Trustees, have felt that this is a form of victory for their cause.

However, this form of thinking about how much of a role the government should have in funding things such as education, the military and different organizations is fundamentally flawed. It is based on a growing attitude of people's "rights" toward higher education, as well as the role of responsibility and balance in the spending of the UMass system.

The $1,500 fee increase is not an arbitrary number. It is based off of what is necessary for UMass to balance spending that doesn't lead to lost jobs or services at the schools.

The amount that the SGA and other protesters feel that the government should pay for of their education is, however, $15,000.

The current fee amount, is not some magic number which represents the pinnacle of affordability and services; it is what we have needed – along with what we have received in state aid – to have what we do now.

And because $15,000 is not some magical number, it leads us to believe that the people who were opposed to the fee increase would also be opposed to most other fees that they would pay for their education.

If they could get their way, who is to say the government would not entirely pay for everyone's education? But what this money pays for doesn't magically appear, and the money would have to come from somewhere. That place is taxes and – in the case of the stimulus bill – inflation.

Taxes are on everyone, whether or not they want to go to college. Taxes would be imposed on people who may never have gone to college. Taxes are on people whose quality of life is less than that of the people who they were putting through college. Taxes are being put on the elderly, on businesses that cannot afford to hire any new people, and on our children, who will be paying for our education a generation from now when interest payments on the hundreds of billions of the stimulus bills start being called in.

So should we consider education a right, to be paid for by our children, if we were to take it up to a vote and pass it by 51 percent to 49 percent? What if the vote was 90 percent to 10 percent?

Should we be able to mandate that even a single, unborn person should have to pay for the education that we are receiving now?

The answer is that we should not, and cannot justifiably tell people that what we want now is more important than their freedom to work and spend their money on whatever they feel is good decades from now.

Our governor and SGA are saying, "It is our right to enslave other people and our children to pay off our debts, so that we don't have to balance our budgets now."

And if you wouldn't want to commit your children to paying for the park service or for the military, then you cannot stand for the mandatory higher education fees that we have now.

Jon Petersen is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jpeterse@student.umass.edu.

Keeping it real when higher-ups just don't understand

Nick O'Malley

Now, this is a story all about how my life got flip-turned upside down. And I'd like to take a minute, just sit right there I'll tell you how Ngozi Mbawuike became the princess) of the Student Government Association. Mostly Massachusetts, born and raised.

In our dorm rooms is where we spend most of our days. Chillin' out maxin', relaxin' all cool and paying thousands of dollars just to be in school, when a couple of laundry machines that were up to no good started making trouble in our neighborhood.

They got a hold bunch of complaints and a coalition of Christopher Faulkner, David Robertson and Stephen Thomas-Brown all got scared and said, "We're getting new dryers because these things don't work."

The SGA whistled for a meeting and when it came near, the laundry contract was near-void and had vague replacement clauses.

If anything we could say that this deal was rare. But they thought, "naw forget it, yo home to new contracts."

They pulled out of the meeting past 7 or 8 and they yelled to Automatic Laundry, "Yo holmes, smell ya later." Take a look at the kingdom, no matter what ends up there.

Every thing leads back to the president of the SGA. Will Smith aside, that's the gist of it.

Even though the movement for the change in the laundry contract, one of the best things the happen on this campus for a while, was spearhead by area governors of the University of Massachusetts, the responsibility for the SGA decision will fall on Mbawuike. And with that goes the credit.

Unfair? Yes. Does it happen all the time? Yup.

Take this year's stimulus package, for example.

The bill itself is over 1,000 pages. Did President Barack Obama have time to write that? No way, he's too busy filling out his NCAA bracket and doing that president thing.

Why is it then, that everyone is calling it Obama's bill? True, that was his idea, but no one sees the coalition of congressmen that put all the work into getting the details of the bill.

Chillin' out maxin', relaxin' all cool and paying thousands of dollars just to be in school, when a couple of laundry machines that were up to no good started making trouble in our neighborhood.

Let's say that a few politicians have spent the past 13 years fighting for a bill that would either legalize marijuana or make abortions illegal (pick one) and the bill eventually reaches the president's desk and gets passed.

The headline the next day? "President signs bill." The same thing applies to UMass. Regardless of what happens behind the scenes to work on particular measures, it all goes through the president.

And with the SGA, getting a reasonable idea passed is no simple task. Remember online voting? That's why the motion of the laundry contract getting through with little resistance is such a big deal. Was it Mbawuike's idea? No.

But just like any other SGA decision, if the laundry deal blows up, no one's going to be complaining to the people that wrote the bill. It's on the president's head.

Of course, this works negatively as well. When Chancellor Robert C. Holub took office, he inherited a student body that was unhappy with the administration, to say the least.

He also walked into a school where construction is going up everywhere while the school's budget is dissolving.

Most of the issues started snowballing before he even got here. Yet, you don't see people complaining about former UMass Chancellor John Lombardi. It could be said – very easily – that the credit for what gets done in most organizations is far too concentrated at the top.

But then again, so is the blame. Just look at former President George W. Bush, you could blame the man for literally any problem while he was in office.

I mean, if Al Gore was elected, there so wouldn't be any global warming. It isn't just there being misallocated credit at UMass or even in the White House.

The truth is that this happens all the time and no one takes issue with it. That is until your boss takes credit for your work. Outside of complaining to your friends, writing a passive-aggressive Facebook status and posting on fmylife.com, though, there's not a whole lot you can do.

There's an old saying, "Heavy lies the crown." While all of the positive attention is aimed toward the Obama administrations or Holub administrations of the world, so is the ire of angry parents and students.

So, though The Man might be hogging the spotlight you've worked so hard to get, it's nice to know that if the scaffolding falls from the ceiling, it's not going to be on your head.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

IF THERE'S SOMETHING IN YOUR LIFE YOU'RE NOT JIGGY WITH, WE'RE HERE FOR YOU. (EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM)

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 14, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A little bit of everything

Hawk and Hacksaw, GZA and Parts & Labor perform in Mass.

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

It's always a strange instance when a member of a prominent band strikes out on his own, ditching a previous aesthetic for something completely different.

As is the case of Jeremy Barnes, a current accordion player and percussionist who teams up with violinist Heather Trost to form the Balkan-meets-klezmer-meets-gypsy outfit A Hawk and a Hacksaw.

At one time, Barnes was the drummer of Neutral Milk Hotel, a Louisiana band formed from Elephant 6 from Athens, Ga. The band's influence arches over genres and generally unites music fans hungry for a skuzzy piece of pop music to attach their emotional self to. Now Barnes is at the forefront, his band having performed at Pittsfield's Copperworks last Sunday, April 5, with Jets and Snakes.

Drummer and accordion player Jeremy Barnes is best known for his role as the drummer in Neutral Milk Hotel, above.

The venue seemed too perfect for A Hawk and a Hacksaw – a dusty structure obviously converted from its former warehouse status, recycled into another productive venture by Pittsfield residents Justin and Hank Delsignore. It focuses on do-it-yourself community innovation, bicycle culture and green technologies. The venue is alcohol-free and therefore one of Berkshire County's few all-ages music venues.

The show itself was a blast. Barnes and Trost inching into the crowd from the back and playing acoustically in the thick of the audience for a couple of numbers before moving to the stage. After settling in slightly above crowd-level, the duo was joined by a trumpeter and tubist, also parting the crowd on their way to the stage. The four squeezed out a bunch of songs, including much dancing in the front few rows.

When the time came to call it a night, the crowd begged for more, cheering, clapping and stomping so hard years that old dust was budged from its home atop exposed beams, descending down onto the audience. The four played a well-earned encore once again in the crowd, furthering the Copperworks' intent to build community and raise arts awareness.

Hawk and a Hacksaw performed at a particularly perfect venue on Sunday at Pittsfield's Copperworks. The former warehouse was transformed into the venue supporting do-it-yourself community involvement.

GZA

Last Wednesday, a living legend stepped into Pearl Street's ballroom, Wu Tang Clan's mastermind the GZA, or simply Genius. While he never took a true leadership role in the Clan's collective lineup of hip-hop masterminds, he eventually struck out on his own to create arguably the best Wu Tang solo record, 1995's "Liquid Swords."

After an excruciating hour-long wait between openers Vain and the main act, GZA's DJ strolled up to the turntables and spun the opening sequence from GZA's 1995 classic." ... One night the Shogun sent his ninja spies to our house. They were supposed to kill my father ... but they didn't. That was the night everything changed ..."

After performing the title track "Liquid Swords," he spit verses from "Duel of the Iron Mic" and "Cold World," the crowd erupting in chants of "Wu Tang" spliced with "50 sucks," referring to GZA's supremacy in his feud with rapper 50 Cent. GZA didn't have to go on with the verses from his 50 Cent dis-track "Paper Plate," he let its beat ride during the encore – the audience was already educated on the matter.

Though GZA complained of the lack of a cordless microphone, claiming he usually jumps into the crowd and would choke someone if he jumped in with the cord attached, he did throw back to the early '90s in his verses from the Wu Tang classics "Clan in Da Front" and "Protect Ya Neck," both from the Clan's debut album "Enter the Wu-Tang (36 Chambers)." He also dipped into Ol' Dirty Bastard's "Shimmy Shimmy Ya" and possibly the Wu Tang Clan's most infamous cut "Triumph."

The night ended with more "Wu Tang" chants, the crowd reverently throwing up their hands in the shape of W's. It may have been quite the wait between acts, but in the end no one seemed to care – they experienced a sliver of the legendary Wu Tang Clan.

Parts & Labor

The Blue Wall Cafe was transformed into what a random passerby could have mistaken as a true music venue Saturday night. There was a rickety stage, a decent light set-up, and even a fair-sized crowd who showed up for WMHA's most recent free concert, which featured Parts & Labor and openers Talk Normal, both of which call Brooklyn home.

Talk Normal began its set a little while after attendees began filing in, suffering harsh, sludgy guitar and bass, echo-manipulated vocals and propulsive drums. The band's overall tone was dark and a bit creepy. Sarah Register's vocals coming off a bit Kim Gordon-esque – buried deep down beneath filth and fuzz she finds a sultry tone tempting and sensual.

Parts & Labor were set to play nearly as soon as Talk Normal was finished. WMHA seems to have a crush on the band. Dan Friel used to live in Amherst ("True story, my ninth grade dance was in this building downstairs"), which is not to say that his local status alone informed WMHA to name its record "Receivers" the station's album of the year. The station also booked

See EVERYTHING on page 6

Setting the bar high

Cymbals Eat Guitars debuts 'Where There Are Mountains'

By Brian Wood
Collegian Staff

New York's Cymbals Eat Guitars self-released debut "Why There Are Mountains" screams of better days for indie rock. At its best moments, it is reminiscent of "The Lonesome Crowded West," "You Forgot It In People" and "Perfect From Now On." At its barest, it's still an ambitiously crafted debut by a band that sounds seasoned well beyond its years. It's strangely proverbial, yet oddly novel in its own right.

One listen to "WTAM" and it's clear that Cymbals Eat Guitars are not wide-eyed 20-somethings playing with their high school record collections firmly strapped to their sleeves. While the album noticeably draws heavily from an array of modern classics, the group shows its collective affinity toward exploring largely-forgotten and uncharted territories throughout.

This and the band's relative greenness (lead vocalist Joseph D'Agostino was just 19 when the hand was formed) is what makes the album so enthralling. They balance chaotic and melodic elements masterfully and at no point on the debut do they venture into mere mimicry. An impressive feat for any release let alone a debut.

Album opener "And the Hazy Sea" serves as the perfect barometer of things to come. Overflowing with layer upon layer of exuberance and guitar fuzz, D'Agostino transitions from yelps and yells into softer melodies and hack with moments of falsetto accompaniment sprinkled about for good measure. D'Agostino possesses all the brashness of a young Isaac Brock but with slightly more refined – yet no less effective – delivery.

D'Agostino shines again on fellow standout track "Indiana." The song builds slowly over an introductory sea of haze before launching into a spirited number propelled by playful piano and layers of horns and unexpected sci-fi synthesizer. "Cold Spring" and "Wind Phoenix" are both sprawling and dense arrangements that exemplify the band's eerily natural gift for tempo-shifts and expert integration of strings and horns.

"Why There Are Mountains" is a rare release that hits on all the nostalgic high notes with newfound authenticity while still existing in itself as a glimpse of things to come. The hand has set quite a precedent to surpass, as if living up to the likes of Modest Mouse and Built to Spill wasn't hard enough already.

Cymbals Eat Guitars's "Why There Are Mountains" was self-released on January 20.

Brian Wood can be reached at bwood@dailycollegian.com.

Cymbals Eat Guitars self-released its debut album, "Where There Are Mountains" on Jan. 20. The band's album set the bar high for future releases.

Salonen's notes will linger

Finnish director to close out career with Stravinsky's work

By Reed Johnson
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Some months ago, Los Angeles Philharmonic President Deborah Borda and her colleagues were discussing a parting gift for the Phil's outgoing music director, Esa-Pekka Salonen.

"You know, when Leonard Bernstein retired from the New York Philharmonic, the board of directors and the orchestra gave him a speedboat," Borda says with a laugh. "And somehow, we thought we could do something a little more meaningful."

So rather than churning up waves, the 50-year-old Finnish conductor will leave a far more durable mark on the music world as the namesake and inspiration for the orchestra's new Esa-Pekka Salonen Commissions Fund. The fund is for the express purpose of supporting the commissioning and performance of new works, which Salonen has championed during his 17-year Los Angeles tenure.

His close friend, architect Frank Gehry, made the first donation.

But that's only one measure of the legacy that Salonen will bequeath as he departs to concentrate on his composing career. Having held his position longer than anyone in the orchestra's 90-year existence, Salonen has helped shape virtually every aspect of the Phil's output, from concert repertory and recordings to a wealth of fruitful collaborations and special projects.

Throughout this season, the Phil has highlighted those various facets, and the effort climaxes this month with valedictory programming that, Borda says, "epitomizes the artistic soul of Esa-Pekka."

Last Tuesday, Salonen conducted a program for the Phil's Green Umbrella series that included four world premieres as well as his own whimsical "Floof," from 1982. He was scheduled to follow that with three performances of his Violin Concerto, a world premiere, bookended by György Ligeti's "Clocks and Clouds" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 5.

There have been, and will be, more tributes: successive new releases from Deutsche Grammophon, friends jetting in from all over the world to raise a glass to the still youthful maestro. (He was so busy he declined an interview request.) And, after a year away, Salonen will take up a new artistic relationship with the Phil that Borda says will be "ongoing and regular."

His successor, Venezuelan Gustavo Dudamel, will inherit the music director title this fall.

This week, Salonen will close

See SALONEN on page 6

Esa-Pekka Salonen, director of the Philharmonic, will close out his career this week with four performances of two works by Stravinsky.

GZA, Wu Tang Clan's mastermind, performed at Pearl Street last Wednesday to a crowd that appreciated his mimicking of hip-hop artists like 50 Cent.

Friel vocally strong

EVERYTHING from page 5

Friel to play their Fall Kickoff show last September with The Death Set. Friel, along with bassist and vocalist B.J. Warshaw, started the band back in 2002 and have absorbed a couple members in the process, currently riding a line-up filled out by drummer Joe Wong and guitarist Sarah Lipstate.

Parts & Labor started out their relatively brief set with "Satellites," the first track off "Receivers," a seven-minute excursion into the band's signature sound which incorporates Lipstate's guitar washes, Wong's spot-on drumming, Warshaw's thudding bass, and Friel's squealing synthesizer work-outs. While the band is often pegged with such genres as "experimental" and "noise," their sound truly comes down to a couple basic tennets of song – punk rock energy and pure pop tendencies. While the band builds layer upon layer of sound, the outcome is sonically pleasing more often than it is harsh. The only big difference that sets them apart from an exciting rock band is Friel's synthesizer knob-twisting instead of just another guitar.

Friel's has his vocal game down, harmonizing surprisingly well with Warshaw. Both of their vocals echo, becoming more powerful than if they were left alone. Their voices eagerly supplement the commonplace spurts of noise, really filling out the sound to give it a more urgent quality. Also adding to urgency was the red light the band was bathed in for the duration of the show, each standing member making the stage sway a bit each time they stomped out the beat.

Parts & Labor pounded out "Nowheres Nigh," another highlight from "Receivers," along with "Fractured Skies" and "The Gold We're Digging" from their 2007 album "Mapmaker."

Friel announced a new song, which may have actually been the best number of the evening, tentatively called "Hurricane." The theme of the evening was that of controlled chaos, framed perfectly by Parts & Labor. Friel showed interest in returning to the area for more solo shows as well as hinting at working with a bagpipe-playing friend on new music, which is to justify one's claim that Parts & Labor is an experimental band.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

Salonen leaves legacy

SALONEN from page 5

out the long goodbye with four performances of two works by Stravinsky, an artist whom he reveres so much that he once pondered buying the emigre's former Beverly Hills abode when it came up for sale. First up will be "Oedipus Rex," in a collaboration with director Peter Sellars, one of Salonen's longtime creative partners; tenor Rodrick Dixon as Oedipus, and mezzo-soprano Anne Sofie von Otter as Jocasta. The thrones and masks are designed by Ethiopian contemporary artist Elias Sime, whose work is on view at the Santa Monica Museum of Art.

Of course, Salonen's Los Angeles legacy can't be summed up in one concert, or a series of them. During his tenure, he hired 54 members of the orchestra. Under his leadership, the Phil earned international recognition both for its performances and its risk-taking programming.

With Borda and the Phil's board members and staff, he repositioned the institution to take advantage of its cutting-edge new home, the Gehry-designed Walt Disney Concert Hall.

But among Los Angeles residents, Salonen also will be remembered for maintaining poise and focus during the uncertain mid-1990s, when it appeared that the institution's ambitious visions of growth and expansion might have been mere pipe dreams, and outside suitors stood poised, checkbook in hand, to try to lure Salonen away.

"He stuck with the institution through thick and through thin," Borda says. "And it would have been very easy for him to have left when it looked as if Disney Hall would not be built, when that entire project collapsed. But he stuck by it; he fought for it; he stayed here."

So what will he leave us with this week when he sets down his baton?

Not with "fireworks and bombast," Borda says.

Instead, Salonen has chosen "Symphony of Psalms," Stravinsky's three-movement choral work. Like "Oedipus," it has a time-worn text. But while "Oedipus" imparts a tragic caution, "Psalms" imparts hope.

"So he ends quietly," Borda says. "He ends with a prayer."

A prayer from an artist who, for an orchestra and a city, has already been a blessing.

Esa-Pekka Salonen will leave a legacy behind in Los Angeles after hiring 54 orchestra members and gaining international recognition for his risk-taking programming at the Philharmonic.

Extreme marketing

Freese releases 1st solo ablum 'Since 1972' for a pricey sum

BY RANDY LEWIS
LOS ANGELES TIMES

Drummer Josh Freese has spent a fair amount of time in high-flying circles as a member of Nine Inch Nails, Guns N' Roses, the Replacements, a Perfect Circle, the Vandals and Devo. So when it came time to release his new solo album, "Since 1972," he figured it couldn't hurt to aim high, without ignoring the average punk or alt-rock enthusiast who might want to check it out.

Freese created a tiered program in which the more buyers pay for the 11-song collection, the more they get for their money. For $7, fans can download the album from his Web site, but for anyone with a spare $75,000 kicking around, Freese has assembled a package that leaves the word "premium," well, cold.

For that princely sum, the Buddy Rich of alternative music promises that he will:

– Write and record a five-song EP about the buyer's life.

– Join the buyer's band (if he or she has one) and go on tour.

– Take the buyer to a flying trapeze lesson with his former NIN cohort guitarist Robin Finck.

– Send the purchaser home with one (but only one) of his own drum kits.

And he'll throw in a T-shirt.

"It's gotten a lot of attention, which is good," said Freese, 36, between bites of a Cobb salad at a cafe in the Long Beach, Calif., airport recently. "I'm not expecting that anyone will really buy the most expensive packages, but if they do, I'm up for all of it. It's not like I'm gonna go, 'Oh, dude, it was just a joke.'"

Freese dreamed up the extreme marketing plan himself, crafting other packages that run from $15 to $20,000, and he was invited to talk up the promotional scheme last week during an extended segment with Los Angeles radio station KROQ-FM.

It was valuable airtime for the musician, who recently played with Devo at South by Southwest in Austin, Texas – the band is readying its first studio album in nearly 20 years – and then jumped right into sessions for a solo effort with another former GNR member, guitarist Slash.

"My girlfriend and I joke that we're scared for different reasons," he said. "I'm nervous that no one's going to care and no one's going to buy any of them; she's nervous that I'll have to eat at P.F. Chang's three weeks in a row with weird super friends."

Freese wrote and plays about 99 percent of the music on "Since 1972," with a little help on the occasional guitar part from such pals as Pearl Jam's Stone Gossard and the Vandals' Warren Fitzgerald. As a songwriter, he shows an affinity for muscular alt- and hard-rock grooves laced with crisp guitar hooks under his engaging, chipper vocals.

There's a hit of Paul Westerberg's lovable loser in "Blood on Your Knuckles," a hint of Vandals' silliness in "I Wanna Cheat on My Girlfriend," and a taste of the bona fide wistfulness that often accompanies age and responsibility in "2002."

He concedes that his unusual pricing strategy is elevating the kinds of grass-roots marketing ploys many musicians have adopted in recent years to an entertainingly absurd level.

"People are doing things right now similar to this but on a more serious note," he said. "So why not go crazy with it, where I'm giving people foot massages, taking them to Disneyland and letting them take items out of my closet?"

The closet raid kicks in at $2,500. For a more modest investment of $15, buyers get a physical CD and DVD.

It's the trade-off he's willing to make to get the word out about "Since 1972," and to keep his music career moving along while he resets his priorities to focus on the 8- and 2 1/2-year-old sons and 2 1/2-month-old daughter he's raising with his girlfriend.

To that end, Freese recently quit the post he has held since 2005 as the drummer for Nine Inch Nails. "I already miss being in Nine Inch Nails," he said. "But every time I mention it, my girlfriend reminds me that I'd be much more bummed if I were calling her from the road while I was on tour in Singapore and missing my family. And she's right."

Scaling back the amount of time he's away from home also allowed him to finish songs that had been in various stages of completion since his 2000 debut solo album, "The Notorious One Man Orgy," for which he also handled virtually all the parts.

As for the rollout of the new material, it's an extreme example of the entrepreneurial spirit that's flowering in the midst of the record industry's economic woes.

"I'm smart enough to know that it's pretty ridiculous to think anyone's going to buy the most expensive ones, but at the same time I would love nothing more than to get to deliver on them," he said, flashing a still-boyish smile. "Realistically, I'm not nearly famous enough to where it'd become a problem. Trent (Reznor of Nine Inch Nails) couldn't do it; the Chili Peppers couldn't do it – they'd have to make 7,000 phone calls the first day."

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

NEED AN APARTMENT?
PUFFTON VILLAGE
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

ESB Online

Anytime Banking
NOW OPEN ACCOUNTS and do all your banking at ESB Online 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. Have immediate access to the account information and bill paying capability you need with just the click of a mouse.
bankesb.com
Easthampton Savings Bank | 413.527.4111
Member FDIC

Phillies' broadcaster dies after 39 seasons

BY JIM SALISBURY
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

WASHINGTON – Just before noon Monday, Harry Kalas got off the Phillies team bus and walked into the visiting clubhouse at Nationals Park. As always, Kalas said something nice to everyone he encountered, then stopped, pulled out a pen and wrote down the lineup which had been posted on the wall.

Lineup in hand, the Hall of Fame broadcaster rode the elevator to the press level and began preparing for a 3 p.m. game between the Phillies and Washington Nationals.

He never got to call the game.

Kalas, in his 39th season as narrator of all things Phillies, collapsed in the broadcast booth around 12:20 p.m. EDT and died after being rushed to a nearby hospital. He was 73.

Phillies players and personnel were informed of the news by club president David Montgomery in a somber pre-game meeting.

"Sadly, I must confirm that we lost Harry," Montgomery, fighting back tears in a hallway outside the visiting clubhouse, told a large group of reporters who had assembled after hearing that Kalas had been stricken.

"We lost our voice today," Montgomery added. "Harry loved our game and made a tremendous contribution to our sport, and certainly to our organization."

Players were not available for comment before the game.

"They're stunned," Montgomery said. "When you have a presence like Harry Kalas, anybody that played for us, it's an immediate point of connection with our club because Harry is the Phillies."

The Nationals organization, hosting its home opener, honored Kalas' memory with a moment of silence before the first pitch.

"He was the heart and soul of the Phillies organization," the stadium public address announcer told the crowd.

As Kalas' picture flashed on the video board above rightfield in the hushed stadium, a fan shouted: "We love you, Harry."

Chris Wheeler, a longtime broadcaster partner of Kalas, wondered if the Phillies could have played if the game weren't on the road.

"It would have been hard to play if this had been a home game," Wheeler said.

The team did not say how the broadcast team will be affected by Kalas' absence.

Wheeler recalled that he joined the Phillies in 1971, the same year as Kalas.

"He helped me when I went into the broadcast booth," Wheeler said. "He taught me a lot about how to be a professional and do the job. We spent a lot of time together."

Wheeler recalled joining Blue Bell Country Club in 1994. His first foursome included Kalas, Richie Ashburn and Kalas son, Todd. Harry Kalas and Ashburn, of course, were a broadcast tandem beloved by Phillies fans. Ashburn died after calling a game in Sept. 1997 at Shea Stadium.

"Harry was a great friend on and off the field for many years," Wheeler said. "When you have a presence like Harry Kalas, anybody that played for us, it's an immediate point of connection won the Ford C. Frick Award and was honored by Baseball Hall of Fame at its 2002 induction ceremony.

Despite his fame, he was always approachable and down to earth.

"It was a real inspiration to watch the way he connected with our fans," said Scott Franzke, who joined the broadcast crew in 2006. "He never said no to an autograph or a photo with somebody. He never turned down being somebody's outgoing voice mail message when they asked him to. And he didn't have to do any of that at this stage. He was already Harry the K.

"It was a real lesson to remember why we do what we do – and it's for the fans. We love the game. We make a very good living at it. It's a fun job to do. But we do it for the fans."

Franzke fought back tears.

"The players come and go, but 'Outta here' lasts forever," he said. "Harry was always first class in the way he treated people. He was a genuinely nice guy."

Broadcaster Larry Andersen recalled his friendship with Kalas, which started during his playing days. Kalas was always one of the boys, sitting on the back of charter airplane flights, sharing a cold one with the players.

"No matter who the player was, there was always a silver lining," Andersen said. "He never got on a player. He never badmouthed a player. He always looked for the positives, no matter who it was. The players appreciated that. He found the good in everybody and especially the players. He loved the players. He loved being around them."

Harry Kalas had been the lead broadcaster for the Phillies since 1971. He collapsed in the broadcaster booth Monday afternoon and passed away despite being rushed to a hospital. He was 73.

Andersen said Kalas did not ride in the back of the plane en route to Denver and then to Washington on this roadtrip.

"It was like, 'It's not right,'" Andersen said. "It was almost like an omen. He was always in the back row. He wasn't feeling well. You could see it. You could tell."

Kalas had heart surgery stents were put in – in February, but was able to make it to spring training by mid-March. However, he appeared thinner than normal, even weak.

After he collapsed Monday, Kalas was found on the floor of the broadcast booth by Rob Brooks, the team's director of broadcasting. Emergency medical technicians treated Kalas on the scene and rushed him to George Washington University Hospital, where he was pronounced dead at 1:20 p.m. Cause of death was not immediately known.

Andersen said his favorite memory of Kalas came after the Phillies won the NL East title in Pittsburgh in 1993.

"Him leading us in High Hopes," said Andersen, crying. "I don't ever want to hear that song again."

Bob Boone, the catcher on the Phillies glory years teams that culminated with the 1980 World Series championship and now an executive in the Washington front office, said he saddened by Kalas' death.

"Harry was part of that whole Phillies growing-up period in the 1970s," Boone said. "He was one of us when we won the World Series in 1980. To lose him is shocking."

Florence highlights rejuvenated squad

FLORENCE from page 10

Many freshman athletes need a year or more to adapt to playing at the college level, but Florence has had little trouble making the transition. One person who was not surprised by Florence's performance is UMass coach Alexis Venechanos, who knew what she was getting when she recruited Florence out of King Philip High School in Norfolk, Mass.

"I'd seen her play for a couple years now working at camps. I thought she was among the top goalies out of the state of Massachusetts," Venechanos says. "I had been very impressed with her confidence and her maturity when I was recruiting her.

"She was very focused and very goal-oriented," Venechanos continues. "I think she definitely brought that to her freshman year at UMass."

Venechanos knows a talented goalkeeper when she sees one. Before she became a coach, she spent four years playing goalie at Maryland, and started in net during the Terrapins' undefeated championship season in 2001. When she accepted the head coaching job at UMass, Venechanos knew she needed to find a goalie for the future.

Florence was happy to accept the invitation. Not only did she become fast friends with all the players on the team, but she knew having a former championship goalie as her coach would be a tremendous advantage.

"The biggest thing for me was the girls on the team. I just felt really welcome when I came here," Florence says. "I wanted to go to a bigger school and felt like there was a lot of potential on this team. "I just think that [Venechanos] has a lot of determination," Florence continues. "She wants to win as much as I do, and plus, for me, I knew she was a goalie in college so I knew I would get a lot of coaching from her."

Venechanos spends at least 20 minutes at the start of every practice working one-on-one with Florence, making sure that she remembers to do all of the little things correctly.

In particular, she wants Florence to be vocal.

In lacrosse, the goalkeeper has to be the eyes in the back of her teammates' head. Florence has the best view of the field and can see when a teammate is being chased from behind, or whether her defender has to cut off the angle or if an opposing player is uncovered. All this information is vital to helping her team win, but she must remember to always let her teammates know what is happening. It's something Florence feels she has really improved on.

"Alexis has really helped me to become more vocal this year," Florence says. "I mean, I knew I was supposed to talk, but she has really told me what to say and when to say it."

The communication is made even easier because of how quickly Florence has become friends with everyone on the team. It helped that she was one of 13 incoming freshmen, so she wasn't alone in making the transition.

But it is her laid-back personality that allows her to fit in easily, and also stay calm amidst the chaos of a lacrosse game.

"We all really like [Florence] because she's easy to get along with and she's a fun girl," Cosgrove says. "She's probably the most laid-back person on the team – she plays goalie that way, where she appears really calm [no matter the situation]."

Although she is laid-back, her teammates don't consider her to be shy at all. Everyone talked about how open she was when she first arrived, saying that she was very outgoing with everyone.

While lacrosse is a big part of her life, it is not the only piece that matters. Florence has been playing guitar since the eighth grade and had even started an amateur band with teammates Hopkins and Cosgrove.

The band, called "McCleezie," started one random day when Florence heard Cosgrove and Hopkins making up some joke songs – she got her guitar and they just started playing.

"We were just messing around one night and we realized that we have some talent and Flo is an awesome guitar player," Cosgrove said.

Cosgrove is the band's lead singer, Florence mainly plays the guitar but occasionally plays the bongo and Hopkins uses maraca's and is the bands dancer.

The band is mostly just for fun and a way for the girls to keep the team loose. Still, all the players feel the camaraderie the players develop off the field is crucial to having good chemistry on the field.

The chemistry is evident in UMass' past two victories, an 18-5 thrashing of George Washington on April 5 and a 16-4 rout over defending A-10 champions Temple last Saturday. Florence and her defense were in sync with Florence throughout both games. The defense kept the ball away from Florence most of the game, and Florence was there to make the saves on whatever shots slipped through.

In those two games she allowed seven goals (reserve goalkeeper Leslie Barber allowed two late goals against GW) and made 21 saves, an almost unheard of 3-to-1 save-goal ratio.

As good as she has played in her first year, everyone agrees that she will only get better as time goes on, and she still has three years of eligibility left.

"She has been seeing a lot of shots early in her career, and that's going to help her in the future. I think the sky is the limit for her," Venechanos says.

After the best conference start in UMass history, the Minutewomen now find themselves one win away from clinching the A-10 regular season title and the top seed in the A-10 tournament.

It's too early to know how far the Minutewomen can go this year, but no matter what happens next, UMass has found its goalie of the future.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Katie Florence, right, passes the ball during the Minutewomen's game against No. 1 Northwestern on March 25. UMass lost that game 22–5, but Florence has been stellar since then, allowing just 29 goals in her next five games.

Careers to Career
Where does your $$ go?
monster
Tuesday, April 14 • 5:30 p.m.
Memorial Hall
(between Herter Hall and the Chapel)
Find out more on the appropriate use of credit, designing your own budget, taking control of student loan debt and how to protect yourself against identity theft!
FREE ADMISSION • FREE REFRESHMENTS
Supported by Cape Cod Chips and Kraft/Nabisco
Register at UMassAlumni.com/students today!!
Don't miss the drawings!
Gift card to the UStore - Seniors exclusive $1,000 cash prize*
*$1,000 drawing to be held at Commencement Ball on May 21, 2009
Sponsored by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association and the Student Alumni Association
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Are you looking for a job for next semester?
The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is looking to hire employees for advertising production in 2009 - 2010!
• Flexible work schedule
• Hourly salary
• Awesome people
Little to no experience in graphic design necessary!
Looking for undergrads with good computer skills, strong motivation, the ability to learn, and a keen eye.
Contact Max Dettmer at Advertising@DailyCollegian.com for more information, or stop by the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

Senior heroics gives UMass 7-6 OT win

LACROSSE from page 10

later, Jim Connolly became the hero. The senior's first goal of the game – 26th of the season – was his second late game-winner of the year and gave the Minutemen their fourth consecutive victory to stay undefeated in the ECAC.

The game-winner came almost immediately after Joe Reale won the faceoff battle against Hobart's Nunzio Doldo. Reale dropped the ball and midfielder Stephen Zorkers picked it up and raced down the field, taking a shot. Silberlicht stopped it, but Connolly corralled the rebound and put it in the back of the net.

Neither Connolly nor Balise could have been the hero without UMass senior goalkeeper Doc Schneider out-dueling Silberlicht. The Hobart stopper made a career-high 18 saves, but Schneider did even better, stopping 21 shots in the victory.

Cannella credited Schneider and the defense in keeping the Minutemen in the game, especially after they stumbled in the first 15 minutes.

"Doc was great all day. First quarter, we were awful. We didn't clear the ball well at all and we didn't have any offensive possessions. Doc really kept us in the game," Cannella said. "It was just another really strong performance for 60 minutes from him."

UMass wasn't alone in its early struggles. Hobart (5-5, 1-4 ECAC) couldn't get anything going offensively in the first half either and UMass went into halftime with a 2-1 lead. Both teams had more luck in the second half, with the Statesmen eventually taking the lead for the first time at 6-5 with 4 minutes, 59 seconds remaining.

After UMass' Rory Pedrick missed two shots in the final minute – giving the Statesmen the ball with less than 30 seconds to go – it appeared that Hobart would hold on for the win.

But senior defender Diogo Godoi gave the Minutemen one last chance – with a vicious hit on Hobart's Alex Caton that jarred the ball loose. UMass rushed down the field and Balise's shot tied the game in the final second.

It was his third goal of the game and 21st of the season. Connolly, Art Kell, Ryan Marcus and Will Jeffery all added one for UMass. Jeff Colburn and Chris Pederson each had two to lead the Statesmen.

Cannella believes his team can learn a lot from the victory.

"It was a hard-fought game – we've been in a bunch of those already," Cannella said. "But when you have the ability to come back in the situation that we were in and pull it out, when I didn't think we really good one offense all day – that gives the team a lot of confidence."

Game notes

UMass moved up to No. 12 in the media poll, which was released on Monday. … Schneider was awarded with his fifth ECAC Defensive Player of the Week Award on Monday … Jeffery's goal was the first of his career.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Tim Balise scored a game-tying goal against Hobart with one second left in regulation. The score was allowed despite the Statesmen's protest the goal came after the buzzer and UMass went on to earn a 7–6 victory.

Brandice Balschmiter will get a well-deserved rest Tuesday after picking up her 106th career win last weekend against Saint Joseph's.

Potent offense leading UM

SOFTBALL from page 10

has posted an ERA less than 3.00.

Junior Danielle Bertolette has gotten the most starts for PC this season, posting a 4-13 record with a 3.22 and has issued 74 walks compared to 58 strikeouts. Jennifer Maccio, who is second on the team with 10 starts this season, and Alicia Grosso (five starts) haven't performed much better this season. Maccio has a 4.38 Era and has given up nine home runs this season. Grosso, meanwhile, has a 3.03 ERA, but opponents are only hitting .253 against her.

Regardless of who takes the mound for the Friars, the Minutewomen, who boast the top offense in the A-10, are likely to take advantage of it.

Leadoff hitter Carly Normandin, the team's offensive catalyst, leads the conference with a .424 batting average. Three other players, Kyllie Magill (.355), Michelle Libby (.338) and Whitney Mollica (.337) are hitting over .300.

Plourde, who threw a one-hit shutout against Saint Josephs, was named A-10 Rookie of the Week while fellow freshman Magill earned UMass-Dinn Bros Athlete of the Week honors. Over the three games this weekend, Magill went 6-for-13 (.462) while driving three runs and hitting a home run. Magill has been red-hot since UMass started conference play. The second baseman is batting .478 in A-10 play and has two home runs and 10 RBIs.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Leadoff hitter Carly Normandin has been a force for the Minutewomen. She leads the Atlantic 10 with a .424 batting average.

Missed chances lead to loss

BASEBALL from page 10

was safe as Tempesta plated the third UMass run.

Mike Gedman pinch-hit for Garrett Glashoff, but Zehr got Gedman to ground out to first base, ending the Minutemen's hopes of a successful Beanpot title defense.

The ninth inning wasn't the only time UMass had an opportunity to score. In the first inning alone, Tempesta hit a single down the left field line after Boone struck out and advanced to second when Baudinet drew a one out walk.

Macdonald couldn't advance Tempesta when he hit the first of his four fly-outs in the game and right fielder Mike Donato struck out to end the inning.

The Minutemen had another scoring chance in the third, when Boone was hit by a pitch and Baudinet drew another walk, but Macdonald again hit a meaningless pop fly.

"It's too bad we didn't do something like that earlier because we had some great fan support," Stone said of the ninth-inning rally. "We had a good comeback in the ninth, but prior to that we didn't do anything. We didn't come up with any hits with runners in scoring position and we just fell flat."

Although Leigh had a shaky third inning, he worked his way out of jams and got key strikeouts. In the first, second and fourth innings specifically, the Huskies had runners in scoring position and Leigh ended the inning with Ks.

The only Minuteman besides Tempesta to record a multi-hit game was Conley, who went 2-for-3 with a run and a stolen base.

UMass' next game will be on Wednesday at home against Boston College (23-12) at 3 p.m.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Mike Gedman and the Minutemen had several chances early to score runs, but the Huskies' pitching kept them off balance.

Want up-to-the-minute updates on all-things UMass Sports?

Follow the Sports Section of the Daily Collegian on Twitter!

UMassSportsMDC

Minutewomen tune up at Knecht Cup

By Jeffrey Engmann
Collegian Correspondant

Massachusetts crew coach Jim Dietz described last weekend's Knecht Cup race in Camden, N.J., as a dress rehearsal for the upcoming Atlantic 10 Championship. The Minutewomen, however, did not compete like it was simply a walk-through.

Under less than desirable conditions, the Minutewomen turned in one of their grittiest performances of the season as the women's varsity-8 finished third overall in the petite final, which took place on Saturday. The second varsity-8 finished fifth in the grand final in spite of the rainy conditions on both days.

The Minutewomen's effort left Dietz with the impression that his team will be ready when its time for the big stage.

"I think it was a pretty strong effort. The goal was to race as hard as we can as many times as we can," Dietz said. "Fatigue started to set in through the second day, but overall the depth of the squad looked really good."

Depth is something that will be crucial next weekend when the team tries to capture its 13th A-10 title. Dietz plans to have a crew in every race.

In an event in which more than 50 schools competed, Dietz used the race a way to get his entire team some quality experience.

"The season is so short that you have to get out and experiment," said Dietz "[Over the weekend], most of the varsity people raced four times. Everyone got at least three races in. We got out there and were pushing hard throughout the weekend."

The most dominant performance came from the Minutewomen varsity quad, who finished in first place. The team finished with a time of 8:40.8 – a sizable 39.7 seconds ahead of the second-place finishers, the Villanova University.

The quad is lead by two seniors Samantha Smith and Airlina Burrill, and features sophomore Teresa O'Brien and Julia Richter. Dietz had high praise for members of that quad.

"The people in the first quad have so much skill it was not surprising at all," Dietz said.

The Minutewomen will try to capture their 13th conference championship next weekend in Camden, N.J.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached a jengmann@student.umass.edu.

UMass coach Jim Dietz hopes that the Knecht Cup last weekend will help prepare the Minutewomen for the A-10 championships.

ScandihoOvians
Scandinavian Design for Living
A Beautiful Lifestyle
Friend us on Facebook
22 Strong Avenue
Northampton, MA
(413) 584-0002
255 Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA
(413) 254-0004
scandihoovians.com

Don't be cross with me.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 5 | | | | | | | | 9 |
| | 9 | 4 | | 5 | 3 | | 7 | |
| | | | 2 | 4 | | | | |
| 4 | 2 | | 5 | 8 | | | | |
| | 5 | | | | | | 6 | |
| | | | | 7 | 4 | | 2 | 3 |
| | | | | 2 | 7 | | | |
| | 8 | | 1 | 3 | | 9 | 4 | |
| 2 | | | | | | | | 1 |

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Lid
4 Phobia prefix
8 Puzzle
13 Ump's call
14 Piece of concrete
15 Refrigerator name
16 "Laugh-In" regular
17 Goose egg
18 Bookish types
19 Military advisers
22 Sock part
23 Wobble
24 Disintegrate
26 Golfer abbr.
29 Improves
32 Horse's place
36 Fuel, for some
38 Tide flowing backward?
39 Relaxation
40 Alps or Andes
41 Descartes or Cody
42 Early 3rd-century year
43 On equivalent
44 Foreign pops
45 Bathroom hangings
47 Mr. Strauss
48 Districts
51 Bear witness
56 Achy and feverish
58 "Not ___ skeptic's words
61 Uncovered
63 Smallest
64 Nasal detection
65 Mediterranean island
66 ___ Mountains
67 Say no to
68 Viper
69 Hobgoblin
70 Syllables for the uncertain

DOWN
1 Crumbly cake
2 Bizarre
3 Fold
4 Edward's kin
5 Wooden shoe
6 Member of royalty
7 Too heavy
8 Mel Gibson film
9 Scottish uncle
10 Sam Malone, for one
11 Take apart
12 Encl. sent with a manuscript
13 Lenten practice
20 Greenish blue
21 Exchange
25 Steel plow inventor
27 ___ meet
28 Of a musical sound
30 Feast
31 Holy milieu
32 Splinter group
33 Tortilla—fried, filled & folded
34 "The Streets of Laredo" opener
35 Ply
37 Vivien
40 Tabulate
44 Type of bread
46 Blank, for some
48 Enormously
50 Wash
52 Hidden treasure
53 Down producer
54 Casino features
55 Amateur
56 Ancient Peruvian
57 Fail
59 Buck abroad
60 Unexpected obstacle
62 Season for 44 Across

Spring Break Trip 2010
Buy 1 Get 1
Packages Listed Are Discounted
April 15, 16, 17, 18
Any Purchase on April 15, 16, 17, 18 at Any Beach Club
Will get your name entered to win
Winner announced May 5th
www.beachclubtanningstudios.com

Quote of the Day

"Free advice is worth the price."

- Robert Half

HAVE YOU SEEN THIS MAN?
Call the 24-hour Comics Page Hotline at
1-800-MDC-COMX

this monkey will be shot into space unless you go to:
dailycollegian.com/comics

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! by Tim Rickard

Bliss by Harry Bliss

"If it makes you feel any better, she hit on my sister, too."

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Give that homeless fellow some money. He deserves it after washing your windshield, and filling out your 1040 tax forms.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Go Twitter about something. Douchebag.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Put some pep in your step, you slacker. Stop making excuses about your "broken femur" and "full body cast."

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Domino's Pizza is the best pizza ever. Fo' real.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Wasted (adj.): Used to describe someone inebriated by alcohol. Ex: "I am always wasted when I write the horoscopes."

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Considering what websites you've been visiting lately, it should come as no surprise you got a textually-transmitted virus.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Did You Know??? #45: Funny hats will not get you laid. Novelty T-shirts should work, however.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
They call you "Big Bird" for a reason, but strangely enough it has nothing to do with the yellow bird suit you wear around.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
When in doubt, always side with safety, and assume that your date is a transvestite. There's only one way to know for sure.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Today is going to have more drama than a Lifetime movie, but without all the whining.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Did You Know??? #72: Green tea is full antioxidants, but many varieties lack THC altogether.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Happy Holidays!

Classifieds

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office. $11.00/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 17th.

Announcement

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Announcement

ATTENTION ALL JUNIORS AND SENIORS! FALL 2009 INTERNSHIP APPLICATIONS ARE NOW AVAILABLE AT THE STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE. GET HANDS ON EXPERIENCE IN THE FIELD WORKING WITH ATTORNEYS AND CLIENTS. EARN UP TO 12 UNDERGRADUATE CREDITS, NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY, WE'LL PROVIDE TRAINING. APPLICATION DEADLINE IS APRIL 13th. CONTACT OUR OFFICE AT 545-1995 OR STOP BY AT 922 CAMPUS CENTER.

For Rent

Amherst: 2,3, & 4 bedroom apartments, $1200-$2250. FREE HEAT! Great Specials! www.MillValleyApts.com or 413-253-7377

Petrichor

For Rent

Looking for summer housing? 3 bedroom apt. in Rolling Green looking to sub-let. Clean, convenient, and quiet. Call Kate at 978-257-2549

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug. or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

For Sale

Toyota Celica GT Convertible, 1996, 25th Anniversary Edition, 76,200 miles, excellent condition, automatic, AC, $8900. 413-658-8687

Senior heroics gives UMass 7-6 OT win

LACROSSE from page 10

later, Jim Connolly became the hero. The senior's first goal of the game – 26th of the season – was his second late game-winner of the year and gave the Minutemen their fourth consecutive victory to stay undefeated in the ECAC.

The game-winner came almost immediately after Joe Reale won the faceoff battle against Hobart's Nunzio Doldo. Reale dropped the ball and midfielder Stephen Zorkers picked it up and raced down the field, taking a shot. Silberlicht stopped it, but Connolly corralled the rebound and put it in the back of the net.

Neither Connolly nor Balise could have been the hero without UMass senior goalkeeper Doc Schneider out-dueling Silberlicht. The Hobart stopper made a career-high 18 saves, but Schneider did even better, stopping 21 shots in the victory.

Cannella credited Schneider and the defense in keeping the Minutemen in the game, especially after they stumbled in the first 15 minutes.

"Doc was great all day. First quarter, we were awful. We didn't clear the ball well at all and we didn't have any offensive possessions. Doc really kept us in the game," Cannella said. "It was just another really strong performance for 60 minutes from him."

UMass wasn't alone in its early struggles. Hobart (5-5, 1-4 ECAC) couldn't get anything going offensively in the first half either and UMass went into halftime with a 2-1 lead. Both teams had more luck in the second half, with the Statesmen eventually taking the lead for the first time at 6-5 with 4 minutes, 59 seconds remaining.

After UMass' Rory Pedrick missed two shots in the final minute – giving the Statesmen the ball with less than 30 seconds to go – it appeared that Hobart would hold on for the win.

But senior defender Diogo Godol gave the Minutemen one last chance – with a vicious hit on Hobart's Alex Caton that jarred the ball loose. UMass rushed down the field and Balise's shot tied the game in the final second.

It was his third goal of the game and 21st of the season. Connolly, Art Kell, Ryan Marcus and Will Jeffery all added one for UMass. Jeff Colburn and Chris Pederson each had two to lead the Statesmen.

Cannella believes his team can learn a lot from the victory.

"It was a hard-fought game – we've been in a bunch of those already," Cannella said. "But when you have the ability to come back in the situation that we were in and pull it out, when I didn't think we really good one offense all day – that gives the team a lot of confidence."

Game notes

UMass moved up to No. 12 in the media poll, which was released on Monday. ... Schneider was awarded with his fifth ECAC Defensive Player of the Week Award on Monday. ... Jeffery's goal was the first of his career.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Tim Balise scored a game-tying goal against Hobart with one second left in regulation. The score was allowed despite the Statesmen's protest the goal came after the buzzer and UMass went on to earn a 7-6 victory.

Brandice Balschmiter will get a well-deserved rest Tuesday after picking up her 106th career win last weekend against Saint Joseph's.

Potent offense leading UM

SOFTBALL from page 10

has posted an ERA less than 3.00.

Junior Danielle Bertolette has gotten the most starts for PC this season, posting a 4-13 record with a 3.22 and has issued 74 walks compared to 58 strikeouts. Jennifer Maccio, who is second on the team with 10 starts this season, and Alicia Grosso (five starts) haven't performed much better this season. Maccio has a 4.38 Era and has given up nine home runs this season. Grosso, meanwhile, has a 3.03 ERA, but opponents are only hitting .253 against her.

Regardless of who takes the mound for the Friars, the Minutewomen, who boast the top offense in the A-10, are likely to take advantage of it.

Leadoff hitter Carly Normandin, the team's offensive catalyst, leads the conference with a .424 batting average. Three other players, Kyllie Magill (.355), Michelle Libby (.338) and Whitney Mollica (.337) are hitting over .300.

Plourde, who threw a one-hit shutout against Saint Josephs, was named A-10 Rookie of the Week while fellow freshman Magill earned UMass/Dinn Bros. Athlete of the Week honors. Over the three games this weekend, Magill went 6-for-13 (.462) while driving three runs and hitting a home run. Magill has been red-hot since UMass started conference play. The second baseman is batting .478 in A-10 play and has two home runs and 10 RBIs.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Leadoff hitter Carly Normandin has been a force for the Minutewomen. She leads the Atlantic 10 with a .424 batting average.

Missed chances lead to loss

BASEBALL from page 10

was safe as Tempesta plated the third UMass run.

Mike Gedman pinch-hit for Garrett Glashoff, but Zehr got Gedman to ground out to first base, ending the Minutemen's hopes of a successful Beanpot title defense.

The ninth inning wasn't the only time UMass had an opportunity to score. In the first inning alone, Tempesta hit a single down the left field line after Boone struck out and advanced to second when Baudinet drew a one out walk.

Macdonald couldn't advance Tempesta when he hit the first of his four fly-outs in the game and right fielder Mike Donato struck out to end the inning.

The Minutemen had another scoring chance in the third, when Boone was hit by a pitch and Baudinet drew another walk, but Macdonald again hit a meaningless pop fly.

"It's too bad we didn't do something like that earlier because we had some great fan support," Stone said of the ninth-inning rally. "We had a good comeback in the ninth, but prior to that we didn't do anything. We didn't come up with any hits with runners in scoring position and we just fell flat."

Although Leigh had a shaky third inning, he worked his way out of jams and got key strikeouts. In the first, second and fourth innings specifically, the Huskies had runners in scoring position and Leigh ended the inning with Ks.

The only Minuteman besides Tempesta to record a multi-hit game was Conley, who went 2-for-3 with a run and a stolen base.

UMass' next game will be on Wednesday at home against Boston College (23-12) at 3 p.m.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Mike Gedman and the Minutemen had several chances early to score runs, but the Huskies' pitching kept them off balance.

Want up-to-the-minute updates on all-things UMass Sports?

Follow the Sports Section of the Daily Collegian on Twitter!

UMassSportsMDC

Minutewomen tune up at Knecht Cup

By Jeffrey Engmann
Collegian Correspondent

Massachusetts crew coach Jim Dietz described last weekend's Knecht Cup race in Camden, N.J., as a dress rehearsal for the upcoming Atlantic 10 Championship. The Minutewomen, however, did not compete like it was simply a walk-through.

Under less than desirable conditions, the Minutewomen turned in one of their grittiest performances of the season as the women's varsity-8 finished third overall in the petite final, which took place on Saturday. The second varsity-8 finished fifth in the grand final in spite of the rainy conditions on both days.

The Minutewomen's effort left Dietz with the impression that his team will be ready when its time for the big stage.

"I think it was a pretty strong effort. The goal was to race as hard as we can as many times as we can," Dietz said. "Fatigue started to set in through the second day, but overall the depth of the squad looked really good."

Depth is something that will be crucial next weekend when the team tries to capture its 13th A-10 title. Dietz plans to have a crew in every race.

In an event in which more than 50 schools competed, Dietz used the race a way to get his entire team some quality experience

"The season is so short that you have to get out and experiment," said Dietz "[Over the weekend], most of the varsity people raced four times. Everyone got at least three races in. We got out there and were pushing hard throughout the weekend."

The most dominant performance came from the Minutewomen varsity quad, who finished in first place. The team finished with a time of 8:40.8 – a sizable 39.7 seconds ahead of the second-place finishers, the Villanova University.

The quad is lead by two seniors Samantha Smith and Airlina Burrill, and features sophomore Teresa O'Brien and Julia Richter. Dietz had high praise for members of that quad.

"The people in the first quad have so much skill it was not surprising at all," Dietz said.

The Minutewomen will try to capture their 13th conference championship next weekend in Camden, N.J.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached a jengmann@student.umass.edu.

UMass coach Jim Dietz hopes that the Knecht Cup last weekend will help prepare the Minutewomen for the A-10 championships.

ScandihOOvians
Scandinavian Design for Living
A beautiful lifestyle
Friend us on Facebook
22 Spring Avenue
Northampton, MA
(413) 584-0002
251 Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA
(413) 256-0004
scandihoovians.com

Don't be cross with me.

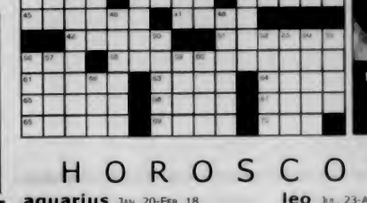
| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 5 | | | | | | | | 9 |
| | 9 | 4 | | 5 | 3 | | 7 | |
| | | | 2 | 4 | | | | |
| 4 | 2 | | 5 | 8 | | | | |
| | 5 | | | | | | 6 | |
| | | | | 7 | 4 | | 2 | 3 |
| | | | | 2 | 7 | | | |
| | 8 | | 1 | 3 | | 9 | 4 | |
| 2 | | | | | | | | 1 |

ACROSS
1 Lid
4 Proba prefix
8 Puzzle
13 Ump's call
14 Piece of concrete
15 Refrigerator name
16 "Laugh-in" regular
17 Goose egg
18 Bosean types
19 Military advisers
22 Soda part
23 Wobble
24 Disintegrate
26 Golfer Jobb
29 Improves
32 Horse's place
36 Fuel, for some
38 Tide flowing backward?
39 Relaxation
40 Ajos or Andes
41 Descartes or Coty
42 Early Sid-cents, y year
43 On equivalent
44 Foreign pops
45 Bathroom hangings
47 Mr. Straus
49 Districts
51 Bear witness
56 Achy and feverish
58 "Not ___ skeptic's words
61 Uncovered
63 Smallest
64 Nasal detection
65 Mediterranean island
66 ___ Mountains
67 Say no to
68 Viper
69 Hobgoblin
70 Syllables for the uncertain

DOWN
1 Crumbly cake
2 Bizarre
3 Hold
4 Edward's kin
5 Wooden shoe
6 Member of royalty
7 Tide heavy
8 Mel Gibson ...
9 Scottish uncle
10 Sam Malone, for one
11 Take apart
12 End sent with a manuscript
13 Lenten practice
20 Greenish blue
21 Exchange
25 Steer plow inventor
27 ___ meat
28 Of a musical sound
30 Feast
31 Holy miles
32 Spinter group
33 Tortilla—fried, filled & folded
34 "The Streets of Laredo" opener
35 Pry
37 Villain
40 Tabulate
44 Type of bread
46 Bank, for some
48 Enormously
50 Wash
52 Hidden treasure
53 Dyer producer
54 Casino features
55 Amateur
58 Ancient Peruvian
57 Fist
59 Buck spread
60 Unexpected obstacle
62 Season for 44 Across

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!



WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Spring Break Trip 2010
BUY 1 GET 1
*PACKAGES EXCLUDE AIRFARE
ANY PURCHASE ON APRIL 15, 16, 17, 18 AT ANY BEACH CLUB
WILL GET YOUR NAME ENTERED TO WIN
WINNER ANNOUNCED MAY 5TH
WWW.BEACHCLUBTANWINSTUDIOS.COM

Quote of the Day

"Free advice is worth the price."

- Robert Half

HAVE YOU SEEN THIS MAN?
Call the 24-hour Comics Page Hotline at
1-800-MDC-COMX

"If it makes you feel any better, she hit on my sister, too."

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Give that homeless fellow some money. He deserves it after washing your windshield, and filling out your 1040 tax forms.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Go Twitter about something. Douchebag.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Put some pep in your step, you slacker. Stop making excuses about your "broken femur" and "full body cast."

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Domino's Pizza is the best pizza ever. Fo' real.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Wasted (adj.): Used to describe someone inebriated by alcohol. Ex: "I am always wasted when I write the horoscopes."

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Considering what websites you've been visiting lately, it should come as no surprise you got a textually-transmitted virus.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Did You Know??? #45: Funny hats will not get you laid. Novelty T-shirts should work, however.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
They call you "Big Bird" for a reason, but strangely enough it has nothing to do with the yellow bird suit you wear around.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
When in doubt, always side with safety, and assume that your date is a transvestite. There's only one way to know for sure.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Today is going to have more drama than a Lifetime movie, but without all the whining.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Did You Know??? #72: Green tea is full antioxidants, but many varieties lack THC altogether.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Happy Holidays!

Classifieds

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office. $11.00/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 17th.

Announcement

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Announcement

ATTENTION ALL JUNIORS AND SENIORS! FALL 2009 INTERNSHIP APPLICATIONS ARE NOW AVAILABLE AT THE STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE. GET HANDS ON EXPERIENCE IN THE FIELD WORKING WITH ATTORNEYS AND CLIENTS. EARN UP TO 12 UNDERGRADUATE CREDITS, NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY, WE'LL PROVIDE TRAINING. APPLICATION DEADLINE IS APRIL 13th. CONTACT OUR OFFICE AT 545-1995 OR STOP BY AT 922 CAMPUS CENTER.

For Rent

Amherst: 2,3, & 4 bedroom apartments, $1200-$2250. FREE HEAT! Great Specials! www.MillValleyApts.com or 413-253-7377

Petrichor

For Rent

Looking for summer housing? 3 bedroom apt. in Rolling Green looking to sub-let. Clean, convenient, and quiet. Call Kate at 978-257-2549

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

For Sale

Toyota Celica GT Convertible, 1996, 25th Anniversary Edition, 76,200 miles, excellent condition, automatic, AC, $8900. 413-658-8687

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 14, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Freshman phenom sparks UMass

Minutewomen on fire with Florence in net

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's 40 degrees outside, the wind is blowing leaves off the trees as a steady rain bombards the University of Massachusetts campus on a Friday afternoon. Most students are holed up in their dorm rooms, doing whatever they can to avoid going outside. But not Katie "Flo" Florence; she's in full goalie gear getting ready for an afternoon of blocking lacrosse balls traveling 60 mph.

It's the third game of the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team's conference schedule. They are facing longtime nemesis Richmond in a game that could determine the inside track to the top seed in the Atlantic 10 Tournament. As the goalkeeper, Florence has the ultimate responsibility to make sure that any lead UMass gets, UMass keeps.

The Minutewomen take control early, jumping out to an 11-5 lead at halftime, but the Spiders won't fold easily. As the rain becomes a full-fledged storm, Richmond continuously claws back, despite six saves by Florence in the second half. Richmond has trimmed the lead to 13-12, and has possession with 10 seconds left.

Florence sees the attacker make her move, shouts an order to her defenders then plants her feet in front of the net. The Spider attacker tried to sneak it left, but there is no angle and her shot goes wide. UMass (8-6, 5-0 A-10) hangs on to win by one goal. Florence finishes with eight saves.

It was just another great performance by the freshman goalkeeper who has become a major reason for UMass' winning season. There was some reservations the first-year starter, but those doubts were quickly put to rest.

"I was really nervous because for the past two years, we haven't had really good goaltending, and then we lost our backup who had been with us for the last two years, and it was really nerve-wracking," says junior midfielder Stephanie Hopkins. "Everyone was like, 'Oh this girl Flo from Mass., she's good, she's good' and I'm like, 'Yeah I know, I know.' ... We didn't expect her to be as good as she was.

"It surprises me because she's unreal and amazing and she's helping this team out so much," Hopkins continues. "If we didn't have her, we wouldn't be in the place we are right now."

Florence has been the starting goalkeeper for the Minutewomen since she first set foot on campus, and has been getting better ever since. She has an overall save percentage of .491 and allows 10.91 goals per game. These are solid numbers by almost everyone's standards, but Florence has really shined in games against conference foes. Her save percentage jumps to .627 and her goals-allowed drops to 5.87 in UMass' five conference games – all wins.

Her performance and reliability have made it easier for the Minutewomen on defense.

"When you go out and play 'D' you feel so much more confident having someone with that much ability behind you," says junior midfielder Merritt Cosgrove. "[When you know] anything can be saved, you can put a lot more pressure on the ball."

See FLORENCE on page 7

In her first year at UMass, goalkeeper Katie Florence leads the Atlantic 10 in save percentage (.627) and goals against average (5.87) in matches against conference opposition. She allowed just seven goals in her last two games.

Jim Connolly's game-winning goal 23 seconds into overtime capped off an unbelievable comeback victory by the Minutemen. The goal was Connolly's first of the game and 26th of the season.

Balise's last-second goal sparks comeback

Memorable tally forces OT, Connolly wins it with another

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Playing for a full 60 minutes has been a struggle at times this season for the No. 14 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team.

The Minutemen needed every one of those minutes – and 3,600 seconds. Saturday afternoon, to score a miraculous last-second goal to force overtime against conference-rival Hobart.

UMass needed just 23 seconds in overtime to complete the comeback in a thrilling 7-6 victory over the Statesmen in Geneva, N.Y.

"It was a very exciting end – one of the most exciting to any game that I've ever been associated with," said UMass coach Greg Cannella, who is in his 15th year leading the Minutemen.

It was another hard-fought game for UMass (7-3, 4-0 Eastern College Athletic Conference), which has seen many games come down to the final minute this season. And once again, it was UMass' senior stars that made it happen.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 7 |
| Hobart | 6 |

The first hero was senior attack Tim Balise. He sent the game into overtime with an acrobatic shot that beat Hobart star goalkeeper Max Silberlicht with less than one second remaining in regulation.

"[Tim] had two guys draped all over him, he got knocked down to his knees, and he shot the ball one-handed and it went in – an unbelievable individual effort," Cannella said.

The goal almost didn't count. As the Minutemen celebrated on the field, Hobart contested that the shot went in after the final buzzer sounded. But the officials originally signaled it as a goal and didn't change their minds.

"Anything can happen in those situations; obviously it's the referee's call," Cannella said. "Initially when the ball went in he made the call that it counted, so I was confident that the goal would stick."

Just 23 seconds of game time

See LACROSSE on page 8

Minuteman rally falls short at Fenway

Three runs in final inning not enough to beat Northeastern

BY MIKE GILTMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Despite a ninth-inning rally in the historic confines of Fenway Park, the defending Beanpot Champion Massachusetts baseball team failed to defend its title, falling to Northeastern, 5-3.

The Minutemen (10-19) couldn't find an answer to the Huskies' dominance of the strike zone. Northeastern (18-11) recorded 11 strikeouts on the day. Huskies starter Les Williams had five, but the six strikeouts by reliever Andrew Leenhouts in 3-2/3 innings sealed the victory for the 2009 Beanpot Champion Huskies.

| | |
|---|---|
| NU | 5 |
| UMass | 3 |

UMass starting pitcher Bryan Leigh struck out seven batters in 5-2/3 innings, but the three runs he gave up in the third inning would be his undoing. The Minuteman bats were held silent until the final inning, when Northeastern was already ahead, 5-0.

"Our guys just weren't that comfortable at the plate," UMass coach Mike Stone said of the effectiveness of the Northeastern pitchers. "We had 12 strikeouts and we struck out in key situations, too. We just couldn't get anything going [offensively]."

UMass did mount a strong comeback attempt in ninth inning. Leenhouts started the final inning by hitting catcher Tom Conley. Shortstop Matt Gedman took the next pitch from Leenhouts and dropped it into right field for a single.

Next, left fielder Kyle Multner took advantage of the error by the Northeastern first baseman when he hit Gedman in an attempt to get the lead runner out at third base.

Third baseman Sam Boone curbed some of UMass' momentum when he hit into a double play. Conley scored and Gedman advanced to third, bringing up second baseman Adam Tempesta. Coming into the ninth inning, Tempesta was 2-for-4 on the day, leading all Minutemen.

Tempesta brought Gedman around to score with a single to left field. Centerfielder Brian Baudinet hit a single of his own off Leenhouts, advancing Tempesta to third, ending Leenhouts' day.

Dan Zehr came into the game to finish the game for Northeastern and he induced designated hitter Jim Macdonald what seemed like a routine groundout, but the NU shortstop bobbled the ball and everyone

See BASEBALL on page 8

UM looks to shut down Friars

Team's unbeaten home record at stake against Providence

BY NICK O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team will be heading out of Atlantic 10 waters when it hosts Big East foe Providence in first game of six straight non-conference matches.

UMass (23-6, 8-0 A-10) looks to defend its unbeaten mark at home as it faces the Friars and then Boston University, George Washington, Boston College and Connecticut. The Minutewomen have won their last twelve overall, including seven shutouts and five wins by run rule.

Providence (12-23, 4-5 Big East), meanwhile, is coming off a 2-7 run in which it gave up double-digit runs two times and was shutout twice. Before the slump, though, the Friars won eight out of nine games, that span included a six-game winning streak.

The Friars are led by freshman standout Mary Rose Sheehy. Sheehy, who is currently seventh in the Big East with a .368 average, is the one major threat on an otherwise lackluster lineup. Sheehy also leads the team with 23 RBIs, 39 hits and a 1.111 on-base plus slugging percentage.

As a team, the Friars are batting .240 on the season while their opponents are hitting at a .292 mark. Outside of Sheehy, only three other regular starters are hitting above .250 and two are hitting under .200.

What PC lacks in pure hitting punch, they make up in patience at the plate. Christy Becker and Jenna Garcia are tied for second on the team with a .275 average. Both of them, however, boast impressive on-base percentages. Becker is reaching base at a .385 mark while Garcia is maintaining a .377 OBP.

The weak Providence offense provides UMass coach Elaine Sortino with an opportunity to rest the team's usual starter Brandice Balschmiter and give freshman Sara Plourde a look on the mound.

In six starts this season, including two shutouts and a no-hitter, Plourde has a 1.12 earned-run average with 65 strikeouts while opposing batters are hitting .132 against her.

Balschmiter, meanwhile, has been securing her status as one of the greatest pitchers in UMass history by recording her 108th career win, tying the school record set by UMass Hall of Famer Danielle Henderson.

In addition to their less than stellar lineup, the Friars boast a largely inconsistent pitching staff, with six players getting appearances on the mound this season. Of those six, only one

Samantha Salato is one of many Minutewomen who have proven themselves to be dependable offense players. This is in stark contrast to UMass' next opponent Providence, which has just one player batting over .300.

See SOFTBALL on page 8

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

PT. CLOUDY | HIGH: 62 LOW: 33 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15, 2009

GOP votes to impeach V.P.

DeFlumeri voted out 18 to 9, at long, contentious meeting

BY CHRIS SHORES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In a meeting that lasted nearly four hours, the UMass Republican Club voted to impeach Brad DeFlumeri from his role as Vice President.

The impeachment was called to order by President Greg Collins in regards to a previous incident during which DeFlumeri allegedly violated a restraining order resulting in his arrest.

"I thought the outcome was justified. I thought Vice President DeFlumeri deserved impeachment ... I think his past actions as club president, some of them have been absolutely fantastic," said Collins. "They've really helped the club. Some of them have been really undermining what we've done ... I think the final vote was justified. I just hope we can move on as a club to improve our image."

However, the result of the vote was heavily debated. According to Secretary John Beale, the vote was 18 for and 9 against, which approved the impeachment of DeFlumeri because it was a vote of at least two-thirds majority.

However, this included Collins' vote, which DeFlumeri said was a violation of the club's constitution. DeFlumeri argued that the president's vote does not count except in tie-breaking circumstances, which would put the vote under two-thirds and cause the motion of impeachment to fail.

After about 15 minutes of debate facilitated by Sara Littlecrow-Russell, legal advisor to the Registered Student Organizations, Beale determined that the motion had passed and DeFlumeri had been impeached. While Beale was explaining the verdict, DeFlumeri announced that he resigned from his position as Vice president, effective immediately.

"The impeachment motion failed. That was the [initial] determination of our secretary," said DeFlumeri. "There were other interpretations brought in that Robert's Rule of Order superseded our constitution; and based on that, the motion passed. In the midst of the confusion over whether or not my impeachment vote had passed or failed, I spoke up and said that I resigned. Therefore, I vacate the office of Vice President and am eligible to vote in our annual elections next week."

"I thought that was a good way to end the night and save people the trouble of debating back and forth ... I thought the professional thing to do in that situation was to resign," he added.

Earlier in the night, an amendment was passed to the Republican Club constitution which increased the consequences for a member of the club who is in impeached. Prior to the amendment, someone who is impeached could still remain an active member of the club, participate in voting and even run for a different executive board position should he or she choose to do so.

Since the amendment was passed, DeFlumeri is no longer considered an active member of the club meaning he has no vote in elections and no longer speaks for the Republican Club in any way.

DeFlumeri disagrees with the judgment made by the club.

"I think it's clear to anyone that the result of the election was inconclusive, at best. At worst, it was a failed motion based on our two-thirds annual criteria. So I will be voting in our annual elections next week," he said.

According to the newly installed amendment, DeFlumeri has the option to issue a written appeal to the club's executive board asking for his rights as an active club member to be reinstated.

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@student.umass.edu.

Republican Club members tally up the votes from last night's impeachment of Vice President Brad DeFlumeri.

Police oversee college parties

Amherst College administrators moved to include campus police at all off-campus parties, regardless of invitation.

Amherst College ups security

BY GARY TARANTINO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last month, the College Council of the Five College community announced the new proposal of police supervision at all off-campus parties at Amherst College due to a February stabbing at a dorm.

In order to hold a party, the host must pay anywhere from $150 to $200 to hire a police officer for the night.

Student parties will also have to increase the number of student security monitors present, and parties must be registered with campus authorities five days ahead instead of a day or two.

Police have also ordered metal detector wands, which will be used by the student monitors to scan party-goers.

The regulations stem from a Feb. 8 incident in which an Amherst student was seriously injured when he was, according to police, stabbed six or seven times by a party guest.

"We viewed the stabbing as terrible, but also as anomalous. Certainly, we don't expect it to happen again," said Benson Lieber, dean of students at Amherst College. "The experience with this one such event obliged us to do what we can to prevent something like this from happening in the future and I am confident that these kinds of measures will do that."

Amherst College has a comparatively low violent crime rate on campus. From 2005 to 2007, the most recent information available, five aggravated assaults were reported on campus, according to the 2008 campus "Clery" crime report.

Several students were asked about the recent changes, and student leaders said that because they were consulted in creating the new measures, the regulations are generally being accepted.

However, since the rules have not been applied yet to a party, it remains to be seen whether the mandates will be embraced or criticized.

Before the new regulations had been created, parties required only the presence of student security monitors.

The trained monitors were not allowed to stop illegal activity and were informed to contact campus

See POLICE on page 2

UM speaker promotes cloning

BY CHRIS SHORES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At a lecture sponsored by the University of Massachusetts BioSci Club, a member of the UMass Philosophy Department made an argument in favor of human cloning.

"I'm going to try to argue that cloning is always permissible," said Dr. Maya Eddon, post-doctoral fellow of philosophy. "I'm going to take this controversial stance to get people talking."

According to Eddon, the act of human cloning honors a human's "right to reproduce" as it allows infertile couples a chance to have a child. Cloning might also prevent situations in which a child inherits a genetic disease from one or two of his parents.

The capabilities of modern science to forego what would be the inevitable suffering of the family makes humanity "obligated to make cloning technology available," said Eddon.

As the lecture went on, Eddon listed and then refuted several of the arguments people hold against human cloning. She categorized the arguments into two categories: intrinsic and extrinsic.

Those who find cloning intrinsically wrong base their opinion on moral statutes. For instance, they may make the argument that humans have the "right to uniqueness" or that cloning is against the principles of nature.

Those who find it wrong for extrinsic reasons may believe that cloning could have negative consequences. For example, the clone could suffer psychological damage as a result of not being able to achieve the high expectations held by his or her family or friends.

Eddon asked students in the lecture to consider what they believe to be "natural." She used examples to suggest that humans use some things daily, like antibiotics or birth control, which are not created by nature but are beneficial to society. Whereas other things that can be considered natural such as rape, cannibalism and cancer are avoided at all costs by humans.

Eddon further argued that, "Nobody has a right to genetic uniqueness." She used the examples of identical twins to show how two people with the same genes can be very different individuals. She explained that while each twin has a right to their own identity, they certainly could not claim that they alone possess the right to their genetic identity.

Another popular argument made against cloning is that people do not have the right to "manufacture" other humans. To counter this argument, Eddon made the case that parents actively shape their children all the time.

Parents expect certain behaviors from their children, sign them up for certain activities, pick specific education opportunities and encourage them to select model individuals to associate with. According to Eddon, the extent that this is done depends on each family, but she maintains that it always happens.

"It seems [our society] is already manufacturing their children and doing something that is being argued as wrong," Eddon said.

Eddon also argued that although parents may attempt to shape their children a certain way, the child is still his or her own individual person, and the child will ultimately determine the kind of life he or she wants to have. Cloning would be no different.

"The idea that cloning will take away free will in people underestimates what human beings are like. You can try your best to get the traits you want out of someone, but they're still going to be their own person," she said.

Envisioning a future in which cloning is not only physically possible and safe, but also legal, opens up a whole Pandora's box of ethical questions and situations.

For instance, imagine a set of parents who lose their child in a tragic accident. Thanks to advances in modern science and cloning technology, they are given an opportunity to create a clone of their deceased child. If it helps take away their pain, is it so wrong?

Human rights activists argue that doing this would put the clone at great risk for psychological trauma. The clone may be a complete different individual from the original and may be burdened with constant disappointment at not "measuring up" to his or her predecessor, in the eyes of family or friends.

Eddon stated that parents could avoid this situation by not going into the process with the expectation that the clone would be an exact duplicate of the original child. Some students at the lecture were skeptical that this mindset could be achieved.

"[People] would clone ... for a reason. Say for instance, I clone my mom. I would have this tendency to treat her like my mom. I feel like [I would] have this emotional attachment, and it'd be hard to break that," said James McAvoy, a sophomore biology major.

A fellow biology major, junior Sarah Bello, brought a different point to the discussion. Bello posed a question about what would happen if our society went as far as to clone famous celebrities and athletes or even historical figures. Would the human race begin to create an "army" of clones because of their genetic potential to be influential people of the world?

Dr. Maya Eddon spoke on the benefits of human cloning at UMass.

Even more interesting, what if an Albert Einstein clone, expected by everyone to solve the current scientific issues of today's world, decided he wanted to take up a career in sports?

"We shouldn't saddle these clones with these expectations," said Eddon. "People are complicated. They might have the same genetic code, but they shouldn't be bound just because of what their predecessor did."

Eddon acknowledged that the thought of human cloning is probably disturbing to most. But the "gut feeling" that cloning is immoral may be erased with exposure to it. In decades past, people shared a similar uneasiness about interracial marriages, but in society this has evaporated as time has gone on, said Eddon.

The BioSci club meets once a week to attend science-related lectures or events. Members enjoy the exploration of these topics as it allows them to learn more about their field outside the classroom.

Chris Shores can be reached by email at cshores@student.umass.edu.

Breast milk research may detect cancer

BY EMILY REYNOLDS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A new study is being done on the University of Massachusetts campus to test if women can assess their risk of getting breast cancer early with a non-invasive procedure.

Kathleen Arcaro, an associate professor in veterinary and animal sciences and environmental sciences is doing a study to see if she can detect cells in breast milk that may one day lead to breast cancer.

"You can inherit a risk of getting cancer, but that does not necessarily mean that you will absolutely get it," said Arcaro. "This study tells you the risk."

Arcaro's study involves collecting breast milk from women to find cells that are methylated, because these cells could signify cancer in the future. If the cells can be found in breast milk, then it means that there would be a non-invasive way to test for a risk of breast cancer, and it would be more accurate than current tests because breast milk comes from many glands and not just one.

"For this particular study, we need women who have a breast biopsy because we want to verify our theory by looking at women who are at high risk," said Arcaro.

In the case of breast cancer, there is methylation, a chemical change to the genes. Instead of changing the genes like a mutation, it is an epigenetic change, which means that something attaches itself to the DNA and keeps it from performing properly.

"When we age or have a disease, we get methylation on our DNA that keeps our genes from functioning," said

Kathleen Arcaro is conducting a study to detect breast cancer.

See CANCER on page 3

ARTS & LIVING
GLASS BEAUTY

Glass artist Josh Simpson will speak at the Renaissance Center as part of its Celebrity Series.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
HISTORIC WIN

UMass senior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter set the school record with her 109th career victory Tuesday night vs. Providence. She also tossed her eighth career no-hitter in the 8-0 win.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION
COLUMN | NEWS TOO ONE-DIMENSIONAL

With major media outlets so integrated into the business of information, Zamil Akhtar says that the monopoly on the news limits the abilities of Americans to hear all sides of the story.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
COLLEGIAN NEWS BLOGS

Check out the recently updated Collegian's research, student life and UMass society news blogs under the blogs section on dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 51

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasserzug
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olsson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Deimer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
CLOSE EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Leigh Greaney
EDITORIAL Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenwaike
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kozowara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Lamard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Wellver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS MASS LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIDING IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE BI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1963. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN PRINTED SINCE JANUARY 1996. FOR ADVERTISEMENTS AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:00 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION TEAM
Nick Guarino

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEWS

BLOG | EDITOR'S NOTE
NEWS EDITOR WILL MCGUINNESS DEBUTS THE MDC'S NEW BLOG THAT WANTS YOUR NEWS TIPS AND MUCK. TAKE PART IN INVESTIGATING THE EVENTS AND OFFICIALS OF YOUR AREA.

VIDEO |
DIDN'T SEE THAT FREE SPEECH RALLY EVERYONE'S TALKING ABOUT? IT'S FINE. WE'VE GOT IT ON TAPE FOR YOU.

VIDEO |
REPORTER GISEL SAILLANT PROVIDES A SPRING BREAK RETROSPECTIVE YOU CAN WATCH WITHOUT DELETING YOUR INTERNET HISTORY RIGHT AFTER.

ARTS & LIVING

PODCAST |
THE COLLEGIAN'S OLIVER SCOTT SNURE INTERVIEWS PRODUCER AND MUSICIAN JOHN VANDERSLICE

PODCAST|
DAILY COLLEGIAN FILM CRITICS KEVIN KOCZWARA AND SHAYNA MURPHY TAKE A LOOK AT UPCOMING FILMS AND ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA EDITOR PETE RIZZO ADMITS HE'S NEVER SEEN A WOODY ALLEN MOVIE.

GET YOUR POKE ON!

LIKE US AS MUCH AS WE LIKE YOU? BECOME FRIENDS WITH THE COLLEGIAN ON FACEBOOK TO GET DAILY NEWS UPDATES SPRINKLED INTO YOUR FRIENDS' CONSTANT NEWSFEED CONFESSIONS.

Campus Perspectives
What is your opinion on this matter?

As a result of an on-campus stabbing in February, the College Council announced this month that all Amherst College parties advertised on or off campus must be attended by a uniformed police officer, and the $150 to $200 cost to hire the officer must be paid by the party's host. There will also be more student security monitors who will be scanning students coming to parties with metal detection wands. Do you believe Amherst College should be doing this to increase security measures?

By Alyssa Creamer

junior
resource economics major
Khaled Hiari

"I think it's very excessive. It doesn't seem financially viable. I mean, we're in an economic recession. I think the metal detectors are super unrealistic. It's baloney."

sophomore
microbiology major
Abby Dobberteen

"I wasn't there, but one of my close friends was there. I feel like the cops in the Amherst area already have a lot of prejudice towards college kids."

sophomore psychology major
Stephanie Cheng

"No. I don't think that putting more cops around would be good because it would just make kids freak out more at the parties. I think it is a little crazy that just because of one incident, now, all of a sudden, there is all this commotion happening."

senior
HTM major
Nick Narahara

"That's just seriously an invasion of privacy to be scanned in at a party like that. I feel like it would just add to the problem. It will cause more problems than it will solve."

Amherst adds security

See POLICE on page 1

police if they noticed such behavior.

"As far as I know, students are understanding of the new party regulations as a whole," said Sally Chung, a student member of the College Council. "There is no real gauge yet of how the general student population will react when rules are set in practice. However, students that I have spoken to about the new policy find it to be a practical and appropriate response to the recent incident."

Victor Zhu, another student member of the college council, said while most people think the new regulations are "cool, especially in light of the stabbing," a few people are grumbling about the added cost of hiring an officer.

"Since most (student) clubs receive much of their funding through the student government, this means the student government and therefore the students – will pay for the new security measures," Zhu said.

In the case of the February party, Marcus Smith, a 21-year-old University of Massachusetts student from Roxbury, was arrested at the scene and charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon (a knife). Smith has pleaded innocent to the charge in Eastern Hampshire District Court.

According to documents on file at the court, Smith was attending an alcohol-free benefit party for AmeriCorps in the basement of Crossett dormitory when he and the victim, identified as Isaac Cameron, got into a fight.

The fight was over a girl Cameron was dancing with, according to an Amherst College police report.

Following the incident, the college did not let hosts advertise parties to the Five College community, which includes Smith, Mount Holyoke and Hampshire colleges, as well as UMass.

Marcus Smith was recently charged for stabbing an Amherst student.

The ban will remain in place until after the new revelry regulations are put in place next week, followed by an undetermined period to acclimate students to the new order.

"Once we have the new regulations in place and they continue to work smoothly, then student groups will be allowed to advertise to the Five College community again," Lieber said.

Gary Tarantino can be reached at gtaranti@student.umass.edu.

Plastic swiped to pay tuition

By Scott Travis and Missy Diaz
McClatchy Newspapers

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. College students are using credit cards more than ever to pay for their education, and they're carrying high balances on those cards, a new report suggests.

Students who used credit cards for tuition, books and other direct college expenses last year charged an average of $2,200, up from $942 four years ago, according to the survey, conducted by private lender Sallie Mae. The study suggests that students are using credit cards instead of other financial aid, including grants and private loans.

About 30 percent of students put tuition on their credit cards, up from 24 percent in 2004, when the study was last conducted.

The survey states that 92 percent of undergraduate holders of credit cards charged textbooks, school supplies or other direct education expenses, up from 85 percent in the previous study.

"Too many students are at risk of overpaying for college by pulling out credit cards to pay for textbooks or even part of their tuition bill, instead of using less-expensive financial aid to cover these items," said Marie O'Malley, director of consumer research for Sallie Mae and author of the study.

One Florida Atlantic University graduate, for example, is struggling to pay off thousands of dollars in credit card debt.

Jusef Palermo, 24, graduated from FAU in Boca Raton last year and now lives in Washington, D.C. He used three credit cards to pay for tuition, books and living expenses. Interest rates were as high as 18 percent, he said.

He had maxed out his federal student loans and found credit cards quicker and easier than seeking private loans.

He declined to discuss the amount he owes but said it's overwhelming.

"I wonder if I'll ever be able to get a home of my own with the kind of debt I have now and the marks against my credit," said Palermo, who has a job. "I worry about my future."

More students at Palm Beach Community College are using credit cards to pay for tuition, Controller James Duffie said. It's now the top way to pay, he said. Much of that is due to the growth of online payments.

"It's just the ease and convenience of it all," he said. "People can pay at 4 in the morning."

Several student credit cards have interest rates of 14.99 percent for those with good credit, according to the Web site bankrate.com. Federal Stafford loans have interest rates of 6.8 percent. Private school loan rates average about 8 percent, according to bankrate.com.

O'Malley said students and families may be underestimating college costs and are using credit cards to fill the gaps.

Using a credit card may be the only way for some to continue a college education in this tempestuous economy.

"I think what's happened is since the economic meltdown eight months ago, families are strapped and they don't want their child's education interrupted, so I think a lot of families may be using their child's credit card," said Bill Hardekopf of LowCards.com, a consumer resource on credit cards. He cautioned that students and parents need to be aware of their card limits to avoid over-limit fees, which can be $30 per transaction.

The report found 60 percent of students surveyed were surprised at their high balances, and 40 percent said they charged items knowing they didn't have money to pay the bill.

About 17 percent said they regularly paid off all cards each month, and another 1 percent had family members paying the bill. The remaining 82 percent carried balances, incurring high monthly finance charges.

Are you looking for a job for next semester?

The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is looking to hire employees for advertising production in 2009 - 2010!

- Flexible work schedule
- Hourly salary
- Awesome people

Little to no experience in graphic design necessary!
Looking for undergrads with good computer skills, strong motivation, the ability to learn, and a keen eye.

Contact Max Detmer at
Advertising@DailyCollegian.com
for more information, or stop by The Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

Study tests cancer risk

See CANCER on page 1

Arcaro. "Methylation happens so long before any tumors appear that you have an early indication for a future problem."

If there is an indication of a future problem, it means that people can be treated beforehand with demethylating drugs which will strip away the things attached to the DNA and let it get back to performing properly, avoiding the replication of faulty genes and DNA that could cause cancer.

"These drugs are being used in other cancers as a preventative measure," said Arcaro.

There are other procedures that can also test the risk of cancer. Nipple aspiration is one such procedure, but it does not give as many cells to be tested. A ductal lavage is an invasive procedure, and it only tests one gland. This means that cells that could become cancerous may not get tested if they are in another gland.

"If this works, then we will get some basic knowledge about assessing risk which will be helpful for all women in general," said Arcaro, "but women helped directly from this method will be lactating women."

Arcaro is hoping to get 500 women from all over the country to participate in the study. Arcaro used the Army of Women website, which already has a membership of women who are willing to partake in research, to get participants for the study.

The participants would receive a kit in the mail to take and store samples of breast milk from each breast. The samples would then be sent to UMass to be tested and analyzed. All of the analyses will be done by research fellow Eva Browne in the lab as they come in.

"A huge part of our research expenses are in the shipping costs," said Arcaro. "The women have to express overnight the samples to our lab so that the milk is fresh."

The funding for the research is coming from the Congressionally Directed Medical Research Programs, but the Avon Foundation gave the funding to create the kits that are mailed to the women participating in the study.

Although Arcaro was not due to officially start collecting samples until May, her group was ahead of schedule and started early, and there have already been over 100 samples sent in to be tested.

"The initial goal was to collect 250, but we increased it because not all of the women follow through with the study," said Arcaro. "Right now, we are ahead of target."

Arcaro is working on the study with Douglas Anderton, Sally Smith-Schneider and Christopher Otis.

Arcaro has been doing research related to breast milk since 2004 and has had several works published with her colleagues. The current study is set to continue for two years. The research team is online at Breastmilkresearch.org.

Emily Reynolds can be reached at ereynold@student.umass.edu

MIT students abduct mascot

By Shreyes Seshasai
The Tech, MIT

Proving once again that nothing is safe in this economy, MIT's mascot Tim the Beaver was kidnapped Saturday afternoon. The kidnappers, who said they were pressured to action while varsity sports at MIT were being threatened, demand that students' voices be heard and are seeking a guarantee that all 41 varsity sports are kept at MIT for at least one more year.

Last week, the Department of Athletics, Physical Education, and Recreation (DAPER) announced that amid a budget cut of $1.45 million over the next three years, it would cut some varsity sports programs, relinquishing MIT's claim to having the most varsity sports of any university in the country. DAPER's decision on which sports will be cut has not yet been made.

With a decision not expected this week, the question remains: Will the face of MIT athletics be back in time to greet the incoming class of 2013 during Campus Preview Weekend? The answer, it appears, is yes. The kidnappers stated that Tim will be returned by Wednesday.

The kidnappers agreed to speak to this reporter on the condition that they not be identified.

Tim was taken during the inaugural Beaver Bowl, a competition during last week's Athletics Weekend where teams compete in various games such as tug-of-war and MIT sports trivia. Right before the final obstacle course, a group of seven students ran into Johnson Athletic Center wearing ski masks and wielding Nerf guns.

Tim the Beaver, confused as to what was going on, was quickly surrounded and dragged out of the arena, while another kidnapper told people to get on the ground and shouted their demands to the surprised crowd.

The student who was playing Tim was immediately released unharmed.

The organizers of Athletics Weekend, along with the student playing Tim himself, were not aware of the planned kidnapping, according to the kidnappers.

The demands were simple: have the voice of the students heard, and find a way to keep all 41 varsity sports at MIT for at least another year.

Julie Soriero, director of athletics, expressed some challenges that teams would face if the cuts were in fact delayed a year. Among those was the concern that freshmen may not want to join a team that will be cut at the end of the year.

"Freshmen may be vital to field a full team," she said.

To the kidnappers, however, one additional year would mean a lot or, at least, make the cuts more tolerable.

"It'd be hard for the players on those teams to think, 'I've played in my last season,'" explained one of the kidnappers.

Delaying the cuts for a year is "not for the freshmen," said Catherine Melnikow '10, chair of the Undergraduate Association Committee on Athletics. "It's for the returning athletes."

Soriero also mentioned a concern that high staff turnover would result from a one-year delay, jeopardizing the leadership of the program.

Julie C. Anderen '10, chair of the Student Athletics Advisory Committee, thinks this is less of a concern. "If it were me, I'd prefer the extra year to find a new job."

The beaver costume is managed by the Campus Activities Complex, which rents the costume to student groups and departments for events. According to the CAC website, the replacement cost for the suit is $7,000.

The kidnappers do not plan to damage the costume. "The goal of it is to raise awareness of the issue, to both alumni and faculty," they said. "The only way we can make a difference is to get community pressure on the administration."

The kidnappers also said that this was another case of the administration not listening to students and making decisions without student input.

Most students on campus first became aware that Tim was taken on Monday afternoon, after one of the kidnappers sent an e-mail to a series of dorm discussion lists. Student reaction to the theft was largely negative with students saying that the theft seemed an ineffective form of protest.

The reaction of Anthony D. Rindone '10 typified that of many students who chimed in on e-mail threads across campus. "It's pretty silly," he said in an interview last night.

The beaver theft sends an ineffective message of "unless you comply with our demands, we're gonna take away an important part of marketing to freshmen," he said.

Tim the Beaver, MIT's mascot, was kidnapped over cuts in athletics.

But a few other students said that the "beavernapping" was just a funny stunt that sent MIT a serious message.

Hiroyuki G. Yamada '11 heard about the theft on Saturday afternoon from a gymnast friend who mentioned seeing the theft at the Beaver Bowl event.

The ransom demands probably won't be met, Yamada said. "It's a $7,000 beaver suit and ... a million and a half dollars has to come from somewhere," referring to DAPER's three-year budget cut target.

Still, it was obvious to him that the ransom wasn't serious — he viewed the kidnapping as a fun joke, he said.

"It made some people laugh, and it made some people smile, and that's what you need in a time when a lot of people are on the edge," he said.

UA President Noah S. Jessop '09 has been involved in talks with the administration regarding the budget cuts.

"Unfortunately, you can't cut $150 million without someone losing something they like," said Jessop. "We should hope the Institute is being creative."

The $150-million cut refers to the Institute-wide plan to reduce expenses over the next three years. While athletics is one of many areas being cut, Jessop reiterated that the Institute has stood by its promise to not cut financial aid.

"We might be worried about losing the things we do, but at least we don't lose the people we do them with," said Jessop.

Michael McGraw-Herdeg contributed to the reporting of this article.

Editor's Note:

In an editorial published on Monday's Ed/Op page, now-former Collegian columnist Nicole Sobel used a great deal of information from an article published on April 9 in The New York Times from the newspaper's op/ed contributor James E. McWilliams.

It has come to The Massachusetts Daily Collegian's attention that this was a blatant act of plagiarism – one that we understand affects the trust we continually try to establish between our publication and our audience.

Illinois State debates marijuana health issues

Allen St. Pierre, executive director of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws draws comparisons between the harmful effects of the drug as compared to cigarettes and maintains the drug is "safe."

Officials straddle the fence regarding drug

By Chris Davies
The Daily Vidette, Illinois State U.

Though many people may see the potential benefit that the legalization of marijuana could provide to the economy, concerns over health effects from the use of the drug have prohibited many from supporting such actions.

Allen St. Pierre, executive director of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, does not think that the drug poses a significant health threat to users.

"Marijuana is remarkably safe," he said. "Pharmacologists rate drugs on a lethal dose rating with 50 being the lowest and things like cyanide being the highest at one. Marijuana is rated at 50."

St. Pierre commented that though the drug had such a low rating, no drug is safe, including aspirin.

"Smoking is not good for pulmonary or respiratory health, but in a country where cigarettes and alcohol [are] legal, [I believe] cannabis is quite a bit safer," he said.

Noah Conrad, alcohol and drug interventionist for Illinois State University Student Health Services, explained the effects of the drug compared to some legal drugs.

"First off, the easiest distinction to be drawn is that there is no nicotine in marijuana, nor is there any THC in tobacco, however, many of the dangerous components are found in both," he said.

Some of the similarities he noted are total tar levels, carbon monoxide, hydrogen cyanide and nitrosamines. Additionally, benzopyrene, a potent carcinogen, is found in greater amounts in marijuana than in tobacco.

Beyond the chemical composition of the drugs, the way the drug is used also plays a role in how detrimental it can be on the health of the user.

"Because the typical marijuana smoker does not ingest nearly the same amount of smoke per annual basis that a tobacco user does, it's hard to accurately compare the two in some aspects," Conrad said. "Marijuana users also tend to hold the smoke in for longer periods of time as compared to their tobacco counterparts and the effects are somewhat contingent on the concentration of the THC, meaning the more potent the pot, the more the effects will be evident."

Though the health aspects can be debated, whether or not those issues will be seen as a result of legalization did not seem to be a large issue to either Conrad or St. Pierre.

"Most Americans who want to use marijuana already do despite prohibition," St. Pierre said. "Changing the law doesn't mean that more people will use the drug."

Conrad believes that a change in the law may cause an increase of use, but only for a limited period of time.

"The first being that if or when marijuana is decriminalized or legalized, acknowledging these are two completely [different] things, there will be an increase in usage for a period of time," he said. "I believe this because, there might be thousands, if not millions of Americans who will opt to try it now that it is legal and there are no ramifications that can be had.

"After a short time period, one I envision lasting some where between three to five, possibly 10 years, the trend will plateau and remain that way for some time, just as we have seen with tobacco consumption."

STUDENT DISCOUNT!
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
A Course for Everyone
cherryhillgolf.org
NOW OPEN
Best 9 Hole Course In Western Mass
Just Minutes from UMASS on Rt. 63
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
Tele: 413-259-3138
Walk on anytime!
No Tee Times Necessary!
Fax: 413-259-2407

VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES
Welcome Chef Robert Harbison
Executive Chef
Princeton University

FOOD, MOOD & ATTITUDE
- Grilled Hanger Steak Slider with Chipotle Mayo
- Sesame Crispy Chicken with Vegetable Slaw
- Open Face Ravioli topped with Locatelli Crisp
- Princeton Tiger Cake
- And more...

PRINCETON UNIVERSITY

Wednesday, April 15
Berkshire DC from 5–9pm

RESTAURANTS & ARCHITECTURE Ivy
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
www.umossdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Looking for the stories of UMass

Ben Moriarty

After writing a weekly column for some time now, I've come to a fork in the road, and I don't know which road is the one filled with more truth. Either I am just not creative enough, or there is just not much going on at our campus. I would like to say it isn't the former, but I would be lying if I said that wasn't the big problem.

In The Massachusetts Daily Collegian alone, there are over 20 editorial and opinion pieces in this section which are written every week. The Daily Collegian alone — meaning not The Minuteman 1 mean, that publication only runs once a month. Talk about slacking off.

So I ask myself, is there that much stuff going on at our campus where you can write that many pieces and still be focused on locality?

The answer, clearly, to convince myself, seems to be "no." There are several columnists who do a fantastic job at editorializing the events on campus. But, there are only so many major events on campus that you can do.

Some things that come to mind immediately are the speech by the Hitler-homosexual-detesting Don Feder , the fallout from the hippies who protested, as well as similar people who protest the Israel and Palestine situation as if they are truly involved, the Jason Vassell case, the fee increase, the fee decrease, the fee unknown-rease, the conspiracy theories against Robert Holub on God knows what, and then people wondering what exactly the Chancellor is besides the person you complain about.

There are so many more stories on campus: personal stories, group stories, tragedies, heartaches, joys and so many more things that happen on campus that very few people know about.

As far as I know, it just means he is the king of the University of Massachusetts. And it's sad that this is all I know about him and what he does. You can see why I don't know what is going on.

I even more so, I heard the most infamous man on campus got arrested for violating a restraining order. But that's not much of a topic that lends to an editorial, because I believe him when he says he was unjustly arrested. There, one sentence. Innocent until proven guilty, you judgmental liberals.

So if we look at the major events, you see that even if you take most of the sides to them, it only lends to a short time of editorials. That, in addition to the many smaller things that go on campus that end up being talked about, you still don't have enough local stuff to cover the whole week. This encourages us to go national.

But I wonder, do the people who read The Collegian really care about what some 19-year-old thinks about the stimulus bill? Or what he thinks of Obama? Not to rag on the people who write about that, considering I write about similar subjects, but is that what people will read The Collegian for? I think the Los Angeles Times, the Boston Globe and the New York Times can cover that stuff for us.

So that leaves me to one subject that people at UMass care about, and that is us. Which includes you. And me. Mostly me.

There are only so many topics that you can write about if you focus on the well-known events. But there are so many more stories on campus: personal stories, group stories, tragedies, heartaches, joys and other things that happen that very few people know about. These are the things that should be reported and laced with an editorial.

If you were going to show someone what it's like to come to UMass, you might bring them to the Fine Arts Center or Herter Hall for a brief while. But for the real microscope slide, you would bring them to living areas like Southwest, Central or a similar place.

The only way that will happen, though, is if you can find those events, or, more realistically, the events come to you. It's been established that I'm not creative, but it has yet to be established that there are things that go on at the University that are vitally important, but not reported.

So if there is anything at all which should be shared, find me, whether in real life or through the Internet.

And it's not because I'm not creative. Not much seems to be going on, when really, a lot is going on.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu

News too one-dimensional

"Worse than ignorance is the illusion of knowledge." This not just a bumper sticker — it's a truism that haunts the way we see our world.

You're reading this newspaper right now because you want to gain some knowledge while you sit in the lecture hall, waiting for your professor to begin proceedings. It's our nature — when we learn something new, we latch onto it, desiring to adorn ourselves with the new facts we've uncovered. It's a positive trait because it makes knowing important. But it's also something that can be taken advantage of.

Zamil Akhtar

Enter the corporate media, the self-appointed overseers of information. If there is something going on in the world, the eyes, ears and money that power juggernauts like CNN will come to know about it. And they will tell you about it in conveniently packaged, five-minute broadcasts and one-page reports, giving you just enough information to create the illusion that you know.

After all, "a half-truth is a whole lie," especially concerning knowledge about the world. It's not that the corporate media tells lies. Rather, it picks some facts to tell you and leaves out others.

On what basis? The corporate media is a business after all, and is susceptible to the special interests of the parties that keep the corporations running, and the business successful.

These "filters" assure that certain facts don't get transmitted to the American people in order to shape our views and make judgment simple. This manipulation of facts often creates a misunderstanding in those who consume corporate news, about all the issues that matter to a citizen of the world's most powerful democracy.

Case in point: we've all been hearing about the piracy occurring off the coast of Somalia. Most of us have probably gotten our information on the subject from media outlets owned by one of the mega corporations (Time Warner (CNN), Murdoch's News Corporation (Fox) or NBC) and probably are only thinking one thing: piracy is bad (or really cool). It seems simple enough; pirates are hijacking ships for no reason other than to ransom them, in order to fill their pockets. This may be a "fact," but what facts are we not hearing?

It took a blog post by a Somali, with facts confirmed by environmental activist group Greenpeace, to point out what was being conveniently covered up from view. For 20 years, different countries around the world have used Somali waters to conduct illegal, environmentally damaging fishing, and also as a place to dump their toxic waste. This occurs because there's no one to stop them in a country that has no functioning central government. These activities destroy the quality of Somali coastal waters, creating unemployment among those who rely on fish, causing many to turn to piracy for a living.

The fact that the big media outlets are nothing more than corporations means that transmitting the truth becomes tied up in business decisions.

According to Greenpeace, the countries whose ships have damaged Somali waters by engaging in such destructive practices include Russia, China and Japan, among others. Those countries in particular, have sent their navies to the area to protect their vessels and defeat piracy, as if it was just a black and white issue, a righteous crusade against pirates.

This creates the perception that the solution to piracy is to attack their ships and raid their bases, to use military power to crush them. And that's exactly how it's been portrayed by the media.

But if you knew the whole story, you would realize that it's better to deal with the root of the problem: stopping the illegal fishing and toxic waste dumping by nations who take advantage of the chaos in Somalia. It's not so simple when you add a bit of context and ask questions.

As Americans, we should know very well the follies of simplistic, black-and-white perceptions. By accepting simplistic and self-gratifying worldviews, we supported the invasion of Iraq, without critically questioning what we were being told. It was good versus evil, a simple enough tale to rid a bad man of weapons of mass destruction and free the people he enslaved. The media, in such cases, acts as a mouthpiece for the government, which ends up leading the entire nation astray.

In a democracy, the media are supposed to be a check on the government. Too often, they act as propagandists for the government. The fact that big media outlets are nothing more than corporations means that transmitting the truth becomes tied up in business decisions. If truth is bad for business, then it must not air. This results in the crafting of half-truths, and the dissemination of a knowledgeable ignorance.

This is a terrible thing for us. People want to know the truth because knowing empowers our decision making. If we are more informed, we make better decisions at the voting booth and that creates a better country. There is a simple solution: we need to branch out. If you watch CNN, balance it by watching Al-Jazeera and reading blogs. Go to multiple sources, compare the facts, and see things from different perspectives. Don't be satisfied with the veneer of knowing. Only be satisfied once you understand the complexities of any given issue.

Zamil Akhtar is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at zakhtar@student.umass.edu

Remember when pirates were just awesome?

...Politics ruin everything

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

We all need shoulder to lean on

Matt Kushi

Emotions are interesting. They generally depict your life. Emotions are feelings. They serve as a kind of second conscience next to our moral conscience. Being the social beings that we are, emotions are what allow us to connect with one another.

A few weeks ago, after I wrote an article defending my friends on the Massachusetts baseball team, one of those friends came up to me and asked what had prompted me to insert a line from the song "Stand By Me" into the article.

The verse goes: "If the sky that we look upon/Should tumble and fall/ And the mountains should crumble to the sea/I won't cry, I won't cry, no I won't shed a tear/Just as long as you stand, stand by me."

I had quoted this verse from the song to illustrate a point, and to employ the feeling that there were people who were willing to stand by them.

What made me incorporate this feeling into the article? What it came down to were emotions. Each week, as I sit and write these articles, I try to write about a topic that triggers emotions within me.

We would like to believe that we are solid rocks that don't need anyone to help us stand. Nothing could be further from the truth and we all know it.

It is then my job to try to pass that emotion that I am writing about to the reader.

I could write about a subject that I have many theories on that would make me look intelligent. But what would that accomplish? If it doesn't have a relevant point that someone can relate to or learn something from, it accomplishes nothing. Writing these articles is about discovering things, whether that be emotions, reasons or current events. That is what life is about: a learning experience.

Sometimes, using experiences from your personal life to aid your story is therapeutic. If that will help me connect with you, the reader, I will do so in order to get the point across.

When my friend asked me about this certain line, it made me think about why I had written it. I knew what I was saying when I wrote it but didn't fully understand the reasons why.

The reason I used that certain line is reflected in the power and values of the title of the song itself. Think about it. "Stand By Me." If you say those three words slowly a few times, it is bound to trigger an emotion. It triggers an emotion of when you were going through a rough time and needed a shoulder to lean on.

We each have our own stories of times when we were in need of something. We would like to believe that we are solid rocks and don't need anyone to help us stand. Nothing could be further from the truth, and we all know it. We all need friends to support us.

I'm not going to preach about how we all need to support each other. I don't know your life any more than you know mine. What I can do is explain to all of you the reason why I quoted a 48-year-old song to illustrate the emotion of needing someone.

For me, those words formed an exact memory. During the summer of 2006, these words were more of a silent plea than a motto. It was the summer between my senior year of high school and freshman year here at the University of Massachusetts.

Towards the end of my senior year of high school, I dislocated my elbow. I would not regain full use of my right arm until after college had started.

That summer in between was not at all fun. I was a miserable person to be around. I alienated friends when I needed them the most. When you suffer three major joint dislocations in a two-and-a-half-year span, maybe you have the right to be cynical. That was my justification. I was wrong.

I tried to be my own island and it didn't work. I needed support from friends, not just my family. I was silently begging for my friends to stand by me. However, in order to receive love, you need to be willing to give love.

This experience is what made me think of the song "Stand By Me." After thinking about those words, I also realized that we all need someone to aid us in life. Life is empty when there is no one to stand by you, whether it is in your hour of glory or your hour of sorrow.

Everyone needs friends. Everyone needs someone to stand by them. That is why I used a verse from "Stand By Me" in an article defending my friends and, to answer the question that my friend asked that day.

I learned from my experience and realized that emotions are so powerful. Emotions are the bonding mechanism with other people. We need to listen to our emotions from time to time because we need each other.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reach at mkushi@student.umass.edu

Resisting the little tyrant inside

It's tax day yet again. And along with the recent controversies about law, from local cohabitancy statutes to debates over the meaning of the Constitution, I want to take the opportunity to ask a question I have been mulling over for some time.

Ben Rudnick

What is law?

Thinkers of deep thoughts were thinking deep thoughts about this even before they had figured out how to write down their deep thoughts. This time of year, many of us are reminded, by the hand reaching into our piggy banks, that most of the laws are merely codifications of the coercive power of the government, the "book" that directs the state's actions toward us. It is the rules we are supposed to obey and the boundaries within which our lives are constrained.

One thing is certain: the role of law in our society is something about which Americans are profoundly conflicted.

Since our country was founded as a result of a legal dispute, it is no wonder we have some trouble working though our feelings about the law. We had a king who did not give us a voice in the making of our own laws. He was trying to make us obey some pretty bad ones, so we chose to hold some truths to be self-evident. It took some time — and quite a bit of gunpowder — but pretty soon we had secured the blessings of liberty, except for women and anyone who wasn't white.

Fast forward a few hundred years, and we're getting to the point where everybody is covered by the same laws. But the closer we get to the ideal of perfect equality under the law, the more we seem to disagree about what "equality under the law" means. We argue constantly about the legal definition of marriage and whether the founders would want us to keep Glocks and Berettas under our pillows or not. When do the mean things we say to each other stop being a matter of free expression and start being crimes?

All along, we feel the pull of two opposing principles. One is in the tradition of John Locke's adage that, "Wherever Law ends, Tyranny begins." The other is embodied by Ralph Waldo Emerson's contention that, "The less government we have, the better – the fewer laws, and the less confided power."

The closer we get to the ideal of perfect equality under the law, the more we seem to disagree about what "equality under the law" means.

Some argue that only the government can solve the ills of society, but soon government itself becomes the greatest threat to our tradition of liberty. Others intervene to reduce government and restore freedom for all. Yet to many people, this means only the freedom to be left behind by society.

Are our laws merely a matter of majority rule? Is it all just a matter of what the largest number of people can be convinced is right? Considering the fact that the majority used to believe that women lacked the sense to vote, or that measuring a person's skull was a scientifically valid way of measuring their intelligence, or that some races have less ability to live in a democracy than others, I think that we should take to heart a contention made by Henry David Thoreau. "There is little virtue in the action of masses of men."

Because law is by definition a mass phenomenon, one does not make laws that apply to only one person. Therefore, laws most often force people to fit themselves to its boundaries, not the other way around. That may be one reason why so many simply ignore the laws that they do not believe in, such as the ones against speeding or, perhaps, the ones regarding drug use.

While some of this behavior is in response to bad laws, such as those that seek to limit what people can do with each other in their own bedrooms, this only goes to prove the point that no matter how well-intentioned are those who enact them, laws are inevitably out of step with the immediate needs of society. People have this troublesome tendency to be different from each other, and it seems like trying to fit all their problems into the rigid containers that law – i.e. government — is capable of implementing flies in the face of our tradition of individual rights.

For example, many would agree that parents should have the right to determine the course of their children's education. Yet, others have an equally fervent belief in society's stake in seeking to ensure that all children are given an equal opportunity to succeed in the modern, globalized world.

How can the rights of the parents, and the children for that matter, be reconciled with the needs of society? In questions such as these, the law may well be the last source to which we should look for wisdom. Yet, it is all too often the first as many simply act upon the impulse to tyranny that resides in every human psyche. Perhaps the best thing to do is to stop and think before making public policy based on the voice inside that loudly proclaims "there oughta be a law..."

Ben Rudnick is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at brudnick@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Simpson to speak at Renaissance Center

By Laura Mowry
Collegian Correspondent

Using techniques from the days of Galileo and Shakespeare, world-renowned glass artist, Josh Simpson, provides pocket-sized planets that not only capture the beauty and complexities of our solar system but also put the grand scale in perspective.

Although his contemporary glass art encompasses much more than planets, they are arguably what he is best known for. Simpson will be the first Renaissance Center Celebrity Lecture Series Speaker. The lecture, "Double Toil and Trouble, Fire Burn and Cauldron Bubble: Glassmaking Now and in Shakespeare's Time," is scheduled for April 16 at 4:30 p.m. in room 227, located in Herter Hall. The event is free and open to the public.

Since 1971, Josh Simpson has been working as a glass artist. He got his start in glassmaking through a special program affiliated with Hamilton College, where he received his BA in 1972, located in Clinton, New York. Simpson spent the month of January studying the art of glassmaking at Goddard College, located in Vermont.

When Josh Simpson first started glassmaking, galleries and museums were not collecting his work. His solution to the matter was to launch the Infinity Project. Looking through museum after museum, Simpson realized that about half of the glass collected was dug up by archaeologists. In an attempt to one day be recognized for his art, he and others began hiding planets when they traveled. If you ever travel to the Great Wall of China, the catacombs, or North and South Poles, be on the look out – you may stumble across one of Simpson's planets, marks each with a signature symbol.

As it turns out, Simpson did not need the Infinity Project to gain recognition, although the project continues. Simpson's art can be found in museums, galleries and displays throughout the world.

With all the recognition, he has countless awards and honors as well. Simpson is the recipient of two honorary degrees. One was received from Bay Path College in 2007 and the other from the Massachusetts College of Liberal Arts in 2004. There is also a lengthy list of awards for his art. He has been awarded the Jurors' Award for Best in Glass on several occasions. The Glass Art Society recognized his achievements in 1999 with the Lifetime Membership Award. In 1993, Niche Magazine awarded Simpson with the Humanitarian Award. In 1986, the Smithsonian Institution's National Air and Space Museum awarded him with the Jurors' Award for the "Artist's Look at Earth."

The award from the National Air and Space Museum gives a full understanding of what Josh's work is all about. Simpson, who describes his artwork as, "NASA-centric," has received substantial recognition for his planets. Layer after layer of molten liquid glass precisely combine with glass beads to form volcanoes, metropolises, continents and even space shuttles until there is a one-of-a-kind Simpson glass planet.

The inspiration for his planets comes from his affinity with science fiction novels that he read frequently as a child, despite his parents' objection. After all these years, the famous photograph snapped by Jim Lovell in 1969 of the earth lit up in sunlight has remained an inspiration to him. "It is only natural that some amazement or some vision would come out of that work," said Simpson.

Although Lovell's photograph plays an important role in Simpson's work, there are new photographs from space that provide him with a more modern and personal inspiration. His wife, Catherine Coleman, is a colonel in the United States Air Force and a NASA astronaut. Coleman's photographs and work continue to inspire and influence Simpson's art. The Infinity Project has not only reached the far corners of the world, but has been taken to new heights — outer space.

Josh Simpson is quite the visionary. It is for this reason that he was chosen to kick off the Renaissance Center Celebrity Lecture Series. The Renaissance was a time where visionaries flourished. According to Lucinda Kidder, the program director of the Massachusetts Center for Renaissance Studies, he is what the Renaissance is all about. "artists now with those visionaries can relate to the excitement of that period and what it did for people living in it." Just as Shakespeare has endured, so has the art of glassmaking.

Renowned glass artist Josh Simpson captures the natural beauty of the universe in his artwork. He will be the first speaker for the Renaissance Center's Celebrity Lecture Series.

Using the same tools and techniques today as they did back in the time of Shakespeare, Josh Simpson creates intricate and complex pocket-sized planets to bring it all into perspective. "Our planet seems so big and expansive, with never-ending resources," said Simpson. "It's really just as small as a marble if given the right perspective." Through his art, Simpson, a modern day Galileo, provides us with a unique perspective on our place in the universe.

Laura Mowry can be reached at lmowry@student.umass.edu

Man at work in Northampton

Colin Hay's Wednesday night show at the Iron Horse Music Hall featured not just music but also comedy. Hay's musical prowess was also intact, showcasing his mastery of the guitar.

Former eighties frontman plays Iron Horse

By Angela Stashowski
Collegian Staff

The world is all too familiar with the musical talents of former Men at Work frontman, Colin Hay, but few realize Mr. Hay's comical genius.

Performing at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton this past Wednesday, Hay brought down the house with both stellar musical performances and his wisecracking banter.

Opening for Hay was Janet Robin, a singer and songwriter from the Los Angeles area.

Her raspy, Americana vocals and acoustic guitar made for an interesting, though not entirely fitting, segue into Hay's performance. At the very least, her enthusiasm and crowd interaction livened up the hall.

"You've heard his voice in cinematic blockbusters such as Garden State, Crocodile Dundee and Valley Girl...he's timeless, he's talentless, he enjoys strolls on the beach," proclaimed the announcer teasingly before Hay took the stage.

Hay proved to be quite the comedian himself and confided to the audience, "It's nice to be here in your town again. We come here quite often to get adjusted next door," in reference to the chiropractor's office just outside the venue.

With a packed house of amiable fans from many demographics, Hay received the warmest of receptions from the sold-out Northampton crowd.

"I just happened to walk up here without a guitar, and I've spoken to nobody all day long. So, thanks for letting me have a little chat with you before we start."

After covering everything from airports to graffiti with the audience, Hay made the surprising choice to commence with the song "I Just Don't Think I'll Ever Get Over You," made famous by its prominent placement in the film Garden State.

The simplicity of the song, relying solely on the pure emotionality of Hay's vocals and quiet acoustic strums, was truly a thing of beauty in the live setting.

As a follow-up, "I'll Leave the Light On," brought up the tempo and added some diversity to his performance.

When it comes to technical prowess, Hay cannot be beat. His mastery of guitar and written melody is present in each of his songs.

Another touching moment, "Here in My Hometown" paid homage to a close friend of Hay's who passed away due to an accidental overdose. The song was featured on Hay's latest release, "Are You Looking at Me?" which has been on shelves since April 2007.

Hay also performed several tracks off of an upcoming record, which is due to be released late this summer.

One of the most anticipated moments of the evening, Hay interrupted the first verse of "Overkill," to encourage the audience to sing along. He also relayed a story of a fellow Scotsman who clearly misunderstood the line, "Ghosts appear and fade away," requesting that he sing his song about "goats."

A surprising cover tune, Hay preempted his performance of the Beatles' "Norwegian Wood" by describing his personal experience of performing with Ringo Starr.

One particular instance he mentioned involved a pretentious hipster who attempted to impress Mr. Starr with his novi-

See HAY on page 6

Mitchell compiles scholarly Tao adaptations, commentary

By Susan Salter Reynolds
Los Angeles Times

OJAI, Calif. — "If I'm a scholar, I'm an amateur," says Stephen Mitchell, the soft-spoken translator of Rainer Maria Rilke and the book of Job as well as "Gilgamesh," the "Bhagavad Gita" and his all-time favorite, the "Tao Te Ching" — as he says, "that marvel of lucidity and grace, the classic manual on the art of living."

The Tao is Mitchell's deep well, his Ganges. His 1988 translation has sold more than half a million copies. The New York Times ran a story on the front page of the business section after Harper & Row bought the book at auction with the headline: "Translation of Ancient Tao Text Brings $130,000." Asked what he would do with the advance, Mitchell humbly told an interviewer he was hoping to find a workplace with heat.

Today, he lives in Ojai, in a rambling, pristine house nestled in the hills a couple of hours northwest of Los Angeles, surrounded by gardens, pools and fountains. He is so in love with his wife and occasional co-author, Byron Katie, that references to her are inextricably woven into every aspect of his world. His writing studio is spare and elegant. (Let's just say he has heat).

The original "Tao Te Ching" was written by Laotzu in the sixth century B.C. Legend has it that the 80-year-old, frustrated by his fellow man's inability to follow the path of natural goodness and harmony, left China for Tibet. At the border, a guard asked him to write down his teachings. This became the "Tao Te Ching."

Mitchell's new book, "The Second Book of the Tao" (Penguin Press, $25.95, 202 pp.), consists of adaptations from the work of two ancient Chinese scholars: Chuangtzu, a Laotzu disciple, and Tzusszu, Confucius' grandson. Mitchell chose 64 chapters, each including a text and commentary. In his commentaries, Mitchell sets out to emulate the irreverent tone of Chuang-tzu. "If Lao-tzu is a smile," he writes, "Chuang-tzu is a belly-laugh. He's the clown of the Absolute, the apotheosis of incredulity, Coyote among the bodhisattvas."

Asked to elaborate, he says, "I have no pretensions to scholarship. I just love to play with the Taoist masters. For them, nothing is sacred. The best tribute is contradiction."

Nonetheless, Mitchell has been criticized for his irreverent adaptations and translations, for his New Age style and his way of turning sacred texts into spiritual manuals for everyday living. You can't have it all is the message implicit in these critiques. Or can you? Mitchell might say you could, if you live in harmony with the way things are.

The home Mitchell shares with his wife is luxurious, warm and spacious. In the empty, white studio, a simple table with a thin laptop faces an enormous window, outside, there is a path and a tree that resembles a Zen sculpture. An altar near the doorway holds a photo, not of an Indian guru or historical figure but of Mitchell's wife.

See MITCHELL on page 6

E-book exclusives on the rise

By Bob Thompson
The Washington Post

Daniel Gross has had a book out for almost two months now, but you couldn't buy it in your local bookstore until this week.

How can that be?

Well, if you guessed that "Dumb Money: How Our Greatest Financial Minds Bankrupted the Nation" came out first as an e-book, give yourself points for having your head out of the non-digital sand.

E-book exclusives - as opposed to e-books published as spinoffs of a printed version - remain rare, because the market is still too small to sustain them. But Gross' book offers a revealing window on how such exclusives could reshape publishing. The decision to bring "Dumb Money" out in paperback, for example, was made only after the e-book's appeal had been established.

Perhaps the most revealing thing about the "Dumb Money" story, in fact, is that everyone involved - author, agent and publisher - saw it as an experiment, the kind of trial run that a late-adopting industry needs to do a lot more of.

It started with the biggest bankruptcy case in U.S. history.

On Sept. 15, the giant financial services firm Lehman Brothers filed for Chapter 11. Not long afterward, Gross, who had been tracking the economic implosion as a financial columnist at Newsweek and Slate, sent an e-mail to his agent, Sloan Harris of International Creative Management.

"Literally at the same time, he called me," Gross recalls. They agreed that "we should do something."

But what? Gross didn't want to write a standard boardroom narrative. "If I could do something quickly, get out before all the people who are doing doorstoppers," he thought, "then I will have had my say, got a book out, everyone will have to account for me or ignore me - and I'll move on."

Harris knew publishers were looking to experiment with e-books, and he suggested an e-book exclusive. The need for speed was an obvious factor, but the agent had another reason as well:

"There's a kind of writing, 25,000 to 50,000 words, that no longer fits in magazines," he says, yet isn't long enough to package as a traditional book. So "there's an opportunity to grow a business that didn't previously exist."

Harris called "a small handful" of publishers to pitch the book and the notion of an e-book exclusive. The most enthusiastic response came from the Free Press, an imprint of Simon & Schuster. Free Press executives Dominick Anfuso and Martha Levin, in turn, scheduled a meeting with Simon & Schuster CEO Carolyn Reidy to seek her blessing.

How long did it take before she gave it?

"I don't know - one second?" Reidy says.

She'd been looking for "a serious writer who was interested in experimenting using the digital form." The problem was that "good writers want to be paid, and there's not a huge market yet" for e-books. So finding someone "willing to take the financial risk with us" (by not demanding too much money up front) was key.

Gross wasn't expecting to break the bank.

"I wanted to get paid something," he says. But he knew that "a couple of good speaking engagements" - which "Dumb Money," of course, might help generate - could pull in as much as his low five-figure advance.

Besides, he was writing only 30,000 words. He had most of his material in his notebook already, so he could keep his day job. Most important, he could avoid the traditional, tortoiselike book publication schedule - and with it, months of anxiety about "Dumb Money" being overtaken by events.

Gross and Harris did a handshake deal with the Free Press in October. By December, Gross was turning in chapters. He filed the last one in late January. By Feb. 9, he had an edited book to approve.

See E-BOOK on page 6

Mitchell translates ancients

MITCHELL from page 5

Could any life really be this peaceful? Could this be the epicenter of the New Age?

"Whether it's the fourth century B.C.E. or 21st-century America," Mitchell says in his backyard facing the mountains, "people suffer and find a way into freedom. There's no difference between then and now. Humans have a basic capacity for freedom. When I was 20, I didn't have a clue. When I was 30, I was in the difficult process of getting a clue. When I was 40, I had a clue and was clearing out the debris. Fifty, ditto. At 60, all the debris is cleared, thanks in large part to my wife."

In many ways, Mitchell's path began when his first girlfriend, Vicky, broke up with him. The two were in graduate school at Yale. The pain was, he says, "the seed of everything that I've become."

Mitchell found solace in the book of Job, an affirmation that there was a solution to human suffering; a calm, some might say Buddhist, acceptance of the way things are.

Six years after the breakup, Mitchell bumped into a friend who mentioned that he had met a Zen master with very strange eyes. Mitchell found the man in a funky neighborhood in San Francisco. The eyes were compelling, and Mitchell spent the next several years in intensive Zen practice; days spent meditating 12 to 14 hours, solitary retreats that lasted 100 days.

"For most of us," he explains, "there are pops of insight that are life-transforming, followed by years spent cleaning up the karmic residue."

Vicky introduced Mitchell to the work of Rilke. Eighteen years later, he sent her a copy of his translation, "The Selected Poetry of Rainer Maria Rilke." She wrote back, and the two spent four days together as friends. "I found I loved her in a better, clearer way than when we were together as young people," he says.

"If I could have wished anything for you," she told him, "it would have been that you might become the person you've become."

Unlike writers of self-help books, Mitchell hardly thinks about his readers. He feels, unabashedly, that he has a right to the material he works with, a right to reinterpret it and keep it alive.

"Readers are not a part of my world," he declares. "I write the books I want to read. Often I have to write them myself." For Mitchell, great writing must be transparent. Opaqueness, in his view, is a kind of arrogance.

When Mitchell's longtime agent and friend Michael Katz introduced him to Byron Katie in 2000, it was the eyes again that drew him in. "I saw a heart that was absolutely transparent," he says. "It was like meeting the Buddha. I thought I was a pretty mature Zen student, but after meeting her I realized I had a lot more serious work to do."

He was struck immediately by the similarity between her work and his understanding of the Tao. The two collaborated on a book, "Loving What Is: Four Questions That Can Change Your Life" (2002), and then on "A Thousand Names for Joy: Living in Harmony With the Way Things Are" (2007), which he considers his "third book of the Tao."

As he explains: "This is the book you wish every parent could give their children – to show them that life doesn't have to be difficult. It can be so effortless.

"Western therapy doesn't work; I've never heard of it leading people to a place where life is problem-free. You need a method that can cut the Gordian knot, catapult people to a new level of experience."

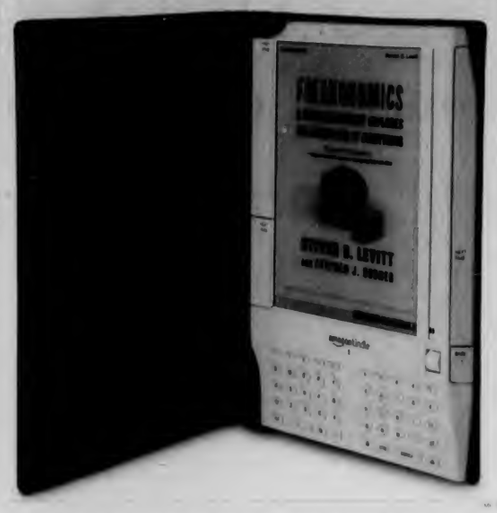
Mitchell grew up in a well-to-do family. He felt that money was a burden. After graduate school, he gave the money his grandfather had left him to a Zen center. "I had nothing. It was wonderful." A friend pointed out that aversion was often the flip side of greed. Then came the $130,000 advance, and it has been uphill ever since.

Mitchell doesn't just read the work he adapts and translates – he swims in it. These days, he is swimming in Homer and is hard at work on a translation of "The Iliad." "Homer is like Tolstoy," he says, "hugely open and accepting, so vast it's breathtaking. In Homer you learn to see the enemy as you see yourself."

He has great respect for the translations of Robert Fagles and Richmond Lattimore but hopes his version will restore the speed and drama of the myth. "I get frustrated by English that isn't beautiful," says the author. "I walk around with the oceanic rhythms of the Greek ringing in my ears. I think I have found a way to be clear and also lyrical."

Mitchell knows Greek, although he feels that not knowing a language is not necessarily a disadvantage in his work.

"Not knowing Chinese allowed me to cut through the text," he says, referring to the Tao. "I learned Sanskrit to better understand the Mahayana texts, and later, when I was practicing and studying Zen, my teacher told me, 'The only thing of any importance is inside you.'"



Mitchell's connection to Laotzu is, he insists, not only intellectual but umbilical. "So often," he says, "you feel embarrassed for translators. You want to make this marvelous insight for people who have been getting McDonald's food." And yet, those insights arise from a process that is mercurial at best.

"Sometimes," he admits, "I do 20 or 30 drafts of a chapter. Sometimes it came out the way I dreamed it. But sometimes the subject matter is so dense I have to leave it for a day or a week and come back."

Stephen Mitchell came into a large sum of money after translating ancient Tao texts. In his new book, "The Second Book of Tao," the author translates a disciple of Lao-tzu and Confucius' grandson.

Electronic literature appeals

Electronic books are not a completely new medium for literature, but e-book exclusives are increasing, including Daniel Gross' new work "Dumb Money: How Our Greatest Financial Minds Bankrupted a Nation."

E-BOOK from page 5

Two weeks later, "Dumb Money" went on sale, priced at $12 – and the advantages of being an e-book exclusive kicked in.

"We got an enormous amount of support, especially from Sony and Amazon, because it was an e-book original," said Free Press associate publisher Suzanne Donahue. Amazon's Kindle, Sony's Reader and digital audiobook purveyor Audible plugged it on their home pages.

With the appropriate application, you can also get "Dumb Money" on an iPhone. That's what Gross did to check out his own digital work.

The e-book outlets don't make sales figures available. But the Free Press' Anfuso says sales have been "in the thousands."

Sounds like time for an e-book reality check.

Anfuso says he's been happy with the "Dumb Money" sales, given the limited number of potential customers equipped with the technology to acquire and read it. But he's also "really pleased" that with the paperback edition, "we get to sort of publish it again."

Translation: Success for an e-book exclusive, at least for now, means doing well enough that your publisher decides to sell physical books.

The Association of American Publishers reports that January 2009 sales of e-books rose more than 170 percent over the January 2008 total. Yet 170 percent of not very much is still not very much: Those sales represented just $8.8 million of the $785 million in overall book sales.

Something else to consider about the "Dumb Money" experiment is how fundamentally conservative it was.

Yes, the format allowed Gross to get time-sensitive material to market quickly, but otherwise, the e-version doesn't look that different from an ink-and-paper book. It is searchable, of course, and thus requires no index, but it is not enhanced with background material, explanations of financial arcana or any of the myriad bells and whistles digital publication theoretically makes possible.

And it certainly doesn't meet the revised definition of a "book" proposed by new-media futurists like Jeff Jarvis.

Jarvis came through Washington recently to promote his own new book, "What Would Google Do?" – but he calls himself "an utter and complete hypocrite" for putting out a printed text at all. "If I had eaten my own dog food," he says, "I would have put out a digital book that was searchable and linkable and clickable and correctable and discussable. Why didn't I? I got an advance. The system still pays."

But for how long?

Books are fated to become "less of a product and more of a process," Jarvis says. He's talking about the mutually advantageous exchange of information and ideas between authors and the community of readers that is made possible online (though not on proprietary e-book devices). There's only one drawback, he notes: Authors will have to figure out new ways to get paid.

Details, details.

Spotlight on Hay's banter

HAY from page 5

elty t-shirt, to which Starr replied, "People like you always have t-shirts like that."

It is this sort of biting sarcasm that Hay confessed to appreciating most, citing Starr as one of his idols. He also confessed his desire to be like the stars in Vegas, who are known for their multidimensional acts. This half-joking revelation provided an explanation for his comedic outbursts throughout the evening.

Hay closed the show with another hit, "Beautiful World," which melodically sums up all that he is thankful for. True to his songwriting nature, the song presents a serious message with the occasional humorous interjection.

Just shy of two hours long, the performance was well worth the steep ticket prices. The only complaint a listener could find is the uneven ratio of banter to music. However, for what it's worth, it is difficult to complain when one has been thoroughly amused for two straight hours.

By the end of the performance, two things were explicitly clear: Hay is a big personality with even bigger talent. His love of life and music has made him the tremendous success he is today.

Angela Stasiowski can be reached at astasiow@student.umass.edu.

edu•va•ca•tion (ĕj'ə-vā-kā'shən) n. Taking five or ten week summer courses at Mount Wachusett Community College to transfer back to your home institution.

Save time and money by taking a summer course at MWCC. It's easily done, usually through your college's registrar's office. Check there first to ensure the course meets their requirements. Once you complete your MWCC course, request a transcript from the MWCC Enrollment Center to transfer the credits to your home institution.

ENG101 English Composition I
ENG102 English Composition II
ECO101 Macroeconomics
ECO102 Microeconomics
PSY105 Intro to Psychology
SOC103 Intro to Sociology
BIO109 Biology I
CHE107 General Chemistry I
HIS201 History of the United States
HUM260 The Art of Being Human
MAT160 College Mathematics I
MAT161 College Mathematics II
and more!

Mount Wachusett Community College
www.mwcc.edu

Check out MWCC classes this summer!
Go to www.mwcc.edu/summer
Enrollment Center- (978) 630-9110
email admissions@mwcc.mass.edu

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT***
REGISTRATION FOR Fall 2009

The Writing Program Placement Test will be offered on:

Thursday, April 16, at 7:00 pm
In Herter 224

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit 112 (College Writing).

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

Don't make your girlfriend mad at you...

write for Arts!

Don't make your girlfriend mad at you...

write for Arts!

Faris more than pretty face in new comic role

By Barry Koltnow
The Orange County Register

People often ask me two questions: Who did I interview last, and who am I going to interview next?

Last week, when I answered the latter question, I got a huge response, especially from guys. The name Anna Faris elicits that kind of reaction.

The actress is seen by many as the perfect woman – extremely attractive, wickedly smart, hysterically funny and modest to a fault.

So modest, in fact, that when I told her of the reaction, she was genuinely stunned.

"They knew who I was?" she said without a shred of irony.

Faris, 32, has been collecting fans, both male and female, for years in a series of smaller roles (the Britney-like character in "Just Friends" was the best of the lot) and lead roles ("The House Bunny" and the four "Scary Movie" spoofs), and now she plays opposite Seth Rogen, the hottest comedy star in Hollywood, in the dark comedy, "Observe and Report," which opened Friday.

Rogen plays a slightly deranged mall cop, and Faris is the mean but sexy sales girl he desires.

Q: Would you rather have young male fans think of you as hot or funny?

A: Definitely funny.

Q: Really?

A: Sure. I've never felt that comfortable in my own skin, which is probably why I ended up in comedy.

Q: I've heard that about you.

A: It's true. I am terrified that one of these days some pictures of me as a young girl will appear on the Internet. I was kind of geeky looking when I was young. Besides, there are so many hot women in Hollywood, and there is so much less competition for women in comedy.

Q: Do you think that the secret of your comedy is your willingness to do anything for a laugh?

A: Absolutely. I got broken in pretty early with "Scary Movie."

Q: What did you learn in those movies that set you down this path?

A: Keenan (Ivory Wayans) always taught me that there is no vanity in comedy. I tried to embrace that idea.

Q: Is there anything you wouldn't do for a laugh?

A: Not a lot.

Q: What about nudity?

A: I would do it but I'm not convinced that female nudity is funny.

Q: Have you ever been hurt doing comedy?

A: I have, but that's because I didn't know any better. In "Scary Movie," they would try dangerous stuff on me, and then if it didn't work, they'd bring in the stunt people. I got smarter as I got older.

Q: When one looks at your background – Washington state upbringing, English lit major in college, dramatic acting in the beginning of your career – there doesn't seem to be a foundation for this devotion to slapstick comedy.

A: I think it comes down to me being such a pleaser. I want to do the job well. And, in comedy, you can't worry about how you look when your face is 20-feet high on a movie screen.

Q: When you look in the mirror, do you still see that little girl with braces and glasses?

A: Oh, totally. I just met the head of the studio, and I was worried that I didn't look good. But let's not indulge that insecurity.

Q: But I love to indulge actor's insecurities. I have so little joy in life.

A: (laughs) OK then. Make fun of me all you like.

Q: How big are your insecurities?

A: I think it's because I was such a late-bloomer. Guys weren't interested in me for so long. I wanted them to be interested in me so desperately that I think I took comfort in being the goofy girl.

Q: Did you date a lot in high school?

A: I had my first boyfriend in senior year. I couldn't believe he liked me. He was so cute. Then he broke up with me.

Q: How did college go?

A: I had a couple of boyfriends in college. I had bright blond hair and I was just starting to feel attractive. It was a good chance to start fresh.

Q: How do those early feelings impact you now as an adult? You're successful. You look great. You have money.

A: Thank you so much. But there are always insecurities in this business.

Q: I don't see you in the tabloids. Is that because you were married before and weren't part of the single scene?

A: Yeah, that's probably true. But I've always been a homebody. I like to cook at home and watch TV. But I have noticed a lot of more paparazzi interest in me lately.

Q: What's that like?

A: It always surprises me, which is why they always catch me in my sweats eating a burrito. I'm never prepared for the attention.

Q: Was it "The House Bunny" that tipped the scales?

A: I think so. But it's also because there are so many more photographers out there now. You can expect them on Robertson, but I was at a divey restaurant on Sunset the other day, and they were there.

Q: What do you think when you do see yourself in a tabloid?

A: I make a point of not looking at that stuff.

Q: Do you ever worry that when you act goofy in a movie, people might not think you're smart?

A: I used to worry about that, particularly after the "Scary Movies." I felt tremendous pressure to prove I was a smart, serious actress. But I don't feel that need anymore. I like doing comedy. I hope I get to do comedy the rest of my career. It's challenging, rewarding and fun. It's only in the last year I've felt I don't have to apologize for being a comedic actress. I don't mind if people think I'm stupid.

Q: People don't think you're stupid.

A: Thank you, but it's OK if they do.

Q: How did you end up in Seth's movie?

A: I love Jody's work (director Jody Hill), and I particularly loved his movie "The Foot Fist Way." So I asked to audition for the movie.

Q: You had to audition? You're coming off a series of starring roles.

A: Every actress in Hollywood wanted this role. It's very rare to find a character that is as strong and awful as Brandi, my character in "Observe and Report." A lot of people wanted to be a part of this. And a lot of people auditioned.

Q: Did you know a Brandi when you were growing up?

A: I think everyone knew a Brandi when they were growing up.

Q: This is a pretty dark comedy. What was it like to film?

A: There are certain scenes in this movie that were crazy, like the sex scene. It's pretty much date rape, and there is vomit coming out of my mouth, and it's supposed to be funny.

Q: How did you handle that?

A: Actually, it was liberating. I didn't have to make the audience fall in love with me. I didn't have to be funny. I just got to be awful. It was wonderful, and that's how the whole movie went. I didn't have to be the balance to Seth. I was awful. He was awful. I didn't have to be especially nice to counter his awfulness. I've done that before. I call it the eye-rolling role. It's not fun.

Q: How do you follow this?

A: I want to do what the boys do. I want to produce and write and create my own projects. In order to play the characters I want to play, I need to create them. If you want to pursue comedy, that's what you have to do.

Q: Is it harder for a woman?

A: No, it's hard for everyone. Comedy really is hard.

Anna Faris stars alongside Seth Rogen in the new movie "Observe and Report." Faris may be pegged as just another pretty face, but she's going for much more – comic genius.

Festival generates annual buzz

Coachella headliners include McCartney, The Cure, Killers

By Ben Wener
The Orange County Register

Every year it's the same thing.

Speculation starts well before Christmas, and soon Paul Tollett and his team at concert promoter Goldenvoice must fend off loopy rumors months ahead of revealing the lineup for the world-renowned Coachella Valley Music and Arts Festival, which next weekend will take over the Empire Polo Field in Indio, Calif., for the 10th time.

Will Radiohead return? (No.)

Will Pearl Jam play this time? (Nope.)

Maybe Bowie? (No again.)

As seems to happen annually, there was once again plenty of Internet buzz among people who claim to know everything (yet actually know nothing) that Tollett had pulled off the impossible for the fest's milestone anniversary: a Smiths reunion. That didn't come to pass either, though he has brought back Morrissey for the first time since the inaugural Coachella in October 1999.

Even after the 2009 promo poster was unveiled, with Paul McCartney, the Killers and the Cure topping the bill, typically hard-to-please Coachellans still insisted there had to be a surprise superstar in the works, a la Prince last year.

Might Bruce Springsteen bolster Saturday's fare, given a gaping hole in his itinerary? After all, as some observers' negative logic goes, the Killers can't possibly be a Saturday headliner.

That's nonsense. The Killers in '09 are no different than Coldplay in '05: a multiplatinum act three albums into its career that can (and will) sell out arenas on its own tour. If anything, Brandon Flowers and his band of Las Vegans are the ultimate Coachella success story.

"They played the tent in the Radiohead year," Tollett recalls of their debut in 2004. "We had done a lot with them in Vegas – they used to be the band you called if someone dropped out. Literally they were the last in on that show – they confirmed as we were going to print, and they were listed on the last line of the poster."

For the Killers to rise to headliner five years later is a feat like no other in Coachella's history. Yet that hasn't been enough to quell complainers, whose kvetching only grew louder when troubled Britsoul star Amy Winehouse predictably withdrew from the Saturday bill and was replaced by a less outrageous star, "Paper Planes" performer M.I.A.

Surely something else would have to be added to make the day worthwhile, they argue. Perhaps No Doubt? U2? Even Spinal Tap has been mentioned, with all seriousness, in Coachella message forums.

"They must be hurting," contend the naysayers. "I look at all those TV ads!"

Indeed, never before has Coachella boasted such an extensive advertising campaign, with spots airing regularly during late-night programming on all major networks.

All of which has fueled the ugliest rumor this year – that despite (or perhaps because of) McCartney's involvement, not to mention the perceived weakness of the Killers and the repetition of the Cure, this is winding up the worst-selling Coachella ever.

"Not at all," Tollett counters. "By far not. In relation to years past at this point, it's the third biggest-selling Coachella we've had. You can't buy single-day tickets for Friday night (McCartney's night) – they're sold out."

He figures "the whole thing would've blown out in the first week or so" if it weren't for the downturn in the economy. Even amid such financial strain, Coachella's country cousin Stagecoach – featuring Brad Paisley, Kenny Chesney, Reba McEntire and Kid Rock the following weekend, April 25-26 – is on track to sell out in advance.

"(Stagecoach) really came around faster than Coachella in terms of capturing the minds of the crowd," Tollett explains. "In three years it's already an entity with nationwide appeal. It took Coachella until the Cure/Radiohead year (its fifth) for that to happen."

The difference, he says, is that Stagecoach attendees "aren't so particular about every last act. For them, it more or less boils down to the headliners and a few other artists. With the Coachella crowd, you can have 27 bands that are great, and they're bummed that 28, 29 and 30 aren't there."

Tollett is used to such nitpicking now. "We've gotten to the point where we build a show that we like – and obviously you hope it sells we're in, because you gotta pay the bills. But we judge the shows after the fact."

As opposed to what much of the indie elite has done: dismissed this Coachella based on the inclusion of a wrongly maligned legend.

Despite enlisting chief Foo Fighter Dave Grohl to drum (rumor has it Ringo also will show up for a few songs), Sir Paul's indefatigable good cheer can't seem to get respect from hipsters who think cranky dreamer Lennon was the only worthwhile Beatle. Apparently the stains left by "Ebony and Ivory" and "Say, Say, Say" have blotted out the raucousness of "Helter Skelter" or "Back in the U.S.S.R.," or the delicate pensiveness of "For No One" and "Eleanor Rigby."

Or, for that matter, the estimable and experimental work McCartney has created this decade alone, from moody excursions like 2005's Grammy-nominated "Chaos and Creation in the Backyard" (recorded with fave Radiohead producer Nigel Godrich) to his most recent effort, "Electric Arguments," his second collaboration with former Killing Joke bassist Martin Glover (aka Youth), issued under the pseudonym the Fireman.

Not only is McCartney's influence on Coachella artistry deep and pervasive, but he has remained a vital and creatively restless forebear.

I asked Tollett if he knew booking McCartney was a risk. "Well, every band's a risk," he said. "The question is: Do they take it seriously? I know McCartney is. I've seen his set lists from across the world – from Kiev and Montreal and Liverpool – and they're just incredible. If we can get any facsimile of that, we will be in for a great experience."

California's premier festival is surrounded by speculation every year. Rumors swirled regarding a Smiths reunion this year but to no avail.

Adult Efron in '17

By Roger Moore
The Orlando Sentinel

As a remake of "It's a Wonderful Life" or "Back to the Future," the movies it borrows from most heavily, the relive-your-senior-year comedy "17 Again" falls a little short of the mark. But as a funny, sweet and smart star vehicle tailored for Zac "High School Musical" Efron, it's right on the money.

A teen-friendly comedy built on the hazards of unsafe high school sex, the life you live wondering "What could I have become?" had contraception or the A-word been an option at 17? Pretty edgy fare for a guy known for his bangs, his dance moves and his dubbed singing voice.

Efron ably struts his stuff as Mike, the star basketball player, King of Hayden High, who got his girlfriend pregnant and grew up into a bitter, resentful adult (Matthew Perry). Adult Mike is divorcing the mother of his children (Leslie Mann), hasn't connected with those kids in years and needs reminding why he made the choices he made, way back when.

A janitor-guardian angel (Brian Doyle-Murray) hurls him back into his 17-year-old self, into high school with his own kids (Michelle Trachtenberg and Sterling Knight). That's where the whiny Mike faces his responsibilities – the daughter making poor choices, the secretly bullied son who needs a male role model.

The director of "Igby Goes Down" (Burr Steers) gives this just enough edge. Sure, there's the nerdy sidekick who grew up to be a rich nerdy sidekick (Thomas Lennon, hilarious in every scene he's in), the guy who decodes this as "a classic (sci-fi) transformation story."

"Are you now or have you ever been a Norse God, a vampire or a time-traveling cyborg?"

We get the confront-the-bully bit and obligatory teen party. But there's a whole daughter-might-be-hot-for-teen-dad "Back to the Future" riff and the fact that the adult wife is both drawn to and repulsed by her son's new "friend," the kid who looked "just like my husband" back in the day.

Efron sells the kid-playing-adult values stuff amusingly, turning sexed class (with teacher Margaret Cho) into an abstinence lecture aimed at his daughter-classmate.

GRADUATE STUDIES OPEN HOUSE

THURSDAY, APRIL 23 • 3 - 7 PM
ADANTI STUDENT CENTER
SOUTHERN CONNECTICUT STATE UNIVERSITY

- Meet graduate faculty from more than 40 areas of study.
- Learn about master's, doctoral, and sixth year professional diploma programs, many offered with Connecticut teacher certification.
- Find out about financial aid and career services.

Southern Connecticut State University
SCSU SCHOOL OF GRADUATE STUDIES

To register for the open house, call 800-448-0661 / 203-392-5240 or visit www.SouthernCT.edu/grad

SCHOOLS OF BUSINESS · EDUCATION · HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICES
ARTS & SCIENCES · COMMUNICATION, INFORMATION & LIBRARY SCIENCE

UMass heads to HC before meet in N.J.

By Adam McGillen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's track teams begin a four-day series of events today as they polish off their regular seasons and prepare for the Atlantic 10 Championships.

Wednesday and Thursday, the men will compete in a decathlon and the women a heptathlon at Holy Cross in Worcester. Both teams will then travel to Princeton, N.J., for the Larry Ellis Invitational over Friday and Saturday.

Just off the UMass Invitational last Saturday, where the women earned silver and the men gold, these next four days mark the busiest portion of each team's season.

For the heptathlon, the women take on Worcester Polytechnic Institute (WPI), New Hampshire and Colby-Sawyer. In the men's decathlon, the Minutemen will compete against WPI, UNH, Southern Maine, Colby-Sawyer, the Coast Guard and conference foe Rhode Island.

The 100- and 400-meter dashes, long jump, shot put and high jump events take place today in the men's decathlon. The women will compete in the 100-meter hurdles, 200-meter dash, shot put and high jump.

Thursday's competition will continue with the Minutewomen participating in the long jump, javelin and 800-meter run while the men face off in the 110-meter hurdles, discus, pole vault, javelin and 1,500-meter run.

At this weekend's Larry Ellis Invitational, UMass will have to contest with more than 10 teams. Conference rivals Charlotte, La Salle, Saint Joseph's and Richmond will all be there, as well as Rhode Island's men side. The URI women's team heads to Connecticut for the UConn Invitational.

The competition at Princeton will be a solid test for both sides entering the season-defining A-10 Championships, as the men will have to deal with two young hurlers from Charlotte, Jason Roberts and Jake Deaton. Roberts, a sophomore, earned Performer of the Week honors from the A-10 this week after a 166' 2" discus toss, which broke a school record.

Deaton took Rookie of the Week in the A-10, setting career-best marks in the discus and shot put.

Charlotte could provide trouble for the Minutewomen as well. After finishing the 100-meter dash in only 11.25 seconds at the Sea Ray Relays in Tennessee, 49er senior Lamarra Currie picked up a Performer of the Week award. Her time stands as the best in the 100-meter dash this season in the A-10.

Following the next four days' events, UMass gets a week off from competition. Next up is the UMass Pre-Conference Meet on April 25, the last opportunity for the teams to prepare for the A-10 Championships May 2-3.

Adam McGillen can be reached at amcgille@student.umass.edu.

UMass long jumper Zachary Koncki and the Minutemen travel to Worcester for the Holy Cross Decathalon today. The Minutemen will also participate in the Larry Ellis Invitational this weekend in Princeton, N.J.

Normandin a spark at leadoff

Right fielder Samantha Salato rounds second base yesterday against Providence. Her nine home runs and 31 RBIs are both team highs.

MINUTEWOMEN from page 10

Pitching mentor

Just as Henderson provided a mentor and someone to look up to on the mound for Balschmiter, the current star has helped do the same for freshman hurler Sarah Plourde and junior pitcher Bailey Sanders.

"[Balschmiter] gives them something to look for and to aspire to," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino of her young pitchers after Tuesday's game. "The thing is, they're a good pitching staff, and they really help each other. They work together all the time; they are very, very supportive of one another."

Plourde has had a lot of success on the mound early in her career. In six career starts – all wins – the rookie pitcher has 65 strikeouts to go along with a 1.12 ERA in 43-2/3 innings of work this season. She has been unhittable at times, allowing just 19 hits, as opponents are hitting .132 against her.

Sanders is 22-11 with a 2.22 ERA in her career.

Grand Salato

Senior left fielder Samantha Salato hit two home runs and drove in four runs in Tuesday's win over Providence – including a three-run blast that cleared the left field fence – which is 190 feet away – by at least 40 feet in the third inning. She leads the team this season with nine home runs and 31 RBIs.

"I've been waiting for her to break out with a game like today for a couple weeks," Sortino said of Salato, who has already surpassed last season's total of seven home runs and needs just one more RBI to reach last year's 32. "She's been hitting the ball very, very well. It was just a matter of time. We weren't surprised."

Hit parade

Junior leadoff hitter Carly Normandin went 1-for-4 in the victory, extending her hitting streak to 16 games with a run-scoring single in the fourth inning.

A .305 career hitter entering this season, the captain and spark plug atop the batting order is hitting at a team-leading .clip of .417. She also leads the Minutewomen in a variety of categories, including: runs scored (26), stolen bases (10), doubles (9), total bases (71), on-base percentage (.455) and slugging percentage (.689).

"She's a fabulous player," Sortino said. "I was watching game film from the fall and she's really bought in and changed in a big way at the plate. I didn't even recognize her, I was like, 'Who is that? My god, it's Norm.'"

Eli Rosenwaike can be reached at erosenwa@dailycollegian.com

Bats send Friars home early

BALSCHMITER from page 10

By the time that game begins, Salato's first home run might still be traveling. The senior slugger drilled a 2-0 offering from Julie Fowler high into the air and well over the fence – and the 20-foot high scoreboard in left field – for a 3-run shot to put UMass ahead, 4-0, in the bottom of the third inning.

"It might be the furthest I've seen in a game in my career. It landed out in the parking lot, maybe 260 [feet]?" pondered Sortino. "It would have to be at least 250 – because it's 190 to the fence, 220 to the bleachers and 30 more feet to the parking lot.

"It was a slow-pitch home run."

It was also a long drive that dented a red mini-van in the parking lot.

"I heard a rumor that the person's car she dented isn't very happy about that," said a laughing Balschmiter after the game. "Given the balls I see her hit out here everyday in practice, I'm not surprised. That was definitely one of the farthest ever."

As Balschmiter began to settle down in the third inning, Salato's long drive added insurance runs that UMass turned out not to need. But that didn't stop Salato from adding another one in the fifth inning – this time on a line-drive shot to left-center field to put the Minutewomen up 6-0.

"Anything to help Brandice out is always great," Salato said. "She deserves it and if I can help her, that's good."

Balschmiter didn't need much assistance in her 17th victory of the season. After walking the leadoff batter in the first and third innings, nobody reached base safely against her for the rest of the game.

"Eventually I started to figure out my strike zone wasn't the umpire's strike zone today," Balschmiter said. "I was just trying to move the ball around and get some foul balls here and there and keep them off-balanced. The first couple of innings were a little shaky and then I found out where he wanted it."

Providence pitchers Fowler and Danielle Bertolette had trouble finding the umpire's strike zone. The two combined to issue eight free-passes compared to just one strikeout. Balschmiter struck out six.

"We swung at good pitches. Eight walks, one strikeout – that's a great stat," Sortino said. "We hit the ball well even when it was caught. It was a great performance at the plate."

With eight walks, UMass finished with just four hits – two of which came via the long ball from Salato. Junior leadoff hitter Carly Normandin had a run-scoring single in the fourth to extend her hitting streak to 16 games, and shortstop Whitney Williams had the other on a single in the third.

UMass scored a run in the top of the first without the benefit of a hit, as freshman second baseman Kyllie Magill walked, stole second and scored the game's first run after Providence third baseman Katelyn Revens made an error on a groundball by Salato.

Fowler, making her first start this season and second of her career, took the loss for the Friars. She allowed four runs (three earned) in three innings of work.

Game notes

Williams was hit in the back by a pitch in both the fourth and fifth innings.

Eli Rosenwaike can be reached at erosenwa@dailycollegian.com.

UMass senior third baseman Whitney Mollica went 0-for-2 yesterday against Providence. The Minutewomen defeated the Friars, 8-0, Tuesday night at the UMass Softball Complex for their eighth win by run-rule so far this season.

Want up-to-the-minute updates on all-things UMass Sports?

Follow the Sports Section of the Daily Collegian on Twitter!

UMassSportsMDC

Wakka-wakka Wednesday.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 5 | 3 | | | 6 | | | |
| 1 | | 9 | 3 | | 7 | | | 6 |
| 2 | 6 | | | 9 | | | | |
| | | | 5 | | | 3 | | |
| | | 2 | | | | 4 | | |
| | 9 | | | | 1 | | | |
| | | | | 8 | | | 4 | 5 |
| 4 | | | 9 | | 5 | 8 | | 1 |
| | | | 4 | | | 9 | 7 | |

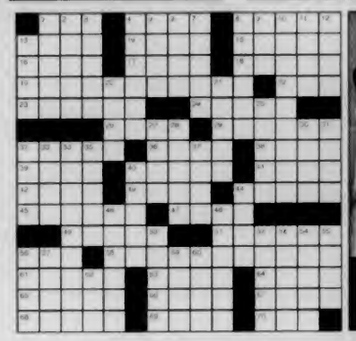
Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Amherst Outreach

Will 3 Credits Help?
Take an online class wherever you are!

Session 1: June 1- July 9
Session 2: July 14- August 19

Register Now!
Go to Spire or UMassULearn.net

ACROSS
1 Lid
4 Phobia prefix
8 Puzzle
13 Ump's call
14 Piece of concrete
15 Refrigerator name
16 "Laughin' regular"
17 Goose egg
18 Bookish types
19 Military advisers
22 Sock part
23 Wobble
25 Dilemma's else
26 Goiter, abbr.
29 Improves
32 Horse's place
36 Fuel, for some
38 Tide flowing backward?
39 Relaxation
40 Ado or Andes
41 Descartes or Gary
42 Early 3rd-century year
43 Or, equivalent
44 Foreign pope
45 Bathroom hangings
47 Mr. Straus
49 Districts
51 Bear witness
56 Achy and feverish
58 Ne'er ___
59 Aseptic's words
61 Uncovered
63 Smallest
64 Noise detection
65 Mediterranean island
66 ___ Mountains
67 Say no to
68 Viper
69 Hobgoblin
70 Syllables for the uncertain



DOWN
1 Crumbly cake
2 Bizarre
3 Fold
4 Edward's kin
5 Wooden shoe
6 Member of royalty
7 Tin, Jerry
8 Mel Gibson film
9 Scottish uncle
10 Sam Malone, for one
11 Tear apart
12 End, with a manual, for
13 Lenten practice
20 Greenish blue
21 Exchange
25 Steer-blow reversal
27 ___ meet
28 Of a muscle sound
30 Feast
31 Holy rivers
32 Spartan group
33 Tortes — fried
34 Bred & foaled
35 "The Streets of Laredo" operator
36 Pry
37 Villain
40 Tabulate
44 Type of bread
46 Bank, for some
48 Enormously
50 Wash
52 Hidden treasure
53 Driven producer
54 Cabinet features
55 Amateur
56 Ancient Peruvian
57 Fall
59 Buca abroad
60 Unexcited obstacle
62 Season for 44 Across

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"If the only tool you have is a hammer, you tend to see every problem as a nail."

- Abraham Maslow (1908 - 1970)

DAYLEY BY ANNIE KEITHLINE

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

BLISS BY HARRY BLISS

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You've reached a spork in the road, which has rightfully confused you.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't buy acid that comes dripped on a poisonous South American tree frog.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
A pillowcase full of doorknobs will be the last thing you see today.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
The American Idol orgy party you are planning will be a swinging success.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Think like a dog today.
Follow the bacon bits.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your nipple aspirations will never come to pass.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Your idea of the American Dream mostly has to do with strippers and an unlimited supply of whipped cream.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
It isn't anything but a "G" thing, Honey.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You feel like an old man.
Your libido seconds this.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Remember: The Exorcist is a bad movie for a first date.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your shotgun marriage to an AK-47 could only lead to a messy divorce.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Streaking at the Masters in Augusta this weekend was a real double-bogey (according to your legal council).

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO expenence necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office. $11.00/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 17th.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

FOR RENT

Amherst: 2,3, & 4 bedroom apartments, $1200-$2250. FREE HEAT! Great Specials! www.MillValleyApts.com or 413-253-7377

Looking for summer housing? 3 bedroom apt. in Rolling Green looking to sub-let. Clean, convenient, and quiet. Call Kate at 978-257-2549

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last www.brandywine-apts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Graduation Weekend. Private 2 bedroom house with sleeping loft. Sleeps up to 8, large fenced in yard, borders conservation and hiking trails, 1 mile from campus, fully furnished, much charm, dogs ok. Fri-Sun. $500. 1413-549-5048

FOR SALE

Toyota Celica GT Convertible, 1996, 25th Anniversary Edition, 76,200 miles, excellent condition, automatic, AC, $8900. 413-658-8687

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Balschmiter moves to the top

Senior ace becomes school's career wins leader in 8-0 win

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

It's not easy to overshadow "the farthest home run" that Elaine Sortino has ever seen in her 30-year tenure as Massachusetts softball coach.

But at the rate Brandice Balschmiter is racking up school records and personal milestones, it's no surprise that the star pitcher was once again the story despite a tape-measure blast from Samantha Salato.

Balschmiter recorded her school-record 109th win in a fitting way, throwing her eighth career no-hitter in an 8-0, six-inning run-rule victory over Providence Tuesday night at the UMass Softball Complex.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 8 |
| PC | 0 |

Backed by Salato's two home runs and four runs batted in, the senior ace struggled with her command early before setting down the final 11 batters in a row to give her the landmark victory – passing former UMass star Danielle Henderson (1996-1999) for sole possession of first place.

It's been a memorable past few weeks for Balschmiter, who became the second Minutewoman to record 1,000 career strikeouts in a win over Vermont on April 2. But the accolades couldn't be any further from her mind.

"Honestly, it's just another win," said Balschmiter, who moved into a tie with former Arizona pitcher Jennie Finch for 25th in NCAA history with No. 109. "This stuff doesn't matter in the long run.

"Looking back on the season, I'll probably think, 'Hey, this is really cool that it happened,' but our goal is to get to the [College] World Series. And I won't be satisfied until we get there," she added.

The Minutewomen ended the game an inning early by scoring two runs – one on a bases-loaded hit-by-pitch and another on a bases-loaded walk – in the bottom of the sixth inning for the run-rule win.

UMass, which is ranked No. 17 in the ESPN.com/USA Softball Poll, extended its winning streak to 12 games and improved to 24-6 on the season. Tuesday's tilt against Providence (13-25) was the first of back-to-back non-conference games on the schedule for the Minutewomen, who will face Boston University Wednesday night in Amherst.

See SOFTBALL on page 8

UMass ace Brandice Balschmiter, right, broke the school's all-time win record with her 109th in Tuesday's 8-0 victory over Providence. Balschmiter also pitched her eighth career no-hitter and tied former Arizona pitcher Jennie Finch for 25th all-time on the Division 1 career wins list.

UMass senior right fielder Samantha Salato crosses home plate after one of her two home runs against Providence Tuesday afternoon at the UMass Softball Complex. The senior has a team-high of nine on the season and has driven in 31 runs.

Henderson's records falling, others in serious jeopardy

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

If you look at the record books, former Massachusetts softball star pitcher Danielle Henderson and current ace Brandice Balschmiter have quite the rivalry going.

Score one for the latter's side after Tuesday night's record-breaking performance from Balschmiter.

The senior right-hander passed Henderson, a player she grew up admiring, for first-place on the all-time wins list at UMass with a shutout victory over Providence at the UMass Softball Complex. Her 109th career victory was done with flair, as Balschmiter tossed her eighth career no-hitter in the 8-0, six-inning victory.

Balschmiter has additional bragging rights: she accomplished the feat despite three fewer appearances (158) and nine fewer innings (955-2/3) than Henderson did in her run of dominance from 1996-1999.

"I've known Danielle since I was 11-years-old watching her play," Balschmiter said earlier this season. "I grew up working with her and learning to pitch with her."

Henderson taught her well, but her pupil would have to play another season entirely to approach her school strikeout record of 1,343 – which ranks 13th in NCAA history. Balschmiter, who had six Tuesday night, became the second pitcher at UMass to reach the 1,000 mark on April 2, 2009. She currently stands at 1,036.

UMass Softball

Currently, Balschmiter ranks second to Henderson in strikeouts, appearances, innings pitched, complete games (131-121), shutouts (72-58), no-hitters (14-8) and perfect games (3-2). Her career earned-run average of 1.02 ranks third in school history behind Lynn Stockley (0.81) and Henderson's 0.70.

See BALSCHMITER on page 8

UMass hosts Eagles

Minutemen, BC set to meet once again

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team couldn't capture its second-straight Beanpot Tournament title Monday, falling to Northeastern, 5-3.

However, the Minutemen will get another chance at beating the team that they slipped past to advance to the Beanpot Championship game.

The Minutemen will host Boston College Wednesday afternoon in a game slated for 3 p.m.

"Well, they're a good ball club. We know that based on our game last week," UMass coach Mike Stone said.

BC (22-12, 9-7 Atlantic Coast Conference) has won four of its past five contests, including a 9-5 win against Harvard in the Beanpot Consolation game, a shutout victory against Rhode Island last Wednesday and a series victory at Wake Forest last weekend.

Against the Crimson, first baseman Mike Belfiore drove in three runs for the Eagles, while right-hander Mike Dennhardt earned his third victory of the season.

The offense was not there a week ago for BC, as the Minutemen recorded 10 hits on their way to a 5-2 victory against the Eagles.

"We need to do the same things as last week and keep them off balance. Last week, we had Jared Freni go in, and he pitched well. [He] got on track and threw hard," Stone said.

The junior right-hander was a bit shaky starting out for UMass, going 3-2/3 innings while surrendering two runs, walking one batter and striking out four.

The Eagles got on the board first, with back-to-back homeruns in the bottom of the second inning.

That would be all for BC offensively, with the most consistent member of the UMass bullpen, sophomore Charlie Benson, quieting the fourth best offense (.319 team batting average) in the extremely competitive Atlantic Coast Conference.

The win was Benson's first victory of the season, as he went 5-1/3 innings while giving up two hits and two walks and striking out two batters.

"Then we brought on Benson, who is more of an off-speed, control pitcher; he really kept them off balance, and that's what one of the things we are going to have to do Wednesday," Stone said.

Benson has the second lowest earned-run average on the team in nine appearances this season.

In the semifinal return to his hometown of Brockton, Mass., senior infielder Adam Tempesta scored the winning run and drove in two more.

Along with Tempesta, junior outfielder Brian Baudinet led all hitters, going 3-for-4 at the plate with two triples, an RBI and a run scored.

"We need to be firing on all cylinders. We need to pitch well, swing the bat and make things happen offensively and play good defense," Stone said.

Despite the performance Benson gave last week against the Eagles, Stone knows that his starting pitcher and his team must get quality outs against a high-powered offense while not making bad plays in the field.

"We're going to have to throw strikes to minimize their offensive opportunities," Stone said.

Defensively, the Eagles have two quality backstops in senior Harry Darling and junior Tony Sanchez.

In the previous game this season, Darling went 1-for-3 at the plate against the Minutemen while Sanchez is ninth in the ACC with a .385 batting average and was named to the 2009 Brooks Wallace Watch List.

"They have two good catchers, but you have to choose your times wisely," Stone said.

"You have certain people that can steal, in certain situations and certain counts, and that's what we try to look for."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

UMass senior infielder Adam Tempesta and the Minutemen take on Boston College today at Earl Lorden Field at 3 p.m. The teams met last week in the opening round of the Beanpot, which UMass won, 5-2.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SUNNY | HIGH: 62 LOW: 31 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, APRIL 16, 2009

GEO gains contract

Graduate union reaches agreement with administration

By Lisa DeBenedictis
Collegian Staff

After nearly a year, the University of Massachusetts and the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) have come to a provisional agreement on a three-year contract, covering from Aug. 30, 2009 until Aug. 31, 2012.

"Our graduate student employees play a major role in the success of the UMass Amherst academic community, and we are pleased to have reached a multi-year agreement with them," said Ed Blaguszewski, campus spokesman, in a statement to the media.

Nina Eichacker, secretary/treasurer of the GEO, was also very pleased with the contract, and even pleasantly surprised, especially with the current economic standing of the University.

"We are quite happy with the contract, given the economic environment," said Eichacker. "We are particularly happy about the [freeze put on to] the graduate service fee. The graduate students face a number of fees each year; we suggested a freeze on the fee, so that the fees will not increase each year."

The contract includes a stipend increase of 1.5 percent, taking effect immediately on Aug. 30, 2009. There is also a possibility for additional stipend increases next fiscal year, pending state tax revenues. On Sept. 5, 2010 and Sept. 4, 2011, there will be a 2.5 percent stipend increase with an additional 1 percent pool for the lowest minimum stipend rates.

In addition, there will be a 50-cent-per-week, per-employee raise in the Health and Welfare Fund in 2011 and 2012. In fiscal year 2009, money will be used from this fund to reimburse members for health insurance premium costs, but it will be one-time only.

In regard to the length of time it took to reach an agreement with the administration, Eichacker admits it was a difficult process.

"By the end of it, both sides were really eager to come to a solution. It is a long time to bargain," said Eichacker.

"I would say that we were definitely jerked around in the process," added Eichacker. "Part of that is unavoidable in these economic times. I would also say that the administration made some great concessions for us."

Another aspect of the contract, aside from its financial concessions, that really pleased the GEO, according to Eichacker, was the administration's decision to include gender identity in the articles about discriminations based on hiring.

"We already had [included]

See GEO on page 2

GEO vice president Timothy Sutton stands outside of the GEO office in the Student Union. His group gained a three-year contract.

Local women set for Body Politics show

By Netha Gill
Collegian Correspondent

Thirteen women and they all have something to say. The Women of Color Leadership Network, a program of the Office of Programs and Services for ALANA Students under the Center for Student Development, will present "Body Politics," an award-winning production by and about women of color at Bowker Auditorium, 7 p.m., April 16 and 17.

According to artistic director Iris Jacob, audiences will be treated to original pieces composed and performed by 13 ensemble members on topics ranging from love, self-esteem, sexuality and skin color. It will also explore the issues of racism, classism and violence. This year's ensemble includes community women, as well as graduate and undergraduate students who do not necessarily possess a formal theater background, but stood out for "their heart, desire and focus in wanting to speak their truth," according to Jacob.

These two performances are a culmination of a 19-week program focused on writing, reflection and transformation. Ensemble members participated in workshops and were trained in storytelling techniques that included singing, movement and other forms of dramatic expression to bring their stories to the stage. The American College Personnel Association (ACPA) recognized "Body Politics" with a Voice of Inclusion Award at its March 2009 Convention in Washington D.C.

The event is free to the public and wheelchair accessible.

Netha Gill can be reached at nmgill@student.umass.edu.

Toot serves Faith on Tap

Don Cahoon, coach of the Massachusetts hockey team, speaks on faith in athletics in the Graduate Lounge in the Campus Center on Tuesday night.

Obama lifts stem cell ban

UMass looks to federal funds for research, innovation

By Joe Stahl and Maggie Freleng
Collegian Staff Correspondents

University of Massachusetts campuses, specifically the UMass Medical School at Worcester, hope to use newly granted federal funds to make big leaps in human stem cell research.

The funds were made available following President Barack Obama's executive order in March to lift the ban for federally funded research on stem cells.

The ban, known as the Dickey-Wicker amendment, first became a law in 1996. It strictly banned the use of federal dollars human embryos for research in which embryos are destroyed, discarded or subjected to risk of injury.

In August 2001, President Bush loosened the Dickey-Wicker amendment by ordering that tax dollars could be used for embryonic studies. However, the amendment was loosened for only a limited number of stem cell lines which had already extracted from embryos.

According to Gary Stein, professor of cell biology at UMass Medical, there were not enough lines "for someone to effectively work with."

President Obama's decision to lift the ban for federally funded research releases state government funds to support human embryonic stem cell research on not only lines already in existence but on ones yet to be created.

UMass Medical and potentially UMass Amherst hope to reap the benefits of the federally granted dollars towards stem cell research in the near future.

The exact amount of federal funding for the research in the next year is unknown; there is no official budget for such spending. The allocation of federal money to stem cell researchers is contingent on the decisions of the National Institutes of Health (NIH), which is a part of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. NIH is the primary fed-

See STEMCELLS on page 2

Khanna escorted from SGA senate meeting

By Mike Fox
Collegian Staff

Commuter Area Senator Derek Khanna was removed from last night's Student Government Association senate meeting in what he described as a demonstration in support of the first amendment.

Khanna submitted a motion for last night's meeting that proposed the senate's retraction of a resolution it passed last week. The previously passed resolution requested that the publication The Minuteman apologize for comments that the senate described as slander in its last meeting.

Khanna believed the previous resolution violated the paper's right to free speech and distributed a legal argument to members of the senate in support of his motion.

Senate speaker Shaun Robinson declined to place the item on the night's agenda and refused to entertain Khanna's multiple attempts to add the motion to the agenda. Robinson delivered no comment in regards to his ruling.

During and in between the next several motions, Khanna made many attempts to make his motion heard, going so far as to take over the senate podium. At this point, several other senators addressed Khanna, attempting to convince him to allow the senate to continue with its scheduled agenda.

One of these senators, Rudy Mahotiere of Central said, "I understand and respect Derek's passion, but I feel that the manner in which he conducted himself was inappropriate. The motion had been ruled dilatory, but I suggest that he seeks out other avenues in the bylaws to have his motion looked at seriously."

Senator Alan Stephan of Central further explained that since the previous week's motion was non-binding, it doesn't actually have an effect on or limit The Minuteman. He added that according to the SGA bylaws, the stated time to reconsider a motion is during the meeting in which it is passed.

After several more attempts by Khanna to make his motion heard, during which he cited out parts of the SGA bylaws related to a senator's right to speak during sessions, speaker Robinson asked Khanna to leave the room. He replied that only the University of Massachusetts Police Department would be able to remove him from the senate chamber. Following this statement, Robinson proceeded to call University police and placed the senate in recess.

The recess lasted 20 minutes, during which time three officers appeared, and Khanna willingly left the senate chamber.

Following his removal, Khanna said, "The SGA is violating its own bylaws and refused to hear a legal motion. If defending free speech requires my arrest, so be it. It's ironic that the bill was supposed to allow The Minuteman free speech, and in the process of sponsoring it, my freedom of speech was violated."

He went on to explain that since a fully functioning judiciary didn't exist prior to the night's meeting, the senate was the only medium in which he could challenge the bylaw in question.

Southwest Senator Josh Davidson defended Khanna's demonstration.

"I support and admire Senator Khanna's efforts on this matter, particularly when it is in the best interest of the senate to hear the argument. This is just another case of the SGA's failure to conduct itself in a responsible manner," he said.

After the recess ended, the senate voted on a motion that asked for the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union to be placed under student control. Senator Subhan Tariq sponsored the motion and based it on the necessary fee to book the room. He added that 20 years ago, the room existed as student-controlled space. The motion passed.

After the meeting ended, chancellor of elections Sean McNair conducted SGA Judiciary elections. Junior legal studies major Rob Weed was elected chief justice and sophomore political science major Chris Marquis was elected associate chief justice. On his election, Weed said, "We're happy to finally have a fully functioning judiciary."

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu

ARTS & LIVING

FALLON AT THE CALVIN THEATER

Jimmy Fallon, now the host of "Late Night," shows off the stage skills that got him onto "Saturday Night Live" at the Calvin Theatre this Saturday night.

SEE PAGE 4

SPORTS

HOME CURTAIN CALL

The game against the Hoyas is not only important to the Minutemen as a team but especially to the seniors, as it's their last game at Garber Field.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

COLUMN | SICK OF HEALTHCARE NEWS

The health care system is just as flawed as the people telling us the information about it, and Nick Milano wants to put a stop to this plagued dishonesty.

SEE PAGE 3

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

PODCAST | WEEKEND AT THE MOVIES

Daily Collegian film critics Kevin Koczwara and Shayna Murphy take a look at upcoming films with Assistant MultiMedia Editor Pete Rizzo.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 52

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasserzuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olsein
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING, PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING, EDITOR Brian Wood
COPY EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Leigh Greaney
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS, EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenweiker
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Mureen
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
WEB EDITOR Victor Jaeck
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kocziwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Melaine Tuettinen
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gellerniter
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Weliver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS FALL/SPRING SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUES. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ACADEMY LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE 150 WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JAN. 1994. FOR ADVERTISING, RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Michael King

COPY EDITOR
Shayna Murphy

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michelle Abbascano, Dan Centola

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEWS

BLOG | EDITOR'S NOTE
NEWS EDITOR WILL MCGUINNESS DEBUTS THE MDC'S NEW BLOG THAT WANTS YOUR NEWS TIPS AND MUCK. TAKE PART IN INVESTIGATING THE EVENTS AND OFFICIALS OF YOUR AREA.

VIDEO |
DIDN'T SEE THAT FREE SPEECH RALLY EVERYONE'S TALKING ABOUT? IT'S FINE. WE'VE GOT IT ON TAPE FOR YOU.

VIDEO |
REPORTER GISEL SAILLANT PROVIDES A SPRING BREAK RETROSPECTIVE YOU CAN WATCH WITHOUT DELETING YOUR INTERNET HISTORY RIGHT AFTER.

ARTS & LIVING

PODCAST |
THE COLLEGIAN'S OLIVER SCOTT SNURE INTERVIEWS PRODUCER AND MUSICIAN JOHN VANDERSLICE

PODCAST|
DAILY COLLEGIAN FILM CRITICS KEVIN KOCZWARA AND SHAYNA MURPHY TAKE A LOOK AT UPCOMING FILMS WITH ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA EDITOR PETE RIZZO.

GET YOUR POKE ON!

LIKE US AS MUCH AS WE LIKE YOU? BECOME FRIENDS WITH THE COLLEGIAN ON FACEBOOK TO GET DAILY NEWS UPDATES SPRINKLED INTO YOUR FRIENDS' CONSTANT NEWSFEED CONFESSIONS.

Federal funding for stem cells to UM

STEM CELLS from page 1

eral agency for conducting and supporting medical research.

Stein speculates that researchers at the Medical School and possibly at UMass Amherst will begin to see funding for human stem cell applications as early as fall 2009. The federally granted money from Obama's stimulus plan is intended to extend research and therefore potentially create more job opportunities for people in this field.

The UMass Medical Human Embryonic Stem Cell Core Facility "has the most comprehensive stem cell registry globally," according to Stein, who is also the director of the stem cell registry at UMass Medical.

Back in 2007, Massachusetts granted an estimated $3 million to UMass Medical to establish a human embryonic stem cell bank and registry and make it operational via training. The school is fully equipped to train researchers to become experts in the field of stem cells.

UMass Medical is currently working on 25-30 applications dealing with the research of human stem cells.

Stem cell researchers traditionally work with two kinds of stem cells from animals and humans: non-embryonic, or "adult" stem cells, and embryonic stem cells. Adult stem cells are derived from human tissue that can renew itself and grow to acquire the features of the tissue it came from, such as a heart, liver or muscle cell. However, adult stem cells are limited to the tissue where they are derived.

"I don't think you could truly use adult stem cells by that method ... its very labor intensive," said Rafael Fissore, professor of Biology at UMass Amherst, on the use of adult stem cells.

Embryonic stem cells, the most controversial, are therefore worked with in hopes for finding more effective methods of research. Embryonic stem cells are derived from developing embryos, giving rise to the controversy of extracting embryonic stem cells that have the potential to become a wide variety of specialized cell types. Given their unique regenerative abilities, stem cells can open new doors to treating a wide spectrum of diseases.

With the new funds, researchers at UMass Medical are enthusiastic about working with embryonic cells to treat diseases like cancer, diabetes, muscular, skeletal and neurological disorders such as Alzheimer's, Amyotrophic lateral Sclerosis (ALS) and Parkinson's Disease.

"There is increased funding for biomedical research out there and with the new guidelines there can be a lot more stem cell investigations. The changes in the guidelines are really going to position us to do a lot more involving stem cell research. Many more questions are going to be answered," said Stein.

One of the many important questions Stein said stem cell investigators expect to answer involves how pluripotent stem cells can be used successfully. Pluripotent stem cells are cells that can specialize in any bodily tissue. The cells are channeled along a certain lineage so it will become a cell tissue or organ "which becomes important for regenerative medicine," Stein said.

Pluripotent stem cells are traditionally used when working with regenerating organs for degenerative diseases.

UMass Medical's advanced medical facility gives scientists access to these pluripotent human stem cells, which scientists at UMass Amherst currently do not have access to. The research done at UMass Amherst is limited to animals such as mice. Mice allow for research involving fertilization and embryogenesis, but research on diseases is limited.

However, Fissore is optimistic about advancing research at UMass Amherst to human stem cell lines.

"I think there will be a lot more [embryonic stem cell research] since the ban lift ... each species has something specific to that species, that's why it is important to study human stem cells," he said.

Joe Stahl and Maggie Freleng can be reached at news@dailycollegian.com

Graduate union reaches contract with University

NICOLE ARRINGTON/COLLEGIAN

GEO vice president Timothy Sutton sets up outside of the union's office this week. GEO reached a contract with the University that extends to 2012.

GEO from page 1

discriminations based on sex, race, religion and ethnicity, and to add gender identity was a really big deal," said Eichacker.

Although the GEO is overall pleased with the contract, Eichacker argued that they do believe that all graduate students should have a freeze to their fees as well.

"We are working for all graduate students, not just university employees. We just want to secure as much protection to graduate students as possible," she said.

Eichacker also expressed a strong desire on behalf of the GEO to work together with undergraduate students at UMass to keep fees down.

"Something the GEO is really trying to do is reach out to other organizations, because that is the only way we are going to get protection for our students in the end," said Eichacker.

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebenedictis@dailycollegian.com

Crime Log: Monday, Apr. 6–12

FRIDAY

Mark Bennett, of 109 Denver St. Springfield, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on Massachusetts Ave. at 5:20 p.m. and charged with operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license, operating an unregistered motor vehicle and a plate-number violation to conceal identification.

"This was a situation where the officer ran the license plate through the Registry of Motor Vehicles and the plate didn't match the car, and it showed that the status of the car's registration was revoked; the person behind the wheel had no license," said University of Massachusetts Police Department Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald.

At first the car showed up as stolen according to police, but "through further investigation it appears the status on the registration was revoked due to stolen plates, not the car," Archbald added.

Saturday

Jeremy Reed Simms, of 15 Windy Hill Rd. Cohasset, Mass., was arrested as a result of a domestic disturbance outside Cance dormitory at 12:19 a.m. and charged with assault and domestic battery. Also arrested a short time later at the same address was Chelsea Elizabeth Brown of 6 Oakland Cir. Wellesley, Mass. Brown was charged with disorderly conduct.

"We got a call from one of our cadets that there may be a domestic going on in the court yard outside the building and that we had possible previous contact with these two yelling at one and another," said Archbald.

When officers arrived they gathered information from the different parties on the scene.

"Information came to us from the cadet of what he had heard and also [Brown] reported some of what had occurred to the officers and there was enough probable cause to place Simms under arrest for domestic battery," he added.

About 20 minutes later Brown was also arrested.

"She was uncooperative and evasive when answering questions and was sobbing in a loud manner," said Archbald.

Brown began yelling loudly according to police and disturbing the residents of the dormitory and then followed the officers when they attempted to leave.

"They were getting in their cruisers to leave and she continued to scream – one officer in particular put his car in drive and Brown knelt down in front of the cruiser which prevented him from leaving," said Archbald. She was then placed under arrest.

Compiled by Adam P. Coulter He can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St • 4 [illegible] • www.amherstliving.com/realty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS
FEB. 4TH FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

edu•va•ca•tion (ĕj'ə-vā-kā'shən) n. Taking five or ten week summer courses at Mount Wachusett Community College to transfer back to your home institution.
Save time and money by taking a summer course at MWCC. It's easily done, usually through your college's registrar's office. Check there first to ensure the course meets their requirements. Once you complete your MWCC course, request a transcript from the MWCC Enrollment Center to transfer the credits to your home institution
ENG101 English Composition I
ENG102 English Composition II
ECO101 Macroeconomics
ECO102 Microeconomics
PSY105 Intro to Psychology
SOC103 Intro to Sociology
BIO109 Biology I
CHE107 General Chemistry I
HIS201 History of the United States
HUM260 The Art of Being Human
MAT160 College Mathematics I
MAT161 College Mathematics II
and more!
Mount Wachusett Community College
www.mwcc.edu
Check out MWCC classes this summer! Go to www.mwcc.edu/summer
Enrollment Center (978) 630-9110
email admissions@mwcc.mass.edu

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

NEED AN APARTMENT?
PUFFTON VILLAGE
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." – Sir Salman Rushdie
THURSDAY, APRIL 16, 2009 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Pregnant parking

Michele Copeland

The pressure we incur as college students can be completely overwhelming at times. Homework, exams, studying, as well as trying to maintain our social lives, is completely draining. Try doing it 37 weeks pregnant.

At the beginning of the fall 2008 semester, during my first trimester, I wrote an email to parking services. I commute roughly 50 miles round trip to and from school each day and I knew that in the coming months, as I grew bigger, that it would be harder for me to get around campus.

Were there any special accommodations parking services would be able to make?

The response was that parking services will make arrangements for women who provide a doctors note when they reach their third trimester, which is about 28 weeks. This was a perfectly agreeable situation for me. Most pregnant women are able to stay active through the majority of their pregnancy, and despite some added weight, I was getting around just fine.

Towards the beginning of the spring semester I returned to parking services, note in hand.

My expectation was that I would be able to park in much closer proximity to each of my buildings. Despite the name "Parking Services," the people inside did not provide much service.

They only had openings that were far from my classes. Pointing to a map and asking me where I wanted to park was ridiculous, because I proposed lots on the map that supposedly didn't exist or were full.

What is a person to do when they are carrying 20 plus extra pounds in front of them and have nowhere to park?

Unfortunately, I ended up leaving without any parking accommodations.

What is a person to do when they are carrying 20-plus extra pounds in front of them and have nowhere to park? Not only was I carrying extra weight and precious cargo, but in February it was pretty icy.

Pregnant women are often a little off balance. My doctor's note even indicated the need for close parking because of the weather. I was basically left no other choice than to create some parking of my own –mostly by using the 15-minute loading zones.

Last week I received a $40 citation for my home-made parking. This infuriated me.

I sat down and wrote an e-mail to everyone I thought would listen (my Aunt Lori, Parking Services, the chancellor and president of UMass, The Daily Collegian, my congressional representative, etc). The truth is – there is so much parking at UMass.

There is handicap parking and parking for vendors – there's also parking for psychological services, motorcycle parking, 15-minute parking and the list goes on. Why shouldn't there be a designated parking space for third-trimester pregnant women?

I am certainly not the first woman to be pregnant at UMass, nor will I be the last. Most people already know the every day difficulties pregnant women face. The need for closer parking, especially at such a large university, is a necessity for pregnant women.

The changes our bodies face don't just start and end with weight gain. Backaches, sciatica, swollen ankles, increasing need for bathroom breaks, increased heart rate and breathing difficulties – just to name a few. And don't women have the right to attend college and be pregnant with some accommodations made during the third trimester? I really began to think about how ridiculous this was.

The response I got from my e-mail was overwhelming. Some responses came back with helpful, encouraging information and others were a little more intimidating and less friendly.

Why doesn't the largest publicly funded university in this state have parking for third trimester pregnant women? Why are so many spots available for 15-minute loading and unloading?

There has to be some changes made. Pharmacies and grocery stores have gotten with the times and made parking easier on pregnant women and there is less walking involved at these places. The UMass campus stretches across 1,450 acres, and yet it does not have designated parking for pregnant women?

The simple solution to all of this is to create parking for pregnant women.

Not just for reasons previously listed, but also because it is the right thing to do. How inconsiderate of the University to make pregnant women in their third trimester walk around campus from class to class?

The added strain of walking and lugging around class-related material and the ability to go into labor at any moment with a car parked god knows where is appalling.

Although I am graduating next month, I still believe changes need to be made. Universities need to make accommodations for all of their staff and students.

Right now, UMass is offering to place pregnant women in other parking lots according to availability. This placement is not good enough.

This idea of special needs, third-trimester parking needs to be reevaluated. If that means taking away a few 15-minute loading spaces and replacing those placards with "Expectant Women/Women with infants" placards – so be it. Just because it does not exist here now does not mean it shouldn't.

Michele Copeland is a Umass student. She can be reached at michelec@student.umass.edu.

Crippling health insurance debates

Nick Milano

When PBS airs an episode of its widely acclaimed series "Frontline," one should be able to expect that it will give both sides of the story since it is funded by the government and should therefore not have one certain slant or another. A couple of weeks ago though, "Frontline" took it upon itself to limit the debate by airing "Sick Around America," a sequel to its "Sick Around the World" episode from last year. The show supposedly offers an in-depth look at the health care system in the United States.

If Frontline, an independent, government funded news program has already limited the public debate, then surely the rest of the mainstream media – backed by massive corporations – will do the same.

"Frontline" ignored the one major conclusion that one comes to after exploring the health care systems of a variety of countries.

T.R. Reid was the correspondent featured on that "Sick Around the World" episode and he did much of the work on "Sick Around America." However, he was not seen for one minute on the "Sick Around America" episode from a couple of weeks ago.

It turns out he was cut out after being shocked that the episode for which he worked on for months would not include his overarching conclusion: that for the health care system to work best, the health insurance companies must not be for-profit.

In an interview with Counterpunch, Reid explained that all the research he did pointed to the necessity of having non-profit health insurance companies. None of the countries he visited that had health insurance (the United Kingdom is a single payer system without health insurance) allowed primary insurers to make a profit.

While supplemental insurance for things like cosmetic surgery and other unnecessary medical procedures are available and offered by for-profit insurers, the primary insurance that covers people when they need medical coverage must not make profits.

"Doctors, hospitals, nurses, labs can all be for-profit, but the payment system has to be non-profit," Reid said. "All the other countries have agreed on that. We are the only one that allows health insurance companies to make a profit. You can't allow a profit to be made on the basic package of health insurance."

But while "Frontline" pushed the idea that other countries make health insurers cover everyone, it conveniently ignored the crucial point that they do not allow them to post a profit.

It was bad enough that "Frontline" chose to bypass this point, but what was worse was that it focused on health insurance lobbyists.

The documentary did point out the many problems of the health insurance industry, but did not go far enough in presenting all points of view necessary.

This is scary – in fact, it's frightening. When addressing concerns over revising the health care system, "Frontline" leaned on Karen Ignagni, who just happened to be the president and CEO of America's Health Insurance Plans (AHIP), the health insurance industry's lobbyist organization.

If she does not have an agenda in protecting the profitability of health insurance, then no one does.

This is so scary, as a professor said in class the other day, because "Frontline" has already reduced the margins of debate. If "Frontline," an independent, government-funded news program has already limited the public debate, then surely the rest of the mainstream media – backed by massive corporations – will do the same.

Thus, anyone clamoring to make primary health insurance non-profit will seem way outside of the mainstream and truly radical – even though it is something the rest of the world does.

What does this mean? Well, obviously health care reform will not result in reduced profitability for health insurance. It probably would not have, without the "Frontline" episode, but PBS is not encouraging the debate that it should as a neutral arm of the media.

The least that Americans can expect from its government is that it looks at all points of view and all ideas for fixing the health care system in the United States. Health does not depend on the health care system; people get sick first, then they seek help.

But when 50 million people cannot even expect to easily get medical attention when they need it due to a lack of insurance, change seems long overdue. The debate should be active and widespread.

We should hear the merits of Obama's plan to extend lower costs and extend coverage. We should hear health insurance companies defend their gambling on people's health to make money. We should hear why maybe health is not something people should make money on, especially in the insurance corner.

This is the least that we can expect. When "Frontline" limits the debate for us, we are not even getting that much.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

PORK PLAGIARISM

Dear Editor,
RE: "Free-range, not bacteria-free" by Nicole Sobel; April 14

As an alumna of UMass Amherst (M.S. Astronomy, 2003) and a faculty member at Quinsigamond Community College (Worcester, Mass.), I feel it is important for public higher education institutions to maintain their reputation and rigor both inside the classroom and out. Therefore what Ms. Nicole Sobel has done in plagiarizing James McWilliams' NY Times article titled "Free-Range Trichinosis" (April 9, 2009) is reprehensible.

I am an Assistant Professor of Physics and Integrated Science, and I often teach introductory "Gen Ed" science courses for non-majors. One of my requirements is for the students to write at least one paper requiring the synthesis of many sources in the news and on the internet.

While I do not require the full parenthetical citations or footnotes that an English faculty member might require, it is still necessary for my students to (1) use their own words, and (2) cite their sources. Students who fail to do so after a first warning receive a penalty ranging from an F in the course to being kicked out of the college entirely.

To determine whether a student has committed plagiarism I perform the Google test – I take a phrase from the sentence and paste it in in its entirety into Google, with quotes around the phrase (quotes are required to cull out hits on similar topics and restrict your results to only potential plagiarism).

If any hits turn up, I read the link and determine whether the student plagiarized it. In Ms. Sobel's article, multiple phrases fail the Google test. The first two phrases I picked randomly both turned up McWilliams' article as the first hit on Google: "people taste when they eat free-range is a result not so", "pork can be more likely than caged pork to carry". Ms. Sobel's article failed the Google test, and had she submitted this to me as a class paper, she would have failed my class as well.

Thankfully Ms. Sobel's previous articles for the Collegian do not appear to be plagiarized (I ran the Google test on "AIG bonuses" 3/22/09, "Looking for" 3/29/09, and "Unemployment" 4/5/09, and all pass) so I would not recommend expulsion from the school in this case.

However, I would still recommend her removal from Collegian staff. Serving on a college paper, like participating in any club, is a privileged granted to students based upon their good standing as a student, and I am sure that Collegian positions are competitive. The reputation of the paper rides upon the shoulders off all its staff.

Ms. Sobel clearly does not honor the reputation of the Collegian, let alone of UMass as a whole, and therefore should not be a member of Collegian staff. I hope to see an article from Editor in Chief Michael King informing Collegian readership of Ms. Sobel's dismissal, as well as a formal apology to the NY Times and McWilliams. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,
Andria Schwortz
Class of '03
QCC Faculty

Editor's note: Since news of this circumstance reached The Collegian, we have taken appropriate action against Ms. Sobel as she is no longer a member of The Daily Collegian staff.

SECOND HELPING OF PORK PLAGIARISM

Dear Editor,

It was shocking to read Nicole Sobel's article "Free-range, not bacteria-free," and realize how much of her piece had been lifted verbatim from the New York Times op-ed article that was published on 3/10. It makes me wonder whether the papers she submits for her coursework are also plagiarized. The Daily Collegian needs to raise its standards and hire writers who actually submit original material.

Carleen Madigan

WE'RE ALL IN THE SGA

Dear Editor,
RE: "Divvy dollars democratically" by Eli Gottlieb; April 9

As he casts his net wide in an attempt to offend as many people as possible, student columnist Eli Gottlieb demonstrates a lack of understanding of the SGA's budget process and a lack of awareness of student organizations in general. To clarify: The SGA is an established student organization with the responsibility of allocating student activities money and whose membership is the entire student body.

Any student can run for elected office, and all students can vote in the elections, which take place each September for Senate and House Councils and each March for President, Student Trustee, and Area Government. (The bylaws are available in the SGA office, Student Union 420.)

The Ways and Means Committee of the Student Senate carefully reviews all established student organization budget requests before passing them on to the full Senate.

Mr. Gottlieb does get one thing right: Not enough people know about the SGA's processes, and not enough people are involved for us to call ourselves a truly democratic organization.

I currently work as the Secretary of Public Policy and Relations, a vague position that President Ngozi Mbawuike and Student Trustee-elect Emily Bloch promised in their campaign to redesign as a job dedicated to outreach and education.

We are currently replacing the defunct website and are developing a strategy for building an effective and empowering relationship between the SGA and the student body. I am excited to be part of the process of making the SGA more inclusive and democratic as we work to build student power.

Sam Dreyfus, 2011
Secretary of Public Policy and Relations

ACTIVATING PEACE

Dear Editor,

issalaamu aleikum [greetings, peace be upon you],

I am a Jewish-American activist living in the West Bank of the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

